¹ "Amongst the great herd of travellers, etc., who show sufficiently by their stupidity that they never held any intercourse with opium, I must caution my readers especially against the brilliant author of Anastasis. This gentleman, whose wit would lead one to presume him an opium eater, has made it impossible to consider him in that character from the grievous misrepresentation which he gives of its effects, at pp 215-17 of vol I. Upon consideration, it must appear such to the author himself, for, waiving the errors I have insisted on in the text, which (and others) are adopted in the fullest manner, he will himself admit, that an old gentleman, 'with a snow-white beard,' who eats 'ample doses of opium,' and is yet able to deliver what is meant and received as very weighty counsel on the bad effects of that practice, is but an indifferent evidence that opium either kills people prematurely, or sends them into a mad-house. But for my part, I see into this old gentleman and his motives; the fact is, he was enamored of 'the little golden receptacle of the pernicious drug' which Anastasis carried about him; and no way of obtaining it so safe and so feasible occurred as that of frightening its owner out of his wits (which, by the by, are none of the strongest). This commentary throws a new light upon the case, and greatly improves it as a story: for the old gentleman's speech, considered as a lecture on pharmacy, is highly absurd, but, considered as a hoax on Anastasis, it reads excellently." De Quincey. The author of Anastasis, or Memoirs of a Greek (1819) is Thomas Hope (1770-1831).

candidly acknowledge that I have met with one person who bore evidence to its intoxicating power, such as staggered my own incredulity: for he was a surgeon, and had himself taken opium largely. I happened to say to him that his enemies, as I had heard, charged him with talking nonsense on politics, and that his friends apologized for him by suggesting that he was constantly in a state of intoxication from opium. Now the accusation, said I, is not prima facie,¹ and of necessity, an absurd one: but the defence is. To my surprise, however, he insisted that both his enemies and his friends were in the right: "I will maintain," said he, "that I do talk nonsense, and secondly, I will maintain that I do not talk nonsense upon principle, or with any view to profit, but solely and simply," said he, "solely and simply,—solely and simply" (repeating it three times over), "because I am drunk with opium; and that daily." I replied that, as to the allegation of his enemies, as it seemed to be established upon such respectable testimony, seeing that the three parties concerned all agreed in it, it did not become me to question it; but the defence set up I must demur to. He proceeded to discuss the matter, and to lay down his reasons; but it seemed to me so impolite to pursue an argument which must have presumed a man mistaken in a point belonging to his own profession, that I did not press him even when his course of argument seemed open to objection: not to mention that a man who talks nonsense, even though "with no view to profit," is not altogether the most agreeable partner in a dispute, whether as opponent or respondent. I confess, however, that the authority of a surgeon, and one who was reputed a good one, may seem a weighty one to my prejudice: but still I must plead my experience, which was greater than his greatest by 7000 drops a day; and, though it was not possible to suppose a medical man unacquainted with the characteristic symptoms of vinous intoxication, it yet struck me that he might proceed on a logical error of using the word intoxication with too great latitude, and extending it generally to all modes of nervous excitement, instead of restricting it as the expression for a specific sort of excitement, connected with certain diagnostics. Some people have maintained, in my hearing, that they have been drunk upon green tea: and a medical student in London, for whose knowledge in his profession I have reason to feel great respect, assured me, the other day, that a patient, in recovering from an illness, had got drunk on a beef-steak

¹ at first view

5 Having dwelt so much on this first and leading error in respect to opium, I shall notice very briefly a second and a third; which are, that the elevation of spirits produced by opium is necessarily followed by a proportionate depression, and that the natural and even immediate consequence of opium is torpor and stagnation, animal and mental. The first of these errors I shall content myself with simply denying, assuring my reader that for ten years, during which I took opium at intervals, the day succeeding to that on which I allowed myself this luxury was always a day of unusually good spirits

20 With respect to the torpor supposed to follow, or rather, if we were to credit the numerous pictures of Turkish opium-eaters, to accompany the practice of opium-eating, I deny that also. Certainly, opium is classed under the head of narcotics, and some such effect it may produce in the end: but the primary effects of opium are always, and in the highest degree, to excite and stimulate the system. This first stage of its action always lasted with me, during my noviciate, for upwards of eight hours; so that it must be the fault of the opium eater himself if he does not so time his exhibition of the dose, to speak medically, as that the whole weight of its narcotic influence may descend upon his sleep. Turkish opium-eaters, it seems, are absurd enough to sit, like so many equestrian statues, on logs of wood as stupid as themselves. But that the reader may judge of the degree in which opium is likely to stupify the faculties of an Englishman, I shall, by way of treating the question illustratively, rather than argumentatively, describe the way in which I myself often passed an opium evening in London, during the period between 1804 and 1812. It will be seen that at least opium did not move me to seek solitude, and much less to seek inactivity, or the torpid state of self-involvement ascribed to the Turks. I give this account at the risk of being pronounced a crazy enthusiast or visionary: but I regard that little. I must desire my reader to bear in mind that I was a hard student, and at severe studies for all the rest of my time: and certainly I had a right occasionally to relaxations as well as other people: these, however, I allowed myself but seldom.

The late Duke of [Norfolk] used to say,

"Next Friday, by the blessing of Heaven, I purpose to be drunk": and in like manner I used to fix beforehand how often, within a given time, and when, I would commit a debauch of opium. This was seldom more than once in three weeks: for at that time I could not have ventured to call every day (as I did afterwards) for "a glass of laudanum negus,¹ warm, and without sugar." No: as I have said, I seldom drank laudanum, at that time, more than once in three weeks: this was usually on a Tuesday or a Saturday night; my reason for which was this. In those days Grassini sang at the Opera: and her voice was delightful to me beyond all that I had ever heard. I know not what may be the state of the Opera-house now, having never been within its walls for seven or eight years, but at that time it was by much the most pleasant place of public resort in London for passing an evening. Five shillings admitted one to the gallery, which was subject to far less annoyance than the pit of the theatres: the orchestra was distinguished by its sweet and melodious grandeur from all English orchestras, the composition of which, I confess, is not acceptable to my ear, from the predominance of the clangorous instruments, and the absolute tyranny of the violin. The choruses were divine to hear: and when Grassini appeared in some interlude,² as she often did, and poured forth her passionate soul as Andromache at the tomb of Hector,³ etc., I question whether any Turk, of all that ever entered the paradise of opium-eaters, can have had half the pleasure I had. But, indeed, I honor the Barbarians too much by supposing them capable of any pleasures approaching to the intellectual ones of an Englishman. For music is an intellectual or a sensual pleasure, according to the temperament of him who hears it. And, by the by, with the exception of the fine extravaganza on that subject in Twelfth Night,⁴ I do not recollect more than one thing said adequately on the subject of music in all literature: it is a passage in the *Religio Medici*⁵ of Sir T. Brown; and,

¹ Negus is a beverage of wine, hot water, sugar, nutmeg, and lemon juice; it is said to be named after its first maker, Col. Francis Negus (d. 1732).

² Probably a vocal solo sung between the parts of some formal program.

³ In Grétry's Andromaque, which was produced at Paris in 1780.

⁴ Act I, 1.

⁵ "I have not the book at this moment to consult: but I think the passage begins—'And even that tavern music, which makes one man merry, another mad, in me strikes a deep fit of devotion,' etc."—De Quincey. The passage occurs in Part 2, Sec 9.

though chiefly remarkable for its sublimity, has also a philosophic value, inasmuch as it points to the true theory of musical effects. The mistake of most people is to suppose that it is by the ear they communicate with music, and, therefore, that they are purely passive to its effects. But this is not so: it is by the reaction of the mind upon the notices of the ear (the matter coming by the senses, the form from the mind) that the pleasure is constructed: and therefore it is that people of equally good ear differ so much in this point from one another. Now opium, by greatly increasing the activity of the mind generally, increases, of necessity, that particular mode of its activity by which we are able to construct out of the raw material of organic sound an elaborate intellectual pleasure. But, says a friend, a succession of musical sounds is to me like a collection of Arabic characters. I can attach no ideas to them. Ideas! my good sir? there is no occasion for them: all that class of ideas which can be available in such a case has a language of representative feelings. But this is a subject foreign to my present purposes: it is sufficient to say that a chorus, etc., of elaborate harmony, displayed before me, as in a piece of arras work, the whole of my past life—not as if recalled by an act of memory, but as if present and incarnated in the music—no longer painful to dwell upon: but the detail of its incidents removed, or blended in some hazy abstraction; and its passions exalted, spiritualized, and sublimed. All this was to be had for five shillings. And over and above the music of the stage and the orchestra, I had all around me, in the intervals of the performance, the music of the Italian language talked by Italian women: for the gallery was usually crowded with Italians: and I listened with a pleasure such as that with which Weld the traveller lay and listened, in Canada, to the sweet laughter of Indian women;¹ for the less you understand of a language the more sensible you are to the melody or harshness of its sounds: for such a purpose, therefore, it was an advantage to me that I was a poor Italian scholar, reading it but little, and not speaking it at all, nor understanding a tenth part of what I heard spoken.

These were my Opera pleasures: but another pleasure I had which, as it could be had only on a Saturday night, occasionally struggled with my love of the Opera; for, at that time, Tuesday and Saturday were the regular Opera nights. On this subject I am afraid I shall be rather obscure, but, I can assure the reader, not at all more so than Marinus in his Life of Proclus, or many other biographers and autobiographers of fair reputation. This pleasure, I have said, was to be had only on a Saturday night. What then was Saturday night to me more than any other night? I had no labors that I rested from; no wages to receive: what needed I to care for Saturday night, more than as it was a summons to hear Grassini? True, most logical reader: what you say is unanswerable. And yet so it was and is, that, whereas different men throw their feelings into different channels, and most are apt to show their interest in the concerns of the poor, chiefly by sympathy, expressed in some shape or other, with their distresses and sorrows, I, at that time, was disposed to express my interest by sympathizing with their pleasures. The pains of poverty I had lately seen too much of, more than I wished to remember: but the pleasures of the poor, their consolations of spirit, and their repose from bodily toil, can never become oppressive to contemplate. Now Saturday night is the season for the chief, regular, and periodic return of rest to the poor: in this point the most hostile sects unite, and acknowledge a common link of brotherhood: almost all Christendom rests from its labors. It is a rest introductory to another rest: and divided by a whole day and two nights from the renewal of toil. On this account I feel always, on a Saturday night, as though I also were released from some yoke of labor, had some wages to receive, and some luxury of repose to enjoy. For the sake, therefore, of witnessing, upon as large a scale as possible, a spectacle with which my sympathy was so entire, I used often, on Saturday nights, after I had taken opium, to wander forth, without much regarding the direction or the distance, to all the markets and other parts of London to which the poor resort on a Saturday night for laying out their wages. Many a family party, consisting of a man, his wife, and sometimes one or two of his children, have I listened to, as they stood consulting on their ways and means, or the strength of their exchequer, or the price of household articles. Gradually I became familiar with their wishes, their difficulties, and their opinions. Sometimes there might be heard murmurs of discontent. but far oftener expressions on the countenance, or uttered in words, of patience, hope, and tranquillity. And taken generally, I must say that, in this point at least, the poor are far more philosophic than the rich—that they show a more ready and cheerful submission to what they consider as irremediable evils, or irreparable losses. Whenever I saw occasion, or could do it without appearing to be intrusive, I joined their parties; and gave my opinion upon the matter in discussion, which, if not always judicious, was always received indulgently. If wages were a little higher, or expected to be so, or the quartern loaf¹ a little lower, or it was reported that onions and butter were expected to fall, I was glad: yet, if the contrary were true, I drew from opium some means of consoling myself. For opium, like the bee, that extracts its materials indiscriminately from roses and from the soot of chimneys, can overrule all feelings into a compliance with the master key. Some of these rambles led me to great distances: for an opium-eater is too happy to observe the motion of time. And sometimes in my attempts to steer homewards upon nautical principles, by fixing my eye on the pole-star, and seeking ambitiously for a northwest passage, instead of circumnavigating all the capes and headlands I had doubled in my outward voyage, I came suddenly upon such knotty problems of alleys, such enigmatical entries, and such sphinx's riddles² of streets without thoroughfares, as must, I conceive, baffle the audacity of porters, and confound the intellects of hackney-coachmen. I could almost have believed, at times, that I must be the first discoverer of some of these terra incognita,³ and doubted whether they had yet been laid down in the modern charts of London. For all this, however, I paid a heavy price in distant years, when the human face tyrannized over my dreams, and the perplexities of my steps in London came back and haunted my sleep with the feeling of perplexities, moral or intellectual, that brought confusion to the reason, or anguish and remorse to the conscience.

¹ The incident is recorded by I. Weld, Jr., in his Travels through the States of North Carolina and the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada during the Years 1795, 1796, and 1797 (ed 1800), 2, 288.

Thus I have shown that opium does not, of necessity, produce inactivity or torpor; but that, on the contrary, it often led me into markets and theatres. Yet, in candor, I will admit that markets and theatres are not the appropriate haunts of the opium-eater, when in the divinest state incident to his enjoyment. In that state, crowds become an oppression to him; music even, too sensual and gross. He naturally seeks solitude and silence, as indispensable conditions of those trances and profoundest reveries which are the crown or consummation of what opium can do for human nature. I, whose disease it was to meditate too much, and to observe too little, and who upon my first entrance at college was nearly falling into a deep melancholy from brooding too much on the sufferings which I had witnessed in London, was sufficiently aware of the tendencies of my own thoughts to do all I could to counteract them.—I was, indeed, like a person who, according to the old legend, had entered the cave of Trophonius;¹ and the remedies I sought were to force myself into society, and to keep my understanding in continual activity upon matters of science. But for these remedies, I should certainly have become hypochondriacally melancholy. In after years, however, when my cheerfulness was more fully re-established, I yielded to my natural inclination for a solitary life. And, at that time, I often fell into these reveries upon taking opium; and more than once it has happened to me, on a summer night, when I have been at an open window, in a room from which I could overlook the sea at a mile below me, and could command a view of the great town of L[iverpool], at about the same distance, that I have sat, from sunset to sun-rise, motionless, and without wishing to move.

¹ A loaf of bread weighting about 4 lbs.

² The sphinx propounded a riddle to the Thebans and killed all passers-by who could not solve it. See De Quincey's The Sphinx's Riddle.

³ unknown lands

I shall be charged with mysticism, Behmenism,² quietism,³ etc., but that shall not alarm me. Sir H. Vane, the Younger,⁴ was one of our wisest men: and let my readers see if he, in his philosophical works, be half as unmystical as I am.—I say, then, that it has often struck me that the scene itself was somewhat typical of what took place in such a reverie. The town of L[iverpool] represented the earth, with its sorrows and its graves left behind, yet not out of sight, nor wholly forgotten. The ocean, in everlasting but gentle agitation, ¹ It was supposed that a visitor to this cave never smiled again.

² The teachings of the German Mystic, Jacob Behman (Böhme), who held that everything manifested its divine origin; that the material and moral powers were one; etc.

³ A system of religious mysticism based on indifference to worldly interests, and on passive contemplation of spiritual interests.

⁴ See Wordsworth's Great Men Have Been Among Us (p. 287).

and brooded over by a dove-like calm,¹ might not unfitly typify the mind and the mood which then swayed it. For it seemed to me as if then first I stood at a distance, and aloof from the uproar of life, as if the tumult, the fever, and the strife, were suspended; a respite granted from the secret burthens of the heart, a sabbath of repose; a resting from human labors. Here were the hopes which blossom in the paths of life, reconciled with the peace which is in the grave; motions of the intellect as unwearied as the heavens, yet for all anxieties a halcyon calm;² a tranquillity that seemed no product of inertia, but as if resulting from mighty and equal antagonisms; infinite activities, infinite repose.

Oh! just, subtle, and mighty opium! that to the hearts of poor and rich alike, for the wounds that will never heal, and for "the pangs that tempt the spirit to rebel,"³ bringest an assuaging balm, eloquent opium! that with thy potent rhetoric stealst away the purposes of wrath, and to the guilty man for one night givest back the hopes of his youth, and hands washed pure from blood; and to the proud man a brief oblivion for that summonest to the chancery of dreams, for the triumphs of suffering innocence, false witnesses; and confoundest perjury; and dost reverse the sentences of unrighteous judges:—thou buildest upon the bosom of darkness, out of the fantastic imagery of the brain, cities and temples beyond the splendor of Babylon and Hekatompylos;⁵ and "from the anarchy of dreaming sleep,"⁶ callest into sunny light the faces of long-buried beauties, and the blessed household countenances, cleansed from the "dishonors of the grave."⁷ Thou only givest these gifts to man; and thou hast the keys of Paradise, oh, just, subtle, and mighty opium!⁸

Wrongs unredress'd and insults unavenged,⁴

¹ See Paradise Lost, 1, 21.

² The halcyon or kingfisher was fabled to nest on the sea and to calm the waves.

³ Wordsworth, The White Doe of Rylstone, Dedication, 38.

⁴ Wordsworth, The Excursion, 3, 374.

⁵ The hundred-gated, an epithet applied by De Quincey to Thebes, the capital of Egypt. The Hanging Gardens at Babylon were regarded as one of the seven wonders of the world. See Daniel 4:29-30.

⁶ Wordsworth, The Excursion, 4, 87.

⁷ See 1 Corinthians, 15:43. This verse is a portion of the lesson read at the burial service of the Church of England.

⁸ Adapted from the address to Death with which Raleigh closes his History of the World.

FROM INTRODUCTION TO THE PAINS OF OPIUM

If any man, poor or rich, were to say that he would tell us what had been the happiest day in his life, and the why, and the wherefore, I suppose that we should all cry out—Hear him! Hear him!—As to the happiest day, that must be very difficult for any wise man to name because any event, that could occupy so distinguished a place in a man's retrospect of his life, or be entitled to have shed a special felicity on any one day, ought to be of such an enduring character, as that, accidents apart, it should have continued to shed the same felicity, or one not distinguishably less, on many years together. To the happiest lustrum,¹ however, or even to the happiest year, it may be allowed to any man to point without discountenance from wisdom. This year, in my case, reader, was the one which we have now reached,² though it stood, I confess, as a parenthesis between years of a gloomier character. It was a year of brilliant water, to speak after the manner of jewelers, set as it were, and insulated, in the gloom and cloudy melancholy of opium. Strange as it may sound, I had a little before this time descended suddenly, and without any considerable effort, from 320 grains of opium (i.e., eight³ thousand drops of laudanum) per day, to forty grains, or one-eighth part. Instantaneously, and as if by magic, the cloud of profoundest melancholy which rested upon my brain, like some black vapors that I have seen roll away from the summits of mountains, drew off in one day (*νυχθημερον*⁴); passed off with its murky banners as simultaneously as a ship that has been stranded, and is floated off by a spring tide—

That moveth altogether, if it move at all.⁵

Now, then, I was again happy: I now took only 1000 drops of laudanum per day: and what was that? A latter spring had

¹ period of five years

² That is, 1816.

³ "I here reckon twenty five drops of laudanum as equivalent to one grain of opium, which, I believe, is the common estimate. However, as both may be considered variable quantities (the crude opium varying much in strength, and the tincture still more), I suppose that no infinitesimal accuracy can be had in such a calculation. Tea-spoons vary as much in size as opium in strength. Small ones hold about 100 drops, so that 8000 drops are about eighty times a tea-spoonful. The reader sees how much I kept within Dr. Buchanan's indulgent allowance."—De Quincey. On Dr. Buchanan's allowance, see p 1061b, n 1.

⁴ a day and a night

⁵ Wordsworth, Resolution and Independence, 77 (p. 284).

come to close up the season of youth: my brain performed its functions as healthily as ever before: I read Kant again; and again I understood him, or fancied that I did. Again my feelings of pleasure expanded themselves to all around me: and if any man from Oxford or Cambridge, or from neither, had been announced to me in my unpretending cottage, I should have welcomed him with as sumptuous a reception as so poor a man could offer. Whatever else was wanting to a wise man's happiness, —of laudanum I would have given him as much as he wished, and in a golden cup. And, by the way, now that I speak of giving laudanum away, I remember, about this time, a little incident, which I mention, because, trifling as it was, the reader will soon meet it again in my dreams, which it influenced more fearfully than could be imagined. One day a Malay knocked at my door. What business a Malay could have to transact amongst English mountains, I cannot conjecture: but possibly he was on his road to a seaport about forty miles distant.

The servant who opened the door to him was a young girl¹ born and bred amongst the mountains, who had never seen an Asiatic dress of any sort: his turban, therefore, confounded her not a little and, as it turned out that his attainments in English were exactly of the same extent as hers in the Malay, there seemed to be an impassable gulf fixed between all communication of ideas, if either party had happened to possess any. In this dilemma, the girl, recollecting the reputed learning of her master, and doubtless giving me credit for a knowledge of all the languages of the earth, besides, perhaps, a few of the lunar ones, came and gave me to understand that there was a sort of demon below, whom she clearly imagined that my art could exorcise from the house. I did not immediately go down: but, when I did, the group which presented itself, arranged as it was by accident, though not very elaborate, took hold of my fancy and my eye in a way that none of the statuesque attitudes exhibited in the ballets at the Opera-house, though so ostentatiously complex, had ever done. In a cottage kitchen, but panelled on the wall with dark wood that from age and rubbing resembled oak, and looking more like a rustic hall of entrance than a kitchen, stood the Malay—his turban and loose trousers of dingy white relieved upon the dark panel—ling: he had placed himself nearer to the girl than she seemed to relish; though her native spirit of mountain intrepidity contended with the feeling of simple awe which her countenance expressed as she gazed upon the tiger-cat before her. And a more striking picture there could not be imagined, than the beautiful English face of the girl, and its exquisite fairness, together with her erect and independent attitude, contrasted with the sallow and bilious skin of the Malay, enamelled or veneered with mahogany, by marine air, his small, fierce, restless eyes, thin lips, slavish gestures and adorations. Half-hidden by the ferocious looking Malay was a little child from a neighboring cottage who had crept in after him, and was now in the act of reverting its head, and gazing upwards at the turban and the fiery eyes beneath it, whilst with one hand he caught at the dress of the young woman for protection. My knowledge of the Oriental tongues is not remarkably extensive, being indeed confined to two words—the Arabic word for barley, and the Turkish for opium (madjoon), which I have learnt from Anastasius. And, as I had neither a Malay dictionary, nor even Adelung's Mithridates, which might have helped me to a few words, I addressed him in some lines from the Ihad, considering that, of such languages as I possessed, Greek, in point of longitude, came geographically nearest to an Oriental one. He worshipped me in a most devout manner, and replied in what I suppose was Malay. In this way I saved my reputation with my neighbors for the Malay had no means of betraying the secret. He lay down upon the floor for about an hour, and then pursued his journey. On his departure, I presented him with a piece of opium. To him, as an Orientalist, I concluded that opium must be familiar: and the expression of his face convinced me that it was. Nevertheless, I was struck with some little consternation when I saw him suddenly raise his hand to his mouth, and, in the schoolboy phrase, bolt the whole, divided into three pieces, at one mouthful. The quantity was enough to kill three dragoons and their horses: and I felt some alarm for the poor creature: but what could be done? I had given him the opium in compassion for his solitary life, on recollecting that if he had travelled on foot from London it must be nearly three weeks since he could have exchanged a thought with any human being. I could not think of violating the laws of hospitality by having him seized and drenched with an emetic, and thus frightening him into a notion that we were going to sacrifice him to some English idol. No: there was clearly no help for it:—he took his leave: and for some days I felt anxious: but as I never heard of any Malay being found dead, I became convinced that he was used¹ to opium: and that I must have done him the service I designed, by giving him one night of respite from the pains of wandering.

¹ Barbara Lewthwaite. See Wordsworth's The Pet Lamb.

This incident I have digressed to mention, because this Malay, partly from the picturesque exhibition he assisted to frame, partly from the anxiety I connected with his image for some days, fastened afterwards upon my dreams, and brought other Malays with him worse than himself, that ran "a-muck"² at me, and led me into a world of troubles.—But to quit this episode, and to return to my intercalary³ year of happiness. I have said already, that on a subject so important to us all as happiness, we should listen with pleasure to any man's experience or experiments, even though he were but a plough-boy, who cannot be supposed to have ploughed very deep into such an intractable soil as that of human pains and pleasures, or to have conducted his researches upon any very enlightened principles. But I, who have taken happiness, both in a solid and a liquid shape, both boiled and unboiled, both East India and Turkey—who have conducted my experiments upon this interesting subject with a sort of galvanic battery—and have, for the general benefit of the world, inoculated myself, as it were, with the poison of 8000 drops of laudanum per day (just for the same reason as a French surgeon inoculated himself lately with cancer—an English one, twenty years ago, with plague—and a third,

¹ "This, however, is not a necessary conclusion: the varieties of effect produced by opium on different constitutions are infinite. A London Magistrate (Harriott's Struggles through Life, vol. iii, p. 301, Third Edition) has recorded that, on the first occasion of his trying laudanum for the gout, he took forty drops, the next night eleven, and on the fifth night eighty, without any effect whatever: and this at an advanced age. I have an anecdote from a country surgeon, however, which sinks Mr Harriott's case into a trifle: and in my projected medical treatise on opium, which I will publish, provided the College of Surgeons will pay me for enlightening their benighted understandings upon this subject, I will relate it: but it is far too good a story to be published gratis."—De Quincey.

² "See the common accounts in any Eastern traveller or voyager of the frantic excesses committed by Malays who have taken opium, or are reduced to desperation by ill luck at gambling."—De Quincey.

³ inserted among others in the calendar

I know not of what nation,¹ with hydrophobia).—I, it will be admitted, must surely know what happiness is, if anybody does. And, therefore, I will here lay down an analysis of happiness; and as the most interesting mode of communicating it, I will give it, not didactically, but wrapt up and involved in a picture of one evening, as I spent every evening during the intercalary year when laudanum, though taken daily, was to me no more than the elixir of pleasure. This done, I shall quit the subject of happiness altogether, and pass to a very different one—the pains of opium.

Let there be a cottage, standing in a valley, eighteen miles from any town—no spacious valley, but about two miles long, by three-quarters of a mile in average width, the benefit of which provision is that all the families resident within its circuit will compose, as it were, one larger household personally familiar to your eye, and more or less interesting to your affections. Let the mountains be real mountains, between three and four thousand feet high; and the cottage, a real cottage; not, as a witty author has it, “a cottage, with a double coach-house”;² let it be, in fact—for I must abide by the actual scene—a white cottage, embowered with flowering shrubs, so chosen as to unfold a succession of flowers upon the walls, and clustering round the windows through all the months of spring, summer, and autumn—beginning, in fact, with May roses, and ending with jasmine. Let it, however, not be spring, nor summer, nor autumn—but winter, in his sternest shape. This is a most important point in the science of happiness. And I am surprised to see people overlook it, and think it matter of congratulation that winter is going; or, if coming, is not likely to be a severe one. On the contrary, I put up a petition annually for as much snow, hail, frost, or storm, of one kind or other, as the skies can possibly afford us. Surely everybody is aware of the divine pleasures which attend a winter fire-side: candles at four o’clock, warm hearth-rugs, tea, a fair tea-maker, shutters closed, curtains flowing in ample draperies on the floor, whilst the wind and rain are raging audibly without,

And at the doors and windows seemed to call,
As heav’n and earth they would together melt:³

¹ In the enlarged edition of the Confessions, De Quincey says that the third was an English surgeon at Brighton, in Sussex.

² Southey, The Devil’s Walk, 37; Coleridge, The Devil’s Thoughts, 21

³ mingle

Yet the least entrance find they none at all Whence sweeter grows our rest secure in massy hall. —Castle of Indolence.¹

All these are items in the description of a winter evening, which must surely be familiar to everybody born in a high latitude. And it is evident that most of these delicacies, like ice-cream, require a very low temperature of the atmosphere to produce them: they are fruits which cannot be ripened without weather stormy or inclement, in some way or other. I am not “particular,” as people say, whether it be snow, or black frost, or wind so strong that (as Mr. [Anti-Slavery Clarkson] says) “you may lean your back against it like a post.” I can put up even with rain, provided it rains cats and dogs: but something of the sort I must have: and, if I have it not, I think myself in a manner ill-used: for why am I called on to pay so heavily for winter, in coals, and candles, and various privations that will occur even to gentlemen, if I am not to have the article good of its kind? No: a Canadian winter for my money: or a Russian one, where every man is but a co-proprietor with the north wind in the fee-simple² of his own ears. Indeed, so great an epicure am I in this matter, that I cannot relish a winter night fully if it be much past St. Thomas’s day,³ and have degenerated into disgusting tendencies to vernal appearances: no: it must be divided by a thick wall of dark nights from all return of light and sunshine—From the latter weeks of October to Christmas-eve, therefore, is the period during which happiness is in season, which, in my judgment, enters the room with the tea-tray: for tea, though ridiculed by those who are naturally of coarse nerves, or are become so from wine-drinking, and are not susceptible of influence from so refined a stimulant, will always be the favorite beverage of the intellectual: and, for my part, I would have joined Dr. Johnson in a *bellum internecinum*⁴ against Jonas Hanway, or any other impious person who should presume to disparage it.—But here, to save myself the trouble of too much verbal description, I will introduce a painter, and give him directions for the rest of the picture. Painters do not like white cottages, unless

¹ Thomson, The Castle of Indolence, 1, 393 87 (p. 31)

² unrestricted ownership (literally, an estate of inheritance in land, without restriction as to heirs)

³ Dec 21.

⁴ civil war (See Boswell’s The Life of Samuel Johnson [Oxford ed., 1904], 1, 209 and 281)

a good deal weather-stained: but as the reader now understands that it is a winter night, his services will not be required, except for the inside of the house.

Paint me, then, a room seventeen feet by twelve, and not more than seven and a half feet high. This, reader, is somewhat ambitiously styled, in my family, the drawing-room: but, being contrived "a double debt to pay,"¹ it is also, and more justly, termed the library; for it happens that books are the only article of property in which I am richer than my neighbors. Of these, I have about five thousand, collected gradually since my eighteenth year. Therefore, painter, put as many as you can into this room. Make it populous with books: and, furthermore, paint me a good fire; and furniture, plain and modest, befitting the unpretending cottage of a scholar. And, near the fire, paint me a tea-table; and, as it is clear that no creature can come to see one such a stormy night, place only two cups and saucers on the tea-tray: and, if you know how to paint such a thing symbolically, or otherwise, paint me an eternal tea-pot—eternal a parte ante, and a parte post;² for I usually drink tea from eight o'clock at night to four o'clock in the morning. And, as it is very unpleasant to make tea, or to pour it out for oneself, paint me a lovely young woman, sitting at the table. Paint her arms like Aurora's, and her smiles like Hebe's—But no, dear M[argaret],³ not even in jest let me insinuate that thy power to illuminate my cottage rests upon a tenure so perishable as mere personal beauty; or that the witchcraft of angelic smiles lies within the empire of any earthly pencil. Pass, then, my good painter, to something more within its power and the next article brought forward should naturally be myself—a picture of the Opium-eater with his "little golden receptacle of the pernicious drug,"⁴ lying beside him on the table. As to the opium, I have no objection to see a picture of that, though I would rather see the original: you may paint it, if you choose; but I apprise you, that no "little" receptacle would, even in 1816, answer my purpose, who was at a distance from the "stately Pantheon,"⁵ and all druggists (mortal or otherwise). No: you may as well paint the real receptacle, which was not of gold, but of glass, and as much like a wine-decanter as possible. Into this you may put a quart of ruby-colored laudanum: that, and a book of German metaphysics¹ placed by its side, will sufficiently attest my being in the neighborhood; but, as to myself,—there I demur. I admit that, naturally, I ought to occupy the foreground of the picture, that being the hero of the piece, or (if you choose) the criminal at the bar, my body should be had into court. This seems reasonable: but why should I confess, on this point, to a painter? or why confess at all? If the public (into whose private ear I am confidentially whispering my confessions, and not into any painter's) should chance to have framed some agreeable picture for itself, of the Opium-eater's exterior,—should have ascribed to him, romantically, an elegant person, or a handsome face, why should I barbarously tear from it so pleasing a delusion—pleasing both to the public and to me? No: paint me, if at all, according to your own fancy; and, as a painter's fancy should teem with beautiful creations, I cannot fail, in that way, to be a gainer. And now, reader, we have run through all the ten categories of my condition, as it stood about 1816-17. up to the middle of which latter year I judge myself to have been a happy man: and the elements of that happiness I have endeavored to place before you, in the above sketch of the interior of a scholar's library, in a cottage among the mountains, on a stormy winter evening.

But now farewell—a long farewell to happiness—winter or summer! farewell to smiles and laughter! farewell to peace of mind! farewell to hope and to tranquil dreams, and to the blessed consolations of sleep! for more than three years and a half I am summoned away from these. I am now arrived at an Iliad of woes.² For I have now to record

THE PAINS OF OPIUM

——as when some great painter dips
His pencil in the gloom of earthquake and eclipse
—SHELLEY'S *Revolt of Islam*¹

Readers, who have thus far accompanied me, I must request your attention to a brief explanatory note on three points:

1. For several reasons, I have not been able to compose the notes for this part of my narrative into any regular and connected shape. I give the notes disjointed as I find

¹ He means by Kant, Fichte, or Schelling

² That is, unnumbered woes. See the opening lines of Homer's Iliad.

³ Canto 5, et 23

¹ Goldsmith, The Deserted Village, 229

² From the part before and from the part after

³ De Quincey's wife

⁴ See p 1062b, n 1

⁵ See p 1060b, 11-4', and n 1.

them, or have now drawn them up from memory. Some of them point to their own date; some I have dated, and some are undated. Whenever it could answer my purpose to transplant them from the natural or chronological order, I have not scrupled to do so. Sometimes I speak in the present, sometimes in the past tense. Few of the notes, perhaps, were written exactly at the period of time to which they relate, but this can little affect their accuracy, as the impressions were such that they can never fade from my mind. Much has been omitted I could not, without effort, constrain myself to the task of either recalling, or constructing into a regular narrative, the whole burthen of horrors which lies upon my brain. This feeling partly I plead in excuse, and partly that I am now in London, and am a helpless sort of person, who cannot even arrange his own papers without assistance, and I am separated from the hands which are wont to perform for me the offices of an amanuensis.

2 You will think, perhaps, that I am too confidential and communicative of my own private history. It may be so. But my way of writing is rather to think aloud, and follow my own humors, than much to consider who is listening to me, and, if I stop to consider what is proper to be said to this or that person, I shall soon come to doubt whether any part at all is proper. The fact is, I place myself at a distance of fifteen or twenty years ahead of this time, and suppose myself writing to those who will be interested about me hereafter, and wishing to have some record of a time, the entire history of which no one can know but myself, I do it as fully as I am able with the efforts I am now capable of making, because I know not whether I can ever find time to do it again.

3. It will occur to you often to ask why did I not release myself from the horrors of opium, by leaving it off, or diminishing it. To this I must answer briefly: it might be supposed that I yielded to the fascinations of opium too easily; it cannot be supposed that any man can be charmed by its terrors. The reader may be sure, therefore, that I made attempts innumerable to reduce the quantity. I add that those who witnessed the agonies of those attempts, and not myself, were the first to beg me to desist. But could not I have reduced it a drop a day, or by adding water, have bisected or trisected a drop? A thousand drops bisected would thus have taken nearly six years to reduce; and that way would certainly not have answered. But this is a common mistake of those who know nothing of opium experimentally; I appeal to those who do, whether it is not always found that down to a certain point it can be reduced with ease and even pleasure, but that, after that point, further reduction causes intense suffering. Yes, say many thoughtless persons, who know not what they are talking of, you will suffer a little low spirits and dejection for a few days. I answer, no, there is nothing like low spirits; on the contrary, the mere animal spirits are uncommonly raised: the pulse is improved. the health is better. It is not there that the suffering lies. It has no resemblance to the sufferings caused by renouncing wine. It is a state of unutterable irritation of stomach (which surely is not much like dejection), accompanied by intense perspirations, and feelings such as I shall not attempt to describe without more space at my command.

I shall now enter in medias res,¹ and shall anticipate, from a time when my opium pains might be said to be at their acme, an account of their palsyng effects on the intellectual faculties.

My studies have now been long interrupted. I cannot read to myself with any pleasure, hardly with a moment's endurance. Yet I read aloud sometimes for the pleasure of others, because reading is an accomplishment of mine; and, in the slang use of the word accomplishment as a superficial and ornamental attainment, almost the only one I possess: and formerly, if I had any vanity at all connected with any endowment or attainment of mine, it was with this; for I had observed that no accomplishment was so rare. Players are the worst readers of all. John Kemble reads vilely: and Mrs. Siddons, who is so celebrated, can read nothing well but dramatic compositions. Milton she cannot read sufferably. People in general either read poetry without any passion at all, or else overstep the modesty of nature,² and read not like scholars. Of late, if I have felt moved by anything in books, it has been by the grand lamentations of Samson Agonistes, or the great harmonies of the Satanic speeches in Paradise Regained, when read aloud by myself. A young lady³ sometimes comes and drinks tea with us: at her request and M[argaret]'s I now and then read Wordsworth's poems to them (Wordsworth, by the by, is the only poet I ever met who could read his own verses: often indeed he reads admirably.)

¹ Into the midst of things (Horace, Ars Poetica, 148).

² See Hamlet, III. 2. 22.

³ Probably Dorothy Wordsworth.

For nearly two years I believe that I read no book but one ¹ and I owe it to the author, in discharge of a great debt of gratitude, to mention what that was. The sublimer and more passionate poets I still read, as I have said, by snatches, and occasionally. But my proper vocation, as I well knew, was the exercise of the analytic understanding. Now, for the most part, analytic studies are continuous, and not to be pursued by fits and starts, or fragmentary efforts. Mathematics, for instance, intellectual philosophy, etc., were all become insupportable to me; and I shrunk from them with a sense of powerless and infantine feebleness that gave me an anguish the greater from remembering the time when I grappled with them to my own hourly delight; and for this further reason, because I had devoted the labor of my whole life, and had dedicated my intellect, blossoms and fruits, to the slow and elaborate toil of constructing one single work, to which I had presumed to give the title of an unfinished work of Spinoza's; viz., De emendatione humani intellectus ² This was now lying locked up, as by frost, like any Spanish bridge or aqueduct, begun upon too great a scale for the resources of the architect; and, instead of surviving me as a monument of wishes at least, and aspirations, and a life of labor dedicated to the exaltation of human nature in that way in which God had best fitted me to promote so great an object, it was likely to stand a memorial to my children of hopes defeated, of baffled efforts, of materials uselessly accumulated, of foundations laid that were never to support a superstructure,—of the grief and the ruin of the architect. In this state of imbecility, I had, for amusement, turned my attention to political economy; my understanding, which formerly had been as active and restless as a hyena, could not, I suppose (so long as I lived at all), sink into utter lethargy; and political economy offers this advantage to a person in my state, that though it is eminently an organic science (no part, that is to say, but what acts on the whole, as the whole again reacts on each part), yet the several parts may be detached and contemplated singly. Great as was the prostration of my powers at this time, yet I could not forget my knowledge; and my understanding had been for too many years intimate with severe thinkers, with logic, and the great masters of knowledge, not to be aware of the utter feebleness of the main herd of modern economists. I had been led in 1811 to look into loads of books and pamphlets on many branches of economy; and, at my desire, M[argaret] sometimes read to me chapters from more recent works, or parts of parliamentary debates. I saw that these were generally the very dregs and rinsings of the human intellect and that any man of sound head, and practiced in wielding logic with a scholastic adroitness, might take up the whole academy of modern economists, and throttle them between heaven and earth with his finger and thumb, or bray their fungus heads to powder with a lady's fan. At length, in 1819, a friend in Edinburgh sent me down Mr. Ricardo's book and recurring to my own prophetic anticipation of the advent of some legislator for this science, I said, before I had finished the first chapter, "Thou art the man!" Wonder and curiosity were emotions that had long been dead in me. Yet I wondered once more. I wondered at myself that I could once again be stimulated to the effort of reading: and much more I wondered at the book. Had this profound work been really written in England during the nineteenth century? Was it possible? I supposed thinking had been extinct in England. Could it be that an Englishman, and he not in academic bowers, but oppressed by mercantile and senatorial cares, had accomplished what all the universities of Europe, and a century of thought, had failed even to advance by one hair's breadth? All other writers had been crushed and overlaid by the enormous weight of facts and documents; Mr. Ricardo had deduced, a priori, from the understanding itself, laws which first gave a ray of light into the unwieldy chaos of materials, and had constructed what had been but a collection of tentative discussions into a science of regular proportions, now first standing on an eternal basis.

¹ Political Economy, by David Ricardo (1772-1823), a noted English Jewish political economist.

² of the amendment of the human mind

Thus did one single work of a profound understanding avail to give me a pleasure and an activity which I had not known for years:—it roused me even to write, or, at least, to dictate what M[argaret] wrote for me. It seemed to me that some important truths had escaped even "the inevitable eye" of Mr. Ricardo: and, as these were, for the most part, of such a nature that I could express or illustrate them more briefly and elegantly by algebraic symbols than in the usual clumsy and loitering diction of economists, the whole would not have filled a pocket-book; and being so brief, with M[argaret] for my amanuensis, even at this time, incapable as I was of all general exertion, I drew up my Prolegomena to all Future Systems of Political Economy.¹ I hope it will not be found redolent of opium; though, indeed, to most people, the subject itself is a sufficient opiate.

This exertion, however, was but a temporary flash, as the sequel showed—for I designed to publish my work: arrangements were made at a provincial press, about eighteen miles distant, for printing it. An additional compositor was retained, for some days, on this account. The work was even twice advertised: and I was, in a manner, pledged to the fulfilment of my intention. But I had a preface to write; and a dedication, which I wished to make a splendid one, to Mr. Ricardo. I found myself quite unable to accomplish all this. The arrangements were countermanded: the compositor dismissed: and my Prolegomena rested peacefully by the side of its elder and more dignified brother.

I have thus described and illustrated my intellectual torpor, in terms that apply, more or less, to every part of the four years during which I was under the Circean² spells of opium. But for misery and suffering, I might, indeed, be said to have existed in a dormant state. I seldom could prevail on myself to write a letter; an answer of a few words, to any that I received, was the utmost that I could accomplish; and often that not until the letter had lain weeks, or even months, on my writing table. Without the aid of M[argaret] all records of bills paid, or to be paid, must have perished: and my whole domestic economy, whatever became of Political Economy, must have gone into irretrievable confusion. I shall not afterwards allude to this part of the case: it is one, however, which the opium-eater will find, in the end, as oppressive and tormenting as any other, from the sense of incapacity and feebleness, from the direct embarrassments incident to the neglect or procrastination of each day's appropriate duties, and from the remorse which must often exasperate the stings of these evils to a reflective and conscientious mind. The opium-eater loses none of his moral sensibilities, or aspirations: he wishes and longs, as earnestly as ever, to realize what he believes possible, and feels to be exacted by duty; but his intellectual apprehension of what is possible infinitely outruns his power, not of execution only, but even of power to attempt. He lies under the weight of incubus and night-mare: he lies in the sight of all that he would fain perform, just as a man forcibly confined to his bed by the mortal languor of a relaxing disease, who is compelled to witness injury or outrage offered to some object of his tenderest love—he endures the spells which chain him down from motion:—he would lay down his life if he might but get up and walk; but he is powerless as an infant, and cannot even attempt to rise.

I now pass to what is the main subject of these latter confessions, to the history and journal of what took place in my dreams, for these were the immediate and proximate cause of my acutest suffering.

The first notice I had of any important change going on in this part of my physical economy, was from the reawakening of a state of eye generally incident to childhood, or exalted states of irritability. I know not whether my reader is aware that many children, perhaps most, have a power of painting, as it were, upon the darkness, all sorts of phantoms; in some, that power is simply a mechanic affection of the eye; others have a voluntary, or a semi-voluntary power to dismiss or to summon them, or, as a child once said to me when I questioned him on this matter, "I can tell them to go, and they go; but sometimes they come when I don't tell them to come." Whereupon I told him that he had almost as unlimited command over apparitions as a Roman centurion over his soldiers.—In the middle of 1817, I think it was, that this faculty became positively distressing to me: at night, when I lay awake in bed, vast processions passed along in mournful pomp: friezes of never-ending stories, that to my feelings were as sad and solemn as if they were stories drawn from times before Ædipus or Priam—before Tyre—before Memphis. And, at the same time, a corresponding change took place in my dreams; a theatre seemed suddenly opened and lighted up within my brain, which presented nightly spectacles of more than earthly splendor. And the four following facts may be mentioned, as noticeable at this time:

¹ A lost work.

² pleasing but harmful (Circe was the sorceress in the Odyssey who feasted mariners and then turned them into beasts)

1. That, as the creative state of the eye increased, a sympathy seemed to arise between the waking and the dreaming states of the brain in one point—that whatsoever I happened to call up and to trace by a voluntary act upon the darkness was very apt to transfer itself to my dreams; so that I feared to exercise this faculty, for, as Midas turned all things to gold, that yet baffled his hopes and defrauded his human desires, so whatever things capable of being visually represented I did but think of in the darkness, immediately shaped themselves into phantoms of the eye, and, by a process apparently no less inevitable, when thus once traced in faint and visionary colors, like writings in sympathetic ink,¹ they were drawn out by the fierce chemistry of my dreams, into insufferable splendor that fretted my heart.

2. For this and all other changes in my dreams were accompanied by deep-seated anxiety and gloomy melancholy, such as are wholly incommunicable by words. I seemed every night to descend, not metaphorically, but literally to descend, into chasms and sunless abysses, depths below depths, from which it seemed hopeless that I could ever reascend. Nor did I, by waking, feel that I had reascended. This I do not dwell upon, because the state of gloom which attended these gorgeous spectacles, amounting at least to utter darkness, as of some suicidal despondency, cannot be approached by words.

3. The sense of space, and in the end, the sense of time, were both powerfully affected. Buildings, landscapes, etc., were exhibited in proportions so vast as the bodily eye is not fitted to receive. Space swelled, and was amplified to an extent of unutterable infinity. This, however, did not disturb me so much as the vast expansion of time, I sometimes seemed to have lived for 70 or 100 years in one night, nay, sometimes had feelings representative of a millennium passed in that time, or, however, of a duration far beyond the limits of any human experience.

4. The minutest incidents of childhood, or forgotten scenes of later years, were often revived. I could not be said to recollect them; for if I had been told of them when waking, I should not have been able to acknowledge them as parts of my past experience. But placed as they were before me, in dreams like intuitions, and clothed in all their evanescent circumstances and accompanying feelings, I recognized them instantaneously. I was once told by a near relative of mine, that having in her childhood fallen into a river, and being on the very verge of death but for the critical assistance which reached her, she saw in a moment her whole life, in its minutest incidents, arrayed before her simultaneously as in a mirror; and she had a faculty developed as suddenly for comprehending the whole and every part. Thus, from some opium experiences of mine, I can believe; I have, indeed, seen the same thing asserted twice in modern books, and accompanied by a remark which I am convinced is true; viz., that the dread book of account² which the Scriptures speak of is, in fact, the mind itself of each individual. Of this, at least, I feel assured, that there is no such thing as forgetting possible to the mind; a thousand accidents may and will interpose a veil between our present consciousness and the secret inscriptions on the mind, accidents of the same sort will also rend away this veil, but alike, whether veiled or unveiled, the inscription remains forever, just as the stars seem to withdraw before the common light of day, whereas, in fact, we all know that it is the light which is drawn over them as a veil—and that they are waiting to be revealed, when the obscuring daylight shall have withdrawn.

Having noticed these four facts as memorably distinguishing my dreams from those of health, I shall now cite a case illustrative of the first fact, and shall then cite any others that I remember, either in their chronological order, or any other that may give them more effect as pictures to the reader.

I had been in youth, and even since, for occasional amusement, a great reader of Livy, whom I confess that I prefer, both for style and matter, to any other of the Roman historians; and I had often felt as most solemn and appalling sounds, and most emphatically representative of the majesty of the Roman people, the two words so often occurring in Livy—Consul Romanus; especially when the consul is introduced in his military character. I mean to say that the words king—sultan—regent, etc., or any other titles of those who embody in their own persons the collective majesty of a great people, had less power over my reverential feelings. I had also, though no great reader of history, made myself minutely and critically familiar with one period of English history; viz., the period of the Parliamentary War,¹ having been attracted by the moral grandeur of some who figured in that day, and by the many interesting memoirs which survive these unquiet times. Both these parts of my lighter reading, having furnished me often with matter of reflection, now furnished me with matter for my dreams. Often I used to see, after painting upon the blank darkness a sort of rehearsal whilst waking, a crowd of ladies, and perhaps a festival, and dances. And I heard it said, or I said to myself, "These are English ladies from the unhappy times of Charles I. These are the wives and the daughters of those who met in peace, and sat at the same tables, and were allied by marriage or by blood, and yet, after a certain day in August, 1642,² never smiled upon each other again, nor met but in the field of battle; and at Marston Moor, at Newbury, or at Naseby, cut asunder all ties of love by the cruel sabre, and washed away in blood the memory of ancient friendship."—The ladies danced, and looked as lovely as the court of George IV. Yet I knew, even in my dream, that they had been in the grave for nearly two centuries—This pageant would suddenly dissolve and, at a clapping of hands, would be heard the heart-quaking sound of Consul Romanus and immediately came "sweeping by,"³ in gorgeous paludaments,⁴ Paulus, or Marius, gut round by a company of centurions, with the crimson tunic hoisted on a spear,⁵ and followed by the *alalagmos*⁶ of the Roman legions.

¹ A fluid used for invisible writing, which becomes visible when heated

² Revelation, 20:12.

Many years ago, when I was looking over Piranesi's Antiquities of Rome, Mr. Coleridge, who was standing by, described to me a set of plates by that artist, called his Dreams, and which record the scenery of his own visions during the delirium of a fever: some of them (I describe only from memory of Mr. Coleridge's account) representing vast Gothic halls, on the floor of which stood all sorts of engines and machinery, wheels, cables, pulleys, levers, catapults, etc., etc., expressive of enormous power put forth, and resistance overcome. Creeping along the sides of the walls, you perceived a staircase; and upon it, groping his way upwards, was Piranesi himself: follow the stairs a little further, and you perceive it come to a sudden abrupt termination, without any balustrade, and allowing no step onwards to him who had reached the extremity, except into the depths below. Whatever is to become of poor Piranesi, you suppose, at least, that his labors must in some way terminate here. But raise your eyes, and behold a second flight of stairs still higher: on which again Piranesi is perceived, but this time standing on the very brink of the abyss. Again elevate your eye, and a still more aerial flight of stairs is beheld: and again is poor Piranesi busy on his aspiring labors: and so on, until the unfinished stairs and Piranesi both are lost in the upper gloom of the hall.—With the same power of endless growth and self-reproduction did my architecture proceed in dreams. In the early stage of my malady, the splendors of my dreams were indeed chiefly architectural and I beheld such pomp of cities and palaces as was never yet beheld by the waking eye, unless in the clouds. From a great modern poet I cite part of a passage which describes, as an appearance actually beheld in the clouds, what in many of its circumstances I saw frequently in sleep:

The appearance, instantaneously disclosed,
Was of a mighty city—boldly say
A wilderness of building, sinking far
And self-withdrawn into a wondrous depth,
Far sinking into splendor—without end!
Fabric it seem'd of diamond, and of gold,
With alabaster domes, and silver spires,
And glazing terrace upon terrace, high
Uplifted, here, serene pavilions bright
In avenues disposed, there, towers begirt
With battlements that on their restless fronts
Bore stars—illumination of all gems!
By earthly nature had the effect been wrought
Upon the dark materials of the storm
Now pacified on them, and on the coves,
And mountain-steeps and summits, whereunto
The vapors had receded,—taking there
Their station under a cerulean sky, etc., etc.⁷

The sublime circumstance—"battlements that on their restless fronts bore stars,"—might have been copied from my architectural dreams, for it often occurred.—We hear it reported of Dryden, and of Fuseli in modern times, that they thought proper to eat raw meat for the sake of obtaining splendid dreams: how much better for such a purpose to have eaten opium, which yet I do not remember that any poet is recorded to have done, except the dramatist Shadwell and in ancient days, Homer is, I think, rightly reputed to have known the virtues of opium.⁸

To my architecture succeeded dreams of lakes and silvery expanses of water:—these

¹ The war between Charles I. and the Parliamentary party began Aug. 22, 1642.

² Il Penseroso, 98.

³ Military cloaks.

⁴ A signal for battle.

⁵ Battle cry (originally of the Greeks).

⁷ Wordsworth, The Excursion 2 814 ff.

⁸ In Homer's Odyssey, 4, 220 21, Helen gives to Telemachus a drug which banishes sorrow. This is thought by many persons to be opium. See p. 1061a, 16 and n. 1.

haunted me so much that I feared, though possibly it will appear ludicrous to a medical man, that some dropsical state or tendency of the brain might thus be making itself, to use a metaphysical word, objective; and the sentient organ project itself as its own object.—For two months I suffered greatly in my head—a part of my bodily structure which had hitherto been so clear from all touch or taint of weakness, physically, I mean, that I used to say of it, as the last Lord Orford said of his stomach, that it seemed likely to survive the rest of my person.—Till now I had never felt headache even, or any the slightest pain, except rheumatic pains caused by my own folly. However, I got over this attack, though it must have been verging on something very dangerous.

The waters now changed their character,—from translucent lakes, shining like mirrors, they now became seas and oceans. And now came a tremendous change, which, unfolding itself slowly like a scroll, through many months, promised an abiding torment; and, in fact, never left me until the winding up of my case. Hitherto the human face had mixed often in my dreams, but not despotically, nor with any special power of tormenting. But now that which I have called the tyranny of the human face began to unfold itself. Perhaps some part of my London life might be answerable for this. Be that as it may, now it was that upon the rocking waters of the ocean the human face began to appear: the sea appeared paved with innumerable faces, upturned to the heavens: faces, imploring, wrathful, despairing, surged upwards by thousands, by myriads, by generations, by centuries:—my agitation was infinite,—my mind tossed—and surged with the ocean.

May, 1818.

The Malay has been a fearful enemy for months. I have been every night, through his means, transported into Asiatic scenes. I know not whether others share in my feelings on this point; but I have often thought that if I were compelled to forego England, and to live in China, and among Chinese manners and modes of life and scenery, I should go mad. The causes of my horror lie deep and some of them must be common to others. Southern Asia, in general, is the seat of awful images and associations. As the cradle of the human race, it would alone have a dim and reverential feeling connected with it. But there are other reasons. No man can pretend that the wild, barbarous, and capricious superstitions of Africa, or of savage tribes elsewhere, affect him in the way that he is affected by the ancient, monumental, cruel, and elaborate religions of Indostan, etc. The mere antiquity of Asiatic things, of their institutions, histories, modes of faith, etc., is so impressive, that to me the vast age of the race and name overpowers the sense of youth in the individual. A young Chinese seems to me an antediluvian man renewed. Even Englishmen, though not bred in any knowledge of such institutions, cannot but shudder at the mystic sublimity of castes that have flowed apart, and refused to mix, through such immemorial tracts of time; nor can any man fail to be awed by the names of the Ganges or the Euphrates. It contributes much to these feelings that southern Asia is, and has been for thousands of years, the part of the earth most swarming with human life, the great officina gentium.¹ Man is a weed in those regions. The vast empires also, into which the enormous population of Asia has always been cast, give a further sublimity to the feelings associated with all Oriental names or images. In China, over and above what it has in common with the rest of southern Asia, I am terrified by the modes of life, by the manners, and the barrier of utter abhorrence, and want of sympathy, placed between us by feelings deeper than I can analyze. I could sooner live with lunatics, or brute animals. All this, and much more than I can say, or have time to say, the reader must enter into before he can comprehend the unimaginable horror which these dreams of Oriental imagery, and mythological tortures, impressed upon me. Under the connecting feeling of tropical heat and vertical sunlights, I brought together all creatures, birds, beasts, reptiles, all trees and plants, usages and appearances, that are found in all tropical regions, and assembled them together in China or Indostan. From kindred feelings, I soon brought Egypt and all her gods under the same law. I was stared at, hooted at, grinned at, chattered at, by monkeys, by paroquets, by cockatoos. I ran into pagodas: and was fixed for centuries at the summit, or in secret rooms; I was the idol; I was the priest; I was worshipped; I was sacrificed. I fled from the wrath of Brama² through all the forests of

¹ beehive of nations

² Brahma, the creator, Vishnu, the protector, and Siva the destroyer, constitute the so-called Triad of Hindu mythology. Osiris, the creator, and Isis, his sister and wife, were Egyptian deities. The ibis and the crocodile were sacred animals among the Egyptians.

June, 1819.

Asia: Vishnu hated me: Seeva laid wait for me. I came suddenly upon Isis and Osiris: I had done a deed, they said, which the ibis and the crocodile trembled at. I was buried for a thousand years in stone coffins, with mummies and sphinxes, in narrow chambers at the heart of eternal pyramids. I was kissed, with cancerous kisses, by crocodiles; and laid, confounded with all unutterable slimy things, amongst reeds and Nilotic¹ mud.

I thus give the reader some slight abstraction of my Oriental dreams, which always filled me with such amazement at the monstrous scenery, that horror seemed absorbed, for a while, in sheer astonishment. Sooner or later, came a reflux of feeling that swallowed up the astonishment, and left me, not so much in terror, as in hatred and abomination of what I saw. Over every form, and threat, and punishment, and dim sightless incarceration, brooded a sense of eternity and infinity that drove me into an oppression as of madness. Into these dreams only, it was, with one or two slight exceptions, that any circumstances of physical horror entered. All before had been moral and spiritual terrors. But here the main agents were ugly birds, or snakes, or crocodiles; especially the last. The cursed crocodile became to me the object of more horror than almost all the rest. I was compelled to live with him; and (as was always the case almost in my dreams) for centuries. I escaped sometimes, and found myself in Chinese houses, with cane tables, etc. All the feet of the tables, sofas, etc., soon became instinct with life: the abominable head of the crocodile, and his leering eyes, looked out at me, multiplied into a thousand repetitions: and I stood loathing and fascinated. And so often did this hideous reptile haunt my dreams, that many times the very same dream was broken up in the very same way: I heard gentle voices speaking to me (I hear everything when I am sleeping); and instantly I awoke: it was broad noon; and my children were standing, hand in hand, at my bedside; come to show me their colored shoes, or new frocks, or to let me see them dressed for going out. I protest that so awful was the transition from the damned crocodile, and the other unutterable monsters and abortions of my dreams, to the sight of innocent human natures and of infancy, that, in the mighty and sudden revulsion of mind, I wept, and could not forbear it, as I kissed their faces.

¹ belonging to the Nile

I have had occasion to remark, at various periods of my life, that the deaths of those whom we love, and indeed the contemplation of death generally, is (cæteris paribus)¹ more affecting in summer than in any other season of the year.² And the reasons are these three, I think: first, that the visible heavens in summer appear far higher, more distant, and (if such a solecism may be excused) more infinite; the clouds, by which chiefly the eye expounds the distance of the blue pavilion stretched over our heads, are in summer more voluminous, massed, and accumulated in far grander and more towering piles: secondly, the light and the appearance of the declining and the setting sun are much more fitted to be types and characters of the Infinite: and, thirdly, which is the main reason, the exuberant and riotous prodigality of life naturally forces the mind more powerfully upon the antagonist thought of death, and the wintry sterility of the grave. For it may be observed, generally, that wherever two thoughts stand related to each other by a law of antagonism, and exist, as it were, by mutual repulsion, they are apt to suggest each other. On these accounts it is that I find it impossible to banish the thought of death when I am walking alone in the endless days of summer; and any particular death, if not more affecting, at least haunts my mind more obstinately and besiegingly in that season. Perhaps this cause, and a slight incident which I omit, might have been the immediate occasion of the following dream, to which, however, a predisposition must always have existed in my mind; but having been once roused, it never left me, and split into a thousand fantastic varieties, which often suddenly reunited, and composed again the original dream.

I thought that it was a Sunday morning in May, that it was Easter Sunday, and as yet very early in the morning I was standing, as it seemed to me, at the door of my own cottage. Right before me lay the very scene which could really be commanded from that situation, but exalted, as was usual, and solemnized by the power of dreams. There were the same mountains, and the same lovely valley at their feet; but the mountains were raised to more than Alpine height, and there was interspace far larger between them of meadows and forest lawns; the hedges were rich with white roses; and no living creature was to be seen, excepting that in the green churchyard there were cattle tranquilly reposing upon the verdant graves, and particularly round about the grave of a child whom I had tenderly loved,¹ just as I had really beheld them, a little before sunrise in the same summer, when that child died. I gazed upon the well-known scene, and I said aloud (as I thought) to myself, "It yet wants much of sunrise; and it is Easter Sunday; and that is the day on which they celebrate the first-fruits of resurrection. I will walk abroad; old griefs shall be forgotten today; for the air is cool and still, and the hills are high, and stretch away to heaven; and the forest-glades are as quiet as the churchyard; and with the dew I can wash the fever from my forehead, and then I shall be unhappy no longer." And I turned, as if to open my garden gate, and immediately I saw upon the left a scene far different; but which yet the power of dreams had reconciled into harmony with the other. The scene was an Oriental one, and there also it was Easter Sunday, and very early in the morning. And at a vast distance were visible, as a stain upon the horizon, the domes and cupolas of a great city—an image or faint abstraction, caught perhaps in childhood from some picture of Jerusalem. And not a bowshot from me, upon a stone, and shaded by Judean palms, there sat a woman, and I looked; and it was—Ann!² She fixed her eyes upon me earnestly; and I said to her at length: "So then I have found you at last." I waited: but she answered me not a word. Her face was the same as when I saw it last, and yet again how different! Seventeen years ago, when the lamplight fell upon her face, as for the last time I kissed her lips (lips, Ann, that to me were not polluted), her eyes were streaming with tears. the tears were now wiped away; she seemed more beautiful than she was at that time, but in all other points the same, and not older. Her looks were tranquil, but with unusual solemnity of expression; and I now gazed upon her with some awe, but suddenly her countenance grew dim, and, turning to the mountains, I perceived vapors rolling between us; in a moment, all had vanished; thick darkness came on; and, in the twinkling of an eye, I was far away from mountains, and by lamplight in Oxford Street, walking again with Ann—just as we walked seventeen years before, when we were both children.

¹ other conditions being the same² See p. 1045b, 12-22: also, Autobiographic Sketches (p. 1002a, 26 E.), and The English Mail-Coach, 3 1 (p. 1125b 45 F.)

¹ Catherine Wordsworth

² See pp 1051-60.

As a final specimen, I cite one of a different character, from 1820.

The dream commenced with a music which now I often heard in dreams—a music of preparation and of awakening suspense; a music like the opening of the Coronation Anthem, and which, like that, gave the feeling of a vast march—of infinite cavalcades filing off—and the tread of innumerable armies. The morning was come of a mighty day—a day of crisis and of final hope for human nature, then suffering some mysterious eclipse, and laboring in some dread extremity. Somewhere, I knew not where—somehow, I knew not how—by some beings, I knew not whom—a battle, a strife, an agony, was conducting,—was evolving like a great drama, or piece of music; with which my sympathy was the more unsupportable from my confusion as to its place, its cause, its nature, and its possible issue. I, as is usual in dreams (where, of necessity, we make ourselves central to every movement), had the power, and yet had not the power, to decide it. I had the power, if I could raise myself, to will it, and yet again had not the power, for the weight of twenty Atlantes was upon me, or the oppression of inexorable guilt. "Deeper than ever plummet sounded,"¹ I lay inactive. Then, like a chorus, the passion deepened. Some greater interest was at stake, some mightier cause than ever yet the sword had pleaded, or trumpet had proclaimed. Then came sudden alarms: hurrys to and fro: trepidations of unnumbered fugitives, I knew not whether from the good cause or the bad—darkness and lights. tempest and human faces: and at last, with the sense that all was lost, female forms, and the features that were worth all the world to me, and but a moment allowed, —and clasped hands, and heart-breaking partings, and then—everlasting farewells!² and with a sigh, such as the caves of hell sighed when the incestuous mother³ uttered the abhorred name of death, the sound was reverberated—everlasting farewells! and again, and yet again reverberated—everlasting farewells!

And I awoke in struggles, and cried aloud—"I will sleep no more!"⁴

But I am now called upon to wind up a narrative which has already extended to an unreasonable length. Within more spacious limits, the materials which I have used might have been better unfolded; and much which I have not used might have been added with effect. Perhaps, however, enough has been given. It now remains that I should say something of the way in which this conflict of horrors was finally brought to its crisis. The reader is already aware (from a passage near the beginning of the introduction to the first part) that the opium-eater has, in some way or other, "unwound, almost to its final links, the accursed chain which bound him."¹ By what means? To have narrated this, according to the original intention, would have far exceeded the space which can now be allowed. It is fortunate, as such a cogent reason exists for abridging it, that I should, on a maturer view of the case, have been exceedingly unwilling to injure, by any such unaffecting details, the impression of the history itself, as an appeal to the prudence and the conscience of the yet unconfirmed opium-eater—or even, though a very inferior consideration, to injure its effect as a composition. The interest of the judicious reader will not attach itself chiefly to the subject of the fascinating spells, but to the fascinating power. Not the opium-eater, but the opium, is the true hero of the tale; and the legitimate center on which the interest revolves. The object was to display the marvellous agency of opium, whether for pleasure or for pain: if that is done, the action of the piece has closed.

¹ The Tempest, V, 1, 56

² Min (See Paradise Lost, 2, 787 ff.)

³ See Macbeth, II, 2, 35

However, as some people, in spite of all laws to the contrary, will persist in asking what became of the opium-eater, and in what state he now is, I answer for him thus. The reader is aware that opium had long ceased to found its empire on spells of pleasure; it was solely by the tortures connected with the attempt to abjure it, that it kept its hold. Yet, as other tortures, no less it may be thought, attended the non-abjuration of such a tyrant, a choice only of evils was left; and that might as well have been adopted, which, however terrific in itself, held out a prospect of final restoration to happiness. This appears true; but good logic gave the author no strength to act upon it. However, a crisis arrived for the author's life, and a crisis for other objects still dearer to him—and which will always be far dearer to him than his life, even now that it is again a happy one—I saw that I must die if I continued the opium. I determined, therefore, if that should be required, to die in throwing it off. How much I was at that time taking I cannot say; for the opium which I used had been purchased for me by a friend who afterwards refused to let me pay him; so that I could not ascertain even what quantity I had used within the year. I apprehend, however, that I took it very irregularly: and that I varied from about fifty or sixty grains, to 150 a day. My first task was to reduce it to forty, to thirty, and, as fast as I could, to twelve grains.

I triumphed: but think not, reader, that therefore my sufferings were ended; nor think of me as of one sitting in a dejected state. Think of me as of one, even when four months had passed, still agitated, writhing, throbbing, palpitating, shattered; and much, perhaps, in the situation of him who has been racked, as I collect the torments of that state from the affecting account of them left by the most innocent sufferer¹ of the times of James I. Meantime, I derived no benefit from any medicine, except one prescribed to me by an Edinburgh surgeon of great eminence, viz, ammoniated tincture of valerian. Medical account, therefore, of my emancipation I have not much to give: and even that little, as managed by a man so ignorant of medicine as myself, would probably tend only to mislead. At all events, it would be misplaced in this situation. The moral of the narrative is addressed to the opium-eater; and, therefore, of necessity, limited in its application. If he is taught to fear and tremble, enough has been effected. But he may say, that the issue of my case is at least a proof that opium, after a seventeen years' use, and an eight years' abuse of its powers, may still be renounced: and that he may chance to bring to the task greater energy than I did, or that with a stronger constitution than mine he may obtain the same results with less. This may be true. I would not presume to measure the efforts of other men by my own. I heartily wish him more energy: I wish him the same success. Nevertheless, I had motives external to myself which he may unfortunately want: and these supplied me with conscientious supports which mere personal interests might fail to supply to a mind debilitated by opium.

Jeremy Taylor conjectures that it may be as painful to be born as to die:² I think it probable: and, during the whole period of diminishing the opium, I had the torments of a man passing out of one mode of existence into another. The issue was not death, but a sort of physical regeneration: and I may add, that ever since, at intervals, I have had a restoration of more than youthful spirits, though under the pressure of difficulties, which, in a less happy state of mind, I should have called misfortunes.

¹ "William Lithgow his book (Travels, etc.) i. iii and pedantically written: but the account of his own sufferings on the rack at Malaga is overpoweringly affecting."—De Quincey

² In the enlarged Confessions, De Quincey changes the name to Lord Bacon, and in a note refers to Bacon's Essay on Death.

¹ Quoted from the passage addressed to the reader, at the beginning of the Confessions.

One memorial of my former condition still remains: my dreams are not yet perfectly calm: the dread swell and agitation of the storms have not wholly subsided: the legions that encamped in them are drawing off, but not all departed: my sleep is still tumultuous, and, like the gates of Paradise to our first parents when looking back from afar, it is still, in the tremendous line of Milton—

With dreadful faces throng'd and fiery arms.¹

ON THE KNOCKING AT THE GATE IN MACBETH² 1823

From my boyish days I had always felt a great perplexity on one point in Macbeth. It was this:—the knocking at the gate which succeeds to the murder of Duncan produced to my feelings an effect for which I never could account. The effect was that it reflected back upon the murderer a peculiar awfulness and a depth of solemnity; yet, however obstinately I endeavored with my understanding to comprehend this, for many years I never could see why it should produce such an effect.

Here I pause for one moment to exhort the reader never to pay any attention to his understanding when it stands in opposition to any other faculty of his mind. The mere understanding, however useful and indispensable, is the meanest faculty in the human mind and the most to be distrusted; and yet the great majority of people trust to nothing else,—which may do for ordinary life, but not for philosophical purposes. Of this, out of ten thousand instances that I might produce, I will cite one. Ask of any person whatsoever who is not previously prepared for the demand by a knowledge of perspective, to draw in the rudest way the commonest appearance which depends upon the laws of that science,—as, for instance, to represent the effect of two walls standing at right angles to each other, or the appearance of the houses on each side of a street, as seen by a person looking down the street from one extremity. Now, in all cases, unless the person has happened to observe in pictures how it is that artists produce these effects, he will be utterly unable to make the smallest approximation to it. Yet why? For he has actually seen the effect every day of his life. The reason is that he allows his understanding to overrule his eyes. His understanding, which includes no intuitive knowledge of the laws of vision, can furnish him with no reason why a line which is known and can be proved to be a horizontal line should not appear a horizontal line: a line that made any angle with the perpendicular less than a right angle would seem to him to indicate that his houses were all tumbling down together. Accordingly he makes the line of his houses a horizontal line, and fails of course to produce the effect demanded. Here then is one instance out of many in which not only the understanding is allowed to overrule the eyes, but where the understanding is positively allowed to obliterate the eyes, as it were; for not only does the man believe the evidence of his understanding in opposition to that of his eyes, but (which is monstrous) the idiot is not aware that his eyes ever gave such evidence. He does not know that he has seen (and therefore, quoad,¹ his consciousness has not seen) that which he has seen every day of his life. But to return from this digression,—my understanding could furnish no reason why the knocking at the gate in Macbeth should produce any effect, direct or reflected. In fact, my understanding said positively that it could not produce any effect. But I knew better; I felt that it did; and I waited and clung to the problem until further knowledge should enable me to solve it. At length, in 1812,² Mr. Williams made his début on the stage of Ratchiffe Highway, and executed those unparalleled murders which have procured for him such a brilliant and undying reputation. On which murders, by the way, I must observe, that in one respect they have had an ill effect, by making the connoisseur in murder very fastidious in his taste, and dissatisfied with anything that has been since done in that line. All other murders look pale by the deep crimson of his; and, as an amateur³ once said to me in a querulous tone, “There has been absolutely nothing doing since his time, or noth-

¹ therefore

² It was in December, 1811.

³ A person fond of something

¹ Paradise Lost, 12, 644.

² Act II, 2-3

ing that's worth speaking of." But this is wrong, for it is unreasonable to expect all men to be great artists, and born with the genius of Mr. Williams. Now it will be remembered that in the first of these murders (that of the Marrs) the same incident (of a knocking at the door soon after the work of extermination was complete) did actually occur which the genius of Shakspeare has invented; and all good judges, and the most eminent dilettanti, acknowledged the felicity of Shakspeare's suggestion as soon as it was actually realized. Here then was a fresh proof that I had been right in relying on my own feeling in opposition to my understanding; and again I set myself to study the problem. At length I solved it to my own satisfaction; and my solution is this:—Murder, in ordinary cases, where the sympathy is wholly directed to the case of the murdered person, is an incident of coarse and vulgar horror; and for this reason—that it flings the interest exclusively upon the natural but ignoble instinct by which we cleave to life: an instinct which, as being indispensable to the primal law of self-preservation, is the same in kind (though different in degree) amongst all living creatures. This instinct, therefore, because it annihilates all distinctions, and degrades the greatest of men to the level of "the poor beetle that we tread on,"¹ exhibits human nature in its most abject and humiliating attitude. Such an attitude would little suit the purposes of the poet. What then must he do? He must throw the interest on the murderer. Our sympathy must be with him (of course I mean a sympathy of comprehension, a sympathy by which we enter into his feelings, and are made to understand them—not a sympathy of pity or approbation).² In the murdered person all strife of thought, all flux and reflux of passion and of purpose, are crushed by one overwhelming panic; the fear of instant death smites him "with its petrific³ mace." But in the murderer, such a murderer as a poet will condescend to, there must be raging some great storm of passion—jealousy, ambition, vengeance, hatred—which will create a hell within him; and into this hell we are to look.

¹ Measure for Measure, III, 1, 78.

² "It seems almost ludicrous to guard and explain my use of a word in a situation where it would naturally explain itself. But it has become necessary to do so, in consequence of the unscholar-like use of the word sympathy, at present so general, by which, instead of taking it in its proper sense, as the act of reproducing in our minds the feelings of another, whether for hatred, indignation, love, pity, or approbation, it is made a mere synonym of the word pity; and hence, instead of saying, 'sympathy with another,' many writers adopt the monstrous barbarism of 'sympathy for another.'"—De Quincey.

³ petrifying (Paradise Lost, 10, 293 &c.)

In Macbeth, for the sake of gratifying his own enormous and teeming faculty of creation, Shakspeare has introduced two murderers: and, as usual in his hands, they are remarkably discriminated: but—though in Macbeth the strife of mind is greater than in his wife, the tiger spirit not so awake, and his feelings caught chiefly by contagion from her—yet, as both were finally involved in the guilt of murder, the murderous mind of necessity is finally to be presumed in both. This was to be expressed, and on its own account, as well as to make it a more proportionable antagonist to the unoffending nature of their victim, "the gracious Duncan,"¹ and adequately to expound "the deep damnation of his taking off,"² this was to be expressed with peculiar energy. We were to be made to feel that the human nature,—i. e., the divine nature of love and mercy, spread through the hearts of all creatures, and seldom utterly withdrawn from man—was gone, vanished, extinct, and that the fiendish nature had taken its place. And, as this effect is marvellously accomplished in the dialogues and soloques themselves, so it is finally consummated by the expedient under consideration; and it is to this that I now solicit the reader's attention. If the reader has ever witnessed a wife, daughter, or sister, in a fainting fit, he may chance to have observed that the most affecting moment in such a spectacle is that in which a sigh and a stirring announce the recommencement of suspended life. Or, if the reader has ever been present in a vast metropolis on the day when some great national idol was carried in funeral pomp to his grave, and, chancing to walk near the course through which it passed, has felt powerfully, in the silence and desertion of the streets and in the stagnation of ordinary business, the deep interest which at that moment was possessing the heart of man—if all at once he should hear the death-like stillness broken up by the sound of wheels rattling away from the scene, and making known that the transitory vision was dissolved, he will be aware that at no moment was his sense of the complete suspension and pause in ordinary human concerns so full and affecting as at that moment when the suspension ceases, and the goings-on of human life are suddenly resumed. All action in any direction is best expounded, measured, and made apprehensible, by reaction. Now apply this to the case in Macbeth. Here, as I have said, the retiring of the human heart and the entrance of the fiendish heart was to be expressed and made sensible. Another world has stepped in, and the murderers are taken out of the region of human things, human purposes, human desires. They are transfigured: Lady Macbeth is "unsexed";¹ Macbeth has forgot that he was born of woman; both are conformed to the image of devils; and the world of devils is suddenly revealed. But how shall this be conveyed and made palpable? In order that a new world may step in, this world must for a time disappear. The murderers, and the muider, must be insulated—cut off by an immeasurable gulf from the ordinary tide and succession of human affairs—locked up and sequestered in some deep recess, we must be made sensible that the world of ordinary life is suddenly arrested—laid asleep—tranced—racked into a dread armistice; time must be annihilated, relation to things without abolished, and all must pass self-withdrawn into a deep syncope and suspension of earthly passion. Hence it is that, when the deed is done, when the work of darkness is perfect, then the world of darkness passes away like a pageantry in the clouds the knocking at the gate is heard, and it makes known audibly that the reaction has commenced; the human has made its reflux upon the fiendish: the pulses of life are beginning to beat again; and the re-establishment of the goings-on of the world in which we live first makes us profoundly sensible of the awful parenthesis that had suspended them

¹ Macbeth, III, 1, 65.

² Ibid., I, 7, 20

O mighty poet! Thy works are not as those of other men, simply and merely great works of art, but are also like the phenomena of nature, like the sun and the sea, the stars and the flowers, like frost and snow, rain and dew, hail-storm and thunder, which are to be studied with entire submission of our own faculties, and in the perfect faith that in them there can be no too much or too little, nothing useless or inert, but that, the farther we press in our discoveries, the more we shall see proofs of design and self-supporting arrangement where the careless eye had seen nothing but accident!

From RECOLLECTIONS OF CHARLES LAMB
1838

Amongst the earliest literary acquaintances I made was that with the inimitable Charles Lamb: inimitable, I say, but the word is too limited in its meaning, for, as is said of Milton in that well-known life of him attached to all common editions of the Paradise Lost (Fenton's, I think), "in both senses he was above imitation." Yes; it was as impossible to the moral nature of Charles Lamb that he should imitate another as, in an intellectual sense, it was impossible that any other should successfully imitate him. To write with patience even, not to say genially, for Charles Lamb it was a very necessity of his constitution that he should write from his own wayward nature; and that nature was so peculiar that no other man, the ablest at mimicry, could counterfeited its voice. But let me not anticipate, for these were opinions about Lamb which I had not when I first knew him, nor could have had by any reasonable title "Eha,"¹ be it observed, the exquisite "Eha," was then unborn, Lamb had as yet published nothing to the world which proclaimed him in his proper character of a most original man of genius;² at best, he could have been thought no more than a man of talent—and of talent moving in a narrow path, with a power rather of mimicking the quaint and the fantastic than any large grasp over catholic beauty. And, therefore, it need not offend the most doting admirer of Lamb as he is now known to us, a brilliant star forever

¹ The pseudonym of Charles Lamb.

² "Man of genius" — "man of talent" — I have, in another place, laid down what I conceive to be the true ground of distinction between genius and talent: which lies mainly in this—that genius is intellectual power impregnated with the moral nature, and expresses a synthesis of the active in man with his original organic capacity of pleasure and pain. Hence the very word genius, because the genial nature in its whole organisation is expressed and involved in it. Hence, also, arises the reason that genius is always peculiar and individual, one man's genius never exactly repeats another man's. But talent is the same in all men; and that which is effected by talent can never serve to identify or indicate its author. Hence, too, that, although talent is the object of respect, it never conciliates love, you love a man of talent perhaps in concreto, but not talent; whereas genius, even for itself, is idolised. I am the more proud of this distinction since I have seen the utter failure of Mr. Coleridge, judging from his attempt in his Table-Talk — De Quincey. For the other discussions referred to, see De Quincey's Autobiographic Sketches, The Nation of London (Works, ed. Masson, 1, 184 n.), and John Keats (Works, ed. Masson, 11, 382); also Coleridge's Table Talk, May 21, 1830, and Aug. 20, 1833.

¹ Macbeth, I, 5, 42.

fixed in the firmament of English Literature, that I acknowledge myself to have sought his acquaintance rather under the reflex honor he had enjoyed of being known as Coleridge's friend than for any which he yet held directly and separately in his own person. My earliest advances towards this acquaintance had an inauspicious aspect; and it may be worth while reporting the circumstances, for they were characteristic of Charles Lamb; and the immediate result was—that we parted, not perhaps (as Lamb says of his philosophic friend R. and the Parisians) “with mutual contempt,” but at least with coolness, and, on my part, with something that might have even turned to disgust—founded, however, entirely on my utter misapprehension of Lamb's character and his manners—had it not been for the winning goodness of Miss Lamb,¹ before which all resentment must have melted in a moment.

It was either late in 1804 or early in 1805, according to my present computations, that I had obtained from a literary friend a letter of introduction to Mr. Lamb. All that I knew of his works was his play of John Woodvil, which I had bought in Oxford, and perhaps I only had bought throughout that great University, at the time of my matriculation there, about the Christmas of 1803. Another book fell into my hands on that same morning, I recollect—the Gebir of Mr. Walter Savage Landor, which astonished me by the splendor of its descriptions (for I had opened accidentally upon the sea-nymph's marriage with Tamor, the youthful brother of Gebir—and I bought this also. Afterwards, when placing these two most unpopular of books on the same shelf with the other far holier idols of my heart, the joint poems of Wordsworth and Coleridge as then associated in the Lyrical Ballads—poems not equally unknown, perhaps a little better known, but only with the result of being more openly scorned, rejected—I could not but smile internally at the fair prospect I had of congregating a library which no man had read but myself. John Woodvil I had almost studied, and Miss Lamb's pretty High-Born Helen, and the ingenious imitations of Burton;² these I had read, and, to a certain degree, must have admired, for some parts of them had settled without effort in my memory. I had read also the *Edinburgh*³ notice of them; and with what contempt may be supposed from the fact that my veneration for Wordsworth transcended all that I felt for any created being, past or present; in-somuch that, in the summer, or spring rather, of that same year, and full eight months before I first went to Oxford, I had ventured to address a letter to him, through his publishers, the Messrs. Longman (which letter, Miss Wordsworth in after years assured me they believed to be the production of some person much older than I represented myself), and that in due time I had been honored by a long answer from Wordsworth; an honor which, I well remember, kept me awake, from mere excess of pleasure, through a long night in June, 1803. It was not to be supposed that the very feeblest of admirations could be shaken by mere scorn and contumely, unsupported by any shadow of a reason. Wordsworth, therefore, could not have suffered in any man's opinion from the puny efforts of this new autocrat amongst reviewers; but what was said of Lamb, though not containing one iota of criticism, either good or bad, had certainly more point and cleverness. The supposition that John Woodvil might be a lost drama, recovered from the age of Theopis,⁴ and entitled to the hircus,⁵ etc, must, I should think, have won a smile from Lamb himself; or why say “Lamb himself,” which means “even Lamb,” when he would have been the very first to laugh (as he was afterwards among the first to hoot at his own farce),⁶ provided only he could detach his mind from the ill-nature and hard contempt which accompanied the wit. This wit had certainly not dazzled my eyes in the slightest degree. So far as I was left at leisure by a more potent order of poetry to think of the John Woodvil at all, I had felt and acknowledged a delicacy and tenderness in the situations as well as the sentiments, but disfigured, as I thought, by quaint, grotesque, and mimetic phraseology. The main defect, however, of which I complained, was defect of power. I thought Lamb had no right to take his station amongst the inspired writers who had just then risen to throw new blood into

¹ The Edinburgh Review, April, 1803 (vol. 2, 90-98).

² That is, from the rudest age of the drama. Theopis (8th cent. B. C.) is the reputed founder of tragedy.

³ goat (said to have been the prize of tragedy in the time of Theopis).

⁴ Lamb's farce, Mr H, was hooted off the stage at its first appearance, in 1806.

¹ Lamb's sister Mary.

² See p. 959. The marriage of Tamar and the sea-nymph is described in Book 6.

³ Lamb's imitations were called Curious Fragments.

our literature, and to breathe a breath of life through the worn-out, or, at least, torpid organization of the national mind. He belonged, I thought, to the old literature; and, as a poet, he certainly does. There were in his verses minute scintillations of genius—now and then, even a subtle sense of beauty; and there were shy graces, lurking half-unseen, like violets in the shade. But there was no power on a colossal scale; no breadth; no choice of great subjects; no wrestling with difficulty; no creative energy. So I thought then; and so I should think now, if Lamb were viewed chiefly as a poet. Since those days he has established his right to a seat in any company. But why? and in what character? As “Elia”.—the essays of “Elia” are as exquisite a gem amongst the jewelry of literature as any nation can show. They do not, indeed, suggest to the typifying imagination a Last Supper of da Vinci or a Group from the Sistine Chapel, but they suggest some exquisite cabinet painting; such, for instance, as that Carlo Dolce known to all who have visited Lord Exeter’s place of Burleigh (by the way, I bar the allusion to Charles Lamb which a shameless punster suggests in the name *Carlo Dolce*¹); and in this also resembling that famous picture—that many critics (Hazlitt amongst others) can see little or nothing in it. *Quam nihil ad genium, Papinianus, tuum?*² Those, therefore, err, in my opinion, who present Lamb to our notice amongst the poets. Very pretty, very elegant, very tender, very beautiful verses he has written; nay, twice he has written verses of extraordinary force, almost demoniac force—viz., The Three Graves, and The Gipsy’s Melison.³ But speaking generally, he writes verses as one to whom that function was a secondary and occasional function, not his original and natural vocation—not an épre, but a répéter.⁴

For the reasons, therefore, I have given, never thinking of Charles Lamb as a poet, and, at that time, having no means for judging of him in any other character, I had requested the letter of introduction to him rather with a view to some further knowledge of Coleridge (who was then absent from England) than from any special interest about Lamb himself. However, I felt the extreme discourtesy of approaching a man and asking for his time and civility under such an avowal: and the letter, therefore, as I believe, or as I requested, represented me in the light of an admirer. I hope it did; for that character might have some excuse for what followed, and heal the unpleasant impression likely to be left by a sort of fracas which occurred at my first meeting with Lamb. This was so characteristic of Lamb that I have often laughed at it since I came to know what was characteristic of Lamb.

But first let me describe my brief introductory call upon him at the India House. I had been told that he was never to be found at home except in the evenings; and to have called then would have been, in a manner, forcing myself upon his hospitalities, and at a moment when he might have confidential friends about him; besides that, he was sometimes tempted away to the theatres. I went, therefore, to the India House; made inquiries amongst the servants; and, after some trouble (for that was early in his Leadenhall Street career, and possibly he was not much known), I was shown into a small room, or else a small section of a large one (thirty-four years affects one’s remembrance of some circumstances), in which was a very lofty writing desk, separated by a still higher railing from that part of the floor on which the profane—the laity, like myself—were allowed to approach the clerus, or clerical rulers of the room. Within the railing sat, to the best of my remembrance, six quill-driving gentlemen; not gentlemen whose duty or profession it was merely to drive the quill, but who were then driving it—gens de plume,⁵ such in esset, as well as in posset—in act as well as habit, for, as if they supposed me a spy sent by some superior power to report upon the situation of affairs as surprised by me, they were all too profoundly immersed in their oriental studies to have any sense of my presence. Consequently, I was reduced to a necessity of announcing myself and my errand. I walked, therefore, into one of the two open doorways of the railing, and stood closely by the high stool of him who occupied the first place within the little aisle. I touched his arm, by way of recalling him from his lofty Leadenhall speculation to this sublimary world; and, presenting my letter,

¹ Italian for “sweet Charles.”

² How not at all in accord with your taste, Papinianus. Papinianus (175-212) was a famous Roman lawyer and jurist. De Quincey means Hazlitt. The expression is found on the title page of the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th editions of Wordsworth and Coleridge’s Lyrical Ballads.

³ For these poems, see p. 917.

⁴ Not a vocation, but an avocation.

⁵ men of the pen

asked if that gentleman (pointing to the address) were really a citizen of the present room; for I had been repeatedly mislead, by the directions given me, into wrong rooms. The gentleman smiled; it was a smile not to be forgotten. This was Lamb. And here occurred a very, very little incident—one of those which pass so fugitively that they are gone and hurrying away into Lethe almost before your attention can have arrested them; but it was an incident which, to me, who happened to notice it, served to express the courtesy and delicate consideration of Lamb's manner. The seat upon which he sat was a very high one; so absurdly high, by the way, that I can imagine no possible use or sense in such an altitude, unless it were to restrain the occupant from playing truant at the fire by opposing Alpine difficulties to his descent.

Whatever might be the original purpose of this aspiring seat, one serious dilemma arose from it, and this it was which gave the occasion to Lamb's act of courtesy. Somewhere there is an anecdote, meant to illustrate the ultra-obsequiousness of the man,—either I have heard of it in connection with some actual man known to myself, or it is told in a book of some historical coxcomb,—that, being on horseback, and meeting some person or other whom it seemed advisable to flatter, he actually dismounted, in order to pay his court by a more ceremonious bow. In Russia, as we all know, this was, at one time, upon meeting any of the Imperial family, an act of legal necessity: and there, accordingly, but there only, it would have worn no ludicrous aspect. Now, in this situation of Lamb's, the act of descending from his throne, a very elaborate process, with steps and stages analogous to those on horseback—of slipping your right foot out of the stirrup, throwing your leg over the crupper, etc.—was, to all intents and purposes, the same thing as dismounting from a great elephant or a horse. Therefore it both was, and was felt to be by Lamb, supremely ludicrous. On the other hand, to have sat still and stately upon this aerial station, to have bowed condescendingly from this altitude, would have been—not ludicrous indeed; performed by a very superb person and supported by a superb bow, it might have been vastly fine, and even terrifying to many young gentlemen under sixteen; but it would have had an air of ungentlemanly assumption. Between these extremes, therefore, Lamb had to choose:— between appearing ridiculous himself for a moment, by going through a ridiculous evolution which no man could execute with grace; or, on the other hand, appearing lofty and assuming, in a degree which his truly humble nature (for he was the humblest of men in the pretensions which he put forward for himself) must have shrunk from with horror. Nobody who knew Lamb can doubt how the problem was solved: he began to dismount instantly; and, as it happened that the very first round of his descent obliged him to turn his back upon me as if for a sudden purpose of flight, he had an excuse for laughing; which he did heartily—saying, at the same time, something to this effect: that I must not judge from first appearances; that he should revolve upon me; that he was not going to fly; and other facetiæ, which challenged a general laugh from the clerical brotherhood.

When he had reached the basis of tertia firma on which I was standing, naturally, as a mode of thanking him for his courtesy, I presented my hand; which, in a general case, I should certainly not have done; for I cherished, in an ultra-English degree, the English custom (a wise custom) of bowing in frigid silence on a first introduction to a stranger; but, to a man of literary talent, and one who had just practiced so much kindness in my favor at so probable a hazard to himself of being laughed at for his pains, I could not maintain that frosty reserve. Lamb took my hand; did not absolutely reject it: but rather repelled my advance by his manner. This, however, long afterwards I found, was only a habit derived from his too great sensitiveness to the variety of people's feelings, which run through a gamut so infinite of degrees and modes as to make it unsafe for any man who respects himself to be too hasty in his allowances of familiarity. Lamb had, as he was entitled to have, a high self-respect; and me he probably suspected (as a young Oxonian) of some aristocratic tendencies. The letter of introduction, containing (I imagine) no matters of business, was speedily run through; and I instantly received an invitation to spend the evening with him. Lamb was not one of those who catch at the chance of escaping from a bore by fixing some distant day, when accidents (in duplicate proportion, perhaps, to the number of intervening days) may have carried you away from the place: he sought to benefit by no luck of that kind; for he was, with his limited income—and I say it deliberately—positively the most hospitable man I have known in this world. That night, the same night, I was to come and spend the evening with him. I had gone to the India House with the express purpose of accepting whatever invitation he should give me, and, therefore, I accepted this, took my leave, and left Lamb in the act of resuming his aerial position.

I was to come so early as to drink tea with Lamb; and the hour was seven. He lived in the Temple; and I, who was not then, as 'afterwards I became, a student and member of "the Honorable Society of the Middle Temple," did not know much of the localities. However, I found out his abode, not greatly beyond my time: nobody had been asked to meet me,—which a little surprised me, but I was glad of it; for, besides Lamb, there was present his sister, Miss Lamb, of whom, and whose talents and sweetness of disposition, I had heard. I turned the conversation, upon the first opening which offered, to the subject of Coleridge; and many of my questions were answered satisfactorily, because seriously, by Miss Lamb. But Lamb took a pleasure in baffling me, or in throwing ridicule upon the subject. Out of this grew the matter of our affray. We were speaking of The Ancient Mariner.¹ Now, to explain what followed, and a little to excuse myself, I must beg the reader to understand that I was under twenty years of age, and that my admiration for Coleridge (as, in perhaps a still greater degree, for Wordsworth) was literally in no respect short of a religious feeling: it had, indeed, all the sanctity of religion, and all the tenderness of a human veneration. Then, also, to imagine the strength which it would derive from circumstances that do not exist now, but did then, let the reader further suppose a case—not such as he may have known since that era about Sir Walter Scott's and Lord Byron's, where every man you could possibly fall foul of, early or late, night or day, summer or winter, was in perfect readiness to feel and express his sympathy with the admirer—but when no man, beyond one or two in each ten thousand, had so much as heard of either Coleridge or Wordsworth, and that one, or those two, knew them only to scorn them, trample on them, spit upon them. Men so subject in public estimation, I maintain, as that Coleridge and that Wordsworth, had not existed before, have not existed since, will not exist again. We have heard in old times of donkeys insulting effete or dying lions by kicking them; but in the case of Coleridge and Wordsworth it was effete donkeys that kicked living lions. They, Coleridge and Wordsworth, were the Pariahs² of literature in those days. as much scorned wherever they were known; but escaping that scorn only because they were as little known as Pariahs, and even more obscure.

Well, after this bravura,³ by way of conveying my sense of the real position then occupied by these two authors—a position which thirty and odd years have altered, by a revolution more astonishing and total than ever before happened in literature or in life—let the reader figure to himself the sensitive horror with which a young person, carrying his devotion about with him, of necessity, as the profoundest of secrets, like a primitive Christian amongst a nation of Pagans, or a Roman Catholic convert amongst the bloody idolators of Japan⁴—in Oxford, above all places, hoping for no sympathy, and feeling a daily grief, almost a shame, in harboring this devotion to that which, nevertheless, had done more for the expansion and sustenance of his own inner mind than all literature besides—let the reader figure, I say, to himself, the shock with which such a person must recoil from hearing the very friend and associate of these authors utter what seemed at that time a burning ridicule of all which belonged to them—their books, their thoughts, their places, their persons. This had gone on for some time before we came upon the ground of The Ancient Mariner; I had been grieved, perplexed, astonished, and how else could I have felt reasonably, knowing nothing of Lamb's propensity to mystify a stranger; he, on the other hand, knowing nothing of the depth of my feelings on these subjects, and that they were not so much mere literary preferences as something that went deeper than life or household affections? At length, when he had given utterance to some ferocious canon of judgment, which seemed to question the entire value of the poem, I said, perspiring (I dare say) in this detestable crisis—"But, Mr. Lamb, good heavens! how is it possible you can allow yourself in such

¹ outcasts (A Pariah properly is a member of a very extensive low caste in Southern India, but the name was extended to members of any low Hindu caste, and by Europeans applied to persons of no caste.)

² Bravura is a brilliant style of music

³ Japan persecuted Christians until the middle of the 19th century

¹ See p. 335.

opinions? What instance could you bring from the poem that would bear you out in these insinuations?"—"Instances?" said Lamb: "oh, I'll instance you, if you come to that. Instance, indeed! Pray, what do you say to this—

The many men so beautiful,
And they all dead did lie!

So beautiful, indeed! Beautiful! Just think of such a gang of Wapping vagabonds,² all covered with pitch, and chewing tobacco; and the old gentleman himself—what do you call him?—the bright-eyed fellow!"³ What more might follow I never heard; for, at this point, in a perfect rapture of horror, I raised my hands—both hands—to both ears, and, without stopping to think or to apologize, I endeavored to restore equanimity to my disturbed sensibilities by shutting out all further knowledge of Lamb's impieties. At length he seemed to have finished; so I, on my part, thought I might venture to take off the embargo and in fact he had ceased, but no sooner did he find me restored to my hearing than he said with a most sarcastic smile—which he could assume upon occasion—"If you please, sir, we'll say grace before we begin." I know not whether Lamb were really piqued or not at the mode by which I had expressed my disturbance. Miss Lamb certainly was not; her goodness led her to pardon me, and to treat me—in whatever light she might really view my almost involuntary rudeness—as the party who had suffered wrong; and, for the rest of the evening, she was so pointedly kind and conciliatory in her manner that I felt greatly ashamed of my boyish failure in self-command. Yet, after all, Lamb necessarily appeared so much worse, in my eyes, as a traitor is worse than an open enemy.

Lamb, after this one visit—not knowing at that time any particular reason for continuing to seek his acquaintance—I did not trouble with my calls for some years. At length, however, about the year 1808, and for the six or seven following years, in my evening visits to Coleridge, I used to meet him again; not often, but sufficiently to correct the altogether very false impression I had received of his character and manners.

¹ The Rime of the Ancient Mariner, 236-7 (p. 338).

² The district of Wapping along the Thames in London, is the favorite haunt of sailors.

³ The Rime of the Ancient Mariner, 20 (p. 335).

STYLE 1840-41

From PART I

It is a fault, amongst many faults, of such works as we have on this subject of style, that they collect the list of qualities, good or bad, to which composition is liable, not under any principle from which they might be deduced a priori, so as to be assured that all had been enumerated, but by a tentative groping, a mere conjectural estimate. The word style has with us a twofold meaning: one sense, the narrow one, expressing the mere synthesis onomatôn,¹ the syntax or combination of words into sentences; the other of far wider extent, and expressing all possible relations that can arise between thoughts and words—the total effect of a writer, as derived from manner. Style may be viewed as an organic thing and as a mechanic thing. By organic, we mean that which, being acted upon, reacts, and which propagates the communicated power without loss, by mechanic, that which, being impressed with motion, cannot throw it back without loss, and therefore soon comes to an end. The human body is an elaborate system of organs, it is sustained by organs. But the human body is exercised as a machine, and, as such, may be viewed in the arts of riding, dancing, leaping, etc., subject to the laws of motion and equilibrium. Now, the use of words is an organic thing, in so far as language is connected with thoughts and modified with thoughts. It is a mechanic thing, in so far as words in combination determine or modify each other. The science of style, as an organ of thought, of style in relation to the ideas and feelings, might be called the organology of style. The science of style, considered as a machine, in which words act upon words, and through a particular grammar, might be called the mechanology of style. It is of little importance by what name these two functions of composition are expressed. But it is of great importance not to confound the functions; that function by which style maintains a commerce with thought, and that by which it chiefly communicates with grammar and with words. A pedant only will insist upon the names; but the distinction in the ideas, under some name, can be neglected only by the man who is careless of logic.

We know not how far we may be ever

¹ putting together of nouns (See Aristotle's Rhetoric, III, 2, 2, 26.)

called upon to proceed with this discussion: if it should happen that we were, an interesting field of questions would lie before us for the first part, the organology. It would lead us over the ground trodden by the Greek and Roman rhetoricians; and over those particular questions which have arisen by the contrast between the circumstances of the ancients and our own since the origin of printing. Punctuation,¹ trivial as such an innovation may seem, was the product of typography; and it is interesting to trace the effects upon style even of that one slight addition to the resources of logic. Previously, a man was driven to depend for his security against misunderstanding upon the pure virtue of his syntax. Miscollocation or dislocation of related words disturbed the whole sense; its least effect was to give no sense; often it gave a dangerous sense. Now, punctuation was an artificial machinery for maintaining the integrity of the sense against all mistakes of the writer; and, as one consequence, it withdrew the energy of men's anxieties from the natural machinery, which lay in just and careful arrangement. Another and still greater machinery of art for the purpose of maintaining the sense, and with the effect of relaxing the care of the writer, lay in the exquisitely artificial structure of the Latin language, which, by means of its terminal forms, indicated the arrangement, and referred the proper predicate to the proper subject, spite of all that affectation or negligence could do to disturb the series of the logic or the succession of the syntax. Greek, of course, had the same advantage in kind, but not in degree; and thence rose some differences which have escaped all notice of rhetoricians. Here also would properly arise the question started by Charles Fox (but probably due originally to the conversation of some far subtler friend, such as Edmund Burke), how far the practice of footnotes—a practice purely modern in its form—is reconcilable with the laws of just composition; and whether in virtue, though not in form, such footnotes did not exist for the ancients, by an evasion we could point out.¹ The question is clearly one which grows out of style in its relations to thought—how far, viz., such an excrescence as a note argues that the sentence to which it is attached has not received the benefit of a full development for the conception involved; whether if thrown into the furnace again and remelted, it might not be so recast as to absorb the redundancy which had previously flowed over into a note. Under this head would fall not only all the differential questions of style and composition between us and the ancients, but also the questions of merit as fairly distributed amongst the moderns compared with each other. The French, as we recently insisted,² undoubtedly possess one vast advantage over all other nations in the good taste which governs the arrangement of their sentences; in the simplicity (a strange pretension to make for anything French) of the modulation under which their thoughts flow; in the absence of all cumbrous involution, and in the quick succession of their periods.³ In reality this invaluable merit tends to an excess; and the style coupé as opposed to the style soutenu,⁴ flippancy opposed to gravity, the subsultory⁵ to the continuous, these are the two frequent extremities to which the French manner betrays men. Better, however, to be flippant than, by a revolting form of tumor and perplexity, to lead men into habits of intellect such as result from the modern vice of English style. Still, with all its practical value, it is evident that the intellectual merits of the French style are but small.⁶ They are chiefly negative, in the first place; and, secondly, founded in the accident of their colloquial necessities. The law of conversation has prescribed the model of their sentences; and in that law there is quite as much of self-interest at work as of respect for equity. Hanc veniam petimusque da-

¹ "This is a most instructive fact, and it is another fact not less instructive, that lawyers in most parts of Christendom, I believe, certainly wherever they are wide awake professionally, tolerate no punctuation. But why? Are lawyers not sensible to the luminous effect from a point happily placed? Yes, they are sensible; but also they are sensible of the false prejudicating effect from a punctuation managed (as too generally it is) carelessly and illogically. Here is the brief abstract of the case. All punctuation narrows the path, which is else unlimited; and (by narrowing it) may chance to guide the reader into the right groove amongst several that are not right. But also punctuation has the effect very often (and almost always has the power) of biasing and predetermining the reader to an erroneous choice of meaning. Better, therefore, no guide at all than one which is likely enough to lead astray, and which must always be suspected and mistrusted, inasmuch as very nearly always it has the power to lead astray."—De Quincey.

² Probably a reference to the habit of the ancients of incorporating foot-note material in a parenthesis in the text.

³ In an earlier part of the essay.

⁴ Sentences

⁵ concise style as opposed to lofty style

⁶ leaping; bounding

⁷ For a corrective of this unsound view, see F. Brunetiere's "The French Mastery of Style," The Atlantic Monthly, 80, 442

musque vicissim.¹ Give and take is the rule, and he who expects to be heard must condescend to listen; which necessity, for both parties, binds over both to be brief. Brevity so won could at any rate have little merit; and it is certain that, for profound thinkers, it must sometimes be a hindrance. In order to be brief, a man must take a short sweep of view. his range of thought cannot be extensive; and such a rule, applied to a general method of thinking, is fitted rather to aphorisms and maxims as upon a known subject, than to any process of investigation as upon a subject yet to be fathomed. Advancing still further into the examination of style as the organ of thinking, we should find occasion to see the prodigious defects of the French in all the higher qualities of prose composition. One advantage, for a practical purpose of life, is sadly counterbalanced by numerous faults, many of which are faults of stamina, lying not in any corrigible defects, but in such as imply penury of thinking, from radical inaptitude in the thinking faculty to connect itself with the feeling, and with the creative faculty of the imagination. There are many other researches belonging to this subject of subjects, affecting both the logic and the ornaments of style, which would fall under the head of organology. But for instant practical use, though far less difficult for investigation, yet, for that reason, far more tangible and appreciable, would be all the suggestions proper to the other head of mechanology. Half a dozen rules for evading the most frequently recurring forms of awkwardness, of obscurity, of misproportion, and of double meaning, would do more to assist a writer in practice, laid under some necessity of hurry, than volumes of general disquisition. It makes us blush to add that even grammar is so little of a perfect attainment amongst us that, with two or three exceptions (one being Shakespeare, whom some affect to consider as belonging to a semi-barbarous age), we have never seen the writer, through a circuit of prodigious reading, who has not sometimes violated the accidence or the syntax of English grammar.²

Whatever becomes of our own possible speculations, we shall conclude with insisting on the growing necessity of style as a practical interest of daily life. Upon subjects of public concern, and in proportion to that concern, there will always be a suitable (and as letters extend, a growing) competition. Other things being equal, or appearing to be equal, the determining principle for the public choice will lie in the style. Of a German book, otherwise entitled to respect, it was said—er lässt sich nicht lesen, it does not permit itself to be read: such and so repulsive was the style. Among ourselves, this has long been true of newspapers: they do not suffer themselves to be read in extenso, and they are read short—with what injury to the mind may be guessed. The same style of reading, once largely practiced, is applied universally. To this special evil an improvement of style would apply a special redress. The same improvement is otherwise clamorously called for by each man's interest of competition. Public luxury, which is gradually consulted by everything else, must at length be consulted in style.

From AUTOBIOGRAPHIC SKETCHES 1845-51

THE AFFLICTION OF CHILDHOOD

The earliest incidents in my life, which left stings in my memory so as to be remembered at this day, were two, and both before I could have completed my second year; namely, 1st, a remarkable dream of terrific grandeur about a favorite nurse, which is interesting to myself for this reason—that it demonstrates my dreaming tendencies to have been constitutional, and not dependent upon laudanum;¹ and, 2dly, the fact of having connected a profound sense of pathos with the reappearance, very early in the spring, of some crocuses. This I mention as inexplicable; for such annual resurrections of plants and flowers affect us only as memorials, or suggestions of some higher change, and therefore in connection with the idea of death; yet of death I could, at that time, have had no experience whatever.

This, however, I was speedily to acquire. My two eldest sisters—eldest of three then living, and also elder than myself—were summoned to an early death. The first who

¹ "It is true that in those days paregoric elixir was occasionally given to children in colds, and in this medicine there is a small proportion of laudanum. But no medicine was ever administered to any member of our nursery except under medical sanction, and this, assuredly, would not have been obtained to the exhibition of laudanum in a case such as mine. For I was not more than twenty-one months old; at which age the action of opium is capricious, and therefore perilous"—De Quincey died was Jane, about two years older than myself.¹ She was three and a half, I one and a half, more or less by some trifle that I do not recollect. But death was then scarcely intelligible to me, and I could not so properly be said to suffer sorrow as a sad perplexity. There was another death in the house about the same time, namely, of a maternal grandmother, but, as she had come to us for the express purpose of dying in her daughter's society, and from illness had lived perfectly secluded, our nursery circle knew her but little, and were certainly more affected by the death (which I witnessed) of a beautiful bird—viz., a kingfisher, which had been injured by an accident. With my sister Jane's death (though otherwise, as I have said, less sorrowful than perplexing) there was, however, connected an incident which made a most fearful impression upon myself, deepening my tendencies to thoughtfulness and abstraction beyond what would seem credible for my years. If there was one thing in this world from which, more than from any other, nature had forced me to revolt, it was brutality and violence. Now, a whisper arose in the family that a female servant, who by accident was drawn off from her proper duties to attend my sister Jane for a day or two, had on one occasion treated her harshly, if not brutally; and as this ill-treatment happened within three or four days of her death, so that the occasion of it must have been some fretfulness in the poor child caused by her sufferings, naturally there was a sense of awe and indignation diffused through the family. I believe the story never reached my mother, and possibly it was exaggerated; but upon me the effect was terrific. I did not often see the person charged with this cruelty; but, when I did, my eyes sought the ground; nor could I have borne to look her in the face; not, however, in any spirit that could be called anger. The feeling which fell upon me was a shuddering horror, as upon a first glimpse of the truth that I was in a world of evil and strife. Though born in a large town (the town of Manchester, even then among the largest of the island), I had passed the whole of my childhood, except for the few earliest weeks, in a rural seclusion. With three innocent little sisters for playmates, sleeping always amongst them, and shut up for ever in a silent garden from all knowledge of poverty, or oppression, or outrage, I had not suspected until this moment the true complexion of the world in which myself and my sisters were living. Henceforward the character of my thoughts changed greatly; for so representative are some acts, that one single case of the class is sufficient to throw open before you the whole theatre of possibilities in that direction. I never heard that the woman accused of this cruelty took it at all to heart, even after the event which so immediately succeeded had reflected upon it a more painful emphasis. But for myself, that incident had a lasting revolutionary power in coloring my estimate of life.

¹ We both seek and grant this indulgence in turn.
—Horace, Art. Poetica, 11

² De Quincey makes this statement evidently on the assumption that the laws of grammar are constant for all ages.

So passed away from earth one of those three sisters that made up my nursery playmates; and so did my acquaintance (if such it could be called) commence with mortality. Yet, in fact, I knew little more of mortality than that Jane had disappeared. She had gone away; but, perhaps, she would come back. Happy interval of heaven-born ignorance! Gracious immunity of infancy from sorrow disproportioned to its strength! I was sad for Jane's absence. But still in my heart I trusted that she would come again. Summer and winter came again—crocuses and roses; why not little Jane?

Thus easily was healed, then, the first wound in my infant heart. Not so the second. For thou, dear, noble Elizabeth, around whose ample brow, as often as thy sweet countenance rises upon the darkness, I fancy a *tiara*¹ of light or a gleaming *aureola*² in token of thy premature intellectual grandeur—thou whose head, for its superb developments, was the astonishment of science³—thou next, but after an inter-

¹ A crownlike head ornament.

² "The aureola is the name given in the Legends of the Christian Saints to that golden diadem or circlet of supernatural light (that glory, as it is commonly called in English) which, amongst the great masters of painting in Italy, surrounded the heads of Christ and of distinguished saints."—De Quincey

³ "The astonishment of science—Her medical attendants were Dr. Percival, a well-known literary physician, who had been a correspondent of Condorcet, D'Alembert, etc., and Mr. Charles White, the most distinguished surgeon at that time in the North of England. It was he who pronounced her head to be the finest in its development of any that he had ever seen—an assertion which, to my own knowledge, he repeated in after years, and with enthusiasm. That he had some acquaintance with the subject may be presumed from this, that, at so early a stage of such inquiries, he had published a work on human craniology, supported by measurements of heads selected from all varieties of the human species. Meantime, as it would grieve me that any trait of what might seem vanity should creep into this record, I will admit that my sister died of hydrocephalus; and it has been often supposed that the preval of happy years, thou also wert summoned away from our nursery; and the night which for me gathered upon that event ran after my steps far into life; and perhaps at this day I resemble little for good or for ill that which else I should have been. Pillar of fire that didst go before me¹ to guide and to quicken—pillar of darkness, when thy countenance was turned away to God, that didst too truly reveal to my dawning fears the secret shadow of death, by what mysterious gravitation was it that my heart had been drawn to thine? Could a child, six years old, place any special value upon intellectual forwardness? Serene and capacious as my sister's mind appeared to me upon after review, was that a charm for stealing away the heart of an infant? Oh no! I think of it now with interest, because it lends, in a stranger's ear, some justification to the excess of my fondness. But then it was lost upon me, or, if not lost, was perceived only through its effects. Hadst thou been an idiot, my sister, not the less I must have loved thee, having that capacious heart—overflowing, even as mine overflowed, with tenderness, strung, even as mine was strung, by the necessity of loving and being loved. Thus it was which crowned thee with beauty and power.—

¹ The record on the grave-stones makes Jane one year younger than De Quincey

Love, the holy sense,
Best gift of God, in thee was most intense²

That lamp of Paradise was, for myself, kindled by reflection from the living light which burned so steadfastly in thee, and never but to thee, never again since thy departure, had I power or temptation, courage or desire, to utter the feelings which possessed me. For I was the shyest of children, and, at all stages of life, a natural sense of personal dignity held me back from exposing the least ray of feelings which I was not encouraged wholly to reveal.

It is needless to pursue, circumstantially, the course of that sickness which carried off my leader and companion. She (according to my recollection at this moment) was just mature expansion of the intellect in cases of that class is altogether morbid—forced on, in fact, by the mere stimulation of the disease. I would however, suggest, as a possibility, the very opposite order of relation between the disease and the intellectual manifestations. Not the disease may always have caused the preternatural growth of the intellect, but, inversely, this growth of the intellect coming on spontaneously, and outrunning the capacities of the physical structure, may have caused the disease"—De Quincey.

¹ Æneid, 12. 21-22.

² Wordsworth, Tribute to the Memory of the same Dog, 27.

as near to nine years as I to six. And perhaps thus natural precedency in authority of years and judgment, united to the tender humility with which she declined to assert it, had been amongst the fascinations of her presence. It was upon a Sunday evening, if such conjectures can be trusted, that the spark of fatal fire fell upon that train of predispositions to a brain complaint which had hitherto slumbered within her. She had been permitted to drink tea at the house of a laboring man, the father of a favorite female servant. The sun had set when she returned, in the company of this servant, through meadows reeking with exhalations after a fervent day. From that day she sickened. In such circumstances, a child, as young as myself, feels no anxieties. Looking upon medical men as people privileged, and naturally commissioned, to make war upon pain and sickness, I never had a misgiving about the result. I grieved, indeed, that my sister should lie in bed, I grieved still more to hear her moan. But all this appeared to me no more than as a night of trouble, on which the dawn would soon arise. O! moment of darkness and delirium, when the elder nurse awakened me from that delirium, and launched God's thunderbolt at my heart in the assurance that my sister must die. Rightly it is said of utter, utter misery, that it "cannot be remembered"¹. Itself, as a remarkable thing, is swallowed up in its own chaos. Blank anarchy and confusion of mind fell upon me. Deaf and blind I was, as I reeled under the revelation. I wish not to recall the circumstances of that time, when my agony was at its height, and here, in another sense, was approaching. Enough it is to say, that all was soon over, and the morning of that day had at last arrived which looked down upon her innocent face, sleeping the sleep from which there is no awaking, and upon me sorrowing the sorrow for which there is no consolation.

On the day after my sister's death, whilst the sweet temple of her brain was yet unviolated by human scrutiny, I formed my own scheme for seeing her once more. Not for the world would I have made this known, nor have suffered a witness to accompany me. I had never heard of feelings that take the name of "sentimental," nor dreamed of such a possibility. But grief, even in a child, hates the light, and shrinks from human eyes. The house was large enough to have two staircases, and by one of these I knew that about mid-day, when all would be quiet (for the servants dined at one o'clock), I could steal up into her chamber. I imagine that it was about an hour after high noon when I reached the chamber-door; it was locked, but the key was not taken away. Entering, I closed the door so softly, that, although it opened upon a hall which ascended through all the stories, no echo ran along the silent walls. Then, turning round, I sought my sister's face. But the bed had been moved, and the back was now turned towards myself. Nothing met my eyes but one large window, wide open, through which the sun of midsummer at mid-day was showering down torrents of splendor. The weather was dry, the sky was cloudless, the blue depths seemed to express types of infinity, and it was not possible for eye to behold, or for heart to conceive,¹ any symbols more pathetic of life and the glory of life.

¹ "I stood in unimaginable trance

And agony which cannot be remembered."

Speech of Alhadra in Coleridge's Remorse, [IV, 3, 778]—De Quincey.

Let me pause for one instant in approaching a remembrance so affecting for my own mind, to mention that, in the Opium Confessions, I endeavored to explain the reason why death, other conditions remaining the same, is more profoundly affecting in summer than in other parts of the year—so far, at least, as it is liable to any modification at all from accidents of scenery or season.² The reason, as I there suggested, lies in the antagonism between the tropical redundancy of life in summer, and the frozen sterilities of the grave. The summer we see, the grave we haunt with our thoughts; the glory is around us, the darkness is within us, and, the two coming into collision, each exalts the other into stronger relief. But, in my case, there was even a subtler reason why the summer had this intense power of vivifying the spectacle or the thoughts of death. And, recollecting it, I am struck with the truth, that far more of our deepest thoughts and feelings pass to us through perplexed combinations of concrete objects, pass to us as involutes (if I may coin that word) in compound experiences incapable of being disentangled, than ever reach us directly, and in their own abstract shapes. It had happened that amongst our vast nursery collection of books was the Bible illustrated with many pictures. And in long dark evenings, as my three sisters with myself sat by the firelight round the *guard*³ of our nursery, no book was so much in request amongst us. It ruled us and swayed us as mysteriously as music. Our younger nurse, whom we all loved, would sometimes, according to her simple powers, endeavor to explain what we found obscure. We, the children, were all constitutionally touched with pensiveness; the fitful gloom and sudden lambencies of the room by firelight suited our evening state of feelings, and they suited, also, the divine revelations of power and mysterious beauty which awed us. Above all, the story of a just man⁴—man and yet not man, real above all things, and yet shadowy above all things—who had suffered the passion of death in Palestine, slept upon our minds like early dawn upon the waters. The nurse knew and explained to us the chief differences in oriental climates, and all these differences (as it happens) express themselves, more or less, in varying relations to the great accidents and powers of summer. The cloudless sunlights of Syria—those seemed to argue everlasting summer, the disciples plucking the ears of corn⁵—that must be summer, but, above all, the very name of Palm Sunday (a festival in the English Church) troubled me like an anthem. "Sunday!" what was that? That was the day of peace which masked another peace deeper than the heart of man can comprehend. "Palms!" what were they? That was an equivocal word, palms, in the sense of trophies, expressed the pomps of life; palms, as a product of nature, expressed the pomps of summer. Yet still even this explanation does not suffice, it was not merely by the peace and by the summer, by the deep sound of rest below all rest and of ascending glory, that I had been haunted. It was also because Jerusalem stood near to those deep images both in time and in place. The great event of Jerusalem was at hand when Palm Sunday came, and the scene of that Sunday was near in place to Jerusalem. What then was Jerusalem? Did I fancy it to be the omphalos (navel) or physical centre of the earth? Why should that affect me? Such a pretension had once been made for Jerusalem,⁶ and once for a Grecian city,⁷

¹ "The guard"—I know not whether the word is a local one in this sense. What I mean is a sort of sander, four or five feet high, which locks up the fire from too near an approach on the part of children."—De Quincey

² A reference to Christ.

³ See Lake, p. 1.

⁴ See Esther, ii. 5. A round stone in the church of the Holy Sepulchre indicates what was said to be the center of the world.

⁵ The stone on which Apollo sat in the temple at Delphi marked, supposedly, the center of the world.

¹ See 1 Corinthians, 2. 9.

² See p. 1077b, 1-42.

and both pretensions had become ridiculous, as the figure of the planet became known. Yes; but if not of the earth, yet of mortality, for earth's tenant, Jerusalem, had now become the omphalos and absolute centre. Yet how? There, on the contrary, it was, as we infants understood, that mortality had been trampled under foot. True, but, for that very reason, there it was that mortality had opened its very gloomiest crater. There it was, indeed, that the human had risen on wings from the grave; but, for that reason, there also it was that the divine had been swallowed up by the abyss; the lesser star could not rise, before the greater should submit to eclipse. Summer, therefore, had connected itself with death, not merely as a mode of antagonism, but also as a phenomenon brought into intricate relations with death by scriptural scenery and events.

Out of this digression, for the purpose of showing how inextricable my feelings and images of death were entangled with those of summer, as connected with Palestine and Jerusalem, let me come back to the bed-chamber of my sister. From the gorgeous sunlight I turned round to the corpse. There lay the sweet childish figure, there the angel face; and, as people usually fancy, it was said in the house that no features had suffered any change. Had they not? The forehead, indeed—the serene and noble forehead—that might be the same; but the frozen eyelids, the darkness that seemed to steal from beneath them, the marble lips, the stiffening hands, laid palm to palm, as if repeating the supplications of closing anguish—could these be mistaken for life? Had it been so, wherefore did I not spring to those heavenly lips with tears and never-ending kisses? But so it was not. I stood checked for a moment; awe, not fear, fell upon me; and, whilst I stood, a solemn wind began to blow—the saddest that ear ever heard. It was a wind that might have swept the fields of mortality for a thousand centuries. Many times since, upon summer days, when the sun is about the hottest, I have remarked the same wind arising and uttering the same hollow, solemn. Memnonian,¹ but saintly swell: it is in this world the one great audible symbol of eternity. And three times in my life have I happened to hear the same sound in the same circumstances—namely, when standing between an open window and a dead body on a summer day.

Instantly, when my ear caught this vast Æolian intonation, when my eye filled with the golden fulness of life, the pomps of the heavens above, or the glory of the flowers below, and turning when it settled upon the frost which overspread my sister's face, instantly a trance fell upon me. A vault seemed to open in the zenith of the far blue sky, a shaft which ran up forever. I, in spirit, rose as if on billows that also ran up the shaft forever; and the billows seemed to pursue the throne of God; but that also ran before us and fled away continually. The light and the pursuit seemed to go on forever and ever. Frost gathering frost, some Sarsar¹ wind of death, seemed to repel me; some mighty relation between God and death dimly struggled to evolve itself from the dreadful antagonism between them; shadowy meanings even yet continue to exer-represented on the authority of ancient traditions to have uttered at sunrise, or soon after, as the sun's rays had accumulated heat enough to rarify the air within certain cavities in the bust, a solemn and dirge-like series of intonations, the simple explanation being, in its general outline, this—that sonorous currents of air were produced by causing chambers of cold and heavy air to press upon other collections of air, warmed, and therefore rarified, and therefore yielding readily to the pressure of heavier air. Currents being thus established, by artificial arrangements of tubes, a certain succession of notes could be concerted and sustained. Near the Red Sea lie a chain of sand hills, which, by a natural system of grooves insulating with each other, become vocal under changing circumstances in the position of the sun, etc. I knew a boy who, upon observing steadily, and reflecting upon a phenomenon that met him in his daily experience—that tubes, through which a stream of water was passing, gave out a very different sound according to the varying slenderness or fulness of the current—devised an instrument that yielded a rude hydraulic gamut of sounds; and, indeed, upon this simple phenomenon is founded the use and power of the stethoscope. For exactly as a thin thread of water, trickling through a leaden tube, yields a stridulous and plaintive sound compared with the full volume of sound corresponding to the full volume of water—on parity of principle, nobody will doubt that the current of blood pouring through the tubes of the human frame will utter to the learned ear, when armed with the stethoscope, an elaborate gamut or compass of music, recording the ravages of disease, or the glorious plenitudes of health, as faithfully as the cavities within this ancient Memnonian bust reported this mighty event of sunrise to the rejoicing world of light and life—or, again, under the sad passion of the dying day, uttered the sweet requiem that belonged to its departure.”—De Quincey.

¹ An Arabic word meaning cold wind. See Southey's Thalaba, 1, st. 44.

¹ “Memnonian”—For the sake of many readers, whose hearts may go along earnestly with a record of infant sorrow, but whose course of life has not allowed them much leisure for study, I pause to explain—that the head of Memnon, in the British Museum, that sublime head which wears upon its lips a smile co-extensive with all time and all space, an Æolian smile of gracious love and Panlike mystery, the most diffusive and pathetically divine that the hand of man has created, is cise and torment, in dreams, the deciphering oracle within me. I slept—for how long I cannot say; slowly I recovered my self-possession; and, when I woke, found myself standing, as before, close to my sister's bed.

I have reason to believe that a very long interval had elapsed during this wandering or suspension of my perfect mind. When I returned to myself, there was a foot (or I fancied so) on the stairs. I was alarmed; for, if anybody had detected me, means would have been taken to prevent my coming again. Hastily, therefore, I kissed the lips that I should kiss no more, and slunk, like a guilty thing, with stealthy steps from the room. Thus perished the vision, loveliest amongst all the shows which earth has revealed to me; thus mutilated was the parting which should have lasted forever; tainted thus with fear was that farewell sacred to love and grief, to perfect love and to grief that could not be healed.

O Ahasuerus, everlasting Jew!¹ fable or not a fable, thou, when first starting on thy endless pilgrimage of woe—thou, when first flying through the gates of Jerusalem, and vainly yearning to leave the pursuing curse behind thee—couldst not more certainly in the words of Christ have read thy doom of endless sorrow, than I when passing forever from my sister's room. The worm was at my heart; and, I may say, the worm that could not die.² Man is doubtless one by some subtle nexus, some system of links, that we cannot perceive, extending from the newborn infant to the superannuated dotard: but, as regards many affections and passions incident to his nature at different stages, he is not one, but an intermitting creature, ending and beginning anew; the unity of man, in this respect, is co-extensive only with the particular stage to which the passion belongs. Some passions, as that of sexual love, are celestial by one half of their origin, animal and earthly by the other half. These will not survive their own appropriate stage. But love, which is altogether holy, like that between two children, is privileged to revisit by glimpses the silence and the darkness of declining years; and, possibly, this final experience in my sister's bedroom, or some other in which her innocence was concerned, may rise again for me to illuminate the clouds of death.

On the day following this which I have recorded, came a body of medical men to examine the brain, and the particular nature of the complaint; for in some of its symptoms it had shown perplexing anomalies. An hour after the strangers had withdrawn, I crept again to the room; but the door was now locked, the key had been taken away—and I was shut out forever.

Then came the funeral. I, in the ceremonial character of mourner, was carried thither. I was put into a carriage with some gentlemen whom I did not know. They were kind and attentive to me; but naturally they talked of things disconnected with the occasion, and their conversation was a torment. At the church, I was told to hold a white handkerchief to my eyes. Empty hypocrisy! What need had he of masks or mockeries, whose heart died within him at every word that was uttered? During that part of the service which passed within the church, I made an effort to attend, but I sank back continually into my own solitary darkness, and I heard little consciously, except some fugitive strains from the sublime chapter of St. Paul, which in England is always read at burials.³

Lastly came that magnificent liturgical service which the English Church performs at the side of the grave; for this church does not forsake her dead so long as they continue in the upper air, but waits for her last "sweet and solemn farewell"⁴ at the side of the grave. There is exposed once again, and for the last time, the coffin. All eyes survey the record of name, of sex, of age, and the day of departure from earth—records how shadowy! and dropped into darkness as messages addressed to worms. Almost at the very last comes the symbolic ritual, tearing and shattering the heart with volleying discharges, peal after peal, from the fine artillery of woe. The coffin is lowered into its home; it has disappeared from all eyes but those that look down into the abyss of the grave. The sacristan stands ready, with his shovel of earth and stones. The priest's voice is heard once more—earth

¹ "First Epistle to Corinthians, chap. 15, beginning at verse 20"—De Quincey.

² "This beautiful expression, I am pretty certain, must belong to Mrs. Trollope; I read it, probably, in a tale of hers connected with the backwoods of America, where the absence of such a farewell must unspeakably aggravate the gloom at any rate belonging to a household separation of that eternal character occurring amongst the shadows of those mighty forests."—De Quincey.

³ "Everlasting Jew":—der ewige Jude—which is the common German expression for "The Wandering Jew," and sublimer even than our own."—De Quincey. For a full account of the widespread legend of The Wandering Jew, see The Kyriopodia Britannica (11th ed.).

⁴ See Isaiah, 66:24; Mark, 9:44-48, also Paradise Lost, 9, 730.

to earth—and immediately the dread rattle ascends from the lid of the coffin; ashes to ashes—and again the killing sound is heard; dust to dust—and the farewell volley announces that the grave, the coffin, the face are sealed up forever and ever.

Grief! thou art classed amongst the depressing passions. And true it is that thou humblest to the dust, but also thou exaltest to the clouds. Thou shakest as with ague, but also thou steadiest like frost. Thou sickenest the heart, but also thou healest its infirmities. Among the very foremost of mine was morbid sensibility to shame. And, ten years afterwards, I used to throw my self-reproaches with regard to that infirmity into this shape—vis, that if I were summoned to seek aid for a perishing fellow-creature, and that I could obtain that aid only by facing a vast company of critical or sneering faces, I might, perhaps, shrink basely from the duty. It is true that no such case had ever actually occurred; so that it was a mere romance of casuistry to tax myself with cowardice so shocking. But to feel a doubt was to feel condemnation; and the crime that might have been, was in my eyes the crime that had been. Now, however, all was changed; and, for anything which regarded my sister's memory, in one hour I received a new heart. Once in Westmoreland I saw a case resembling it. I saw a ewe suddenly put off and abjure her own nature, in a service of love—yes, slough it as completely as ever serpent sloughed his skin. Her lamb had fallen into a deep trench, from which all escape was hopeless without the aid of man. And to a man she advanced, bleating clamorously, until he followed her and rescued her beloved. Not less was the change in myself. Fifty thousand sneering faces would not have troubled me now in any office of tenderness to my sister's memory. Ten legions would not have repelled me from seeking her, if there had been a chance that she could be found. Mockery! it was lost upon me. Laughter! I valued it not. And when I was taunted insultingly with "my girlish tears," that word "girlish" had no sting for me, except as a verbal echo to the one eternal thought of my heart—that a girl was the sweetest thing which I, in my short life, had known—that a girl it was who had crowned the earth with beauty, and had opened to my thirst fountains of pure celestial love, from which, in this world, I was to drink no more.

Now began to unfold themselves the consolations of solitude, those consolations which only I was destined to taste; now, therefore, began to open upon me those fascinations of solitude, which, when acting as a co-agency with unresisted grief, end in the paradoxical result of making out of grief itself a luxury, such a luxury as finally becomes a snare, overhanging life itself, and the energies of life, with growing menaces. All deep feelings of a chronic class agree in this, that they seek for solitude, and are fed by solitude. Deep grief, deep love, how naturally do these ally themselves with religious feeling! and all three—love, grief, religion—are haunters of solitary places. Love, grief, and the mystery of devotion—what were these without solitude? All day long, when it was not impossible for me to do so, I sought the most silent and sequestered nooks in the grounds about the house, or in the neighboring fields. The awful stillness oftentimes of summer noons, when no winds were abroad, the appealing silence of gray or misty afternoons—these were fascinations as of witchcraft. Into the woods, into the desert air, I gazed, as if some comfort lay hid in them. I wearied the heavens with my inquest of beseeching looks. Obstinate I tormented the blue depths with my scrutiny, sweeping them forever with my eyes, and searching them for one angelic face that might, perhaps, have permission to reveal itself for a moment.

At this time, and under this impulse of rapacious grief, that grasped at what it could not obtain, the faculty of shaping images in the distance out of slight elements, and grouping them after the yearnings of the heart, grew upon me in morbid excess. And I recall at the present moment one instance of that sort, which may show how merely shadows, or a gleam of brightness, or nothing at all, could furnish a sufficient basis for this creative faculty.

On Sunday mornings I went with the rest of my family to church: it was a church, on the ancient model of England, having aisles, galleries,¹ organ, all things ancient and venerable, and the proportions majestic. Here, whilst the congregation knelt through the long litany, as often as we came to that passage, so beautiful amongst many that are so, where God is supplicated on behalf of "all sick persons and young children," and that he would "show his pity upon all prisoners and captives," I wept in secret; and raising my streaming eyes to the upper windows of the galleries, saw, on days when the sun was shining, a spectacle as affecting as ever prophet can have beheld. The sides of the windows were rich with storied glass; through the deep purples and crimsons streamed the golden light; emblazonries of heavenly illumination (from the sun) mingling with the earthly emblazonries (from art and its gorgeous coloring) of what is grandest in man. There were the apostles that had trampled upon earth, and the glories of earth, out of celestial love to man. There were the martyrs that had borne witness to the truth through flames, through torments, and through armies of fierce, insulting faces. There were the saints who, under intolerable pangs, had glorified God by meek submission to his will. And all the time whilst this tumult of sublime memorials held on as the deep chords from some accompaniment in the bass, I saw through the wide central field of the window, where the glass was uncolored, white, fleecy clouds sailing over the azure depths of the sky; were it but a fragment or a hint of such a cloud, immediately under the flash of my sorrow-haunted eye, it grew and shaped itself into visions of beds with white lawn curtains; and in the beds lay sick children, dying children, that were tossing in anguish, and weeping clamorously for death. God, for some mysterious reason, could not suddenly release them from their pain; but he suffered the beds, as it seemed, to rise slowly through the clouds; slowly the beds ascended into the chambers of the air, slowly also his arms descended from the heavens, that he and his young children, whom in Palestine, once and forever, he had blessed, though they must pass slowly through the dreadful chasm of separation, might yet meet the sooner. These visions were self-sustained. These visions needed not that any sound should speak to me, or music mould my feelings. The hint from the litany, the fragment from the clouds—those and the storied windows were sufficient. But not the less the blare of the tumultuous organ wrought its own separate creations. And oftentimes in anthems, when the mighty instrument threw its vast columns of sound, fierce yet melodious, over the voices of the choir—high in arches, when it seemed to rise, surmounting and overriding the strife of the vocal parts, and gathering by strong coercion the total storm into unity—sometimes I seemed to rise and walk triumphantly upon those clouds which, but a moment before, I had looked up to as mementos of prostrate sorrow, yes, sometimes under the transfigurations of music, felt of grief itself as of a fiery chariot for mounting victoriously above the causes of grief.

¹ "Galleries."—These, though condemned on some grounds by the restorers of authentic church architecture, have, nevertheless, this one advantage—that, when the height of a church is that dimension which most of all expresses its sacred character, galleries expound and interpret that height.—De Quincey.

God speaks to children, also, in dreams, and by the oracles that lurk in darkness. But in solitude, above all things, when made vocal to the meditative heart by the truths and services of a national church, God holds with children "communion undisturbed." Solitude, though it may be silent as light, is, like light, the mightiest of agencies; for solitude is essential to man. All men come into this world alone, all leave it alone. Even a little child has a dread, whispering consciousness, that, if he should be summoned to travel into God's presence, no gentle nurse will be allowed to lead him by the hand, nor mother to carry him in her arms, nor little sister to share his trepidations. King and priest, warrior and maiden, philosopher and child, all must walk those mighty galleries alone. The solitude therefore, which in this world appals or fascinates a child's heart, is but the echo of a far deeper solitude, through which already he has passed, and of another solitude, deeper still, through which he has to pass: reflex of one solitude—prefiguration of another.

Oh, burden of solitude, that cleavest to man through every stage of his being! in his birth, which has been—in his life, which is—in his death, which shall be—mighty and essential solitude! that wast, and art, and art to be; thou broodest, like the Spirit of God moving upon the surface of the deeps, over every heart that sleeps in the nurseries of Christendom. Like the vast laboratory of the air, which, seeming to be nothing, or less than the shadow of a shade, hides within itself the principles of all things, solitude for the meditating child is the Agrippa's mirror³ of the unseen universe. Deep is the solitude of millions who, with hearts welling forth love, have none to love them. Deep is the solitude of those who, under secret griefs, have none to pity them. Deep is the solitude of those who, fighting with doubts or darkness, have none to counsel them. But deeper than the deepest of these solitudes is that which broods over childhood under the passion of sorrow—bringing before it, at intervals, the final solitude which watches for it, and is waiting for it within the gates of death. Oh, mighty and essential solitude, that wast, and art, and art to be! thy kingdom is made perfect in the grave; but even over those that keep watch outside the grave, like myself, an infant of six years old, thou stretchest out a sceptre of fascination

¹ Wordsworth, The Excursion, 4, 86.

² See Genesis, 1, 2; also Paradise Lost, 1, 19-21.

³ That is, the medium by which the unseen may be made visible. For an account of the alleged marvels performed by Cornelius Agrippa (1486-1535) by means of a wonderful glass, see Nash's The Unfortunate Traveller, or The Life of Jack Wilton (ed. Gomme), pp. 86 ff.

From SUSPIRIA DE PROFUNDIS¹
1845-49

LEVANA AND OUR LADIES OF SORROW
1845

Oftentimes at Oxford I saw Levana in my dreams. I knew her by her Roman symbols. Who is Levana? Reader, that do not pretend to have leisure for very much scholarship, you will not be angry with me for telling you. Levana was the Roman goddess that performed for the new-born infant the earliest office of ennobling kindness,—typical, by its mode, of that grandeur which belongs to man everywhere, and of that benignity in powers invisible which even in Pagan worlds sometimes descends to sustain it. At the very moment of birth, just as the infant tasted for the first time the atmosphere of our troubled planet, it was laid on the ground. That might bear different interpretations. But immediately, lest so grand a creature should grovel there for more than one instant, either the paternal hand, as proxy for the goddess Levana, or some near kinsman, as proxy for the father, raised it upright, bade it look erect as the king of all this world, and presented its forehead to the stars, saying, perhaps, in his heart, "Behold what is greater than yourselves!" This symbolic act represented the function of Levana. And that mysterious lady, who never revealed her face (except to me in dreams), but always acted by delegation, had her name from the Latin verb (as still it is the Italian verb) levare, to raise aloft.

This is the explanation of Levana. And hence it has arisen that some people have understood by Levana the tutelary power that controls the education of the nursery. She, that would not suffer at his birth even a preservative or mimic degradation for her awful ward, far less could be supposed to suffer the real degradation attaching to the non-development of his powers. She therefore watches over human education. Now, the word edūco, with the penultimate short, was derived (by a process often exemplified in the crystallization of languages) from the word edūco, with the penultimate long. Whatsoever educes, or develops, educates. By the education of Levana, therefore, is meant,—not the poor machinery that moves by spelling-books and grammars, but that mighty system of central forces hidden in the deep bosom of human life, which by passion, by strife, by temptation, by the energies of resistance, works forever upon children,—resting not day or night, any more than the mighty wheel of day and night themselves, whose moments, like restless spokes, are glimmering¹ forever as they revolve.

If, then, these are the ministries by which Levana works, how profoundly must she reverence the agencies of grief! But you, reader, think that children generally are not liable to grief such as mine. There are two senses in the word generally,—the sense of Euclid, where it means universally (or in the whole extent of the genus), and a foolish sense of this word, where it means usually. Now, I am far from saying that children universally are capable of grief like mine. But there are more than you ever heard of who die of grief in this island of ours. I will tell you a common case. The rules of Eton require that a boy on the *foundation*² should be there twelve years: he is superannuated at eighteen; consequently he must come at six. Children torn away from mothers and sisters at that age not unfrequently die. I speak of what I know. The complaint is not entered by the registrar as grief; but that it is. Grief of that sort, and at that age, has killed more than ever have been counted amongst its martyrs.

¹ "As I have never allowed myself to covet any man's or nor his ass, nor anything that is his, still less would it become a philosopher to covet other people's images or metaphors. Here, therefore, I restore to Mr. Wordsworth this fine image of the revolving wheel and the glimmering spokes, as applied by him to the flying successions of day and night. I borrowed it for one moment in order to point my own sentence which being done, the reader is witness that I now pay it back instantly by a note made for that sole purpose. On the same principle I often borrow their seals from young ladies, when closing my letters, because there is sure to be some tender sentiment upon them about 'memory,' or 'hope,' or 'roses,' or 'reunion,' and my correspondent must be a sad brute who is not touched by the eloquence of the seal, even if his taste is so bad that he remains deaf to mine."—De Quincey

² holding a scholarship provided by terms of the endowment

¹ Signs from the Depths, the title of a series of "dreams and noon-day visions," intended by De Quincey to be the "Last Confessions" of an Opium Eater.

Therefore it is that Levana often communes with the powers that shake man's heart; therefore it is that she dotes upon grief. "These ladies," said I softly to myself, on seeing the ministers with whom Levana was conversing, "these are the Sorrows; and they are three in number: as the Graces are three, who dress man's life with beauty; the Pasæ are three, who weave the dark arras of man's life in their mysterious loom always with colors sad in part, sometimes angry with tragic crimson and black, the Furies are three, who visit with retributions called from the other side of the grave offences that walk upon this; and once even the Muses were but three, who fit the harp, the trumpet, or the lute, to the great burdens of man's impassioned creations. These are the Sorrows; all three of whom I know." The last words I say now; but in Oxford I said, "one of whom I know, and the others too surely I shall know." For already, in my fervent youth, I saw (dimly relieved upon the dark background of my dreams) the imperfect lineaments of the awful Sisters.

These Sisters—by what name shall we call them? If I say simply "The Sorrows," there will be a chance of mistaking the term; it might be understood of individual sorrow, —separate cases of sorrow.—whereas I want a term expressing the mighty abstractions that incarnate themselves in all individual sufferings of man's heart, and I wish to have these abstractions presented as impersonations,—that is, as clothed with human attributes of life, and with functions pointing to flesh. Let us call them, therefore, Our Ladies of Sorrow.

I know them thoroughly, and have walked in all their kingdoms. Three sisters they are, of one mysterious household; and their paths are wide apart; but of their dominion there is no end. Them I saw often conversing with Levana, and sometimes about myself. Do they talk, then? O no! Mighty phantoms like these disdain the infirmities of language. They may utter voices through the organs of man when they dwell in human hearts, but amongst themselves is no voice nor sound; eternal silence reigns in their kingdoms. They spoke not as they talked with Levana; they whispered not; they sang not; though oftentimes methought they might have sung: for I upon earth had heard their mysteries oftentimes deciphered by harp and timbrel, by dulcimer and organ. Like God, whose servants they are, they utter their pleasure not by sounds that perish, or by words that go astray, but by signs in heaven, by changes on earth, by pulses in secret rivers, heraldries painted on darkness, and hieroglyphics written on the tablets of the brain. They wheeled in mazes, I spelled the steps. They telegraphed¹ from afar; I read the signals. They conspired together; and on the mirrors of darkness my eye traced the plots. Theirs were the symbols; mine are the words.

What is it the Sisters are? What is it that they do. Let me describe their form and their presence, if form it were that still fluctuated in its outline, or presence it were that forever advanced to the front or forever receded amongst shades.

The eldest of the three is named Mater Lachrymarum, Our Lady of Tears. She it is that night and day raves and moans, calling for vanished faces. She stood in Rama, where a voice was heard of lamentation,—Rachel weeping for her children,² and refusing to be comforted. She it was that stood in Bethlehem on the night when Herod's sword swept its nurseries of Innocents,³ and the little feet were stiffened forever which, heard at times as they trotted along floors overhead, woke pulses of love in household hearts that were not unmarked in heaven. Her eyes are sweet and subtle, wild and sleepy, by turns; oftentimes rising to the clouds, oftentimes challenging the heavens. She wears a diadem round her head. And I knew by childish memories that she could go abroad upon the winds, when she heard the sobbing of litanies, or the thundering of organs, and when she beheld the mustering of summer clouds. This Sister, the elder, it is that carries keys more than papal at her girdle,⁴ which open every cottage and every palace. She, to my knowledge, sat all last summer by the bedside of the blind beggar, him that so often and so gladly I talked with, whose pious daughter, eight years old, with the sunny countenance, resisted the temptations of play and village mirth, to travel all day long on dusty roads with her afflicted father. For this did God send her a great reward. In the springtime of the year, and whilst yet her own spring was budding, He recalled her to himself. But her blind father mourns forever over her: still he dreams at midnight that the little guiding hand is locked within his own; and still he wakens to a darkness that is now

¹ This word was formerly used of various methods of signalling.

² See Jeremiah, 31 15; also Matthew, 2 16 18

³ See Matthew, 2 16

⁴ See Matthew, 16 18-19.

within a second and a deeper darkness. This Mater Lachrymarum also has been sitting all this winter of 1844-5 within the bed-chamber of the Czar,¹ bringing before his eyes a daughter (not less pious) that vanished to God not less suddenly, and left behind her a darkness not less profound. By the power of the keys it is that Our Lady of Tears glides, a ghostly intruder, into the chambers of sleepless men, sleepless women, sleepless children, from Ganges to the Nile, from Nile to Mississippi. And her, because she is the first-born of her house, and has the widest empire, let us honor with the title of "Madonna."

The second Sister is called Mater Suspiriorum, Our Lady of Sighs. She never scales the clouds, nor walks abroad upon the winds. She wears no diadem. And her eyes, if they were ever seen, would be neither sweet nor subtle, no man could read their story, they would be found filled with perishing dreams, and with wrecks of forgotten delirium. But she raises not her eyes; her head, on which sits a dilapidated turban, droops forever, forever fastens on the dust. She weeps not. She groans not. But she sighs inaudibly at intervals. Her sister, Madonna, is oftentimes stormy and frantic, raging in the highest against heaven, and demanding back her darlings. But Our Lady of Sighs never clamors, never defies, dreams not of rebellious aspirations. She is humble to abjectness. Hers is the meekness that belongs to the hopeless. Murmur she may, but it is in her sleep. Whisper she may, but it is to herself in the twilight. Mutter she does at times, but it is in solitary places that are desolate as she is desolate, in ruined cities, and when the sun has gone down to his rest. This Sister is the visitor of the Pariah, of the Jew, of the bondsman to the oar in the Mediterranean galleys; of the English criminal in Norfolk Island, blotted out from the books of remembrance² in sweet far-off England; of the baffled penitent reverting his eyes forever upon a solitary grave, which to him seems the altar overthrown of some past and bloody sacrifice, on which altar no oblations can now be availing, whether towards pardon that he might implore, or towards reparation that he might attempt. Every slave that at noonday looks up to the tropical sun with timid reproach, as he points with one hand to the earth, our general mother, but for him a stepmother, as he points with the other hand to the Bible, our general teacher, but against him sealed and sequestered;³ every woman sitting in darkness, without love to shelter her head, or hope to illumine her solitude, because the heaven-born instincts kindling in her nature germs of holy affections, which God implanted in her womanly bosom, having been stifled by social necessities, now burn sullenly to waste, like sepulchral lamps amongst the ancients; every nun defrauded of her unreturning May-time by wicked kinsman, whom God will judge; every captive in every dungeon; all that are betrayed, and all that are rejected; outcasts by traditionary law, and children of hereditary disgrace: all these walk with Our Lady of Sighs. She also carries a key; but she needs it little. For her kingdom is chiefly amongst the tents of Shem,⁴ and the houseless vagrant of every clime. Yet in the very highest ranks of man she finds chapels of her own; and even in glorious England there are some that, to the world, carry their heads as proudly as the reindeer, who yet secretly have received her mark upon their foreheads.

But the third Sister, who is also the youngest——! Hush! whisper whilst we talk of her! Her kingdom is not large, or else no flesh should live; but within that kingdom all power is hers. Her head, turreted like that of Cybele, rises almost beyond the reach of sight. She droops not; and her eyes, rising so high, might be hidden by distance. But, being what they are, they cannot be hidden: through the treble veil of crape which she wears the fierce light of a blazing misery, that rests not for matins or for vespers, for noon of day or noon of night, for ebbing or for flowing tide, may be read from the very ground. She is the defier of God. She also is the mother of lunacies, and the suggestress of suicides. Deep lie the roots of her power; but narrow is the nation that she rules. For she can approach only those in whom a profound nature has been upheaved by central convulsions; in whom the heart trembles and the brain rocks under conspiracies of tempest from without and ¹ "This, the reader will be aware, applies chiefly to the cotton and tobacco States of North America; but not to them only on which account I have not scrupled to figure the sun which looks down upon slavery as tropical,—no matter if strictly within the tropics, or simply so near to them as to produce a similar climate?"—De Quincey.

² That is, among outcasts; literally, among the Hebrews, Arabs, and other Semitic races, said to be descended from Shem, the son of Noah. See Genesis, 9 27.

¹ Nicholas I, whose daughter Alexandra died in August, 1844.

² See Revelation, 3 5.

tempest from within. Madonna moves with uncertain steps, fast or slow, but still with tragic grace. Our Lady of Sighs creeps timidly and stealthily. But this youngest Sister moves with incalculable motions, bounding, and with tiger's leaps. She carries no key, for, though coming rarely amongst men, she storms all doors at which she is permitted to enter at all. And her name is Mater Tenebrarum,—Our Lady of Darkness.

These were the Semnai Theai or Sublime Goddesses,¹ these were the Euménides or Gracious Ladies (so called by antiquity in shuddering propitiation), of my Oxford dreams. Madonna spoke. She spoke by her mysterious hand. Touching my head, she beckoned to Our Lady of Sighs, and what she spoke, translated out of the signs which (except in dreams) no man reads, was this:—

"Lo! here is he whom in childhood I dedicated to my altars. This is he that once I made my darling. Him I led astray, him I beguiled; and from heaven I stole away his young heart to mine. Through me did he become idolatrous; and through me it was, by languishing desires, that he worshipped the worm, and prayed to the wormy grave. Holy was the grave to him; lovely was its darkness,² saintly its corruption. Him, this young idolater, I have seasoned for thee, dear gentle Sister of Sighs! Do thou take him now to thy heart, and season him for our dreadful sister. And thou,"—turning to the Mater Tenebrarum, she said,—"wicked sister, that temptest and hatest, do thou take him from her. See that thy sceptre lie heavy on his head. Suffer not woman and her tenderness to sit near him in his darkness. Banish the frailties of hope; wither the relenting of love; scorch the fountains of tears,³ curse him as only thou canst curse. So shall he be accomplished in the furnace; so shall he see the things that ought not to be seen, sights that are abominable, and secrets that are unutterable. So shall he read elder truths, sad truths, grand truths, fearful truths. So shall he rise again before he dies. And so shall our commission be accomplished which from God we had,—to plague his heart until we had unfolded the capacities of his spirit."

SAVANNAH-LA-MAR

God smote Savannah-la-mar, and in one night, by earthquake, removed her, with all her towers standing and population sleeping, from the steadfast foundations of the shore to the coral floors of ocean. And God said,—"Pompeii did I bury and conceal from men through seventeen centuries; this city I will bury, but not conceal. She shall be a monument to men of my mysterious anger, set in azure light through generations to come; for I will enshrine her in a crystal dome of my tropic seas." This city, therefore, like a mighty galleon with all her apparel mounted, steamers flying, and tacking perfect, seems floating along the noiseless depths of ocean, and oftentimes in glassy calms, through the translucent atmosphere of water that now stretches like an air-woven awning above the silent encampment, mariners from every clime look down into her courts and terraces, count her gates, and number the spires of her churches. She is one ample cemetery, and has been for many a year, but, in the mighty calms that brood for weeks over tropic latitudes, she fascinates the eye with a *Fata Morgana*² revelation, as of human life still subsisting in submarine asylums sacred from the storms that torment our upper air.

Thither, lured by the loveliness of cerulean depths, by the peace of human dwellings privileged from molestation, by the gleam of marble altars sleeping in everlasting sanctity, oftentimes in dreams did I and the Dark Interpreter³ cleave the watery veil that divided us from her streets. We looked into the belfries, where the pendulous bells were waiting in vain for the summons which should awaken their marriage peals; together we touched the mighty organ-keys, that sang no *jubilates*⁴ for the ear of heaven, that sang no requiems for the ear of human sorrow; together we searched the silent nurseries, where the children were all asleep, and had been asleep through five generations. "They are waiting for the heavenly dawn," whispered the Interpreter to himself "and, when that comes, the bells and organs will utter a jubilate repeated by the echoes of Paradise." Then, turning to me, he said,—"This is sad, this is piteous; but

¹ Plain of the Sea.

² That is, mirage-like; Fata Morgana is the name of a mirage off the coast of Sicily, formerly regarded as the work of Morgana the Fairy, a famous necromancer in medieval legend.

³ One of the Suspensa papers is entitled "The Dark Interpreter."

⁴ Hymns of rejoicing (like the 100th Psalm).

¹ "Sublime Goddesses"—The word συνός is usually rendered venerable in dictionaries,—not a very flattering epithet for females. But I am disposed to think that it comes nearest to our idea of the sublime,—as near as a Greek word could come."—De Quincey.

² See Jeremiah, 9:1.

less would not have sufficed for the purpose of God. Look here. Put into a Roman clepsydra¹ one hundred drops of water; let these run out as the sands in an hour-glass, every drop measuring the hundredth part of a second, so that each shall represent but the three-hundred-and-sixty-thousandth part of an hour. Now, count the drops as they race along; and, when the fiftieth of the hundred is passing, behold! forty-nine are not, because already they have perished, and fifty are not, because they are yet to come. You see, therefore, how narrow, how incalculably narrow, is the true and actual present. Of that time which we call the present, hardly a hundredth part but belongs either to a past which has fled, or to a future which is still on the wing. It has perished, or it is not born. It was, or it is not. Yet even this approximation to the truth is infinitely false. For again subdivide that solitary drop, which only was found to represent the present, into a lower series of similar fractions, and the actual present which you arrest measures now but the thirty-six-millionth of an hour; and so by infinite declensions the true and very present, in which only we live and enjoy, will vanish into a mote of a mote, distinguishable only by a heavenly vision. Therefore the present, which only man possesses, offers less capacity for his footing than the slenderest film that ever spider twisted from her womb. Therefore, also, even this incalculable shadow from the narrowest pencil of moonlight is more transitory than geometry can measure, or thought of angel can overtake. The time which is contracts into a mathematic point, and even that point perishes a thousand times before we can utter its birth. All is finite in the present; and even that finite is infinite in its velocity of flight towards death. But in God there is nothing finite; but in God there is nothing transitory; but in God there can be nothing that tends to death. Therefore it follows that for God there can be no present. The future is the present of God, and to the future it is that he sacrifices the human present. Therefore it is that he works by earthquake. Therefore it is that he works by grief. O, deep is the ploughing of earthquake! O, deep"—(and his voice swelled like a *sanctus*² rising from a choir of a cathedral)—"O, deep is the ploughing of grief! But oftentimes less would not suffice for the agriculture of God. Upon a night of earthquake he builds a thousand years of pleasant habitations for man. Upon the sorrow of an infant he raises oftentimes from human intellects glorious vintages that could not else have been. Less than these fierce ploughshares would not have stirred the stubborn soil. The one is needed for Earth, our planet,—for Earth itself as the dwelling-place of man; but the other is needed yet oftener for God's mightiest instrument,—yes," (and he looked solemnly at myself). "is needed for the mysterious children of the Earth!"

From THE POETRY OF POPE
1848

LITERATURE OF KNOWLEDGE AND LITERATURE OF POWER

What is it that we mean by literature? Popularly, and amongst the thoughtless, it is held to include everything that is printed in a book. Little logic is required to disturb that definition. The most thoughtless person is easily made aware that in the idea of literature one essential element is,—some relation to a general and common interest of man, so that what applies only to a local or professional or merely personal interest, even though presenting itself in the shape of a book, will not belong to literature. So far the definition is easily narrowed, and it is as easily expanded. For not only is much that takes a station in books not literature, but, inversely, much that really is literature never reaches a station in books. The weekly sermons of Christendom, that vast pulpit literature which acts so extensively upon the popular mind—to warn, to uphold, to renew, to comfort, to alarm—does not attain the sanctuary of libraries in the ten-thousandth part of its extent. The drama, again, as for instance the finest of Shakspeare's plays in England and all leading Athenian plays in the noontide of the Attic stage,¹ operated as a literature on the public mind, and were (according to the strictest letter of that term) published through the audiences that witnessed² their representation, some time before they were published as things to be read; and they were published in this scenical mode of publication with much more effect than they could have had as books.

¹ The time of Æschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, 5th century B. C.

² "Charles I. for example, when Prince of Wales, and many others in his father's court, gained their known familiarity with Shakspeare—not through the original quartos, so slenderly diffused, nor through the first folio of 1623, but through the court representations of his chief dramas at Whitehall."—De Quincey during ages of costly copying or of costly printing.

¹ water clock

² A part of the mass, beginning with the Latin words sanctus, sanctus, sanctus (holy, holy, holy).

Books, therefore, do not suggest an idea co-extensive and interchangeable with the idea of literature, since much literature, scenic, forensic, or didactic (as from lectures and public orators), may never come into books, and much that does come into books may connect itself with no literary interest. But a far more important correction, applicable to the common vague idea of literature, is to be sought, not so much in a better definition of literature, as in a sharper distinction of the two functions which it fulfils. In that great social organ which, collectively, we call literature, there may be distinguished two separate offices, that may blend and often do so, but capable, severally, of a severe insulation, and naturally fitted for reciprocal repulsion. There is, first, the literature of knowledge, and, secondly, the literature of power. The function of the first is to teach; the function of the second is to move: the first is a rudder; the second an oar or a sail. The first speaks to the mere discursive understanding, the second speaks ultimately, it may happen, to the higher understanding, or reason, but always through affections of pleasure and sympathy. Remotely it may travel towards an object seated in what Lord Bacon calls dry light,¹ but proximately it does and must operate—else it ceases to be a literature of power—on and through that humid light which clothes itself in the mists and glittering *iris*² of human passions, desires, and genial emotions. Men have so little reflected on the higher functions of literature as to find it a paradox if one should describe it as a mean or subordinate purpose of books to give information. But this is a paradox only in the sense which makes it honorable to be paradoxical. Whenever we talk in ordinary language of seeking information or gaining knowledge, we understand the words as connected with something of absolute novelty. But it is the grandeur of all truth which can occupy a very high place in human interests that it is never absolutely novel to the meanest of minds: it exists eternally, by way of germ or latent principle, in the lowest as in the highest, needing to be developed but never to be planted. To be capable of transplantation is the immediate criterion of a truth that ranges on a lower scale. Besides which, there is a rarer thing than truth, namely, power, or deep sympathy with truth. What is the effect, for instance, upon society, of children? By the pity, by the tenderness, and by the peculiar modes of admiration, which connect themselves with the helplessness, with the innocence, and with the simplicity of children, not only are the primal affections strengthened and continually renewed, but the qualities which are dearest in the sight of heaven—the frailty, for instance, which appeals to forbearance, the innocence which symbolizes the heavenly, and the simplicity which is most alien from the worldly—are kept up in perpetual remembrance, and their ideals are continually refreshed. A purpose of the same nature is answered by the higher literature, viz, the literature of power. What do you learn from Paradise Lost? Nothing at all. What do you learn from a cookery-book? Something new, something that you did not know before, in every paragraph. But would you therefore put the wretched cookery-book on a higher level of estimation than the divine poem? What you owe to Milton is not any knowledge, of which a million separate items are still but a million of advancing steps on the same earthly level, what you owe is power, that is, exercise and expansion to your own latent capacity of sympathy with the infinite, where every pulse and each separate influx is a step upwards, a step ascending as upon a Jacob's ladder³ from earth to mysterious altitudes above the earth. All the steps of knowledge, from first to last, carry you further on the same plane, but could never raise you one foot above your ancient level of earth, whereas the very first step in power is a flight, is an ascending movement into another element where earth is forgotten.

Were it not that human sensibilities are ventilated and continually called out into exercise by the great phenomena of infancy, or of real life as it moves through chance and change, or of literature as it recombines these elements in the mimeries of poetry, romance, etc., it is certain that, like any animal power or muscular energy falling into disuse, all such sensibilities would gradually droop and dwindle. It is in relation to these great moral capacities of man that the literature of power, as contra-distinguished from that of knowledge, lives and has its field of action. It is concerned with what is highest in man; for the Scriptures themselves never condescended to deal by suggestion or co-operation with the mere discursive understanding when speaking of man in his intellectual capacity, the Scriptures speak, not of the understanding, but of "the understanding heart,"¹ making the heart,—that is, the great intuitive (or non-discursive) organ, to be the interchangeable formula for man in his highest state of capacity for the infinite. Tragedy, romance, fairy tale, or epopee,² all alike restore to man's mind the ideals of justice, of hope, of truth, of mercy, of retribution, which else (left to the support of daily life in its realities) would languish for want of sufficient illustration. What is meant, for instance, by poetic justice? It does not mean a justice that differs by its object from the ordinary justice of human jurisprudence, for then it must be confessedly a very bad kind of justice; but it means a justice that differs from common forensic justice by the degree in which it attains its object, a justice that is more omnipotent over its own ends, as dealing, not with the refractory elements of earthly life, but with the elements of its own creation and with materials flexible to its own purest preconceptions. It is certain that, were it not for the literature of power, these ideals would often remain amongst us as mere arid notional forms; whereas, by the creative forces of man put forth in literature, they gain a vernal life of restoration and germinate into vital activities. The commonest novel, by moving in alliance with human fears and hopes, with human instincts of wrong and right, sustains and quickens those affections. Calling them into action, it rescues them from torpor. And hence the pre-eminency, over all authors that merely teach, of the meanest that moves, or that teaches, if at all, indirectly by moving. The very highest work that has ever existed in the literature of knowledge is but a provisional work, a book upon trial and sufferance, and quandiu bene se gesserit.³ Let its teaching be even partially revised, let it be but expanded, nay, even let its teaching be but placed in a better order, and instantly it is superseded. Whereas the feeblest works in the literature of power, surviving at all, survive as finished and unalterable among men. For instance, the Principia of Sir Isaac Newton was a book mutant on earth from the first.⁴ In all stages of its progress it would have to fight for its existence: first, as regards absolute truth; secondly, when that combat was over, as regards its form, or mode of presenting the truth. And as soon as a La Place, or anybody else, builds higher upon the foundations laid by this book, effectually he throws it out of the sunshine into decay and darkness; by weapons won from this book he superannuates and destroys this book, so that soon the name of Newton remains as a mere nomine umbra,¹ but his book, as a living power, has transmigrated into other forms. Now, on the contrary, the Iliad, the Prometheus of Æschylus, the Othello or King Lear, the Hamlet or Macbeth, and the Paradise Lost are not militant but triumphant forever, as long as the languages exist in which they speak or can be taught to speak. They never can transmigrate into new incarnations. To reproduce these in new forms or variations, even if in some things they should be improved, would be to plagiarize. A good steam-engine is properly superseded by a better. But one lovely pastoral valley is not superseded by another, nor a statue of Praxiteles by a statue of Michael Angelo.² These things are separated, not by imparity, but by disparity. They are not thought of as unequal under the same standard, but as different in kind, and, if otherwise equal, as equal under a different standard. Human works of immortal beauty and works of nature in one respect stand on the same footing: they never absolutely repeat each other, never approach so near as to differ; and they differ not as better and worse, or simply by more and less; they differ by undecipherable and incommunicable differences, that cannot be caught by mimeries, that cannot be reflected in the mirror of copies, that cannot become ponderable in the scales of vulgar comparison.

¹ "Heraclitus the Obscure said: The dry light was the best soul. Meaning, when the faculties intellectual are in vigor, not wet, nor, as it were, bloodied by the affections."—Bacon, Apophthegms New and Old, 268 (188).

² rainbow (Iris was the personification of the rainbow)

³ See Genesis, 28 12.

THE ENGLISH MAIL COACH 1849

SECTION I—THE GLORY OF MOTION

Some twenty or more years before I matriculated at Oxford, Mr. Palmer, at that time M. P. for Bath, had accomplished two things, very hard to do on our little planet, the Earth, however cheap they may be held by eccentric people in comets: he

¹ 1 Kings, 3, 9, 12 ² epic

³ as long as it bore itself well

⁴ The full title is Philosophiæ Naturalis Principia Mathematica (The Mathematical Principles of Natural Philosophy). It was published in 1687.

¹ shadow of a name

² The work of Praxiteles is noted for grace and beauty, that of Michael Angelo for power.

had invented mail-coaches, and he had married the daughter of a duke. He was, therefore, just twice as great a man as Galileo, who did certainly invent (or, which is the same thing,¹ discover) the satellites of Jupiter, those very next things extant to mail-coaches in the two capital pretensions of speed and keeping time, but, on the other hand, who did not marry the daughter of a duke.

These mail-coaches, as organized by Mr. Palmer, are entitled to a circumstantial notice from myself, having had so large a share in developing the anarchies of my subsequent dreams: an agency which they accomplished, 1st, through velocity at that time unprecedented—for they first revealed the glory of motion; 2dly, through grand effects for the eye between lamplight and the darkness upon solitary roads; 3dly, through animal beauty and power so often displayed in the class of horses selected for this mail service, 4thly, through the conscious presence of a central intellect, that, in the midst of vast distances²—of storms, of darkness, of danger—overruled all obstacles into one steady co-operation to a national result. For my own feeling, this post-office service spoke as by some mighty orchestra, where a thousand instruments, all disregarding each other, and so far in danger of discord, yet all obedient as slaves to the supreme baton of some great leader, terminate in a perfection of harmony like that of heart, brain, and lungs in a healthy animal organization. But, finally, that particular element in this whole combination which most impressed myself, and through which it is that to this hour Mr. Palmer's mail-coach system tyrannizes over my dreams by terror and terrific beauty, lay in the awful political mission which at that time it fulfilled. The mail-coach it was that distributed over the face of the land, like the opening of apocalyptic vials,³ the heart-shaking news of Trafalgar, of Salamanca, of Vittoria, of Waterloo. These were the harvests that, in the grandeur of their reaping, redeemed the tears and blood in which they had been sown. Neither was the meanest peasant so much below the grandeur and the sorrow of the times as to confound battles such as these, which were gradually moulding the destinies of Christendom, with the vulgar conflicts of ordinary warfare, so often no more than gladiatorial trials of national prowess. The victories of England in this stupendous contest rose of themselves as natural *Te Deums*⁴ to heaven, and it was felt by the thoughtful that such victories, at such a crisis of general prostration, were not more beneficial to ourselves than finally to France, our enemy, and to the nations of all western or central Europe, through whose pusillanimity it was that the French domination had prospered.

The mail-coach, as the national organ for publishing these mighty events, thus diffusively influential, became itself a spiritualized and glorified object to an impassioned heart, and naturally, in the Oxford of that day, all hearts were impassioned, as being all (or nearly all) in early manhood. In most universities there is one single college; in Oxford there were five-and-twenty, all of which were peopled by young men, the élite of their own generation, not boys, but men—none under eighteen. In some of these many colleges the custom permitted the student to keep what are called "short terms"; that is, the four terms of Michaelmas, Lent, Easter, and Act,⁵ were kept by a residence, in the aggregate, of ninety-one days, or thirteen weeks. Under this interrupted residence, it was possible that a student might have a reason for going down to his home four times in the year. Thus made eight journeys to and fro. But, as these homes lay dispersed through all the shires of the island, and most of us disdained all coaches except his Majesty's mail, no city out of London could pretend to so extensive a connection with Mr. Palmer's establishment as Oxford. Three mails, at the least, I remember as passing every day through Oxford, and benefiting by my personal patronage—viz., the Worcester, the Gloucester, and the Holyhead mail. Naturally, therefore, it became a point of some interest with us, whose journeys revolved every six weeks on an average, to look a little into the executive details of

¹ "The same thing" —Thus, in the calendar of the Church Festivals, the discovery of the true cross (by Helen, the mother of Constantine) is recorded (and, one might think, with the express consciousness of sarcasm) as the Invention of the Cross. —De Quincey

² "Vast distances" —One case was familiar to mail-coach travellers where two mails in opposite directions, north and south, starting at the same minute from points six hundred miles apart, met almost constantly at a particular bridge which bisected the total distance. —De Quincey.

³ Bowls mentioned in the Apocalypse, containing the wrath of God, which the angels are to pour out. See Revelation, 16

⁴ Hymns of praise: so called from the first words of a celebrated Christian hymn, Te Deum laudamus (we praise thee, O God)

⁵ Corresponding roughly to autumn, winter, spring, and summer terms. Michaelmas, the feast of St. Michael, is celebrated Sept. 29; Lent is the period before Easter, never as late as May; Act is the last term of the academic year, the occasion of the public presentation of a thesis by a candidate for a degree

the system. With some of these Mr. Palmer had no concern; they rested upon bye-laws enacted by posting-houses¹ for their own benefit, and upon other bye-laws, equally stern, enacted by the inside passengers for the illustration of their own haughty exclusiveness. These last were of a nature to rouse our scorn; from which the transition was not very long to systematic mutiny. Up to this time, say 1804, or 1805 (the year of Trafalgar), it had been the fixed assumption of the four inside people (as an old tradition of all public carriages derived from the reign of Charles II) that they, the illustrious quaternion² constituted a porcelain variety of the human race, whose dignity would have been compromised by exchanging one word of civility with the three miserable delf-ware outsiders.³ Even to have kicked an outsider might have been held to attain⁴ the foot concerned in that operation, so that, perhaps, it would have required an act of Parliament to restore its purity of blood. What words, then, could express the horror, and the sense of treason, in that case, which had happened, where all three outsiders (the trinity of Pariahs) made a vain attempt to sit down at the same breakfast-table or dinner-table with the consecrated four? I myself witnessed such an attempt; and on that occasion a benevolent old gentleman endeavored to soothe his three holy associates, by suggesting that, if the outsiders were indicted for this criminal attempt at the next assizes, the court would regard it as a case of lunacy or delirium tremens rather than of treason. England owes much of her grandeur to the depth of the aristocratic element in her social composition, when pulling against her strong democracy. I am not the man to laugh at it. But sometimes, undoubtedly, it expressed itself in comic shapes. The course taken with the infatuated outsiders, in the particular attempt which I have noticed, was that the waiter, beckoning them away from the privileged salle-à-manger,⁵ sang out, "This way, my good men," and then enticed these good men away to the kitchen. But that plan had not always answered. Sometimes, though rarely, cases occurred where the intruders, being stronger than usual, or more vicious than usual, resolutely refused to budge, and so far carried their point as to have a separate table arranged for themselves in a corner of the general room. Yet, if an Indian screen could be found ample enough to plant them out from the very eyes of the high table, or dais, it then became possible to assume as a fiction of law that the three delf fellows, after all, were not present. They could be ignored by the porcelain men, under the maxim that objects not appearing and objects not existing are governed by the same logical construction.¹

Such being, at that time, the usage of mail-coaches, what was to be done by us of young Oxford? We, the most aristocratic of people, who were addicted to the practice of looking down superciliously even upon the insides themselves as often very questionable characters—were we, by voluntarily going outside, to court indignities? If our dress and bearing sheltered us generally from the suspicion of being "raff" (the name at that period for "snobs"), we really were such constructively by the place we assumed. If we did not submit to the deep shadow of eclipse, we entered at least the skirts of its penumbra.² And the analogy of theatres was valid against us,—where no man can complain of the annoyances incident to the pit³ or gallery, having his instant remedy in paying the higher price of the boxes. But the soundness of this analogy we disputed. In the case of the theatre, it cannot be pretended that the inferior situations have any separate attractions, unless the pit may be supposed to have an advantage for the purposes of the critic or the dramatic reporter. But the critic or reporter is a rarity. For most people, the sole benefit is in the price. Now, on the contrary,

¹ "De non apparentibus, etc."—De Quincey

This is a Roman legal phrase, the full form of which is De non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est lex.

² "Snobs" and its antithesis, "nobs," arose among the internal factions of shoemakers perhaps ten years later. Possibly enough, the terms may have existed much earlier, but they were then first made known, picturesquely and effectively, by a trial at some assizes which happened to fix the public attention.—De Quincey.

In university speech, snob meant townsman as opposed to gentleman. Later, the name was applied to a workman who accepted lower wages during a strike.

³ Partial shadow, in an eclipse when the light is only partly cut off by the intervening body.

⁴ The high-priced place—the orchestra—in the American theater, corresponds with what formerly was the cheap pit of the English theater.

¹ Inns where horses were changed

² group of four

³ Delf is earthenware originally made at Delft, Holland, in imitation of porcelain. In the time of Charles II (1660-85) no one sat outside; later, servants occupied the outside places.

⁴ disgrace (This is a legal term applied to persons convicted of treason. The property of a person so convicted was forfeited and his right to receive or transmit by inheritance was cancelled. The "attaint" was extended to his descendants unless Parliament removed the attaint.)

⁵ dining room

the outside of the mail had its own incommunicable advantages. These we could not forego. The higher price we would willingly have paid, but not the price connected with the condition of riding inside; which condition we pronounced insufferable. The air, the freedom of prospect, the proximity to the horses, the elevation of seat: these were what we required; but, above all, the certain anticipation of purchasing occasional opportunities of driving.

Such was the difficulty which pressed us; and under the coercion of this difficulty we instituted a searching inquiry into the true quality and valuation of the different apartments about the mail. We conducted this inquiry on metaphysical principles, and it was ascertained satisfactorily that the roof of the coach, which by some weak men had been called the attics, and by some the garrets, was in reality the drawing-room; in which drawing-room the box¹ was the chief ottoman or sofa, whilst it appeared that the inside, which had been traditionally regarded as the only room tenantable by gentlemen, was, in fact, the coal-cellar in disguise.

Great wits jump.² The very same idea had not long before struck the celestial intellect of China. Amongst the presents carried out by our first embassy to that country was a state-coach. It had been specially selected as a personal gift by George III, but the exact mode of using it was an intense mystery to Pekin. The ambassador, indeed (Lord Macartney), had made some imperfect explanations upon this point; but, as His Excellency communicated these in a diplomatic whisper at the very moment of his departure, the celestial intellect was very feebly illuminated, and it became necessary to call a cabinet council on the grand state question, "Where was the Emperor to sit?" The hammer-cloth³ happened to be unusually gorgeous; and, partly on that consideration, but partly also because the box offered the most elevated seat, was nearest to the moon, and undeniably went foremost, it was resolved by acclamation that the box was the imperial throne, and, for the scoundrel who drove,—he might sit where he could find a perch. The horses, therefore, being harnessed, solemnly his imperial majesty ascended his new English throne under a flourish of trumpets, having the first lord of the treasury on his right hand, and the chief jester on his left. Pekin gloried in the spectacle; and in the whole flowery people, constructively present by representation, there was but one discontented person, and that was the coachman. This mutinous individual audaciously shouted, "Where am I to sit?" But the privy council, incensed by his disloyalty, unanimously opened the door, and kicked him into the inside. He had all the inside places to himself; but such is the rapacity of ambition that he was still dissatisfied. "I say," he cried out in an extempore petition addressed to the Emperor through the window—"I say, how am I to catch hold of the reins?"—"Anyhow," was the imperial answer; "don't trouble me, man, in my glory. How catch the reins? Why, through the windows, through the keyholes—anyhow." Finally this contumacious coachman lengthened the cheek-strings⁴ into a sort of jury-reins⁵ communicating with the horses; with these he drove as steadily as Pekin had any right to expect. The Emperor returned after the briefest of circuits; he descended in great pomp from his throne, with the severest resolution never to remount it. A public thanksgiving was ordered for his majesty's happy escape from the disease of a broken neck; and the state-coach was dedicated thenceforward as a votive offering to the god Fo Fo⁶—whom the learned more accurately called F1 F1.

A revolution of this same Chinese character did young Oxford of that era effect in the constitution of mail-coach society. It was a perfect French Revolution; and we had good reason to say, ça ira.⁴ In fact, it soon became too popular. The "public"—a well-known character, particularly disagreeable, though slightly respectable, and notorious for affecting the chief seats in synagogues⁵—had at first loudly opposed this revolution; but, when the opposition showed itself to be ineffectual, our disagreeable friend went into it with headlong zeal. At first it was a sort of race between us; and, as the public is usually from thirty to fifty years old, naturally we of young Oxford, that averaged about twenty, had the advantage. Then the public took to bribing, giving fees to horse-keepers, etc., who hired out their persons as warming-pans on the box seat. That, you know, was shocking to

¹ strings by which the occupant signals to the driver

² makeshift reins

³ This is De Quincey's creation.

⁴ It will go on (This was a popular expression of the French Revolutionists, taken from one of their songs.)

⁵ See Matthew, 23-6.

¹ The driver's seat; so called from the box underneath.

² agree

³ cloth that covers the box-seat

all moral sensibilities. Come to bribery, said we, and there is an end to all morality,—Aristotle's, Zeno's, Cicero's, or anybody's. And, besides, of what use was it? For we bribed also. And, as our bribes, to those of the public, were as five shillings to sixpence, here again young Oxford had the advantage. But the contest was ruinous to the principles of the stables connected with the mails. This whole corporation was constantly bribed, rebribed, and often sur-rebribed; a mail-coach yard was like the hustings¹ in a contested election; and a horse-keeper, ostler, or helper, was held by the philosophical at that time to be the most corrupt character in the nation.

There was an impression upon the public mind, natural enough from the continually augmenting velocity of the mail, but quite erroneous, that an outside seat on this class of carriages was a post of danger. On the contrary, I maintained that, if a man had become nervous from some gipsy prediction in his childhood, allocating to a particular moon² now approaching some unknown danger, and he should inquire earnestly, "Whither can I fly for shelter? Is a prison the safest retreat? or a lunatic hospital? or the British Museum?" I should have replied, "Oh no; I'll tell you what to do. Take lodgings for the next forty days on the box of his Majesty's mail. Nobody can touch you there. If it is by bills³ at ninety days after date that you are made unhappy—if noters and protesters⁴ are the sort of wretches whose astrological shadows darken the house of life⁵—then note you what I vehemently protest; viz., that, no matter though the sheriff and under-sheriff in every county should be running after you with his posse, touch a hair of your head he cannot whilst you keep house and have your legal domicile on the box of the mail. It is felony to stop the mail; even the sheriff cannot do that. And an extra touch of the whip to the leaders (no great matter if it grazes the sheriff) at any time guarantees your safety." In fact, a bedroom in a quiet house seems a safe enough retreat; yet it is liable to its own notorious nuisances—to robbers by night, to rats, to fire. But the mail laughs at these terrors. To robbers, the answer is packed up and ready for delivery in the barrel of the guard's blunderbuss. Rats again! there are none about mail-coaches any more than snakes in Von Troll's Iceland;¹ except, indeed, now and then a parliamentary rat,² who always hides his shame in what I have shown to be the "coal-cellar." And, as to fire, I never knew but one in a mail-coach; which was in the Exeter mail, and caused by an obstinate sailor bound to Devonport. Jack, making light of the law and the lawgiver that had set their faces against his offence, insisted on taking up a forbidden seat³ in the rear of the roof, from which he could exchange his own yarns with those of the guard. No greater offence was then known to mail-coaches, it was treason, it was lesa majestas,⁴ it was by tendency arson; and the ashes of Jack's pipe, falling amongst the straw of the hinder boot,⁵ containing the mail-bags, raised a flame which (aided by

¹ "Von Troll's Iceland."—The allusion is to a well-known chapter in Von Troll's work, entitled "Concerning the Snakes of Iceland." The entire chapter consists of these six words—"There are no snakes in Iceland."—De Quincey.

² The work here referred to, Von Troll's Letters on Iceland, contains no chapter of this nature. Such a chapter is found, however, in Horrebow's Natural History of Iceland (1758). Allusion is made to this chapter in Boswell's The Life of Samuel Johnson (Oxford ed., 1904), 2, 212.

³ A member of Parliament who deserts his party when it is losing, as a rat is said to leave a sinking ship or a falling house.

⁴ "Forbidden seat."—The very sternest code of rules was enforced upon the mails by the Post office. Throughout England, only three out-rides were allowed, of whom one was to sit on the box, and the other two immediately behind the box; none, under any pretext, to come near the guard, an indispensable caution since else, under the guise of a passenger, a robber might by any one of a thousand advantages—which sometimes are created, but always are favored, by the animation of frank social intercourse—have disarmed the guard. Beyond the Scottish border the regulation was so far relaxed as to allow of four out-rides, but not relaxed at all as to the mode of placing them. One, as before, was seated on the box, and the other three on the front of the roof, with a determinate and ample separation from the little insulated chair of the guard. This relaxation was conceded by way of compensating to Scotland her disadvantages in point of population. England, by the superior density of her population, might always count upon a large fund of profits in the fractional trips of chance passengers riding for short distances of two or three stages. In Scotland this chance counted for much less. And therefore, to make good the deficiency, Scotland was allowed a compensatory profit upon one extra passenger.—De Quincey.

⁵ A crime committed against the sovereign power; often any offense violating the dignity of the sovereign power or its representative.

⁶ The place for baggage on the roof of a coach, under the guard's seat.

¹ The platform from which candidates for Parliament were nominated.

² Alluding to a particular planet.

³ Bills of exchange; promissory notes.

⁴ A noter is one who notes a protested bill of exchange; a protester is one who protests a bill of exchange.

⁵ For astrological purposes the sky is divided into 12 sections called houses. Astrologers hold that a person's fortunes are determined by the positions of the planets at the time of his birth.

the wind of our motion) threatened a revolution in the republic of letters.¹ Yet even this left the sanctity of the box unviolated. In dignified repose, the coachman and myself sat on, resting with benign composure upon our knowledge that the fire would have to burn its way through four inside passengers before it could reach ourselves. I remarked to the coachman, with a quotation from Virgil's Æneid really too hackneyed—

Jam proximus ardet
Ucalegon.²

But, recollecting that the Virgilian part of the coachman's education might have been neglected, I interpreted so far as to say that perhaps at that moment the flames were catching hold of our worthy brother and inside passenger, Ucalegon. The coachman made no answer,—which is my own way when a stranger addresses me either in Syriac or in Coptic; but by his faint skeptical smile he seemed to insinuate that he knew better,—for that Ucalegon, as it happened, was not in the way-bill,³ and therefore could not have been booked.

No dignity is perfect which does not at some point ally itself with the mysterious. The connection of the mail with the state and the executive government—a connection obvious, but yet not strictly defined—gave to the whole mail establishment an official grandeur which did us service on the roads, and invested us with seasonable terrors. Not the less impressive were those terrors because their legal limits were imperfectly ascertained. Look at those turnpike gates, with what deferential hurry, with what an obedient start, they fly open at our approach! Look at that long line of carts and carters ahead, audaciously usurping the very crest of the road. Ah! traitors, they do not hear us as yet, but, as soon as the dreadful blast of our horn reaches them with proclamation of our approach, see with what frenzy of trepidation they fly to their horses' heads, and deprecate our wrath by the precipitation of their crane-neck quarterings.⁴ Treason they feel to be their crime; each individual carter feels himself under the ban of confiscation and attainder,⁵ his blood is attained through six generations; and nothing is wanting but the headsman and his axe, the block and the sawdust, to close up the vista of his horrors. What! shall it be within benefit of clergy¹ to delay the king's message on the high road?—to interrupt the great respirations, ebb and flood, systole and diastole,² of the national intercourse?—to endanger the safety of tidings running day and night between all nations and languages? Or can it be fancied, amongst the weakest of men, that the bodies of the criminals will be given up to their widows for Christian burial?³ Now, the doubts which were raised as to our powers did more to wrap them in terror, by wrapping them in uncertainty, than could have been effected by the sharpest definitions of the law from the Quarter Sessions.⁴ We, on our parts (we, the collective mail, I mean), did our utmost to exalt the idea of our privileges by the insolence with which we wielded them. Whether this insolence rested upon law that gave it a sanction, or upon conscious power that haughtily dispensed with that sanction, equally it spoke from a potential station; and the agent, in each particular insolence of the moment, was viewed reverentially, as one having authority.

Sometimes after breakfast his Majesty's mail would become frisky; and, in its difficult wheelings amongst the intricacies of early markets, it would upset an apple-cart, a cart loaded with eggs, etc. Huge was the affliction and dismay, awful was the smash! I, as far as possible, endeavored in such a case to represent the conscience and moral sensibilities of the mail, and, when wildernesses of eggs were lying poached under our horses' hoofs, then would I stretch forth my hands in sorrow, saying (in words too celebrated at that time, from the false echoes of Marengo),⁵ "Ah! wherefore have

¹ The clergy, and afterwards all persons who could read, were exempt from trial in the secular courts until 1827.

² alternate contraction and expansion (of the heart).

³ The bodies of criminals were used by hospitals as subjects for dissection.

⁴ court sessions held in the counties by the Justices of the Peace.

⁵ "False echoes"—Yes, false! for the words ascribed to Napoleon, as breathed to the memory of Desaix, never were uttered at all. They stand in the same category of theatrical fictions as the cry of the foundering line of battle ship Vengeur, as the vaunt of General Cambronne at Waterloo, 'La Garde meurt, mais ne se rend pas', or as the repartee of Talleyrand—"De Quincey."

The words quoted in the text were said to have been spoken by Napoleon when he heard that Desaix had been killed in the Battle of

¹ newspapers, letters, etc., in the mail-bags.

² now next (to the house of Delphobus) Ucalegon (i. e., his house) begins to blaze (Æneid, 2, 811).

³ list of passengers.

⁴ De Quincey derives quartering from the French cartayer, to evade a rut or any obstacle. The crane-neck, here used for wagon, is a bent iron bar that connects the front and back parts of a vehicle. See p. 1122b, n. 2.

⁵ See p. 1105a, 20 and n. 4.

we not time to weep over you?"—which was evidently impossible, since, in fact, we had not time to laugh over them. Tied to post-office allowance in some cases of fifty minutes for eleven miles, could the royal mail pretend to undertake the offices of sympathy and condolence? Could it be expected to provide tears for the accidents of the road? If even it seemed to trample on humanity, it did so, I felt, in discharge of its own more peremptory duties.

Upholding the morality of the mail, a *fortiori*¹ I upheld its rights; as a matter of duty, I stretched to the uttermost its privilege of imperial precedency, and astonished weak minds by the feudal powers which I hinted to be lurking constructively in the charters of this proud establishment. Once I remember being on the box of the Holyhead mail, between Shrewsbury and Oswestry, when a tawdry thing from Birmingham, some "Tallyho" or "Highflyer," all flaunting with green and gold, came up alongside of us. What a contrast to our royal simplicity of form and color in this plebeian wretch! The single ornament on our dark ground of chocolate color was the mighty shield of the imperial arms, but emblazoned in proportions as modest as a signet-ring bears to a seal of office. Even this was displayed only on a single panel, whispering, rather than proclaiming, our relations to the mighty state; whilst the beast from Birmingham, our green-and-gold friend from false, fleeting, perjured² Brummagem,³ had as much writing and painting on its sprawling flanks as would have puzzled a decipherer from the tombs of Luxor. For some time this Birmingham machine ran along by our side—a piece of familiarity that already of itself seemed to me sufficiently jacobinical.¹ But all at once a movement of the horses announced a desperate intention of leaving us behind. "Do you see that?" I said to the coachman.—"I see," was his short answer. He was wide awake,—yet he waited longer than seemed prudent; for the horses of our audacious opponent had a disagreeable air of freshness and power. But his motive was loyal; his wish was that the Birmingham conceit should be full-blown before he froze it. When that seemed right, he unloosed, or, to speak by a stronger word, he sprang, his known resources; he shipped our royal horses like cheetahs,² or hunting-leopards, after the affrighted game. How they could retain such a reserve of fiery power after the work they had accomplished seemed hard to explain. But on our side, besides the physical superiority, was a tower of moral strength, namely, the king's name, "which they upon the adverse faction wanted."³ Passing them without an effort, as it seemed, we threw them into the rear with so lengthening an interval between us as proved in itself the bitterest mockery of their presumption, whilst our guard blew back a shattering blast of triumph that was really too painfully full of derision.

I mention this little incident for its connection with what followed. A Welsh rustic, sitting behind me, asked if I had not felt my heart burn within me⁴ during the progress of the race? I said, with philosophic calmness, No; because we were not racing with a mail, so that no glory could be gained. In fact, it was sufficiently mortifying that such a Birmingham thing should dare to challenge us. The Welshman replied that he didn't see that; for that a cat might look at a king, and a Brummagem coach might lawfully race the Holyhead mail. "Race us, if you like." I replied, "though even that has an air of sedition, but not beat us. This would have been treason; and for its own sake I am glad that the 'Tallyho' was disappointed." So dissatisfied did the Welshman seem with this opinion that at last I was obliged to tell him a very fine story from one of our elder dramatists.⁵ viz., that once,

¹ revolutionary (The Jacobins were an extremely radical club during the French Revolution, so called from its being established at a former convent of the Jacobin friars in Paris.)

² That is, he let them run free of their reins, as cheetahs are freed from the leash to hunt game.

³ Richard III., v. 3, 12 13.

⁴ See Luke, 24-32.

⁵ Thomas Heywood (d. 1650?) in The Royal King and Loyal Subject.

Marengo, in 1800. In spite of the fact that Desaix was instantly killed, Napoleon published three versions of a message from Desaix to himself, the original version being, "Go tell the First Consul that I die with this regret,—that I have not done enough for posterity." See Ashton's English Caricature and Satire on Napoleon I (1884), 1, 130-32, also Lanfrey's The History of Napoleon the First (London, 1886), 2, 39.

In a naval battle in 1794, the British fleet captured six French ships and sunk a seventh, the Vengeur. It was falsely reported that the Vengeur went down with her crew shouting Vive la République, whereas they were imploring aid, which there was not time to give them. See Carlyle's On the Sinking of the Vengeur and The French Revolution, 5, 6.

The phrase "The guard dies, and does not surrender," incorrectly said to have been spoken by Cambronne at Waterloo when he was asked to surrender, is thought to have been invented by Rougemont, a prolific author of pithy sayings. See Bartlett's Familiar Quotations, 681.

¹ with greater force. ² See Richard III., i. 4, 55.

³ A vulgar form of Birmingham. The city was a noted manufactory of gilt toys, cheap jewelry, etc. See p. 1110a, 29-31.

in some far Oriental kingdom, when the sultan of all the land, with his princes, ladies, and chief onirahs,¹ were flying their falcons, a hawk suddenly flew at a majestic eagle, and, in defiance of the eagle's natural advantage, in contempt also of the eagle's traditional royalty, and before the whole assembled field of astonished spectators from Agra and Lahore, killed the eagle on the spot. Amazement seized the sultan at the unequal contest, and burning admiration for its unparalleled result. He commanded that the hawk should be brought before him; he caressed the bird with enthusiasm; and he ordered that, for the commemoration of his matchless courage, a diadem of gold and rubies should be solemnly placed on the hawk's head, but then that, immediately after this solemn coronation, the bird should be led off to execution, as the most valiant indeed of traitors, but not the less a traitor, as having dared to rise rebelliously against his liege lord and anointed sovereign, the eagle. "Now," said I to the Welshman, "to you and me, as men of refined sensibilities, how painful it would have been that this poor Brummagem brute, the 'Tallyho,' in the impossible case of a victory over us, should have been crowned with Birmingham tinsel, with paste diamonds and Roman pearls, and then led off to instant execution." The Welshman doubted if that could be warranted by law. And, when I hinted at the 6th of Edward Longshanks,² chap. 18, for regulating the precedence of coaches, as being probably the statute relied on for the capital punishment of such offences, he replied drily that, if the attempt to pass a mail really were treasonable, it was a pity that the "Tallyho" appeared to have so imperfect an acquaintance with law.

The modern modes of travelling cannot compare with the old mail-coach system in grandeur and power. They boast of more velocity,—not, however, as a consciousness, but as a fact of our lifeless knowledge, resting upon alien evidence: as, for instance, because somebody says that we have gone fifty miles in the hour, though we are far from feeling it as a personal experience; or upon the evidence of a result, as that actually we find ourselves in York four hours after leaving London. Apart from such an assertion, or such a result, I myself am little aware of the pace. But seated on the old mail-coach, we needed no evidence out of ourselves to indicate the velocity. On this system the word was not magna loquimur, as upon railways, but vivimus.¹ Yes "magna vivimus"; but we do not make verbal ostentation of our grandeurs, we realize our grandeurs in act, and in the very experience of life. The vital experience of the glad animal sensibilities made doubts impossible on the question of our speed, we heard our speed, we saw it, we felt it as a thrilling, and this speed was not the product of blind insensate agencies, that had no sympathy to give, but was incarnated in the fiery eyeballs of the noblest amongst brutes, in his dilated nostril, spasmodic muscles, and thunder-beating hoofs. The sensibility of the horse, uttering itself in the maniac light of his eye, might be the last vibration of such a movement; the glory of Salamanca might be the first. But the intervening links that connected them, that spread the earthquake of battle into the eyeballs of the horse, were the heart of man and its electric thrillings—kindling in the rapture of the fiery strife, and then propagating its own tumults by contagious shouts and gestures to the heart of his servant the horse. But now, on the new system of travelling,² iron tubes and boilers have disconnected man's heart from the ministers of his locomotion. Nile nor Trafalgar has power to raise an extra bubble in a steam-kettle. The galvanic cycle is broken up forever; man's imperial nature no longer sends itself forward through the electric sensibility of the horse; the inter-agencies are gone in the mode of communication between the horse and his master out of which grew so many aspects of sublimity under accidents of mists that hid, or sudden blazes that revealed, of mobs that agitated, or midnight solitudes that awed. Tidings fitted to convulse all nations must henceforwards travel by culinary process; and the trumpet that once announced from afar the laurelled mail, heart-shaking when heard screaming on the wind and proclaiming itself through the darkness to every village or solitary house on its route, has now given way forever to the pot-walloppings³ of the boiler. Thus have perished multifarious openings for public expressions of interest, scenical yet natural, in great national tidings,—for revelations of faces and groups that could not offer themselves amongst the fluctuating mobs of a railway station. The gatherings of gazers about a laurelled mail had one centre, and acknowledged one sole interest. But the crowds attending at a railway station have as little unity as running water, and own as many centres as there are separate carriages in the train.

¹ noblemen (See Wordsworth's The Prelude, 10, 18-20)

² Edward I. Laws passed in each Parliament are divided into chapters. During the 6th year of Edward's reign (1278), only 12 laws were passed. De Quincey's jest seems lost on the Welshman.

¹ not, we speak great things, but, we live them

² The first railway in England was completed between Manchester and Liverpool in 1825.

³ pot-boiling

How else, for example, than as a constant watcher for the dawn, and for the London mail that in summer months entered about daybreak amongst the lawny thickets of Marlborough forest, couldst thou, sweet Fanny of the Bath road, have become the glorified inmate of my dreams? Yet Fanny, as the loveliest young woman for face and person that perhaps in my whole life I have beheld, merited the station which even now, from a distance of forty years, she holds in my dreams; yes, though by links of natural association she brings along with her a troop of dreadful creatures, fabulous and not fabulous, that are more abominable to the heart than Faunus and the dawn are delightful.

Miss Fanny of the Bath road, strictly speaking, lived at a mile's distance from that road, but came so continually to meet the mail that I on my frequent transits rarely missed her, and naturally connected her image with the great thoroughfare where only I had ever seen her. Why she came so punctually I do not exactly know, but I believe with some burden of commissions, to be executed in Bath, which had gathered to her own residence as a central rendezvous for converging them. The mail-coachman who drove the Bath mail and wore the royal livery¹ happened to be Fanny's grandfather. A good man he was, that loved his beautiful granddaughter, and, loving her wisely, was vigilant over her deportment in any case where young Oxford might happen to be concerned. Did my vanity then suggest that I myself, individually, could fall within the line of his terrors? Certainly not, as regarded any physical pretensions that I could plead; for Fanny (as a chance passenger from her own neighborhood once told me) counted in her train a hundred and ninety-nine professed admirers, if not open aspirants to her favor; and probably not one of the whole brigade but excelled myself in personal advantages. Ulysses even, with the unfair advantage of his accursed bow,² could hardly have undertaken that amount of suitors. So the danger might have seemed slight—only that woman is universally aristocratic, it is amongst her nobilities of heart that she is so. Now, the aristocratic distinctions in my favor might easily with Miss Fanny have compensated my physical deficiencies. Did I then make love to Fanny? Why, yes, about as much love as one could make whilst the mail was changing horses—a process which, ten years later, did not occupy above eighty seconds; but then,—vis., about Waterloo³—it occupied five times eighty. Now, four hundred seconds offer a field quite ample enough for whispering into a young woman's ear a great deal of truth, and (by way of parenthesis) some trifle of falsehood. Grandpapa did right, therefore, to watch me. And yet, as happens too often to the grandpapas of earth in a contest with the admirers of granddaughters, how vainly would he have watched me had I meditated any evil whispers to Fanny! She, it is my belief, would have protected herself against any man's evil suggestions. But he, as the result showed, could not have intercepted the opportunities for such suggestions. Yet, why not? Was he not active? Was he not blooming? Blooming he was as Fanny herself.

Say, all our praises why should lords——

Stop, that's not the line.

Say, all our roses why should girls engross?

The coachman showed rosy blossoms on his face deeper even than his granddaughter's—his being drawn from the ale-cask, Fanny's from the fountains of the dawn. But, in spite of his blooming face, some infirmities he had; and one particularly in which he too much resembled a crocodile. This lay in a monstrous inaptitude for turning round. The crocodile, I presume, owes that inaptitude to the absurd length of his back; but in our grandpapa it arose rather from the absurd breadth of his back, combined, possibly, with some growing stiffness in his legs. Now, upon this crocodile infirmity of

¹ "Wore the royal livery"—The general impression was that the royal livery belonged of right to the mail-coachmen as their professional dress. But that was an error. To the guard it did belong, I believe, and was obviously essential as an official warrant, and as a means of instant identification for his person, in the discharge of his important public duties. But the coachman, and especially if his place in the series did not connect him immediately with London and the General Post-Office, obtained the scarlet coat only as an honorary distinction after long (or, if not long, trying and special) service.—De Quincey.

² An allusion to the slaughter of the suitors of Penelope, the wife of Ulysses, upon the latter's return to Ithaca from his wanderings after the fall of Troy. Homer, Odyssey, 21, 22.

³ That is, about 1815.

⁴ Pope, Moral Essays, 3, 249.

his I planted a human advantage for tendering my homage to Miss Fanny. In defiance of all his honorable vigilance, no sooner had he presented to us his mighty Jovian back (what a field for displaying to mankind his royal scarlet!), whilst inspecting professionally the buckles, the straps, and the silvery turrets¹ of his harness, that I raised Miss Fanny's hand to my lips, and, by the mixed tenderness and respectfulness of my manner, caused her easily to understand how happy it would make me to rank upon her list as No. 10 or 12: in which case a few casualties amongst her lovers (and, observe, they hanged liberally in those days) might have promoted me speedily to the top of the tree; as, on the other hand, with how much loyalty of submission I acquiesced by anticipation in her award, supposing that she should plant me in the very rearward of her favor, as No. 199+1. Most truly I loved this beautiful and ingenuous girl, and, had it not been for the Bath mail, timing all courtships by post-office allowance, heaven only knows what might have come of it. People talk of being over head and ears in love; now, the mail was the cause that I sank only over ears in love,—which, you know, still left a trifle of brain to overlook the whole conduct of the affair.

Ah, reader! when I look back upon those days, it seems to me that all things change—all things perish. "Perish the roses and the palms of kings": perish even the crowns and trophies of Waterloo: thunder and lightning are not the thunder and lightning which I remember. Roses are degenerating. The Fannies of our island—though thus I say with reluctance—are not visibly improving; and the Bath road is notoriously superannuated. Crocodiles, you will say, are stationary. Mr. Waterton tells me that the crocodile does not change,—that a cayman,² in fact, or an alligator, is just as good for riding upon as he was in the time of the Pharaohs. That may be; but the reason is that the crocodile does not live fast—he is a slow coach. I believe it is generally understood among naturalists that the crocodile is a blockhead. It is my own impression that the Pharaohs were also blockheads. Now, as the Pharaohs and the crocodile domineered over Egyptian society,³ this accounts for a singular mistake that prevailed through innumerable generations on the Nile. The crocodile made the ridiculous blunder of supposing man to be meant chiefly for his own eating. Man, taking a different view of the subject, naturally met that mistake by another: he viewed the crocodile as a thing sometimes to worship, but always to run away from. And this continued till Mr. Waterton⁴ changed the relations between the animals. The mode of escaping from the reptile he showed to be not by running away, but by leaping on its back booted and spurred. The two animals had misunderstood each other. The use of the crocodile has now been cleared up—viz., to be ridden; and the final cause of man⁵ is that he may improve the health of the crocodile by riding him a-fox-hunting before breakfast. And it is pretty certain that any crocodile who has been regularly hunted through the season, and is master of the weight he carries, will take a six-barred gate now as well as ever he would have done in the infancy of the pyramids.

If, therefore, the crocodile does not change, all things else undeniably do: even the shadow of the pyramids grows less.⁶ And often the restoration in vision of Fanny and the Bath road makes me too pathetically sensible of that truth. Out of the darkness, if I happen to call back the image of Fanny, up rises suddenly from a gulf of forty years a rose in June; or, if I think for an instant of the rose in June, up rises the heavenly face of Fanny. One after the other, like the antiphonies⁷ in the choral service, rise

¹ The crocodile was a sacred animal among ancient Egyptians.

² "Mr. Waterton"—Had the reader lived through the last generation, he would not need to be told that, some thirty or thirty-five years back, Mr. Waterton, a distinguished country gentleman of ancient family in Northumberland, publicly mounted and rode in top-boots a savage old crocodile, that was restive and very impertinent, but all to no purpose. The crocodile flibbed and tried to kick, but vainly. He was no more able to throw the squire than Minbad was to throw the old scoundrel who used his back without paying for it, until he discovered a mode (slightly immoral, perhaps, though some think not) of murdering the old fraudulent jockey, and so circuitously of unhorsing him"—De Quincey.

³ The purpose for which man exists

⁴ The walls and temples of Cairo were built of the exterior blocks of the Great Pyramid of Cheops.

⁵ Alternate singings of a choir

¹ "Turrets"—As one who loves and venerates Chaucer for his unrivalled merits of tenderness, of picturesque characterisation, and of narrative skill, I noticed with great pleasure that the word turrets is used by him to designate the little devices through which the reins are made to pass. This same word, in the same exact sense, I heard uniformly used by many scores of illustrious mail-coachmen to whose confidential friendship I had the honor of being admitted in my younger days"—De Quincey.

Chaucer uses the word torets in The Knights Tale, 1294, where it means the ring on a dog's collar

² Wordsworth, The Reversion, 7, 989.

³ The South American alligator

Fanny and the rose in June, then back again the rose in June and Fanny. Then come both together, as in a chorus—roses and Fannies, Fannies and roses, without end, thick as blossoms in paradise. Then comes a venerable crocodile, in a royal livery of scarlet and gold, with sixteen capes; and the crocodile is driving four-in-hand from the box of the Bath mail. And suddenly we upon the mail are pulled up by a mighty dial, sculptured with the hours, that mingle with the heavens and the heavenly host. Then all at once we are arrived at Marlborough forest, amongst the lovely households¹ of the roe-deer; the deer and their fawns retire into the dewy thickets; the thickets are rich with roses; once again the roses call up the sweet countenance of Fanny; and she, being the granddaughter of a crocodile, awakens a dreadful host of semi-legendary animals—griffins, dragons, basilisks, sphinxes²—till at length the whole vision of fighting images crowds into one towering armorial shield, a vast emblazonry of human charities and human loveliness that have perished, but quartered heraldically with unutterable and demonic natures, whilst over all rises, as a surmounting crest, one fair female hand, with the forefinger pointing, in sweet, sorrowful admonition, upwards to heaven, where is sculptured the eternal writings³ which proclaim the frailty of earth and her children.

GOING DOWN WITH VICTORY

But the grandest chapter of our experience within the whole mail-coach service was on those occasions when we went down from London with the news of victory. A period of about ten years stretched from Trafalgar to Waterloo; the second and third years of which period (1806 and 1807) were comparatively sterile; but the other nine (from 1805 to 1815 inclusively) furnished a long succession of victories, the least of which, in such a contest of Titans, had an inappreciable⁴ value of position: partly for its absolute interference with the plans of our enemy, but still more from its keeping alive through central Europe the sense of a deep-seated vulnerability in France. Even to tease the coasts of our enemy, to mortify them by continual blockades, to insult them by capturing if it were but a baubling⁵ schooner under the eyes of their arrogant armies, repeated from time to time a sullen proclamation of power lodged in one quarter to which the hopes of Christendom turned in secret. How much more loudly must this proclamation have spoken in the audacity⁶ of having bearded the élite of their troops, and having beaten them in pitched battles.⁷ Five years of life it was worth paying down for the privilege of an outside place on a mail-coach, when carrying down the first tidings of any such event. And it is to be noted that, from our insular situation, and the multitude of our frigates disposable for the rapid transmission of intelligence, rarely did any unauthorized rumor steal away a prelibation⁸ from the first aroma of the regular despatches. The government news was generally the earliest news.

From eight P.M. to fifteen or twenty minutes later imagine the mails assembled on parade in Lombard Street; where, at that time,⁹ and not in St. Martin's-le-Grand, was seated the General Post-Office. In what exact strength we mustered I do not remember; but, from the length of each separate attelage,¹⁰ we filled the street, though a long one, and though we were drawn up in double file. On any night the spectacle was beauti-

⁴ too great to be estimated

⁵ trifling

⁶ "Audacity"—Such the French accounted it; and it has struck me that Soult would not have been so popular in London, at the period of her present Majesty's coronation, or in Manchester, on occasion of his visit to that town, if they had been aware of the insolence with which he spoke of us in notes written at intervals from the field of Waterloo. As though it had been mere felony in our army to look a French one in the face he said in more notes than one, dated from two to four P.M. on the field of Waterloo, "Here are the English!—we have them. They are caught en flagrant délit." Yet no man should have known us better; no man had drunk deeper from the cup of humiliation than Soult had in 1800, when ejected by us with headlong violence from Oporto, and pursued through a long line of wrecks to the frontier of Spain; and subsequently at Albuera, in the bloodiest of recorded battles, to say nothing of Tou-louse, he should have learned our pretensions."—De Quincey.

⁷ foretaste

⁸ "At that time"—I speak of the era previous to Waterloo.—De Quincey

⁹ team and coach

¹ "Households"—Roe-deer do not congregate in herds like the fallow or the red deer, but by separate families, parents and children, which feature of approximation to the sanctity of human hearths, added to their comparatively miniature and graceful proportions, conciliates to them an interest of peculiar tenderness, supposing even that this beautiful creature is less characteristically impressed with the grandeur of savage and forest life."—De Quincey.

² Mythical monsters. A griffin has the head and wings of an eagle, and the body of a lion. A dragon is a fire-breathing serpent with wings. A basilisk is a serpent said to be hatched from a cock's egg; it is called a cockatrice, and is fabled to kill with a look. The sphinx was a legendary animal of ancient Egypt, half lion and half man.

³ See Reveries, 1 2

ful. The absolute perfection of all the appointments about the carriages and the harness, their strength, their brilliant cleanliness, their beautiful simplicity—but, more than all, the royal magnificence of the horses—were what might first have fixed the attention. Every carriage on every morning in the year was taken down to an official inspector for examination: wheels, axles, linchpins, pole, glasses, lamps, were all critically probed and tested. Every part of every carriage had been cleaned, every horse had been groomed, with as much rigor as if they belonged to a private gentleman; and that part of the spectacle offered itself always. But the night before us is a night of victory, and, behold! to the ordinary display what a heart-shaking addition!—horses, men, carriages, all are dressed in laurels and flowers, oak-leaves¹ and ribbons. The guards, as being officially his Majesty's servants, and of the coachmen such as are within the privilege of the post-office, wear the royal liveries of course; and, as it is summer (for all the land victories were naturally won in summer), they wear, on this fine evening, these liveries exposed to view, without any covering of upper coats. Such a costume, and the elaborate arrangement of the laurels in their hats, dilate their hearts, by giving to them openly a personal connection with the great news in which already they have the general interest of patriotism. That great national sentiment surmounts and quells all sense of ordinary distinctions. Those passengers who happen to be gentlemen are now hardly to be distinguished as such except by dress; for the usual reserve of their manner in speaking to the attendants has on this night melted away. One heart, one pride, one glory, connects every man by the transcendent bond of his national blood. The spectators, who are numerous beyond precedent, express their sympathy with these fervent feelings by continual hurrahs. Every moment are shouted aloud by the post-office servants, and summoned to draw up, the great ancestral names of cities known to history through a thousand years—Lincoln, Winchester, Portsmouth, Gloucester, Oxford, Bristol, Manchester, York, Newcastle, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Perth, Stirling, Aberdeen—expressing the grandeur of the empire by the antiquity of its towns, and the grandeur of the mail establishment by the diffusive radiation of its separate missions. Every moment you hear the thunder of lids locked down upon the mail-bags. That sound to each individual mail is the signal for drawing off, which process is the finest part of the entire spectacle. Then come the horses into play. Horses! can these be horses that bound off with the action and gestures of leopards? What stu!—what sea-like ferment!—what a thundering of wheels!—what a tramping of hoofs!—what a sounding of trumpets!—what farewell cheers—what redoubling peals of brotherly congratulation, connecting the name of the particular mail—"Liverpool forever!"—with the name of the particular victory—"Badajoz forever!" or "Salamanca forever!" The half-slumbering consciousness that all night long, and all the next day—perhaps for even a longer period—many of these mails, like fire racing along a train of gunpowder, will be kindling at every instant new successions of burning joy, has an obscure effect of multiplying the victory itself, by multiplying to the imagination into infinity the stages of its progressive diffusion. A fiery arrow seems to be let loose, which from that moment is destined to travel, without intermission, westwards for three hundred miles!

¹ "Three hundred"—Of necessity, this scale of measurement, to an American, if he happens to be a thoughtless man, must sound ludicrous. Accordingly, I remember a case in which an American writer indulges himself in the luxury of a little fibbing, by ascribing to an Englishman a pompous account of the Thames, constructed entirely upon American ideas of grandeur, and concluding in something like these terms—"And sir, arriving at London, this mighty father of rivers attains a breadth of at least two furlongs, having, in its winding course, traversed the astonishing distance of one hundred and seventy miles. And this the rancid American thinks it fair to contrast with the scale of the Mississippi. Now, it is hardly worth while to answer a pure fiction gravely; else one might say that no Englishman out of Bedlam ever thought of looking in an island for the rivers of a continent, nor, consequently, could have thought of looking for the peculiar grandeur of the Thames in the length of its course, or in the extent of soil which it drains. Yet, if he had been so absurd, the American might have recollected that a river, not to be compared with the Thames even as to volume of water—viz., the Tiber—has contrived to make itself heard of in this world for twenty-five centuries to an extent not reached as yet by any river, however corpulent, of his own land. The glory of the Thames is measured by the destiny of the population to which it ministers, by the commerce which it supports, by the grandeur of the empire in which, though far from the largest, it is the most influential stream. Upon some such scale, and not by a transfer of Columbian standards, is the course of our English mails to be valued. The American may fancy the effect of his own valuations to our English ears by supposing the case of a Siberian glorifying his country in these terms—"These wretches, sir, in France and England, cannot march half a mile in any ¹ The British oak always has been venerated in England, and its leaves frequently are used for garlands. The laurel is an emblem of victory.

—northwards for six hundred, and the sympathy of our Lombard Street friends at parting is exalted a hundredfold by a sort of visionary sympathy with the yet slumbering sympathies which in so vast a succession we are going to awake

Liberated from the embarrassments of the city, and issuing into the broad uncrowded avenues of the northern suburbs, we soon begin to enter upon our natural pace of ten miles an hour. In the broad light of the summer evening, the sun, perhaps, only just at the point of setting, we are seen from every story of every house. Heads of every age crowd to the windows; young and old understand the language of our victorious symbols; and rolling volleys of sympathizing cheers run along us, behind us, and before us. The beggar, rearing himself against the wall, forgets his lameness—real or assumed—thinks not of his whining trade, but stands erect, with bold exulting smiles, as we pass him. The victory has healed him, and says, Be thou whole!¹ Women and children, from garrets alike and cellars, through infinite London, look down or look up with loving eyes upon our gay ribbons and our martial laurels; sometimes kiss their hands; sometimes hang out, as signals of affection, pocket-handkerchiefs, aprons, dusters, anything that, by catching the summer breezes, will express an aerial jubilation. On the London side of Barnet, to which we draw near within a few minutes after nine, observe that private carriage which is approaching us. The weather being so warm, the glasses are all down; and one may read, as on the stage of a theatre, everything that goes on within. It contains three ladies—one likely to be “mamma,” and two of seventeen or eighteen, who are probably her daughters. What lovely animation, what beautiful unpremeditated pantomime, explaining to us every syllable that passes, in these ingenuous girls! By the sudden start and raising of the hands on first discovering our lancelled equipage, by the sudden movement and appeal to the elder lady from both of them, and by the heightened color on their animated countenances, we can almost hear them saying, “See, see! Look at their laurels! Oh, mamma! there has been a great battle in Spain; and it has been a direction without finding a house where food can be had and lodging; whereas such is the noble desolation of our magnificent country that in many a direction for a thousand miles I will engage that a dog shall not find shelter from a snow-storm, nor a wren find an apology for breakfast.”—De Quincey.

¹ See Luke, 8:48

great victory.” In a moment we are on the point of passing them. We passengers—I on the box, and the two on the roof behind me—raise our hats to the ladies; the coachman makes his professional salute with the whip; the guard even, though punctilious on the matter of his dignity as an officer under the crown, touches his hat. The ladies move to us, in return, with a winning graciousness of gesture; all smile on each side in a way that nobody could misunderstand, and that nothing short of a grand national sympathy could so instantaneously prompt. Will these ladies say that we are nothing to them? Oh no; they will not say that. They cannot deny—they do not deny—that for this night they are our sisters; gentle or simple, scholar or illiterate servant, for twelve hours to come, we on the outside have the honor to be their brothers. Those poor women, again, who stop to gaze upon us with delight at the entrance of Barnet, and seem, by their air of weariness, to be returning from labor—do you mean to say that they are washerwomen and charwomen? Oh, my poor friend, you are quite mistaken. I assure you they stand in a far higher rank, for this one night they feel themselves by birth-right to be daughters of England, and answer to no humbler title.

Every joy, however, even rapturous joy—such is the sad law of earth—may carry with it grief, or fear of grief, to some. Three miles beyond Barnet, we see approaching us another private carriage, nearly repeating the circumstances of the former case. Here, also, the glasses are all down; here, also, is an elderly lady seated, but the two daughters are missing; for the single young person sitting by the lady’s side seems to be an attendant—so I judge from her dress, and her air of respectful reserve. The lady is in mourning; and her countenance expresses sorrow. At first she does not look up, so that I believe she is not aware of our approach, until she hears the measured beating of our horses’ hoofs. Then she raises her eyes to settle them painfully on our triumphal equipage. Our decorations explain the case to her at once, but she beholds them with apparent anxiety, or even with terror. Some time before this, I, finding it difficult to hit a flying mark when embarrassed by the coachman’s person and reins intervening, had given to the guard a Courier evening paper, containing the gazette,² for the next carriage that might pass. Accordingly he tossed it in, so folded that the huge capitals expressing some such legend as GLOIOUS VICTORY might catch the eye at once. To see the paper, however, at all, interpreted as it was by our ensigns of triumph, explained everything; and, if the guard were right in thinking the lady to have received it with a gesture of horror, it could not be doubtful that she had suffered some deep personal affliction in connection with this Spanish war.

² women who do odd jobs of household work

² official lists of appointments, promotions, names of bankrupts, and other public notices

Here, now, was the case of one who, having formerly suffered, might, erroneously perhaps, be distressing herself with anticipations of another similar suffering. That same night, and hardly three hours later, occurred the reverse case. A poor woman, who too probably would find herself, in a day or two, to have suffered the heaviest of afflictions by the battle, blindly allowed herself to express an exultation so unmeasured in the news and its details as gave to her the appearance which amongst Celtic Highlanders is called fey.¹ This was at some little town where we changed horses an hour or two after midnight. Some fair or wake had kept the people up out of their beds, and had occasioned a partial illumination of the stalls and booths, presenting an unusual but very impressive effect. We saw many lights moving about as we drew near; and perhaps the most striking scene on the whole route was our reception at this place. The flashing of torches and the beautiful radiance of blue lights (technically, Bengal lights) upon the heads of our horses; the fine effect of such a showery and ghostly illumination falling upon our flowers and glittering laurels,² whilst all around ourselves, that formed a centre of light, the darkness gathered off the rear and flanks in massy blackness: these optical splendors, together with the prodigious enthusiasm of the people, composed a picture at once scenical and affecting, theatrical and holy. As we stayed for three or four minutes, I alighted; and immediately from a dismantled stall in the street, where no doubt she had been presiding through the earlier part of the night, advanced eagerly a middle-aged woman. The sight of my newspaper it was that had drawn her attention upon myself. The victory which we were carrying down to the provinces on this occasion was the unperfect one of Talavera—imperfect for its results, such was the virtual treachery of the Spanish general, Cuesta, but not imperfect in its ever-memorable heroism. I told her the main outline of the battle. The agitation of her enthusiasm had been so conspicuous when listening, and when first applying for information, that I could not but ask her if she had not some relative in the Peninsular army. Oh yes, her only son was there. In what regiment. He was a trooper in the 23d Dragoons. My heart sank within me as she made that answer. This sublime regiment, which an Englishman should never mention without raising his hat to their memory, had made the most memorable and effective charge recorded in military annals. They leaped their horses—over a trench where they could, into it, and with the result of death or mutilation, when they could not. What proportion cleared the trench is nowhere stated. Those who did closed up and went down upon the enemy with such divinity of fervor (I use the word divinity by design: the inspiration of God must have prompted this movement for those even then He was calling to His presence) that two results followed. As regarded the enemy, this 23d Dragoons, not, I believe, originally three hundred and fifty strong, paralyzed a French column six thousand strong, then ascended the hill, and fixed the gaze of the whole French army. As regarded themselves, the 23d were supposed at first to have been barely not annihilated; but eventually, I believe, about one in four survived. And thus, then, was the regiment—a regiment already for some hours glorified and hallowed to the ear of all London, as lying stretched, by a large majority, upon one bloody aceldama³—in which the young trooper served whose mother was now talking in a spirit of such joyous enthusiasm. Did I tell her the truth? Had I the heart to break up her dreams? No. Tomorrow, said I to myself—tomorrow, or the next day, will publish the worst. For one night more wherefore should she not sleep in peace? After tomorrow the chances are too many that peace will forsake her pillow. This brief respite, then, let her owe to my gift and my forbearance. But, if I told her not of the bloody price that had been paid, not therefore was I silent on the contributions from her son's regiment to that day's service and glory. I showed her

¹ fated to suffer death or some other calamity

² "Glittering laurels" —I must observe that the color of green suffers almost a spiritual change and exaltation under the effect of Bengal lights.—De Quincey.

³ field of blood (A name given to the field that was bought with the money received by Judas for betraying Christ. See Acts, 1 18-19) not the funeral banners under which the noble regiment was sleeping. I lifted not the overshadowing laurels from the bloody trench in which horse and rider lay mangled together. But I told her how these dear children of England, officers and privates, had leaped then horses over all obstacles as gaily as hunters to the morning's chase. I told her how they rode their horses into the midst of death,—saying to myself, but not saying to her, “and laid down their young lives for thee, O mother England! as willingly—poured out their noble blood as cheerfully—as ever, after a long day's sport, when infants, they had rested their weary heads upon their mother's knees, or had sunk to sleep in her arms.” Strange it is, yet true, that she seemed to have no fears for her son's safety, even after this knowledge that the 23d Dragoons had been memorably engaged, but so much was she enraptured by the knowledge that his regiment, and therefore that he, had rendered conspicuous service in the dreadful conflict—a service which had actually made them, within the last twelve hours, the foremost topic of conversation in London—so absolutely was fear swallowed up in joy—that, in the mere simplicity of her fervent nature, the poor woman threw her arms around my neck, as she thought of her son, and gave to me the kiss which secretly was meant for him.

SECTION II—THE VISION OF SUDDEN DEATH

What is to be taken as the predominant opinion of man, reflective and philosophic, upon SUDDEN DEATH? It is remarkable that, in different conditions of society, sudden death has been variously regarded as the consummation of an earthly career most fervently to be desired, or, again, as that consummation which is with most horror to be deprecated. Cæsar the Dictator, at his last dinner-party (cæna), on the very evening before his assassination, when the minutes of his earthly career were numbered, being asked what death, in his judgment, might be pronounced the most eligible, replied “That which should be most sudden.” On the other hand, the divine Litany of our English Church, when breathing forth supplications, as if in some representative character, for the whole human race prostrate before God, places such a death in the very van of horrors: “From lightning and tempest; from plague, pestilence, and famine; from battle and murder, and from SUDDEN DEATH—Good Lord, deliver us.” Sudden death is here made to crown the climax in a grand ascent of calamities; it is ranked among the last of curses; and yet by the noblest of Romans it was ranked as the first of blessings. In that difference most readers will see little more than the essential difference between Christianity and Paganism. But this, on consideration, I doubt. The Christian Church may be right in its estimate of sudden death, and it is a natural feeling, though after all it may also be an infirm one, to wish for a quiet dismissal from life, as that which seems most reconcilable with meditation, with penitential retrospects, and with the humilities of farewell prayer. There does not, however, occur to me any direct scriptural warrant for this earnest petition of the English Litany, unless under a special construction of the word sudden. It seems a petition indulged rather and conceded to human infirmity than exacted from human piety. It is not so much a doctrine built upon the eternities of the Christian system as a plausible opinion built upon special varieties of physical temperament. Let that, however, be as it may, two remarks suggest themselves as prudent restraints upon a doctrine which else may wander, and has wandered, into an uncharitable superstition. The first is this: that many people are likely to exaggerate the horror of a sudden death from the disposition to lay a false stress upon words or acts simply because by an accident they have become final words or acts. If a man dies, for instance, by some sudden death when he happens to be intoxicated, such a death is falsely regarded with peculiar horror, as though the intoxication were suddenly exalted into a blasphemy. But that is unphilosophic. The man was or he was not, habitually a drunkard. If not, if his intoxication were a solitary accident, there can be no reason for allowing special emphasis to this act simply because through misfortune it became his final act. Nor, on the other hand, if it were no accident, but one of his habitual transgressions, will it be the more habitual or the more a transgression because some sudden calamity, surprising him, has caused this habitual transgression to be also a final one. Could the man have had any reason even dimly to foresee his own sudden death, there would have been a new feature in his act of intemperance—a feature of presumption and irreverence, as in one that, having known himself drawing near to the presence of God, should have suited his demeanor to an expectation so awful. But this is no part of the case supposed. And the only new element in the man's act is not any element of special immorality, but simply of special misfortune.

¹ This incident is related by Suetonius in his Life of Julius Cæsar, ch. 87, also by Plutarch and Appian.

The other remark has reference to the meaning of the word sudden. Very possibly Cæsar and the Christian Church do not differ in the way supposed,—that is, do not differ by any difference of doctrine as between Pagan and Christian views of the moral temper appropriate to death; but perhaps they are contemplating different cases. Both contemplate a violent death, a βιαίωτος—death that is βιαίος, or, in other words, death that is brought about, not by internal and spontaneous change, but by active force having its origin from without. In this meaning the two authorities agree. Thus far they are in harmony. But the difference is that the Roman by the word sudden means unlingering, whereas the Christian Litany by sudden death means a death without warning, consequently without any available summons to religious preparation. The poor mutineer who kneels down to gather into his heart the bullets from twelve firelocks of his pitying comrades dies by a most sudden death in Cæsar's sense; one shock, one mighty spasm, one (possibly not one) groan, and all is over. But, in the sense of the Litany, the mutineer's death is far from sudden—his offence originally, his imprisonment, his trial, the interval between his sentence and its execution, having all furnished him with separate warnings of his fate—having all summoned him to meet it with solemn preparation.

Here at once, in this sharp verbal distinction, we comprehend the faithful earnestness with which a holy Christian Church pleads on behalf of her poor departing children that God would vouchsafe to them the last great privilege and distinction possible on a death-bed—vis, the opportunity of untroubled preparation for facing this mighty trial. Sudden death, as a mere variety in the modes of dying where death in some shape is inevitable, proposes a question of choice which, equally in the Roman and the Christian sense, will be variously answered according to each man's variety of temperament. Meantime, one aspect of sudden death there is, one modification, upon which no doubt can arise, that of all martyrdoms it is the most agitating—vis, where it surprises a man under circumstances which offer (or which seem to offer some hurrying, flying, inappreciably minute chance of evading it. Sudden as the danger which it affords must be any effort by which such an evasion can be accomplished. Even that, even the sickening necessity for hurrying in extremity where all hurry seems destined to be vain,—even that anguish is liable to a hideous exasperation in one particular case: viz., where the appeal is made not exclusively to the instinct of self-preservation, but to the conscience, on behalf of some other life besides your own, accidentally thrown upon your protection. To fail, to collapse in a service merely your own, might seem comparatively venial; though, in fact, it is far from venial. But to fail in a case where Providence has suddenly thrown into your hands the final interests of another,—a fellow-creature shuddering between the gates of life and death this, to a man of apprehensive conscience, would mingle the misery of an atrocious criminality with the misery of a bloody calamity. You are called upon, by the case supposed, possibly to die, but to die at the very moment when, by any even partial failure or effeminate collapse of your energies, you will be self-denounced as a murderer. You had but the twinkling of an eye for your effort, and that effort might have been unavailing, but to have risen to the level of such an effort would have rescued you, though not from dying, yet from dying as a traitor to your final and farewell duty.

The situation here contemplated exposes a dreadful ulcer, lurking far down in the depths of human nature. It is not that men generally are summoned to face such awful trials. But potentially, and in shadowy outline, such a trial is moving subterraneously in perhaps all men's natures. Upon the secret mirror of our dreams such a trial is darkly projected, perhaps, to every one of us. That dream, so familiar to childhood, of meeting a lion, and, through languishing prostration in hope and the energies of hope, that constant sequel of lying down before the lion publishes the secret frailty of human nature—reveals its deep-seated falsehood to itself—records its abysmal treachery. Perhaps not one of us escapes that dream; perhaps, as by some sorrowful doom of man, that dream repeats for every one of us, through every generation, the original temptation in Eden. Every one of us, in this dream, has a bait offered to the infirm places of his own individual will, once again a snare is presented for tempting him into captivity to a luxury of ruin; once again, as in aboriginal Paradise, the man falls by his own choice; again, by infinite iteration, the ancient earth groans to Heaven, through her secret caves, over the weakness of her child. "Nature, from her seat, sighing through all her works," again "gives signs of woe that all is lost";¹ and again the counter-sigh is repeated to the sorrowing heavens for the endless rebellion against God. It is not without probability that in the world of dreams every one of us ratifies for himself the original transgression. In dreams, perhaps under some secret conflict of the midnight sleeper, lighted up to the consciousness at the time, but darkened to the memory as soon as all is finished, each several child of our mysterious race completes for himself the treason of the aboriginal fall.

The incident, so memorable in itself by its features of horror, and so scenical by its grouping for the eye, which furnished the text for this reverie upon Sudden Death occurred to myself in the dead of night, as a solitary spectator, when seated on the box of the Manchester and Glasgow mail, in the second or third summer after Waterloo.² I find it necessary to relate the circumstances, because they are such as could not have occurred unless under a singular combination of accidents. In those days, the oblique and lateral communications with many rural post-offices were so arranged, either through necessity or through defect of system, as to make it requisite for the main north-western mail (i.e., the down mail) on reaching Manchester to halt for a number of hours; how many, I do not remember; six or seven, I think; but the result was that, in the ordinary course, the mail recommenced its journey northwards about midnight. Wearied with the long detention at a gloomy hotel, I walked out about eleven o'clock at night for the sake of fresh air; meaning to fall in with the mail and resume my seat at the post-office. The night, however, being yet dark, as the moon had scarcely risen, and the streets being at that hour empty, so as to offer no opportunities for asking the road, I lost my way, and did not reach the post-office until it was considerably past midnight; but, to my great relief (as it was important for me to be in Westmoreland by the morning), I saw in the huge saucer eyes of the mail, blazing through the gloom, an evidence that my chance was not yet lost.

Past the time it was; but, by some rare accident, the mail was not even yet ready to start. I ascended to my seat on the box, where my cloak was still lying as it had lain at the Bridgewater Arms. I had left it there in imitation of a nautical discoverer, who leaves a bit of bunting on the shore of his discovery, by way of warning off the ground the whole human race, and notifying to the Christian and the heathen worlds, with his best compliments, that he has hoisted his pocket-handkerchief once and forever upon that virgin soil: thenceforward claiming the *jus dominus*¹ to the top of the atmosphere above it, and also the right of shoving shafts to the centre of the earth below it; so that all people found after this warning either aloft in upper chambers of the atmosphere, or groping in subterraneous shafts, or squatting audaciously on the surface of the soil, will be treated as trespassers—kicked, that is to say, or decapitated, as circumstances may suggest, by their very faithful servant, the owner of the said pocket-handkerchief. In the present case, it is probable that my cloak might not have been respected, and the *jus gentium*² might have been cruelly violated in my person—for, in the dark, people commit deeds of darkness, gas being a great ally of morality; but it so happened that on this night there was no other outside passenger; and thus the crime, which else was but too probable, missed fire for want of a criminal.

Having mounted the box, I took a small quantity of laudanum, having already travelled two hundred and fifty miles—viz., from a point seventy miles beyond London. In the taking of laudanum there is nothing extraordinary. But by accident it drew upon me the special attention of my assessor on the box, the coachman. And in that also there was nothing extraordinary. But by accident, and with great delight, it drew my own attention to the fact that this coachman was a monster in point of bulk, and that he had but one eye. In fact, he had been foretold by Virgil as

Monstrum horrendum, informe, ingens, cui lumen ademptum³

He answered to the conditions in every one of the items.—1, a monster he was; 2, dreadful; 3, shapeless, 4, huge; 5, who had lost an eye. But why should that delight me?

¹ law of ownership

² law of nations

³ Æneid, 3, 658. The reference is to Polyphemus, one of the Cyclopes, whose eye was put out by Ulysses.

¹ Paradise Lost, 9, 782 &4.

² That is, in 1817 or 1818.

Had he been one of the Calendars¹ in The Arabian Nights, and had paid down his eye as the price of his criminal curiosity, what right had I to exult in his misfortune? I did not exult; I delighted in no man's punishment, though it were even merited. But these personal distinctions (Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5) identified in an instant an old friend of mine whom I had known in the south for some years as the most masterly of mail-coachmen. He was the man in all Europe that could (if any could) have driven six-in-hand full gallop over *Al Sirat*²—that dreadful bridge of Mahomet, with no side battlements, and of extra room not enough for a razor's edge—leading right across the bottomless gulf. Under this eminent man, whom in Greek I cognominated Cyclops Diphrelates (Cyclops the Charioteer), I, and others known to me, studied the diphrelatic art. Excuse, reader, a word too elegant to be pedantic. As a pupil, though I paid extra fees, it is to be lamented that I did not stand high in his esteem. It showed his dogged honesty (though, observe, not his discernment) that he could not see my merits. Let us excuse his absurdity in this particular by remembering his want of an eye. Doubtless that made him blind to my merits. In the art of conversation, however, he admitted that I had the whip-hand of him. On the present occasion great joy was at our meeting. But what was Cyclops doing here? Had the medical men recommended northern air, or how? I collected, from such explanations as he volunteered, that he had an interest at stake in some suit-at-law now pending at Lancaster, so that probably he had got himself transferred to this station for the purpose of connecting with his professional pursuits an instant readiness for the calls of his law-suit.

Meantime, what are we stopping for? Surely we have now waited long enough. Oh, this procrastinating mail, and this procrastinating post-office! Can't they take a lesson upon that subject from me? Some people have called me procrastinating. Yet you are witness, reader, that I was here kept waiting for the post-office. Will the post-office lay its hand on its heart, in its moments of sobriety, and assert that ever it waited for me? What are they about? The guard tells me that there is a large extra accumulation of foreign mails this night, owing to irregularities caused by war, by wind, by weather, in the packet service, which as yet does not benefit at all by steam. For an extra hour, it seems, the post-office has been engaged in threshing out the pure wheaten correspondence of Glasgow, and winnowing it from the chaff of all baser intermediate towns. But at last all is finished. Sound your horn, guard! Manchester, good-bye! we've lost an hour by your criminal conduct at the post-office: which, however, though I do not mean to part with a serviceable ground of complaint, and one which really is such for the horses, to me secretly is an advantage, since it compels us to look sharply for this lost hour amongst the next eight or nine, and to recover it (if we can) at the rate of one mile extra per hour. Off we are at last, and at eleven miles an hour, and for the moment I detect no changes in the energy or in the skill of Cyclops.

From Manchester to Kendal, which virtually (though not in law) is the capital of Westmoreland, there were at this time seven stages of eleven miles each. The first five of these, counting from Manchester, terminate in Lancaster; which is therefore fifty-five miles north of Manchester, and the same distance exactly from Liverpool. The first three stages terminate in Preston (called, by way of distinction from other towns of that name, Proud Preston), at which place it is that the separate roads from Liverpool and from Manchester to the north become confluent¹. Within these first three stages lay the foundation, the progress, and termination of our night's adventure. During the first stage, I found out that Cyclops was mortal: he was liable to the shocking affection of sleep—a thing which previously I had never suspected. If a man indulges in the vicious habit of sleeping, all the skill in auguration² of Apollo himself, with the horses of Aurora to execute his notions, avails him nothing. "Oh, Cyclops!" I exclaimed, "thou art mortal. My friend, thou snoorest." Through the first eleven miles, however, this infirmity—which

¹ "Confluent"—Suppose a capital Y (the Pythagorean letter) Lancaster is at the foot of this letter, Liverpool at the top of the right branch; Manchester at the top of the left, Proud Preston at the centre, where the two branches unite. It is thirty-three miles along either of the two branches; it is twenty-two miles along the stem,—viz., from Preston in the middle to Lancaster at the root. There's a lesson in geography for the reader"—J. Quincy.

² The act of driving a chariot or a carriage.

¹ A calendar is a member of a mendicant order of friars in Turkey and Persia.

² The bridge which leads over Hades to Paradise. It is a sword's edge in width.

I grieve to say that he shared with the whole Pagan Pantheon¹—betrayed itself only by brief snatches. On waking up, he made an apology for himself which, instead of mending matters, laid open a gloomy vista of coming disasters. The summer assizes, he reminded me, were now going on at Lancaster: in consequence of which for three nights and three days he had not lain down on a bed. During the day he was waiting for his own summons as a witness on the trial in which he was interested, or else, lest he should be missing at the critical moment, was drinking with the other witnesses under the pastoral surveillance² of the attorneys. During the night, or that part of it which at sea would form the middle watch, he was driving. This explanation certainly accounted for his drowsiness, but in a way which made it much more alarming; since now, after several days' resistance to this infirmity, at length he was steadily giving way. Throughout the second stage he grew more and more drowsy. In the second mile of the third stage he surrendered himself finally and without a struggle to his perilous temptation. All his past resistance had but deepened the weight of this final oppression. Seven atmospheres of sleep rested upon him; and, to consummate the case, our worthy guard, after singing Love Amongst the Roses for perhaps thirty times, without invitation and without applause, had in revenge moodily resigned himself to slumber—not so deep, doubtless, as the coachman's, but deep enough for mischief. And thus at last, about ten miles from Preston, it came about that I found myself left in charge of his Majesty's London and Glasgow mail, then running at the least twelve miles an hour.

What made this negligence less criminal than else it must have been thought was the condition of the roads at night during the assizes. At that time, all the law business of populous Liverpool, and also of populous Manchester, with its vast cineture of populous rural districts, was called up by ancient usage to the tribunal of Lilliputian Lancaster. To break up this old traditional usage required, 1, a conflict with powerful established interests; 2, a large system of new arrangements, and 3, a new parliamentary statute. But as yet this change was merely in contemplation. As things were at present, twice in the year³ so vast a body of business rolled northwards from the southern quarter of the county that for a fortnight at least it occupied the severe exertions of two judges in its despatch. The consequence of this was that every horse available for such a service, along the whole line of road, was exhausted in carrying down the multitudes of people who were parties to the different suits. By sunset, therefore, it usually happened that, through utter exhaustion amongst men and horses, the road sank into profound silence. Except the exhaustion in the vast adjacent county of York from a contested election, no such silence succeeding to no such fiery uproar was ever witnessed in England.

On this occasion the usual silence and solitude prevailed along the road. Not a hoof nor a wheel was to be heard. And, to strengthen this false luxurious confidence in the noiseless roads, it happened also that the night was one of peculiar solemnity and peace. For my own part, though slightly alive to the possibilities of peril, I had so far yielded to the influence of the mighty calm as to sink into a profound reverie. The month was August; in the middle of which lay my own birthday—a festival to every thoughtful man suggesting solemn and often sigh-born⁴ thoughts. The county was my own native county⁵—upon which, in its southern section, more than upon any equal area known to man past or present, had descended the original curse of labor in its heaviest form, not mastering the bodies only of men, as of slaves, or criminals in mines, but working through the fiery will. Upon no equal space of earth was, or ever had been, the same energy of human power put forth daily. At this particular season also of the assizes, that dreadful hurricane of flight and pursuit, as it might have seemed to a stranger, which swept to and from Lancaster all day long, hunting the county up and down, and regularly subsiding back into silence about sunset, could not fail (when united with this permanent

¹ "Twice in the year"—There were at that time only two assizes even in the most populous counties—viz., the Lent Assizes and the Summer Assizes.—De Quincey.

² "Sigh-born"—I owe the suggestion of this word to an obscure remembrance of a beautiful phrase in Giraldus Cambrensis—viz., suspiciens cogitationes.—De Quincey.

³ Lancashire, celebrated for its coal mines, commerce, and manufactures. Poor soil and excessive taxes made living conditions in this county, especially in the vicinity of Manchester, in the southern district, almost unbearable. Manchester was the leading center of reform agitation concerning labor and trade conditions in the early nineteenth century.

¹ That is, all the gods put together. The Pantheon contained statues and images of the gods and was dedicated to them.

² That is, he was watched as carefully as a shepherd watches his sheep.

distinction of Lancashire as the very metropolis and citadel of labor) to point the thoughts pathetically upon that counter-vision of rest, of saintly repose from strife and sorrow, towards which, as to their secret haven, the profounder aspirations of man's heart are in solitude continually travelling. Obliquely upon our left we were nearing the sea; which also must, under the present circumstances, be repeating the general state of halcyon¹ repose. The sea, the atmosphere, the light, bore each an orchestral part in this universal lull. Moonlight and the first timid tremblings of the dawn were by this time blending; and the blendings were brought into a still more exquisite state of unity by a slight silvery mist, motionless and dreamy, that covered the woods and fields, but with a veil of equable transparency. Except the feet of our own horses,—which, running on a sandy margin of the road, made but little disturbance,—there was no sound abroad. In the clouds and on the earth prevailed the same majestic peace; and, in spite of all that the villain of a schoolmaster has done for the ruin of our sublimer thoughts, which are the thoughts of our infancy, we still believe in no such nonsense as a limited atmosphere. Whatever we may swear with our false feigning lips, in our faithful hearts we still believe, and must forever believe, in fields of air traversing the total gulf between earth and the central heavens. Still, in the confidence of children that tread without fear every chamber in their father's house, and to whom no door is closed, we, in that Sabbath vision² which sometimes is revealed for an hour upon nights like this, ascend with easy steps from the sorrow-stricken fields of earth upwards to the sandals of God.

Suddenly, from thoughts like these I was awakened to a sullen sound, as of some motion on the distant road. It stole upon the air for a moment; I listened in awe; but then it died away. Once roused, however, I could not but observe with alarm the quickened motion of our horses. Ten years' experience had made my eye learned in the valuing of motion; and I saw that we were now running thirteen miles an hour. I pretend to no presence of mind. On the contrary, my fear is that I am miserably and shamefully deficient in that quality as regards action. The palsy of doubt and distraction hangs like some guilty weight of dark unfathomed remembrances upon my energies when the signal is flying for action. But, on the other hand, this accursed gift I have, as regards thought, that in the first step towards the possibility of a misfortune I see its total evolution; in the radix of the series I see too certainly and too instantly its entire expansion; in the first syllable of the dreadful sentence I read already the last. It was not that I feared for ourselves. Us our bulk and impetus charmed against peril in any collision. And I had ridden through too many hundreds of perils that were frightful to approach, that were matter of laughter to look back upon, the first face of which was horror, the parting face a jest—for any anxiety to rest upon our interests. The mail was not built, I felt assured, nor bespoke, that could betray me who trusted to its protection. But any carriage that we could meet would be frail and light in comparison of ourselves. And I remarked this ominous accident of our situation,—we were on the wrong side of the road. But then, it may be said, the other party, if other there was, might also be on the wrong side; and two wrongs might make a right. That was not likely. The same motive which had drawn us to the right-hand side of the road—viz., the luxury of the soft beaten sand as contrasted with the paved centre—would prove attractive to others. The two adverse carriages would therefore, to a certainty, be travelling on the same side; and from this side, as not being ours in law, the crossing over to the other would, of course, be looked for from us.³ Our lamps, still lighted, would give the impression of vigilance on our part. And every creature that met us would rely upon us for quartering.⁴ All this, and if the separate links of the anticipation had been a thousand times more, I saw, not discursively, or by effort, or by succession, but by one flash of horrid simultaneous intuition.

Under this steady though rapid anticipation of the evil which might be gathering

¹ "It is true that, according to the law of the case as established by legal precedents, all carriages were required to give way before royal equipages, and therefore before the mail as one of them. But this only increased the danger, as being a regulation very imperfectly made known, very unequally enforced, and therefore often embarrassing the movements on both sides."—De Quincey.

² "Quartering"—This is the technical word, and, I presume, derived from the French carroyer, to evade a rut or any obstacle."—De Quincey.

¹ calm; peaceful (The halcyon, or kingfisher, was fabled to nest at sea about the time of the winter solstice, and to calm the waves during the period of incubation.)

² That is, a vision which comes only at rare intervals; perhaps, holy.

ahead, ah! what a sullen mystery of fear, what a sigh of woe, was that which stole upon the air, as again the far-off sound of a wheel was heard! A whisper it was—a whisper from, perhaps, four miles off—secretly announcing a ruin that, being foreseen, was not the less inevitable, that, being known, was not therefore healed. What could be done—who was it that could do it—to check the storm-flight of these maniacal horses? Could I not seize the reins from the grasp of the slumbering coachman? You, reader, think that it would have been in your power to do so. And I quarrel not with your estimate of yourself. But, from the way in which the coachman's hand was viced between his upper and lower thigh, this was impossible. Easy was it? See, then, that bronze equestrian statue. The cruel rider has kept the bit in his horse's mouth for two centuries. Unbridle him for a minute, if you please, and wash his mouth with water. Easy was it? Unhorse me, then, that imperial rider, knock me those marble feet from those marble stirrups of Charlemagne.

The sounds ahead strengthened, and were now too clearly the sounds of wheels. Who and what could it be? Was it industry in a taxed cart?¹ Was it youthful gaiety in a gig? Was it sorrow that loitered, or joy that raced? For as yet the snatches of sound were too intermitting, from distance, to decipher the character of the motion. Whoever were the travellers, something must be done to warn them. Upon the other party rests the active responsibility, but upon us—and, woe is me! that us was reduced to my frail opium-shattered self—rests the responsibility of warning. Yet, how should this be accomplished? Might I not sound the guard's horn? Already, on the first thought, I was making my way over the roof of the guard's seat. But this, from the accident which I have mentioned, of the foreign mails being piled upon the roof, was a difficult and even dangerous attempt to one cramped by nearly three hundred miles of outside travelling. And, fortunately, before I had lost much time in the attempt, our frantic horses swept round an angle of the road which opened upon us that final stage where the collision must be accomplished and the catastrophe sealed. All was apparently finished. The court was sitting, the case was heard; the judge had finished; and only the verdict was yet in arrears.

Before us lay an avenue straight as an arrow, six hundred yards, perhaps, in length; and the umbrageous trees, which rose in a regular line from either side, meeting high overhead, gave to it the character of a cathedral aisle. These trees lent a deeper solemnity to the early light; but there was still light enough to perceive, at the further end of this Gothic aisle, a frail reedy gig, in which were seated a young man, and by his side a young lady. Ah, young sir! what are you about? If it is requisite that you should whisper your communications to this young lady—though really I see nobody, at an hour and on a road so solitary, likely to overhear you—is it therefore requisite that you should carry your lips forward to her? The little carriage is creeping on at one mile an hour, and the parties within it, being thus tenderly engaged, are naturally bending down their heads. Between them and eternity, to all human calculation, there is but a minute and a half. Oh heavens! what is it that I shall do? Speaking or acting, what help can I offer? Strange it is, and to a mere auditor of the tale might seem laughable, that I should need a suggestion from the Iliad to prompt the sole resource that remained. Yet so it was. Suddenly I remembered the shout of Achilles, and its effect.¹ But could I pretend to shout like the son of Peleus, aided by Pallas? No: but then I needed not the shout that should alarm all Asia militant; such a shout would suffice as might carry terror into the hearts of two thoughtless young people and one gig-horse. I shouted—and the young man heard me not. A second time I shouted—and now he heard me, for now he raised his head.

Here, then, all had been done that, by me, could be done; more on my part was not possible. Mine had been the first step; the second was for the young man; the third was for God. If, said I, this stranger is a brave man, and if indeed he loves the young girl at his side—or, loving her not, if he feels the obligation, pressing upon every man worthy to be called a man, of doing his utmost for a woman confided to his protection—he will at least make some effort to save her. If that fails, he will not perish the more, or by a death more cruel, for having made it; and he will die as a brave man should, with his face to the danger, and with his arm about the woman that he sought in vain to save. But, if he makes no effort,—shrinking without a struggle from his duty,—he himself will not the less certainly perish for this baseness of poltroonery.¹ He will die no less: and why not? Wherefore should we grieve that there is one craven less in the world? No; let him perish, without a pitying thought of ours wasted upon him; and, in that case, all our grief will be reserved for the fate of the helpless girl who now, upon the least shadow of failure in him, must by the fiercest of translations—must without time for a prayer—must within seventy seconds—stand before the judgment-seat of God

¹ A reference to the excessive taxes imposed upon the farmers by the government during the early part of the nineteenth century.

¹ The shout of Achilles, son of Peleus, together with the cry of Pallas Athene, spread terror among the Trojans during the siege of Troy, and gave the Greeks a chance to rest from battle. See the Iliad, 18, 217-31.

But craven he was not: sudden had been the call upon him, and sudden was his answer to the call. He saw, he heard, he comprehended, the ruin that was coming down: already its gloomy shadow darkened above him; and already he was measuring his strength to deal with it. Ah! what a vulgar thing does courage seem when we see nations buying it and selling it for a shilling a-day.² ah! what a sublime thing does courage seem when some fearful summons on the great deeps of life carries a man, as if running before a hurricane, up to the giddy crest of some tumultuous crisis from which he two courses, and a voice says to him audibly, "One way lies hope; take the other, and mourn forever!" How grand a triumph if, even then, amidst the raving of all around him, and the frenzy of the danger, the man is able to confront his situation—is able to retire for a moment into solitude with God, and to seek his counsel from Him!

For seven seconds, it might be, of his seventy, the stranger settled his countenance steadfastly upon us, as if to search and value every element in the conflict before him. For five seconds more of his seventy he sat immovably, like one that mused on some great purpose. For five more, perhaps, he sat with eyes upraised, like one that prayed in sorrow, under some extremity of doubt, for light that should guide him to the better choice. Then suddenly he rose; stood upright; and, by a powerful strain upon the reins, raising his horse's fore-feet from the ground, he slewed³ him round on the pivot of his hind-legs, so as to plant the little equipage in a position nearly at right angles to ours. Thus far his condition was not improved; except as a first step had been taken towards the possibility of a second. If no more were done, nothing was done; for the little carriage still occupied the very centre of our path, though in an altered direction. Yet even now it may not be too late: fifteen of the seventy seconds may still be unexhausted; and one almighty bound may avail to clear the ground. Hurry, then, hurry! for the flying moments—they hurry. Oh, hurry, hurry, my brave young man! for the cruel hoofs of our horses—they also hurry! Fast are the flying moments, faster are the hoofs of our horses. But fear not for him, if human energy can suffice; faithful was he that drove to his terrific duty; faithful was the horse to his command. One blow, one impulse given with voice and hand, by the stranger, one rush from the horse, one bound as if in the act of rising to a fence, landed the docile creature's fore-feet upon the crown or arching centre of the road. The larger half of the little equipage had then cleared our overtowering shadow: that was evident even to my own agitated sight. But it mattered little that one wreck should float off in safety if upon the wreck that perished were embarked the human freightage. The rear part of the carriage—was that certainly beyond the line of absolute ruin? What power could answer the question? Glance of eye, thought of man, wing of angel, which of these had speed enough to sweep between the question and the answer, and divide the one from the other? Light does not tread upon the steps of light more indivisibly than did our all-conquering arrival upon the escaping efforts of the gig. That must the young man have felt too plainly. His back was now turned to us; not by sight could he any longer communicate with the peril; but, by the dreadful rattle of our harness, too truly had his ear been instructed that all was finished as regarded any effort of his. Already in resignation he had rested from his struggle; and perhaps in his heart he was whispering, "Father, which art in heaven, do Thou finish above what I on earth have attempted." Faster than ever mill-race we ran past them in our inexorable flight. Oh, raving of hurricanes that must have sounded in their young ears at the moment of our transit! Even in that moment the thunder of collision spoke aloud. Either with the swingle-

¹ cowardice

² The English soldier received a shilling a day. Probably, De Quincey refers to the practice of employing mercenaries.

³ turned

bar,¹ or with the haunch of our near leader, we had struck the off-wheel of the little gig, which stood rather obliquely, and not quite so far advanced as to be accurately parallel with the near-wheel. The blow, from the fury of our passage, resounded terrifically. I rose in horror, to gaze upon the ruins we might have caused. From my elevated station I looked down, and looked back upon the scene; which in a moment told its own tale, and wrote all its records on my heart forever.

Here was the map of the passion² that now had finished. The horse was planted immovably, with his fore-feet upon the paved crest of the central road. He of the whole party might be supposed untouched by the passion of death. The little cany³ carriage—partly, perhaps, from the violent torsion of the wheels in its recent movement, partly from the thundering blow we had given to it—as if it sympathized with human horror, was all alive with tremblings and shiverings. The young man trembled not, nor shivered. He sat like a rock. But his was the steadiness of agitation frozen into rest by horror. As yet he dared not to look round; for he knew that, if anything remained to do, by him it could no longer be done. And as yet he knew not for certain if their safety were accomplished. But the lady—

But the lady—! Oh, heavens! will that spectacle ever depart from my dreams, as she rose and sank upon her seat, sank and rose, threw up her arms wildly to heaven, clutched at some visionary object in the air, fainting, praying, raving, despairing? Figure to yourself, reader, the elements of the case; suffer me to recall before your mind the circumstances of that unparalleled situation. From the silence and deep peace of this saintly summer night—from the pathetic blending of this sweet moonlight, dawn-light, dreamlight—from the manly tenderness of this flattering, whispering, murmuring love—suddenly as from the woods and fields—suddenly as from the chambers of the air opening in revelation—suddenly as from the ground yawning at her feet, leaped upon her, with the flashing of cataracts, Death the crowned phantom, with all the equipage of his terrors, and the tiger roar of his voice.

The moments were numbered; the strife was finished; the vision was closed. In the twinkling of an eye, our flying horses had carried us to the termination of the umbra-geous aisle, at the right angles we wheeled into our former direction; the turn of the road carried the scene out of my eyes in an instant, and swept it into my dreams forever.

SECTION III — DREAM-FUGUE.

FOUNDED ON THE PRECEDING THEME OF SUDDEN DEATH

Whence the sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard, of harp and organ, and who moved
Their stops and chords was seen, his volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled and pursued transverse the resonant fugue.
—Paradise Lost, Bk. 11 [558-63].

Tumultuosissimamente

Passion of sudden death¹ that once in youth I read and interpreted by the shadows of thy averted signs!²—rapture of panic taking the shape (which amongst tombs in churches I have seen) of woman bursting her sepulchral bonds—of woman's Ionic form³ bending forward from the ruins of her grave with arching foot, with eyes upraised, with clasped adoring hands—waiting, watching, trembling, praying for the trumpet's call to rise from dust forever! Ah, vision too fearful of shuddering humanity on the brink of almighty abysses!—vision that didst start back, that didst reel away, like a shrivelling scion from before the wrath of fire racing on the wings of the wind! Epilepsy so brief of horror, wherefore is it that thou canst not die? Passing so suddenly into darkness, wherefore is it that still thou sheddest thy sad funeral blights upon the gorgeous mosaics of dreams? Fragment of music too passionate, heard once, and heard no more, what aileth thee, that thy deep rolling chords come up at intervals through all the worlds of sleep, and after forty years have lost no element of horror?

I

Lo, it is summer—almighty summer! The everlasting gates of life and summer are thrown open wide,³ and on the ocean, tranquil and verdant as a savannah, the unknown lady from the dreadful vision and I myself are floating—she upon a fairy pinnace, and I upon an English three-decker. Both of us

¹ "Averted signs"—I read the course and changes of the lady's agony in the succession of her involuntary gestures, but it must be remembered that I read all this from the rear, never once catching the lady's full face, and even her profile imperfectly."—De Quincey.

² A form characterized by simplicity and delicacy, qualities of Ionic architecture.

³ See Confessions of an English Opium Eater (p. 1048b, 1222 and 1077b, 1-42), and Autobiographical Sketches (p. 1092a, 28 ff.).

¹ whippletree

² canelike

³ horror, suffering

are wooing gales of festal happiness within the domain of our common country, within that ancient watery park, within the pathless chase of ocean, where England takes her pleasure as a huntress through winter and summer, from the rising to the setting sun. Ah, what a wilderness of floral beauty was hidden, or was suddenly revealed, upon the tropic islands through which the pinnace moved! And upon her deck what a bevy of human flowers. young women how lovely, young men how noble, that were dancing together, and slowly drifting towards us amidst music and incense, amidst blossoms from forests and gorgeous corymbi¹ from vintages, amidst natural carolling, and the echoes of sweet girlish laughter. Slowly the pinnace nears us, gaily she hails us, and silently she disappears beneath the shadow of our mighty bows. But then, as at some signal from heaven, the music, and the carols, and the sweet echoing of girlish laughter—all are hushed. What evil has smitten the pinnace, meeting or overtaking her? Did ruin to our friends couch within our own dreadful shadow? Was our shadow the shadow of death? I looked over the bow for an answer, and behold! the pinnace was dismantled; the revel and the revellers were found no more; the glory of the vintage was dust; and the forests with their beauty were left without a witness upon the seas. "But where," and I turned to our crew—"where are the lovely women that danced beneath the awning of flowers and clustering corymbi? Whither have fled the noble young men that danced with them?" Answer there was none. But suddenly the man at the mast-head, whose countenance darkened with alarm, cried out, "Sail on the weather beam! Down she comes upon us: in seventy seconds she also will founder."

II

I looked to the weather side, and the summer had departed. The sea was rocking, and shaken with gathering wrath. Upon its surface sat mighty mists, which grouped themselves into arches and long cathedral aisles. Down one of these, with the fiery pace of a quarrel² from a cross-bow, ran a frigate right athwart our course. "Are they mad?" some voices exclaimed from our deck. "Do they woo their ruin?" But in a moment, as she was close upon us, some impulse of a heady current or local vortex gave a wheeling bias to her course, and off she forged without a shock. As she ran past us, high aloft amongst the shrouds stood the lady of the pinnace. The deeps opened ahead in malice to receive her, towering surges of foam ran after her, the billows were fierce to catch her. But far away she was borne into desert spaces of the sea whilst still by sight I followed her, as she ran before the howling gale, chased by angry sea-birds and by maddening billows, still I saw her, as at the moment when she ran past us, standing amongst the shrouds, with her white diaperies streaming before the wind. There she stood, with hair dishevelled, one hand clutched amongst the tackling—taring, sinking, fluttering, trembling, pining; there for leagues I saw her as she stood, raising at intervals one hand to heaven, amidst the fiery crests of the pursuing waves and the raving of the storm, until at last, upon a sound from afar of malicious laughter and mockery, all was hidden forever in driving showers, and afterwards, but when I knew not, nor how.

III

Sweet funeral bells from some incalculable distance, waiving over the dead that die before the dawn, awakened me as I slept in a boat moored to some familiar shore. The morning twilight even then was breaking, and, by the dusky revelations which it spread, I saw a girl, adorned with a garland of white roses about her head for some great festival, running along the solitary strand in extremity of haste. Her running was the running of panic, and often she looked back as to some dreadful enemy in the rear. But, when I leaped ashore, and followed on her steps to warn her of a peril in front, alas! from me she fled as from another peril, and vainly I shouted to her of quicksands that lay ahead. Faster and faster she ran; round a promontory of rocks she wheeled out of sight; in an instant I also wheeled round it, but only to see the treacherous sands gathering above her head. Already her person was buried; only the fair young head and the diadem of white roses around it were still visible to the pitying heavens, and, last of all, was visible one white marble arm. I saw by the early twilight this fair young head, as it was sinking down to darkness—saw this marble arm, as it rose above her head and her treacherous grave, tossing, faltering, rising, clutching, as at some false deceiving hand stretched out from the clouds—saw this marble arm uttering her dying hope, and then uttering her dying despair.

¹ Clusters of fruit or flowers.

² An arrow with a four-edged head

The head, the diadem, the arm—these all had sunk; at last over these also the cruel quicksand had closed; and no memorial of the fair young girl remained on earth, except my own solitary tears, and the funeral bells from the desert seas, that, rising again more softly, sang a requiem over the grave of the buried child, and over her blighted dawn.

I sat, and wept in secret the tears that men have ever given to the memory of those that died before the dawn, and by the treachery of earth, our mother. But suddenly the tears and funeral bells were hushed by a shout as of many nations, and by a roar as from some great king's artillery, advancing rapidly along the valleys, and heard afar by echoes from the mountains. "Hush!" I said, as I bent my ear earthwards to listen—"hush!—this either is the very anarchy of strife, or else"—and then I listened more profoundly, and whispered as I raised my head—"or else, oh heavens! it is victory that is final, victory that swallows up all strife."

IV

Immediately, in trance, I was carried over land and sea to some distant kingdom, and placed upon a triumphal car, amongst companions crowned with laurel. The darkness of gathering midnight, brooding over all the land, hid from us the mighty crowds that were weaving restlessly about ourselves as a centre: we heard them, but saw them not. Tidings had arrived, within an hour, of a grandeur that measured itself against centuries; too full of pathos they were, too full of joy, to utter themselves by other language than by tears, by restless anthems, and *Te Deums*¹ reverberated from the choirs and orchestras of earth. These tidings we that sat upon the laurelled car had it for our privilege to publish amongst all nations. And already, by signs audible through the darkness, by snortings and tramlings, our angry horses, that knew no fear or fleshly weariness, upbraided us with delay. Wherefore was it that we delayed? We waited for a secret word, that should bear witness to the hope of nations as now accomplished forever. At midnight the secret word arrived; which word was—Waterloo and Recovered Christendom! The dreadful word shone by its own light; before us it went; high above our leaders' heads it rode, and spread a golden light over the paths which we traversed. Every city, at the presence of the secret word, threw open its gates. The rivers were conscious as we crossed. All the forests, as we ran along their margins, shivered in homage to the secret word. And the darkness comprehended it.¹

Two hours after midnight we approached a mighty Minster. Its gates, which rose to the clouds, were closed. But, when the dreadful word that rode before us reached them with its golden light, silently they moved back upon their hinges; and at a flying gallop our equipage entered the grand aisle of the cathedral. Headlong was our pace; and at every altar, in the little chapels and oratories to the right hand and left of our course, the lamps, dying or sickening, kindled anew in sympathy with the secret word that was flying past. Forty leagues we might have run in the cathedral, and as yet no strength of morning light had reached us, when before us we saw the aerial galleries of organ and choir. Every pinnacle of fret-work, every station of advantage amongst the traceries, was crested by white-robed choristers that sang deliverance; that wept no more tears, as once their fathers had wept; but at intervals that sang together to the generations, saying,

"Chant the deliverer's praise in every tongue," and receiving answers from afar, "Such as once in heaven and earth were sung."

And of their chanting was no end; of our headlong pace was neither pause nor slackening.

Thus as we ran like torrents—thus as we swept with bridal rapture over the Campo Santo² of the cathedral graves—suddenly we became aware of a vast necropolis rising upon the far-off horizon—a city of sepulchres, built within the saintly cathedral for the warrior dead that rested from their feuds on earth. Of purple granite was the ² "Campo Santo"—It is probable that most of my readers will be acquainted with the history of the Campo Santo (or cemetery) at Pisa, composed of earth brought from Jerusalem from a bed of sanctity as the highest prize which the noble plety of crusaders could ask or imagine. To readers who are unacquainted with England, or who (being English) are yet unacquainted with the cathedral cities of England, it may be right to mention that the graves within-side the cathedrals often form a flat pavement over which carriages and horses might run, and perhaps a boyish remembrance of one particular cathedral, across which I had seen passengers walk and burdens carried, as about two centuries back they were through the middle of St. Paul's in London, may have assisted my dream"—De Quincey.

¹ See John, 1. 5.

¹ Hymns of praise; so called from the first words of a celebrated Christian hymn, Te Deum laudamus (we praise thee, O God)

necropolis; yet, in the first minute, it lay like a purple stain upon the horizon, so mighty was the distance. In the second minute it trembled through many changes, growing into terraces and towers of wondrous altitude, so mighty was the pace. In the third minute already, with our dreadful gallop, we were entering its suburbs. Vast sarcophagi rose on every side, having towers and turrets that, upon the limits of the central aisle, strode forward with haughty intrusion, that ran back with mighty shadows into answering recesses. Every sarcophagus showed many bas-reliefs—bas-reliefs of battles and of battle-fields; battles from forgotten ages, battles from yesterday; battle-fields that, long since, nature had healed and reconciled to herself with the sweet oblivion of flowers; battle-fields that were yet angry and crimson with carnage. Where the terraces ran, there did we run; where the towers curved, there did we curve. With the flight of swallows our horses swept round every angle. Like rivers in flood wheeling round headlands, like hurricanes that ride into the secrets of forests, faster than ever light unwove the mazes of darkness, our flying equipage carried earthly passions, kindled warrior instincts, amongst the dust that lay around us—dust oftentimes of our noble fathers that had slept in God from Crécy to Trafalgar.¹ And now had we reached the last sarcophagus, now were we abreast of the last bas-relief, already had we recovered the arrow-like flight of the illimitable central aisle, when coming up this aisle to meet us we beheld afar off a female child, that rode in a carriage as frail as flowers. The mists which went before her hid the fawns that drew her, but could not hide the shells and tropic flowers with which she played—but could not hide the lovely smiles by which she uttered her trust in the mighty cathedral, and in the cherubim that looked down upon her from the mighty shafts of its pillars. Face to face she was meeting us; face to face she rode, as if danger there were none. “Oh, baby!” I exclaimed, “shalt thou be the ransom for Waterloo? Must we, that carry tidings of great joy to every people,² be messengers of ruin to thee!” In horror I rose at the thought; but then also, in horror at the thought, rose one that was sculptured on a bas-relief—a Dying Trumpeter. Solemnly from the field of battle he rose to his feet; and, unslinging his stony trumpet, carried it, in his dying anguish, to his stony lips—sounding once, and yet once again; proclamation that, in thy ears, oh baby! spoke from the battlements of death. Immediately deep shadows fell between us, and aboriginal silence. The choir had ceased to sing. The hoofs of our horses, the dreadful rattle of our harness, the groaning of our wheels, alarmed the graves no more. By horror the bas-relief had been unlocked unto life. By horror we, that were so full of life, we men and our horses, with their fiery fore-legs rising in mid air to their everlasting gallop, were frozen to a bas-relief. Then a third time the trumpet sounded; the seals were taken off all pulses; life, and the frenzy of life, tore into their channels again; again the choir burst forth in sunny grandeur, as from the muffling of storms and darkness; again the thunderings of our horses carried temptation into the graves. One cry burst from our lips, as the clouds, drawing off from the aisle, showed it empty before us.—“Whither has the infant fled?—is the young child caught up to God?” Lo! afar off, in a vast recess, rose three mighty windows to the clouds; and on a level with their summits, at height insuperable to man, rose an altar of purest alabaster. On its eastern face was trembling a crimson glory. A glory was it from the reddening dawn that now streamed through the windows? Was it from the crimson robes of the martyrs painted on the windows? Was it from the bloody bas-reliefs of earth? There suddenly, within that crimson radiance, rose the apparition of a woman’s head, and then of a woman’s figure. The child it was—grown up to woman’s height. Clinging to the horns of the altar, voiceless she stood—sinking, rising, raving, despairing; and behind the volume of incense that, night and day, streamed upwards from the altar, dimly was seen the fiery font, and the shadow of that dreadful being who should have baptized her with the baptism of death. But by her side was kneeling her better angel, that hid his face with wings; that wept and pleaded for her; that prayed when she could not; that fought with Heaven by tears for her deliverance; which also, as he raised his immortal countenance from his wings, I saw, by the glory in his eye, that from Heaven he had won at last.

v

Then was completed the passion of the mighty fugue. The golden tubes of the organ, which as yet had but muttered at intervals—gleaming amongst clouds and surges of incense—threw up, as from fountains unfathomable, columns of heart-shattering music. Choir and anti-choir were 5 filling fast with unknown voices. Thou also, Dying Trumpeter, with thy love that was victorious, and thy anguish that was finishing, didst enter the tumult; trumpet and echo—farewell love, and farewell anguish—10 rang through the dreadful *sanctus*¹ Oh, darkness of the grave! that from the crimson altar and from the fiery font wert visited and searched by the effulgence in the angel's eye—were these indeed thy children?

¹ The Battle of Crécy was fought in 1346; Trafalgar in 1805.

² See Luke, 2 10.

 15 Poms of life, that, from the burials of centuries, rose again to the voice of perfect joy, did ye indeed mingle with the festivals of Death? Lo! as I looked back for seventy leagues through the mighty cathedral, I saw 20 the quick and the dead that sang together to God, together that sang to the generations of man. All the hosts of jubilation, like armies that ride in pursuit, moved with one step Us, that, with launrelled heads, were 25 passing from the cathedral, they overtook, and, as with a garment, they wrapped us round with thunders greater than our own
 As brothers we moved together; to the dawn that advanced, to the stars that fled, render-30 ing thanks to God in the highest²—that, having hid His face through one generation behind thick clouds of War, once again was ascending, from the Campo Santo of Waterloo was ascending, in the visions of Peace, 35 rendering thanks for thee, young girl! whom having overshadowed with His ineffable passion of death, suddenly did God relent, suffered thy angel to turn aside His arm, and even in thee, sister unknown! shown to 40 me for a moment only to be hidden forever, found an occasion to glorify His goodness.
 A thousand times, amongst the phantoms of sleep, have I seen thee entering the gates of the golden dawn, with the secret word rid-45 ing before thee, with the armies of the grave behind thee,—seen thee sinking, rising, raving, despairing; a thousand times in the worlds of sleep have I seen thee followed by God's angel through storms, through des-50 ert seas, through the darkness of quick-sands, through dreams and the dreadful revelations that are in dreams; only that at the last, with one sling of His victorious arm, He might snatch thee back from ruin, 55 and might emblazon in thy deliverance the endless resurrections of His love!

¹ A part of the Mass, beginning with the Latin words sanctus, sanctus, sanctus (holy, holy, holy).

² See Luke, 2. 14.

THOMAS LOVELL REDDOES
 (1803-1849)

LINES

WRITTEN IN A BLANK LEAF OF THE "PROMETHEUS UNBOUND" 1822

Write it in gold—A spirit of the sun,
 An intellect ablaze with heavenly thoughts,
 A soul with all the dews of pathos shining,
 Odorous with love, and sweet to silent woe
 5 With the dark glories of concentrate song,
 Was sphered in mortal earth. Angelic sounds Alive with panting thoughts sunned the dim world.
 The bright creations of an human heart
 Wrought magic in the bosoms of mankind.
 10 A flooding summer burst on poetry;
 Of which the crowning sun, the night of beauty,
 The dancing showers, the birds, whose anthems wild
 Note after note unbind the enchanted leaves
 Of breaking buds, eve, and the flow of dawn,
 15 Were centred and condensed in his one name
 As in a providence—and that was Shelley.

From THE BRIDE'S TRAGEDY
 1822 1822

POOR OLD PILGRIM MISERY

Poor old pilgrim Misery,
 Beneath the silent moon he sate,
 A-listening to the screech owl's cry,
 And the cold wind's goblin prate,
 5 Beside him lay his staff of yew
 With withered willow² twined,
 His scant gray hair all wet with dew,
 His cheeks with grief ybrined,
 And his cry it was ever, alack!
 10 Alack, and woe is me!

Anon a wanton imp astray
 His piteous moaning hears,
 And from his bosom steals away
 His rosary of tears:
 15 With his plunder fled that urchin elf,
 And hid it in your eyes,
 Then tell me back the stolen pelf,
 Give up the lawless prize;
 Or your cry shall be ever, alack!
 Alack, and woe is me!

¹ Written by Shelley. See p 662.

² The yew and the willow are emblems of mourning

A Ho' A Ho!

A ho! A ho!
 Love's horn doth blow,
 And he will out a-hawking go.
 His shafts are light as beauty's sighs,
 5 And bright as midnight's brightest eyes,
 And round his starry way
 The swan-winged horses of the skies,
 With summer's music in their manes,
 Curve their fair necks to zephyr's reins,
 10 And urge their graceful play.

A ho! A ho!
 Love's horn doth blow,
 And he will out a-hawking go.
 The sparrows' flutter round his wrist.
 15 The feathery thieves that Venus kissed
 And taught their morning song,
 The linnets seek the airy list,
 And swallows too, small pets of Spring,
 Beat back the gale with swifter wing,
 20 And dart and wheel along.

A ho! A ho!
 Love's horn doth blow,
 And he will out a-hawking go.
 Now woe to every gnat that skips •
 25 To fitch the fruit of ladies' lips,
 His felon blood is shed;
 And woe to flies, whose airy ships
 On beauty cast their anchoring bite,
 And bandit wasp, that naughty wight,²
 30 Whose sting is slaughter-red.

From THE SECOND BROTHER
 1825 1851

STREW NOT EARTH WITH EMPTY STARS

Strew not earth with empty stars,
 Strew it not with roses,
 Nor feathers from the crest of Mars,
 Nor summer's idle posies.
 5 'Tis not the primrose-sandalled moon,
 Nor cold and silent morn,
 Nor he that climbs the dusty noon,
 Nor mower war with scythe that drops,
 Stuck with helmed and turbaned tops
 10 Of enemies new shorn.

Ye cups, ye lyres, ye trumpets know,
 Pour your music, let it flow,
 'Tis Bacchus' son who walks below.

¹ Sparrows were sacred to Venus
² creature

From TORRISMOND
 1825 1851

HOW MANY TIMES DO I LOVE THEE, DEAR?

How many times do I love thee, dear?
 Tell me how many thoughts there be
 In the atmosphere
 Of a new-fall'n year,
 5 Whose white and sable hours appear
 The latest flake of Eternity.
 So many times do I love thee, dear.
 How many times do I love again?
 Tell me how many beads there are 10 In a silver chain
 Of evening rain,
 Unravelled from the tumbling main,
 And threading the eye of a yellow star
 So many times do I love again.

From DEATH'S JEST BOOK
 1825-32 1850

TO SEA, TO SEA!

To sea, to sea! The calm is o'er;
 The wanton water leaps in sport,
 And rattles down the pebbly shore;
 The dolphin wheels, the sea-cow snorts,
 5 And unseen mermaids' pearly song
 Comes bubbling up, the weeds among.
 Fling broad the sail, dip deep the oar!
 To sea, to sea! the calm is o'er.
 To sea, to sea! our wide-winged bark
 10 Shall billowy cleave its sunny way,
 And with its shadow, fleet and dark,
 Break the caved Tritons' azure day,
 Like mighty eagle soaring light
 O'er antelopes on Alpine height.
 15 The anchor heaves, the ship swings free,
 The sails swell full. To sea, to sea!

THE SWALLOW LEAVES HER NEST

The swallow leaves her nest,
 The soul my weary breast;
 But therefore let the rain
 On my grave
 5 Fall pure; for why complain?
 Since both will come again
 O'er the wave.

The wind dead leaves and snow
 Doth hurry to and fro;
 10 And, once, a day shall break
 O'er the wave,
 When a storm of ghosts shall shake
 The dead, until they wake
 In the grave

IF THOU WILT EASE THINE HEART

If thou wilt ease thine heart
Of love and all its smart,
Then sleep, dear, sleep,
And not a sorrow
5 Hang any tear on your eyelashes,
Lie still and deep,
Sad soul, until the sea-wave washes
The rim o' the sun tomorrow,
In eastern sky

10 But wilt thou cure thine heart
Of love and all its smart,
Then die, dear, die,
'Tis deeper, sweeter,
Than on a rose bank¹ to lie dreaming
15 With folded eye,
And then alone, amid the beaming
Of love's stars, thou'lt meet her
In eastern sky

LADY, WAS IT FAIR OF THEE

Lady, was it fair of thee
To seem so passing fair to me?
Not every star to every eye
Is fair, and why

5 Art thou another's share?
Did thine eyes shed brighter glances,
Thine unknissed bosom heave more fair,
To his than to my fancies?
But I'll forgive thee still,
10 Thou'lt fair without thy will.
So be: but never know,
That 'tis the hue of woe.

Lady, was it fair of thee
To be so gentle still to me?
15 Not every lip to every eye
Should let smiles fly
Why didst thou never frown,
To frighten from my pillow
Love's head, round which Hope wove a crown,

20 And saw not 'twas of willow?²
But I'll forgive thee still,
Thou knew'st not smiles could kill.
Smile on: but never know,
I die, nor of what woe

A CYPRESS-BOUGH,³ AND A ROSE-WREATH¹
SWEET

A cypress-bough, and a rose-wreath sweet,
A wedding-lobe, and a winding-sheet,
A bridal bed and a bier.

¹ The rose is an emblem of love and marriage

² The willow is an emblem of mourning.

³ The cypress is an emblem of mourning. It has long been associated with funerals.

Thine be the kisses, maid,
5 And smiling Love's alarms,
And thou, pale youth, be laid
In the grave's cold arms
Each in his own charms,
Death and Hymen both are here;
10 So up with scythe and torch.
And to the old church porch,
While all the bells ring clear.
And rosy, rosy the bed shall bloom,
And earthy, earthy heap up the tomb.

15 Now tremble dimples on your cheek,
Sweet be your lips to taste and speak,
For he who kisses is near:
By her the bride-god¹ fair,
In youthful power and force;
20 By him the grizard² bare,
Pale knight³ on a pale horse,
To woo him to a corse
Death and Hymen both are here,
So up with scythe and torch,
25 And to the old church porch,
While all the bells ring clear.
And rosy, rosy the bed shall bloom,
And earthy, earthy heap up the tomb.

OLD ADAM, THE CARRION CROW

Old Adam, the carrion crow,
The old crow of Cairo;
He sat in the shower, and let it flow
Under his tail and over his crest;
5 And through every feather
Leaked the wet weather;
And the bough swung under his nest;
For his beak it was heavy with marrow.
Is that the wind dying? O no,
10 It's only two devils, that blow
Through a murderer's bones, to and fro,
In the ghosts' moonshine

Ho! Eve, my gray carrion wife,
When we have supped on kings' marrow, 15 Where shall we drink and make merry our life?
Our nest it is queen Cleopatra's skull,
'Tis cloven and cracked,
And battered and backed,
But with tears of blue eyes it is full:
20 Let us drink then, my raven of Cairo
Is that the wind dying? O no;
It's only two devils, that blow
Through a murderer's bones, to and fro,
In the ghosts' moonshine.

¹ Hymen.

² Gray-headed person

³ Death. See Revelation, 6:8

WE DO LIE BENEATH THE GRASS

We do lie beneath the grass
 In the moonlight, in the shade
 Of the yew-tree.¹ They that pass
 Hear us not. We are afraid
 5 They would envy our delight,
 In our graves by glow-worm night.
 Come follow us, and smile as we,
 We sail to the rock in the ancient waves,
 Where the snow falls by thousands into the sea,
 10 And the drowned and the shipwrecked have happy graves.

THE BODING DREAMS

1851

In lover's ear a wild voice cried
 "Sleep, awake and rise!"
 A pale form stood at his bedside,
 With heavy tears in her sad eyes
 5 "A beckoning hand, a moaning sound,
 A new-dug grave in weedy ground
 For her who sleeps in dreams of thee.
 Awake! Let not the murder be!"
 Unheard the faithful dream did pray,
 10 And sadly sighed itself away.
 "Sleep on," sung Sleep, "tomorrow
 'Tis time to know thy sorrow."
 "Sleep on," sung Death, "tomorrow
 From me thy sleep thou'lt borrow"
 15 Sleep on, lover, sleep on,
 The tedious dream is gone;
 The bell tolls one.

Another hour, another dream:
 "Awake! awake!" it wailed,
 20 "Arise, ere with the moon's last beam
 Her dearest life hath paled."
 A hidden light, a muffled tread,
 A daggered hand beside the bed
 Of her who sleeps in dreams of thee.
 25 Thou wak'st not. let the murder be.
 In vain the faithful dream did pray,
 And sadly sighed itself away.
 "Sleep on," sung Sleep, "tomorrow
 'Tis Time to know thy sorrow."
 30 "Sleep on," sung Death, "tomorrow
 From me thy sleep thou'lt borrow"
 Sleep on, lover, sleep on,
 The tedious dream is gone;
 Soon comes the sun

35 Another hour, another dream.
 A red wound on a snowy breast,
 A rude hand stifling the last scream,
 On rosy lips a death-kiss pressed.

¹The yew is an emblem of mourning; it is a common tree in graveyards.

Blood on the sheets, blood on the floor,
 40 The murderer stealing through the door.
 "Now," said the voice, with comfort deep,
 "She sleeps indeed, and thou may'st sleep."

The scornful dream then turned away
 To the first, weeping cloud of day.
 45 "Sleep on," sung Sleep, "tomorrow
 'Tis time to know thy sorrow."
 "Sleep on," sung Death, "tomorrow
 From me thy sleep thou'lt borrow"
 Sleep on, lover, sleep on,
 50 The tedious dream is gone,
 The murder's done.

DREAM-PEDLARY

1851

If there were dreams to sell,
 What would you buy?
 Some cost a passing bell,
 Some a light sigh,
 5 That shakes from Life's fresh crown
 Only a rose-leaf down
 If there were dreams to sell,
 Merry and sad to tell,
 And the crier rang the bell,
 10 What would you buy?

A cottage lone and still,
 With bowers nigh,
 Shadowy, my woes to still,
 Until I die
 15 Such pearls from Life's fresh crown
 Fain would I shake me down.
 Were dreams to have at will,
 This would best heal my ill,
 This would I buy.

20 But there were dreams to sell
 Ill didst thou buy;
 Life is a dream, they tell,
 Waking, to die
 Dreaming a dream to prize,
 25 Is wishing ghosts to rise;
 And if I had the spell
 To call the buried well,
 Which one would I?

If there are ghosts to raise,
 30 What shall I call,
 Out of hell's murky haze,
 Heaven's blue pall?
 Raise my loved long-lost boy,
 To lead me to his joy —
 35 There are no ghosts to raise:
 Out of death lead no ways;
 Vain is the call.

Know'st thou not ghosts to sue,
 No love thou hast.
 40 Else lie, as I will do,
 And breathe thy last
 So out of Life's fresh crown
 Fall like a rose-leaf down.
 Thus are the ghosts to woo,
 45 Thus are all dreams made true,
 Ever to last!

LET DEW THE FLOWERS FILL
 1851

Let dew the flowers fill,
 No need of fell despair,
 Though to the grave you bear
 One still of soul—but now too still,
 5 One fair—but now too fair
 For, beneath your feet, the mound,
 And the waves, that play around,
 Have meaning in their grassy, and then watery, smiles,
 And, with a thousand sunny wiles,
 10 Each says, as he reproves,
 Death's arrow oft is Love's

JOHN KEBLE (1792-1866)

From THE CHRISTIAN YEAR
 1827

FIRST SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

No Joshua smote all the country and all their kings, he left none remaining—Joshua 10 40
 Where is the land with milk and honey flowing,¹
 The promise of our God, our fancy's theme?
 Here over shatter'd walls dank weeds are growing,
 And blood and fire have run in mingled stream;
 5 Like oaks and cedars all around
 The giant corpses strew the ground,
 And haughty Jericho's cloud-piercing wall
 Lies where it sank at Joshua's trumpet call.²
 These are not scenes for pastoral dance at even,
 10 For moonlight roving in the fragrant
 glades,
 Soft slumbers in the open eye of heaven,
 And all the listless joy of summer shades
 We in the midst of ruins live,
 Which every hour dread warning give.
 15 Nor may our household vine or fig-tree hide.³
 The broken arches of old Canaan's pride

¹ The land of Canaan See Exodus, 3 8
² See Joshua, 6 20
³ See Deuteronomy, 8 8

Where is the sweet repose of hearts repenting,
 The deep calm sky, the sunshine of the soul,
 Now heaven and earth are to our bliss consenting,
 20 And all the Godhead joins to make us whole?
 The triple crown of mercy' now
 Is ready for the suppliant's brow,
 By the Almighty Three forever plann'd,
 And from behind the cloud held out by Jesus' hand 25 "Now, Christians, hold your own—the land before ye
 Is open—win your way, and take your rest."²
 So sounds our war-note, but our path of glory
 By many a cloud is darken'd and unblest
 And daily as we downward glide,
 30 Life's ebbing stream on either side
 Shows at each turn some mould'ring hope or joy,
 The Man seems following still the funeral of the Boy

Open our eyes, Thou Sun of life and gladness,
 That we may see that glorious world of Thine!
 35 It shines for us in vain, while drooping sadness
 Enfolds us here like mist come, Power benign,
 Touch our chill'd hearts with vernal smile,
 Our wintry course do Thou beguile,
 Nor by the wayside ruins let us mourn,
 40 Who have th' eternal towers for our appointed bourn

TWENTIETH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

Hear ye, O mountains, the Lord's controversy, and ye strong foundations of the earth
 —Micah 6 7
 Where is Thy favor'd haunt, eternal Voice,
 The region of Thy choice,
 Where, undisturb'd by sin and earth, the soul
 Owns Thy entire control?—
 5 'Tis on the mountain's summit dark and high,
 When storms are hurrying by

¹ A reference to the Trinity.
² See Deuteronomy, 1 8; also Joshua, 1 11-15.

'Tis 'mid the strong foundations of the earth,
Where torrents have their birth.

- No sounds of worldly toil, ascending there,
10 Mar the full burst of prayer;
Lone Nature feels that she may freely breathe,
And round us and beneath
Are heard her sacred tones. the fitful sweep
Of winds across the sleep,
15 Through wither'd bents¹—romantic note and clear,
Meet for a hermit's ear—

- The wheeling kite's wild solitary cry,
And, scarcely heard so high,
The dashing waters when the air is still 20 From many a torrent rill
That winds unseen beneath the shaggy fell,²
Track'd by the blue mist well:
Such sounds as make deep silence in the heart
For Thought to do her part.

- 25 'Tis then we hear the voice of God within,
Pleading with care and sin:
"Child of My love! how have I wearied thee?

Why wilt thou err³ from Me?
Have I not brought thee from the house of slaves,

- 30 Parted the drowning waves,
And set My saints before thee in the way,
Lest thou shouldst faint or stray?

"What' was the promise made to thee alone?

Art thou th' excepted one?—

- 35 An heir of glory without grief or pain?
O vision false and vain!
There lies thy cross; beneath it meekly
bow;

It fits thy stature now:

- Who scornful pass it with averted eye,
40 'Twill crush them by-and-by.

"Raise thy repining eyes, and take true measure

Of thine eternal treasure;

The Father of thy Lord can grudge thee naught.

The world for thee was bought,

- 45 And as this landscape broad—earth, sea,
and sky—

All centres in thine eye,
So all God does, if rightly understood,
Shall work thy final good."

UNITED STATES 1836

Because that Tyrus hath said against Jerusalem, Aha, she is broken that was the gates of the people; she is turned unto me; I shall be replenished, now she is laid waste. Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I am against thee, O Tyrus.—Ezekiel, 26.2-3.

Tyre of the *farther*¹ West! be thou too
warn'd,

Whose eagle wings thine own green world o'erspread,

Touching two Oceans: wherefore hast thou scorn'd

Thy fathers' God, O proud and full of bread?²

- 5 Why lies the Cross unhonor'd on thy ground

While in mid air thy stars and arrows flaunt?

That sheaf of darts,³ will it not fall unbound,

Except, disrob'd of thy vain earthly vaunt,

Thou bring it to be bless'd where Saints and Angels haunt?

- 10 The holy seed, by Heaven's peculiar grace,
Is rooted here and there in thy dark
woods;

But many a rank weed round it grows apace,

And Mammon builds beside thy mighty floods,

O'eropping Nature, braving Nature's God;

- 15 O while thou yet hast room, fair fruitful land,

Ere war and want have stain'd thy virgin
sod,

Mark thee a place on high, a glorious stand,

Whence Truth her sign may make o'er forest, lake, and strand.

Eastward, this hour, perchance thou turn'st thine ear,

- 20 Listening if haply with the surging sea,

¹ This expression refers to John Henry Newman's poem to England, beginning "Tyre of the West," which preceded Keble's poem in Lyra Apostolica. Tyre was the great trading center of ancient Phœnicia, and was noted for its worldliness and commercial prosperity.

² See Ezekiel, 16.49; also Hamlet, III. 3. 80.

³ A reference to the sheaf of arrows held in the claw of the eagle on the American coat-of arms.

¹ Reedlike grasses

² hill; mountain

³ wander

Blend sounds of Ruin from a land once dear
To thee and Heaven. O trying hour for thee!

Tyre mock'd when Salem¹ fell; where now is Tyre?
Heaven was against her. Nations thick as waves,

25 Burst o'er her walls, to Ocean doom'd and fire:
And now the tideless water idly laves
Her towers, and lone sands heap her crown'd merchants' graves.

THOMAS HOOD (1799-1845)

SONG
1824

O lady, leave thy silken thread
And flowery tapestry,
There's living roses on the bush,
And blossoms on the tree,
5 Stoop where thou wilt, thy careless hand
Some random bud will meet;
Thou canst not tread but thou wilt find
The daisy at thy feet.

'Tis like the birthday of the world,
10 When earth was born in bloom;
The light is made of many dyes,
The air is all perfume;
There's crimson buds, and white and blue—
The very rainbow show'rs
15 Have turn'd to blossoms where they fell,
And sown the earth with flow'rs.

There's fairy tulips in the East,
The garden of the sun;
The very streams reflect the hues,
20 And blossom as they run:
While morn opes like a crimson rose,
Still wet with pearly showers;
Then, lady, leave the silken thread
Thou twinst into flow'rs!

FAITHLESS NELLY GRAY

A PATHETIC BALLAD
1820

Ben Battle was a soldier bold.
And used to war's alarms;
But a cannon-ball took off his legs,
So he laid down his arms!

5 Now as they bore him off the field,
Said he, "Let others shoot,
For here I leave my second leg,
And the Forty-second Foot!"

¹ Jerusalem.

The army-surgeons made him limbs:
10 Said he,—"They're only pegs:
But there's as wooden members' quite
As represent my legs!"

Now Ben he loved a pretty maid,
Her name was Nelly Gray;
15 So he went to pay her his devours²
When he'd devoured his pay!

But when he called on Nelly Gray,
She made him quite a scoff;
And when she saw his wooden legs,
20 Began to take them off!

"O Nelly Gray! O, Nelly Gray!
Is this your love so warm?
The love that loves a scarlet coat
Should be more uniform!"

25 Said she, "I loved a soldier once,
For he was blythe and brave;
But I will never have a man
With both legs in the grave!"

"Before you had those timber toes,
30 Your love I did allow,
But then, you know, you stand upon Another footing now!"

"O, Nelly Gray! O, Nelly Gray!
For all your jeering speeches,
35 At duty's call, I left my legs
In Badajos's breaches!"

"Why, then," said she, "you've lost the feet
Of legs in war's alarms,
And now you cannot wear your shoes
40 Upon your feats of arms!"

"O, false and fickle Nelly Gray;
I know why you refuse:—
Though I've no feet—some other man
Is standing in my shoes!"

45 "I wish I ne'er had seen your face;
But, now, a long farewell!
For you will be my death;—alas!
You will not be my Nell!"

Now when he went from Nelly Gray,
50 His heart so heavy got—
And life was such a burthen grown,
It made him take a knot!

¹ A thrust at the Members of Parliament.
² respects

So round his melancholy neck,
A rope he did entwine,
55 And, for his second time in life,
Enlisted in the Line!

One end he tied around a beam,
And then removed his pegs,
And, as his legs were off,—of course,
60 He soon was off his legs!

And there he hung, till he was dead
As any nail in town,—
For though distress had cut him up,
It could not cut him down!

65 A dozen men sat on¹ his corpse,
To find out why he died—
And they buried Ben in four cross-roads,
With a stake in his inside!²

FAIR INES 1827

O saw ye not fair Ines?
She's gone into the West,
To dazzle when the sun is down,
And rob the world of rest.

5 She took our daylight with her,
The smiles that we love best,
With morning blushes on her cheek,
And pearls upon her breast.

O turn again, fair Ines,
10 Before the fall of night,
For fear the moon should shine alone,
And stars unrivall'd bright,
And blessed will the lover be
That walks beneath their light,
15 And breathes the love against thy cheek
I dare not even write!

Would I had been, fair Ines,
That gallant cavalier,
Who rode so gaily by thy side,
20 And whisper'd thee so near!—
Were there no bonny dames at home
Or no true lovers here,
That he should cross the seas to win
The dearest of the dear?

25 I saw thee, lovely Ines,
Descend along the shore,

¹ held a session on

² It was the custom to bury suicides in some public place, usually at the intersection of four roads, a stake being driven through the body. This custom, which was discontinued in 1823, grew out of the practice of erecting a cross at cross-roads. A person who was excluded from holy rites was buried at the foot of the cross as the place next in sanctity to consecrated ground. See Martineau's The History of England, 2, 383.

With bands of noble gentlemen,
And banners wav'd before;
And gentle youth and maidens gay,
30 And snowy plumes they wore,—
It would have been a beauteous dream,
—If it had been no more!

Alas, alas, fair Ines,
She went away with song,
35 With Music waiting on her steps,
And shoutings of the throng,
But some were sad, and felt no mirth,
But only Music's wrong,
In sounds that sang Farewell, Farewell,
40 To her you've loved so long.

Farewell, farewell, fair Ines,
That vessel never bore
So fair a lady on its deck,
Nor danc'd so light before,—
45 Alas for pleasure on the sea,
And sorrow on the shore!
The smile that blest one lover's heart
Has broken many more!

RUTH 1827

She stood breast high amid the corn,¹
'Clasp'd by the golden light of morn,
Like the sweetheart of the sun,
Who many a glowing kiss had won.

5 On her cheek an autumn flush,
Deeply ripened;—such a blush
In the midst of brown was born.
Like red poppies grown with corn.

Round her eyes her tresses fell,
10 Which were blackest none could tell,
But long lashes veil'd a light,
That had else been all too bright.

And her hat, with shady brim,
Made her tressy forehead dim,—
15 Thus she stood amid the stocks,²
Praising God with sweetest looks:—

Sure, I said, heav'n did not mean
Where I reap thou should'st but glean,
Lay thy sheaf adown and come,
20 Share my harvest and my home.

I REMEMBER, I REMEMBER 1827

I remember, I remember,
The house where I was born,
The little window where the sun
Came peeping in at morn;

¹ wheat

² shocks of grain

5 He never came a wink too soon,
Nor brought too long a day,
But now, I often wish the night
Had borne my breath away!

I remember, I remember,
10 The roses, red and white,
The vi'lets, and the lily-cups,
Those flowers made of light!
The lilacs where the robin built,
And where my brother set 15 The laburnum on his birthday,—
The tree is living yet!

I remember, I remember,
Where I was used to swing,
And thought the air must rush as fresh
20 To swallows on the wing;
My spirit flew in feathers then,
That is so heavy now,
And summer pools could hardly cool
The fever on my brow!

25 I remember, I remember,
The fir trees dark and high;
I used to think their slender tops
Were close against the sky.
It was a childish ignorance,
30 But now 'tis little joy
To know I'm farther off from heav'n
Than when I was a boy.

THE STARS ARE WITH THE VOYAGER
1827

The stars are with the voyager
Wherever he may sail;
The moon is constant to her time;
The sun will never fail;
5 But follow, follow round the world,
The green earth and the sea;
So love is with the lover's heart,
Wherever he may be.

Wherever he may be, the stars
Must daily lose their light,
10 The moon will veil her in the shade,
The sun will set at night.
The sun may set, but constant love
Will shine when he's away,
15 So that dull night is never night,
And day is brighter day.

SILENCE
1827

There is a silence where hath been no sound,
There is a silence where no sound may be,
In the cold grave—under the deep, deep
sea,
Or in wide desert where no life is found,

5 Which hath been mute, and still must sleep profound;
No voice is hush'd—no life treads silently,
But clouds and cloudy shadows wander
free,
That never spoke, over the idle ground
But in green ruins, in the desolate walls
10 Of antique palaces, where man hath been,
Though the dun fox, or wild hyena, calls,
And owls, that flit continually between,
Shriek to the echo, and the low winds moan,
There the true Silence is, self-conscious and alone

FALSE POETS AND TRUE
TO WORDSWORTH

Look how the lark soars upward and is gone,
Turning a spirit as he nears the sky!
His voice is heard, but body there is none
To fix the vague excursions of the eye.
5 So, poets' songs are with us, tho' they die
Obscur'd, and hid by death's oblivious shroud,
And Earth inherits the rich melody
Like raining music from the morning cloud.
Yet, few there be who pipe so sweet and loud
10 Their voices reach us through the lapse of space:
The noisy day is deafen'd by a crowd
Of undistinguish'd birds, a twittering race;
But only lark and nightingale forlorn
Fill up the silences of night and morn.

SONG

There is dew for the flow'ret
And honey for the bee,
And bowers for the wild bird,
And love for you and me.
5 There are tears for the many
And pleasures for the few,
But let the world pass on, dear,
There's love for me and you.

AUTUMN
1827

The autumn is old,
The scare leaves are flying;
He hath gathered up gold,
And now he is dying;
5 Old age, begin sighing!
The vintage is ripe,
The harvest is heaping;

But some that have sowed
Have no riches for reaping,
10 Poor wretch, fall a-weeping!

The year's in the wane,
There is nothing adorning,
The night has no eve,
And the day has no morning,
15 Cold winter gives warning.

The rivers run chill,
The red sun is sinking,
And I am grown old,
And life is fast shrinking.
20 Here's enow for sad thinking!

BALLAD
1827

It was not in the winter
Our loving lot was cast!
It was the time of roses,
We plucked them as we passed!

5 That churlish season never frowned
On early lovers yet!—
Oh no—the world was newly crowned
With flowers, when first we met.

'Twas twilight, and I bade you go,
10 But still you held me fast,—
It was the time of roses,—
We plucked them as we passed!

What else could peer¹ my glowing cheek
That tears began to stud?—
15 And when I asked the like of Love,
You snatched a damask bud,—

And oped it to the dainty core
Still glowing to the last,—
It was the time of roses,
20 We plucked them as we passed!

THE DREAM OF EUGENE ARAM, THE MURDERER:
1829

'Twas in the prime of summer time,
An evening calm and cool,
And four-and-twenty happy boys
Came bounding out of school.

5 There were some that ran and some that leapt,
Like troutlets in a pool.

Away they sped with gamesome minds,
And souls untouched by sin,

¹ equal; match

² This is a story of fact. See J. Ashton's "The True Story of Eugene Aram," Nineteenth Century Writings (1887); also, Bulwer-Lytton's Eugene Aram, a novel published in 1832.

To a level mead they came, and there
10 They drave the wickets in:
Pleasantly shone the setting sun
Over the town of Lynn.

Like sportive deer they cours'd about,
And shouted as they ran,— 15 Turning to mirth all things of earth,
As only boyhood can;
But the Usher¹ sat remote from all,
A melancholy man!

His hat was off, his vest apart,
20 To catch heaven's blessed breeze;
For a burning thought was in his brow,
And his bosom ill at ease.
So he lean'd his head on his hands, and read
The book between his knees!

25 Leaf after leaf, he turn'd it o'er,
Nor ever glanc'd aside,
For the peace of his soul he read that book
In the golden eventide:
Much study had made him very lean,
30 And pale, and leaden-ey'd.²

At last he shut the ponderous tome,
With a fast and fervent grasp
He strain'd the dusky covers close,
And fix'd the brazen hasp.
35 "Oh God! could I so close my mind,
And clasp it with a clasp!"

Then leaping on his feet upright,
Some moody turns he took,—
Now up the mead, then down the mead,
40 And past a shady nook,—
And, lo! he saw a little boy
That pored upon a book!

"My gentle lad, what is't you read—
Romance or fairy fable?
45 Or is it some historic page,
Of kings and crowns unstable?"
The young boy gave an upward glance,—
"It is The Death of Abel."

The Usher took six hasty strides,
50 As smit with sudden pain,—
Six hasty strides beyond the place,
Then slowly back again;
And down he sat beside the lad,
And talk'd with him of Cam:

55 And, long since then, of bloody men,
Whose deeds tradition saves;

¹ An under-teacher or assistant in a school.

² See Julius Caesar, I, 2, 192-93.

Of lonely folk cut off unseen,
And hid in sudden graves,
Of horrid slabs, in groves forlorn,
60 And murders done in caves;

And how the sprites of injur'd men
Shriek upward from the sod,—
Aye, how the ghostly hand will point
To show the burial clod,
65 And unknown facts of guilty acts
Are seen in dreams from God!

He told how murderers walk the earth
Beneath the curse of Cam,—
With crimson clouds before their eyes,
70 And flames about their brain.
For blood has left upon their souls
Its everlasting stain!

"And well," quoth he, "I know, for truth,
Then pangs must be extreme,—
75 Woe, woe, unutterable woe,—
Who spill life's sacred stream!
For why? Methought, last night, I wrought
A murder, in a dream!

"One that had never done me wrong—
80 A feeble man, and old,
I led him to a lonely field,—
The moon shone clear and cold
Now here, said I, this man shall die,
And I will have his gold!

85 "Two sudden blows with a ragged stick,
And one with a heavy stone,
One hurried gash with a hasty knife.—
And then the deed was done;
There was nothing lying at my foot
90 But lifeless flesh and bone!

"Nothing but lifeless flesh and bone,
That could not do me ill;
And yet I fear'd him all the more,
For lying there so still.
95 There was a manhood in his look,
That murder could not kill!

"And, lo! the universal air
Seem'd lit with ghastly flame,—
Ten thousand thousand dreadful eyes
100 Were looking down in blame:
I took the dead man by his hand,
And call'd upon his name!

"Oh, God! it made me quake to see
Such sense within the slum!
105 But when I touch'd the lifeless clay,
The blood gushed out again!

For every clot, a burning spot,
Was scorching in my brain!

"My head was like an ardent coal,
110 My heart as solid ice;
My wretched, wretched soul, I knew,
Was at the Devil's price.
A dozen times I groan'd; the dead
Had never groan'd but twice.

115 "And now, from forth the frowning sky
From the heaven's topmost height,
I heard a voice—the awful voice
Of the blood-avenging sprite.—
"Thou guilty man! take up thy dead, 120 And hide it from my sight!"

"I took the dreary body up,
And cast it in a stream,—
A sluggish water, black as ink,
The depth was so extreme —
125 My gentle boy, remember this
Is nothing but a dream!

"Down went the corpse with a hollow plunge
And vanish'd in the pool;
Anon I cleans'd my bloody hands,
130 And wash'd my forehead cool,
And sat among the wreaths young
That evening in the school

"Oh, Heaven, to think of their white souls,
And mine so black and grim!
135 I could not share in childish prayer,
Nor join in evening hymn.
Like a devil of the pit, I seem'd,
"Mid holy cherubim!"

"And Peace went with them, one and all,
140 And each calm pillow spread,
But Guilt was my grim chamberlain
That lighted me to bed,
And drew my midnight curtains round
With fingers bloody red!

145 "All night I lay in agony,
In anguish dark and deep,
My fever'd eyes I dared not close,
But stared aghast at Sleep.
For Sin had render'd unto her 150 The keys of hell to keep!

"All night I lay in agony,
From weary clime to clime,
With one besetting horrid hint,
That rack'd me all the time.—
155 A mighty yearning, like the first
Fierce impulse unto crime!
Members of the celestial hierarchy,

"One stern tyrannic thought, that made
All other thoughts its slave,
Stronger and stronger every pulse
160 Did that temptation crave,—
Still urging me to go and see
The dead man in his grave!

"Heavily I rose up, as soon
As light was in the sky,
165 And sought the black accursed pool
With a wild misgiving eye,
And I saw the dead in the river bed,
For the faithless stream was dry!

"Merrily rose the lark, and shook
170 The dew-drop from its wing,
But I never mark'd its morning flight,
I never heard it sing:
For I was stooping once again
Under the horrid thing.

175 "With breathless speed, like a soul in chase,
I took him up and ran,—
There was no time to dig a grave
Before the day began:
In a lonesome wood, with heaps of leaves,
180 I hid the murder'd man!

"And all that day I read in school,
But my thought was other where,
As soon as the mid-day task was done,
In secret I was there
185 And a mighty wind had swept the leaves,
And still the corse was bare!

"Then down I cast me on my face,
And first began to weep,
For I knew my secret then was one 190 That earth refused to keep.
Or land, or sea, though he should be Ten thousand fathoms deep.

"So wills the fierce avenging sprite,
Till blood for blood atones!
195 Ay, though he's buried in a cave,
And trodden down with stones,
And years have rotted off his flesh,—
The world shall see his bones!

"Oh, God! that horrid, horrid dream
200 Besets me now awake!
Again—again, with a dizzy brain,
The human life I take,
And my red right hand grows raging hot,
Like Cranmer's at the stake

205 "And still no peace for the restless clay,
Will wave or mould allow,

The horrid thing pursues my soul,—
It stands before me now!"
The fearful boy look'd up, and saw 210 Huge drops upon his brow.

That very night, while gentle sleep
The witching eyelids kiss'd,
Two stern-faced men set out from Lynn,
Through the cold and heavy mist;
215 And Eugene Aram walked between,
With gyves upon his wrist.

THE DEATH-BED! 1831

We watch'd her breathing thro' the night,
Her breathing soft and low,
As in her breast the wave of life
Kept heaving to and fro!

5 So silently we seemed to speak—
So slowly moved about!
As we had lent her half our powers
To eke her living out!

Our very hopes belied our fears,
10 Our fears our hopes belied—
We thought her dying when she slept,
And sleeping when she died!

For when the morn came dim and sad—
And chill with early showers,
15 Her quiet eyelids closed—she had Another morn than ours!

SALLY SIMPKIN'S LAMENT

OR, JOHN JONES'S KIT-CAT-ASTROPHIE
1839

He left his body to the sea,
And made a shark his legatee
—Bryan and l'ecanne

"Oh! what is that comes gliding in,
And quite in middling haste?
It is the picture of my Jones,
And painted to the waist.

5 "It is not painted to the life,
For where's the trousers blue?
(Oh Jones, my dear!—O dear! my Jones,
What is become of you?"

"Oh! Sally dear, it is too true,
10 The half that you remark
Is come to say my other half
Is bit off by a shark!

"Oh! Sally, sharks do things by halves,
Yet most completely do!

15 This poem is supposed to have been written on the death of Hood's sister

15 A bite in one place seems enough,
But I've been bit in two.

"You know I once was all your own,
But now a shark must share!

But let that pass—for now to you
20 I'm neither here nor there.

"Alas! death has a strange divorcee
Effected in the sea,
It has divided me from you,
And even me from me!

25 "Don't fear my ghost will walk o' nights
To haunt as people say;
My ghost can't walk, for, oh! my legs
Are many leagues away!

"Lord! think when I am swimming round,
30 And looking where the boat is,
A shark just snaps away a half,
Without "a quarter's notice!"

"One half is here, the other half
Is near Columbia placed;
35 Oh! Sally, I have got the whole
Atlantic for my waist.

"But now, adieu—a long adieu!
I've solved death's awful riddle,
And would say more, but I am doomed
40 To break off in the middle."

THE SONG OF THE SHIRT 1843 1843

With fingers weary and worn,
With eyelids heavy and red,
A woman sat, in unwomanly rags,
Plying her needle and thread—
5 Stitch! stitch! stitch!
In poverty, hunger, and dirt,
And still with a voice of dolorous pitch
She sang the "Song of the Shirt!"

"Work! work! work!
10 While the cock is crowing aloof!
And work—work—work,
Till the stars shine through the roof!
It's O! to be a slave
Along with the barbarous Turk,
15 Where woman has never a soul to save,
If this is Christian work!

"Work—work—work
Till the brain begins to swim:
Work—work—work

* A notice to vacate given a quarter in advance.

20 Till the eyes are heavy and dim!
Seam, and gusset, and band,
Band, and gusset, and seam,
Till over the buttons I fall asleep,
And sew them on in a dream!

25 "O! men with sisters dear!
O! men with mothers and wives,
It is not linen you're wearing out,
But human creatures' lives!
Stitch—stitch—stitch,
30 In poverty, hunger, and dirt,
Sewing at once, with a double thread,
A shroud as well as a shirt.

"But why do I talk of Death?
That phantom of grisly bone,
35 I hardly fear his terrible shape,
It seems so like my own—
It seems so like my own,
Because of the fasts I keep,
Oh! God! that bread should be so dear,
40 And flesh and blood so cheap!

"Work—work—work!
My labor never flags;
And what are its wages? A bed of straw,
A crust of bread—and rags.
45 That shatter'd roof,—and this naked floor—
A table—a broken chair—
And a wall so blank, my shadow I thank
For sometimes falling there!

"Work—work—work!
50 From weary chime to chime,
Work—work—work—
As prisoners work for crime!
Band, and gusset, and seam,
Seam, and gusset, and band,
55 Till the heart is sick, and the brain
benumb'd,
As well as the weary hand.

"Work—work—work,
In the dull December light,
And work—work—work,
60 When the weather is warm and bright—
While underneath the eaves
The brooding swallows cling,
As if to show me their sunny backs
And twit me with the spring.

65 "Oh! but to breathe the breath
Of the cowslip and primrose sweet—
With the sky above my head,
And the grass beneath my feet,
For only one short hour
70 To feel as I used to feel,

Before I knew the woes of want
And the walk that costs a meal!

"Oh but for one short hour!
A respite however brief!

- 75 No blessed leisure for love or hope,
But only time for grief!
A little weeping would ease my heart,
But in their briny bed
My tears must stop, for every drop 80 Hinders needle and thread!

- Seam, and gusset, and band,
Baud, and gusset, and seam,
Work, work, work,
Like the engine that works by steam!
85 A mere machine of iron and wood
That toils for Mammon's sake—
Without a brain to ponder and craze,
Or a heart to feel—and break!

- With fingers weary and worn,
90 With eyelids heavy and red,
A woman sate in unwomanly rag—,
Plying her needle and thread—
Stitch! stitch! stitch!
In poverty, hunger, and dirt,
95 And still with a voice of dolorous pitch,
Would that its tone could reach the rich!—
She sang this "Song of the Shirt!"

THE BRIDGE OF SIGHS

1844

Drown'd! drown'd!—Hamlet.¹

One more unfortunate,
Weary of breath,
Rashly importunate,
Gone to her death!

- 5 Take her up tenderly,
Lift her with care;
Fashion'd so slenderly,
Young, and so fair!

- Look at her garments
10 ('linging like cerements;²
Whilst the wave constantly
Drips from her clothing;
Take her up instantly,
Loving, not loathing.—

- 15 Touch her not scornfully;
Think of her mournfully,
Gently and humanly;
Not of the stains of her,
All that remains of her
20 Now is pure womanly.

¹ Act IV. 7. 185.

² waxed cloths used for wrapping dead bodies

Make no deep scrutiny
Into her mutiny
Rash and undutiful
Past all dishonor
25 Death has left on her
Only the beautiful

- Still, for all slips of hers,
One of Eve's family—
Wipe those poor lips of hers
30 Oozing so clammy.

- Loop up her tresses
Escaped from the comb,
Her fair auburn tresses;
Whilst wonderment guesses
35 Where was her home?

- Who was her father?
Who was her mother?
Had she a sister?
Had she a brother?
40 Or was there a dearer one
Still, and a nearer one
Yet, than all other?

- Alas! for the rarity
Of Christian charity
45 Under the sun!
Oh! it was pitiful!
Near a whole city full,
Home she had none!

- Sisterly, brotherly,
50 Fatherly, motherly,
Feelings had changed
Love, by harsh evidence,
Thrown from its eminence;
Even God's providence
55 Seeming estranged.

- Where the lamps quiver
So far in the river,
With many a light
From window and casement,
60 From garret to basement,
She stood, with amazement,
Houseless by night.

- The bleak wind of March
Made her tremble and shiver;
65 But not the dark arch,
Or the black flowing river
Mad from life's history.
Glad to death's mystery,
Swift to be hurl'd—
70 Anywhere, anywhere,
Out of the world!

In she plunged boldly,
 No matter how coldly
 The rough river ran,— 75 Over the brink of it,
 Picture it—think of it,
 Dissolute man!
 Lave in it, drink of it.
 Then, if you can!

80 Take her up tenderly,
 Lift her with care,
 Fashion'd so slenderly,
 Young, and so fair!

Ere her limbs frigidly
 85 Stiffen too rigidly,
 Decently,—kindly,— Smoothe and compose them.
 And her eyes, close them,
 Staring so blindly!

90 Dreadfully staring
 Thro' muddy impurity,
 As when with the dawning
 Last look of despairing,
 Fix'd on futurity

95 Perishing gloomily,
 Spurr'd by contumely,
 Cold inhumanity.
 Burning insanity,
 Into her rest —

100 Cross her hands humbly.
 As if praying dumbly,
 Over her breast!

Owning her weakness,
 Her evil behaviour,
 105 And leaving, with meekness,
 Her sins to her Savior!

THE LAY OF THE LABORER

1844 1844

A spade! a rake! a hoe!
 A pickaxe, or a bill!
 A hook to reap, or a scythe to mow,
 A flail, or what ye will—
 5 And here's a ready hand
 To ply the needful tool,
 And skill'd enough, by lessons rough,
 In Labor's rugged school.

To hedge, or dig the ditch,
 10 To lop or fell the tree,
 To lay the swarth on the sultry field,
 Or plough the stubborn lea;

1 A kind of pruning tool.

The harvest stack to bind,
 The wheaten rick to thatch,
 15 And never fear in my pouch to find
 The tinder or the match.¹

To a flaming barn or farm
 My fancies never roam;
 The fire I yearn to kindle and burn
 20 Is on the hearth of home;
 Where children huddle and crouch
 Through dark long winter days,
 Where starving children huddle and crouch,
 To see the cheerful rays,
 25 A-glowing on the haggard cheek,
 And not in the haggard's² blaze!

To Him who sends a drought
 To parch the fields forlorn,
 The rain to flood the meadows with mud,
 30 The lights to blast the corn,³
 To Him I leave to guide
 The bolt in its crooked path.
 To strike the miser's rick, and show
 The skies blood-red with wrath

35 A spade! a rake! a hoe!
 A pickaxe, or a bill!
 A hook to reap, or a scythe to mow,
 A flail, or what ye will—
 The corn to thrash, or the hedge to plash,⁴
 40 The market-team to drive,
 Or mend the fence by the cover side,⁵
 And leave the game alive.

Ay, only give me work,
 And then you need not fear
 45 That I shall snare his worship's hare,
 Or kill his grace's deer,
 Break into his lordship's house,
 To steal the plate so rich;
 Or leave the yeoman that had a purse
 50 To welter in a ditch.

Wherever Nature needs,
 Wherever Labor calls,
 No job I'll shrink of the hardest work,
 To shun the workhouse wall.
 55 Where savage laws begrudge
 The pauper babe its breath,
 And doom a wife to a widow's life,
 Before her partner's death.

¹ A reference to the rick-burning disorders in the agricultural counties of southern England in 1830 &c. See Martineau's The History of England, 3, 286-88

² stack-yard's

³ wheat

⁴ trim and intertwine

⁵ That is, along the woods, undergrowth, etc., that serve to shelter wild animals and game. Game is not so sacred in America as in England.

My only claim is this,
 60 With labor stiff and stark,
 By lawful turn, my living to earn,
 Between the light and dark;
 My daily bread, and nightly bed,
 My bacon, and drop of beer—
 65 But all from the hand that holds the land,
 And none from the overseer¹

No parish money, or loaf,
 No pauper badges for me,
 A son of the soil, by right of toil
 70 Entitled to my fee²
 No alms I ask, give me my task.
 Here are the arm, the leg,
 The strength, the sinews of a man,
 To work, and not to beg.
 75 Still one of Adam's heirs,
 Though doom'd by chance of birth
 To dress so mean, and to eat the lean
 Instead of the fat of the earth;³
 To make such humble meals
 80 As honest labor can,
 A bone and a crust, with a grace to God,
 And little thanks to man⁴

A spade! a rake! a hoe!
 A pickaxe, or a bill!
 85 A hook to reap, or a scythe to mow,
 A flail, or what ye will—
 Whatever the tool to ply,
 Here is a willing drudge.
 With muscle and limb, and woe to him
 90 Who does their pay begrudge¹

Who every weekly score
 Docks labor's little mite,
 Bestows on the poor at the temple door,
 But robb'd them over night
 95 The very shilling he hoped to save,
 As health and morals fail,
 Shall visit me in the New Bastille,
 The Spital,⁴ or the Gaol¹

STANZAS 1845

Farewell, life! My senses swim;
 And the world is growing dim;
 Thronging shadows cloud the light,
 Like the advent of the night,—
 5 Colder, colder, colder still Upward steals a vapor chill—
 Strong the earthy odor grows—
 I smell the mould above the rose¹

¹ The overseer of the poor

² wages

³ See Genius, 45 18.

⁴ hospital

Welcome, life! the Spirit strives!
 10 Strength returns, and hope revives;
 Cloudy fears and shapes forlorn
 Fly like shadows at the morn,—
 O'er the earth there comes a bloom—
 Sunny light for sullen gloom,
 15 Warm perfume for vapor cold—
 I smell the rose above the mould¹

QUEEN MAB

A little fairy comes at night,
 Her eyes are blue, her hair is brown,
 With silver spots upon her wings,
 And from the moon she flutters down.

5 She has a little silver wand,
 And when a good child goes to bed
 She waves her wand from right to left,
 And makes a circle round its head

And then it dreams of pleasant things,
 10 Of fountains filled with fairy fish,
 And trees that bear delicious fruit,
 And bow their branches at a wish

Of arbors filled with dainty scents
 From lovely flowers that never fade;
 15 Bright flies that glitter in the sun,
 And glow-worms shining in the shade

And talking birds with gifted tongues,
 For singing songs and telling tales,
 And pretty dwarfs to show the way
 20 Through fairy hills and fairy dales.

But when a bad child goes to bed,
 From left to right she weaves her rings,
 And then it dreams all through the night
 Of only ugly horrid things¹

25 Then lions come with glaring eyes,
 And tigers growl, a dreadful noise,
 And ogres draw their cruel knives,
 To shed the blood of girls and boys

Then stormy waves rush on to drown,
 30 Or raging flames come scorching round,
 Fierce dragons hover in the air,
 And serpents crawl along the ground.

Then wicked children wake and weep,
 And wish the long black gloom away;
 35 But good ones love the dark, and find
 The night as pleasant as the day.

WINTHROP MACKWORTH PRAED (1802-1839)

From THE TROUBADOUR
1823-24

SPIRITS, THAT WALK AND WAIL TONIGHT

Spirits, that walk and wail tonight,
I feel, I feel that ye are near;
There is a mist upon my sight,
There is a murmur in mine ear,
5 And a dark, dark dread
Of the lonely dead
Creeps through the whispering atmosphere!

Ye hover o'er the hoary trees,
And the old oaks stand bereft and bare;
10 Ye hover o'er the moonlight seas,
And the tall masts rot in the poisoned air;
Ye gaze on the gate
Of earthly state,
And the bandog¹ shivers in silence there.

15 Come hither to me upon your cloud,
And tell me of your bliss or pain,
And let me see your shadowy shroud,
And colorless lip, and bloodless vein,
Where do ye dwell,
20 In heaven or hell?
And why do ye wander on earth again?

Tell me where and how ye died,
Fell ye in darkness, or fell ye in day,
On lorn hill-side, or roaring tide,
25 In gorgeous feast, or rushing fray?
By bowl or blow,
From friend or foe,
Hurried your angry souls away?

Mute ye come, and mute ye pass,
30 Your tale untold, your shrift unshriven;
But ye have blighted the pale grass,
And scared the ghastly stars from heaven;
And guilt hath known
Your voiceless moan,
35 And felt that the blood is unforgiven!

OH FLY WITH ME! 'TIS PASSION'S HOUR

Oh fly with me! 'tis Passion's hour;
The world is gone to sleep;
And nothing wakes in brake² or bower,
But those who love and weep:
5 This is the golden time and weather,
When songs and sighs go out together,

¹ A dog kept tied either as a watch dog or because he is ferocious
² thicket

And minstrels pledge the rosy wine
To lutes like this, and lips like thine!

Oh fly with me! my courser's flight
10 Is like the rushing breeze, [night]
And the kind moon has said "Good
And sunk behind the trees
The lover's voice—the loved one's ear—
There's nothing else to speak or hear;
15 And we will say, as on we glide,
That nothing lives on earth beside!

Oh fly with me! and we will wing
Our white skiff o'er the waves,
And hear the Tritons revelling
20 Among their coral caves;
The envious mermaid, when we pass,
Shall cease her song, and drop her glass;
For it will break her very heart,
To see how fair and dear thou art.

25 Oh fly with me! and we will dwell
Far over the green seas,
Where sadness rings no parting knell
For moments such as these!
Where Italy's unclouded skies
30 Look brightly down on brighter eyes,
(Or where the wave-wed City¹ smiles;
Enthroned upon her hundred isles.

Oh fly with me! by these sweet strings
Swept o'er by Passion's fingers,
35 By all the rocks, and vales, and springs
Where Memory lives and lingers,
By all the tongue can never tell,
By all the heart has told so well,
By all that has been or may be,
40 And by Love's self—Oh fly with me!

TIME'S SONG 1826

O'er the level plains, where mountains greet me as I go,
O'er the desert waste, where fountains at my bidding flow,
On the boundless beam by day, on the cloud
by night,
I am riding hence away: who will chain
my flight?

5 War his weary watch was keeping,—I have crushed his spear;
Grief within her bower was weeping,—I have dried her tear;
Pleasure caught a minute's hold,—then I hurried by,

¹ Venice, which according to an old story was wed to the Adriatic Sea. See Wordsworth's
On the Extinction of the Venetian Republic
(p. 286 and n. 2).

Leaving all her banquet cold, and her goblet dry.

Power had won a throne of glory: where is now his fame?

10 Genius said, "I live in story:" who hath heard his name?

Love beneath a myrtle¹ bough whispered
"Why so fast?"

And the roses on his brow withered as I past.

I have heard the heifer lowing o'er the wild wave's bed;

I have seen the billow flowing where the cattle fed;

15 Where began my wandering? Memory will not say!

Where will rest my weary wings? Science turns away!

From LETTERS FROM TEIGNMOUTH
1829

I—OUR BALL

*Comment! c'est lui? que je le regarde encore!
'Est-ce que vraiment il est bien changé; n'est-ce pas, mon papa?—Les Premier Amours.*

You'll come to our ball;—since we parted
I've thought of you more than I'll say;
Indeed, I was half broken-hearted

For a week, when they took you away
5 Fond fancy brought back to my slumbers
Our walks on the Ness and the Den,
And echoed the musical numbers

Which you used to sing to me then.
I know the romance, since it's over,

10 'Twere idle, or worse, to recall;—
I know you're a terrible rover;
But, Clarence, you'll come to our Ball!

It's only a year since, at College,
You put on your cap and your gown;

15 But, Clarence, you're grown out of knowledge,
And changed from the spur to the crown;
The voice that was best when it faltered.

Is fuller and firmer in tone:
And the smile that should never have altered,—

20 Dear Clarence,—it is not your own;
Your cravat was badly selected,
Your coat don't become you at all;

And why is your hair so neglected?
You must have it curled for our Ball.

1 The myrtle and the rose are emblems of love.
2 What's it he? Let me look at him again!
He certainly has changed considerably;
hasn't he, papa?

25 I've often been out upon Haldon
To look for a covey with Pup;
I've often been over to Shaldon,
To see how your boat is laid up.

In spite of the terrors of Aunty,
30 I've ridden the filly you broke;
And I've studied your sweet little Dante
In the shade of your favorite oak:

When I sat in July to Sir Lawrence,
I sat in your love of a shawl;

35 And I'll wear what you brought me from Florence,
Perhaps, if you'll come to our Ball.

You'll find us all changed since you vanished;

We've set up a National School;¹
And waltzing is utterly banished;

40 And Ellen has married a fool;
The Major is going to travel;
Miss Hyacinth threatens a rout;²
The walk is laid down with fresh gravel;

Papa is laid up with the gout;
45 And Jane has gone on with her easels,
And Anne has gone off with Sir Paul;

And Fanny is sick with the measles,
And I'll tell you the rest at the Ball.

You'll meet all your beauties;—the Lily,
50 And the Fairy of Willowbrook Farm,
And Lucy, who made me so silly
At Dawlish, by taking your arm;

Miss Manners, who always abused you,
For talking so much about Hock;³

55 And her sister, who often amused you,
By raving of rebels and Rock;⁴
And something which surely would answer,
An heiress quite fresh from Bengal:—

So, though you were seldom a dancer,
60 You'll dance, just for once, at our Ball.

But out on the world!—from the flowers
It shuts out the sunshine of truth;

It blights the green leaves in the bowers,
It makes an old age of our youth:

65 And the flow of our feeling, once in it,
Like a streamlet beginning to freeze,
Though it cannot turn ice in a minute,
Grows harder by sudden degrees.

Time treads o'er the graves of affection.
70 Sweet honey is turned into gall;

Perhaps you have no recollection
That ever you danced at our Ball.

¹ A school established by a national society for educating the poor.

² A large evening party or other fashionable gathering.

³ Hochheimer, a kind of wine.

⁴ A fictitious name signed to public notices by one of the Irish rebels of 1822.

You once could be pleased with our ballads—

Today you have critical ears;

75 You once could be charmed with our salads—

Alas! you've been dining with Peers;

You trifled and flirted with many;

You've forgotten the when and the how;

There was one you liked better than any—

80 Perhaps you've forgotten her now.

But of those you remember most newly,

Of those who delight or enthrall,

None love you a quarter so truly

As some you will find at our Ball.

85 They tell me you've many who flatter,

Because of your wit and your song;

They tell me (and what does it matter?)

You like to be praised by the throng;

They tell me you're shadowed with laurel,

90 They tell me you're loved by a Blue;¹

They tell me you're sadly immoral—

Dear Clarence, that cannot be true!

But to me you are still what I found you

Before you grew clever and tall;

95 And you'll think of the spell that once bound you;

And you'll come, won't you come? to our Ball?

From EVERY-DAY CHARACTERS

1829-30

THE BELLE OF THE BALL-ROOM

Il faut juger des femmes depuis la chaussure jusqu'à la culture exclusivement, à peu près comme on mesure le poisson entre queue et tête.²—LA BRUYÈRE

Years—years ago,—ere yet my dreams

Had been of being wise or witty,—

Ere I had done with writing themes,

Or yawned o'er this infernal Chitty,—

5 Years—years ago,—while all my joy

Was in my fowling-piece and silly,—

In short, while I was yet a boy,

I fell in love with Laura Lily.

I saw her at the County Ball.

10 There, when the sounds of flute and fiddle

Gave signal sweet in that old hall

Of hands across and down the middle,

Hers was the subtlest spell by far

Of all that set young hearts romancing.

15 She was our queen, our rose, our star;

And then she danced—O Heaven, her dancing!

¹ A "blue stocking," a woman affecting an interest in literature and politics. See Byron's Don Juan, I, 208, 3, and n. 1 (p. 585)

² One ought to judge women exclusive of their foot-wear and their head-wear, approximately as one measures fish between tail and head

Dark was her hair, her hand was white,

Her voice was exquisitely tender,

Her eyes were full of liquid light;

20 I never saw a waist so slender!

Her every look, her every smile,

Shot right and left a score of arrows,

I thought 'twas Venus from her isle.

And wondered where she'd left her sparrows.¹

25 She talked,—of politics or prayers,—

Of Southey's prose or Wordsworth's sonnets,—

Of dangles—or of dancing bears,

Of battles—or the last new bonnets,

By candlelight, at twelve o'clock,

30 To me it mattered not a tittle;

If those bright lips had quoted Locke.

I might have thought they murmured Little.

Through sunny May, through sultry June,

I loved her with a love eternal,

35 I spoke her praises to the moon,

I wrote them to The Sunday Journal.

My mother laughed; I soon found out

That ancient ladies have no feeling:

My father frowned, but how should gout

40 See any happiness in kneeling?

She was the daughter of a Dean,

Rich, fat, and rather apoplectic,

She had one brother, just thirteen,

Whose color was extremely hectic,

45 Her grandmother for many a year

Had fed the parish with her bounty;

Her second cousin was a peer,

And Lord Lieutenant of the County.

But titles, and the three per cent.²

50 And mortgages, and great relations,

And India bonds, and tithes³ and rents,

Oh, what are they to love's sensations?

Black eyes, fair forehead, clustering locks—

Such wealth, such honors, Cupid chooses;

55 He cares as little for the Stocks,

As Baron Rothschild for the Muses.

She sketched; the vale, the wood, the beach,

Grew lovelier from her pencil's shading

She botanized; I envied each

60 Young blossom in her boudoir fading

She warbled Handel; it was grand.

She made the Catalani jealous

She touched the organ; I could stand

For hours and hours to blow the bellows.

¹ Sparrows were sacred to Venus

² Government bonds yielding three per cent interest.

³ A tithe is a tenth part of the yearly income paid for the support of the clergy and the church.

- 65 She kept an album, too, at home,
Well filled with all an album's glories;
Paintings of butterflies, and Rome,
Patterns for trimmings, Persian stories;
Soft songs to Julia's cockatoo,
70 Fierce odes to Famine and to Slaughter;
And autographs of Prince Leboo,
And recipes for elder-water.¹

And she was flattered, worshipped, bored;
Her steps were watched, her dress was noted,

- 75 Her poodle dog was quite adored,
Her sayings were extremely quoted;
She laughed, and every heart was glad,
As if the taxes were abolished;
She frowned, and every look was sad,
80 As if the Opera were demolished.

She smiled on many, just for fun,—
I knew that there was nothing in it,
I was the first—the only one
Her heart had thought of for a minute.—

- 85 I knew it, for she told me so,
In phrase which was divinely moulded;
She wrote a charming hand,—and oh!
How sweetly all her notes were folded!

Our love was like most other loves,—

- 90 A little glow, a little shiver,
A rose-bud, and a pair of gloves,
And "Fly not yet"—upon the river;
Some jealousy of some one's hen,
Some hopes of dying broken-hearted;
95 A miniature, a lock of hair,
The usual vows,—and then we parted.

We parted: months and years rolled by;

- We met again four summers after:
Our parting was all sob and sigh;
100 Our meeting was all mirth and laughter:
For in my heart's most secret cell
There had been many other lodgers;
And she was not the ball-room's belle,
But only—Mrs. Something Rogers!

TELL HIM I LOVE HIM YET

- Tell him I love him yet,
As in that joyous time;
Tell him I ne'er forget,
Though memory now be crime;
5 Tell him, when sad moonlight
Is over earth and sea,
I dream of him by night,—
He must not dream of me!

¹ Probably some sort of lotion made from elder leaves or berries.

- Tell him to go where Fame
10 Looks proudly on the brave;
Tell him to win a name
By deeds on land and wave;
Green—green upon his brow
The laurel wreath shall be;
15 Although the laurel now
May not be shared with me.

- Tell him to smile again
In Pleasure's dazzling throng,
'To wear another's chain,
20 To praise another's song.
Before the loveliest there
I'd have him bend his knee,
And breathe to her the prayer
He used to breathe to me.

- 25 And tell him, day by day,
Life looks to me more dim,
I falter when I pray,
Although I pray for him.
And bid him when I die,
30 Come to our favorite tree;
I shall not hear him sigh,—
Then let him sigh for me!

FAIRY SONG

He has conn'd the lesson now,
He has read the book of pain:
There are furrows on his brow;
I must make it smooth again.

- 5 Lo! I knock the spurs away,
Lo! I loosen belt and brand;
Hark! I hear the courser neigh
For his stall in Fairy-land.

- Bring the cap, and bring the vest;
10 Buckle on his sandal shoon;
Fetch his memory from the chest
In the treasury of the moon.

- I have taught him to be wise
For a little maiden's sake;—
15 Lo! he opens his glad eyes,
Softly, slowly: Minstrel, wake!

STANZAS

O'er yon churchyard the storm may lower;
But, heedless of the wintry air,
One little bud shall linger there,
A still and trembling flower

- 5 Unscathed by long revolving years,
Its tender leaves shall flourish yet,
And sparkle in the moonlight, wet
With the pale dew of tears.

And where thine humble ashes lie,
 10 Instead of 'scutcheon or of stone,
 It rises o'er thee, lonely one,
 Child of obscurity!

Mild was thy voice as Zephyr's breath,
 Thy cheek with flowing locks was shaded!

15 But the voice hath died, the cheek hath faded
 In the cold breeze of death!

Brightly thine eye was smiling, sweet!
 But now decay hath stilled its glancing;
 Warmly thy little heart was dancing,
 20 But it hath ceased to beat!

A few short months—and thou wert here!
 Hope sat upon thy youthful brow;
 And what is thy memorial now?
 A flower—and a Tear.

THE TALENTED MAN

A LETTER FROM A LADY IN LONDON TO A LADY AT LAUSANNE
 1831

Dear Alice! you'll laugh when you know it,—

Last week, at the Duchess's ball,
 I danced with the clever new poel,—
 You've heard of him,—Tully St. Paul.

5 Miss Jonquil was perfectly frantic;
 I wish you had seen Lady Anne!
 It really was very romantic,
 He is such a talented man!

He came up from Brazenose College,
 10 Just caught, as they call it, this spring;
 And his head, love, is stuffed full of knowledge

Of every conceivable thing.
 Of science and logic he chatters,
 As fine and as fast as he can;

15 Though I am no judge of such matters,
 I'm sure he's a talented man.

His stories and jests are delightful;—
 Not stories, or jests, dear, for you;
 The jests are exceedingly spiteful,

20 The stories not always quite true.
 Perhaps to be kind and veracious
 May do pretty well at Lausanne;
 But it never would answer,—good gracious!
*Ches nous*¹—in a talented man.

25 He sneers,—how my Alice would scold him!

At the bliss of a sigh or a tear;

¹ with us

He laughed—only think!—when I told him
 How we cried o'er Trevelyan last year;
 I vow I was quite in a passion;
 30 I broke all the sticks of my fan;
 But sentiment's quite out of fashion,
 It seems, in a talented man.

Lady Bab, who is terribly moral,
 Has told me that Tully is vain,
 35 And apt—which is silly—to quarrel,
 And fond—which is sad—of champagne.
 I listened, and doubted, dear Alice,
 For I saw, when my Lady began,
 It was only the Dowager's malice;—
 40 She does hate a talented man!

He's hideous, I own it. But fame, love,
 Is all that these eyes can adore;
 He's lame,—but Lord Byron was lame,
 love,

And dumpy,—but so is Tom Moore.
 45 Then his voice,—such a voice! my sweet creature,
 It's like your Aunt Lucy's toucan ¹
 But oh! what's a tone or a feature,
 When once one's a talented man?

My mother, you know, all the season,
 50 Has talked of Sir Geoffrey's estate;
 And truly, to do the fool reason,
 He has been less horrid of late.
 But today, when we drive in the carriage,
 I'll tell her to lay down her plan;—
 55 If ever I venture on marriage
 It must be a talented man!

P. S.—I have found on reflection,
 One fault in my friend,—entre nous,²
 Without it, he'd just be perfection;—
 60 Poor fellow, he has not a sow!
 And so, when he comes in September
 To shoot with my uncle, Sir Dan,
 I've promised mamma to remember
 He's only a talented man!

STANZAS

ON SEEING THE SPEAKER ASLEEP IN HIS CHAIR
 DURING ONE OF THE DEBATES OF THE
 FIRST REFORMED PARLIAMENTS³
 1833 1833

Sleep, Mr. Speaker; it's surely fair
 If you don't in your bed, that you should in your chair,
 Longer and longer still they grow,

¹ A brilliantly-colored tropical bird with a harsh voice.

² between you and me

³ The Parliament which met in 1833, the year following the passage of the Reform Bill Manners Sutton, a Tory, was Speaker of the House of Commons. Praed was a Tory member of the House at that time. He had been a Whig until 1830.

Tory and Radical, Aye and No;
 5 Talking by night, and talking by day;—
 Sleep, Mr. Speaker; sleep, sleep while you may!

Sleep, Mr. Speaker; slumber lies
 Light and brief on a Speaker's eyes,
 Fielden or Funn, in a minute or two,
 10 Some disorderly thing will do;
 Riot will chase repose away,—
 Sleep, Mr. Speaker, sleep, sleep while you may!

Sleep, Mr. Speaker; Cobbett will soon
 Move to abolish the sun and moon;
 15 Hume, no doubt, will be taking the sense
 Of the House on a saving of thirteen pence;
 Grattan will growl, or Baldwin bray;—
 Sleep, Mr. Speaker; sleep, sleep while you may!

Sleep, Mr. Speaker; dream of the time
 20 When loyalty was not quite a crime;
 When Grant was a pupil in Canning's school,
 When Palmerston fancied Wood a fool;
 Lord, how principles pass away!
 Sleep, Mr. Speaker, sleep, sleep while you may!

25 Sleep, Mr. Speaker; sweet to men
 Is the sleep that cometh but now and then,
 Sweet to the sorrowful, sweet to the ill,
 Sweet to the children that work in a mill,
 You have more need of sleep than they;—
 30 Sleep, Mr. Speaker; sleep, sleep while you may!

ROBERT STEPHEN HAWKER (1804-1873)

THE SONG OF THE WESTERN MEN 1825 1826

A good sword and a trusty hand!
 A merry heart and true!
 King James's¹ men shall understand
 What Cornish lads can do.

5 And have they fix'd the where and when?
 And shall Trelawny die?
 Here's twenty thousand Cornish men
 Will know the reason why!

Out spake their captain brave and bold.
 10 A merry wight² was he:
 "If London Tower were Michael's hold,
 We'll set Trelawny free!"

¹ James II, King of England (1685-88).
² creature; being

"We'll cross the Tamar, land to land,
 The Severn is no stay,
 15 With 'one and all,' and hand in hand,
 And who shall bid us nay?"

"And when we come to London Wall,
 A pleasant sight to view.
 Come forth! come forth, ye cowards all,
 20 Here's men as good as you!"

"Trelawny he's in keep and hold,
 Trelawny he may die,
 But here's twenty thousand Cornish hold
 Will know the reason why!"

CLOVELLY

1825 1832

Oh! laborum dulce lenimen "

'Tis eve! 'tis glimmering eve! how fair the scene,
 Touched by the soft hues of the dreamy west!

Dim hills afar, and happy vales between,
 With the tall corn's² deep furrow calmly
 blest:

5 Beneath, the sea, by eve's fond gale caress'd,
 'Mid groves of living green that fringe its side;

Dark sails that gleam on Ocean's heaving breast

From the glad fisher-barks that homeward glide,

To make Clovelly's shores at pleasant evening-tide.

10 Harken! the mingling sounds of earth and sea,

The pastoral music of the bleating flock,
 Blent with the sea-birds' uncouth melody,
 The waves' deep murmur to the unheed-
 ing rock,

And ever and anon the impatient shock
 15 Of some strong billow on the sounding shore:

And hark! the rowers' deep and well-known stroke.

Glad hearts are there, and joyful hands once more

Furrow the whitening wave with their returning oar.

But turn where Art with votive hand hath twined

20 A living wreath for Nature's grateful brow,

¹ Oh! sweet solace of labor.—Horace, Odes, 1, 12, 14.
² wheat's

Where the lone wanderer's raptur'd footsteps wind

'Mid rock, and glancing stream, and shadowy bough,

Where scarce the valley's leafy depths allow

The intruding sunbeam in their shade to dwell,

25 There doth the seaniad breathe her human vow—

So village maidens in their envy tell—Won from her dark blue home by that alluring dell.

A softer beauty floats along the sky,
The moonbeam dwells upon the voiceless wave;

30 Far off, the night-winds steal away and die,
Or sleep in music in their ocean-cave.

Tall oaks, whose strength the Giant Storm might brave,

Bend in rude fondness o'er the silvery
sea;

Nor can yon mountain raun¹ forbear to lave

35 Her blushing clusters where the waters be,

Murmuring around her home such touching melody

Thou quaint Clovelly! in thy shades of rest,
When timid Spring her pleasant task hath sped,

Or Summer pours from her redundant
breast

40 All fruits and flowers along thy valley's bed:

Yes! and when Autumn's golden glories spread,

Till we forget near Winter's withering rage,

What fairer path shall woo the wanderer's tread,

Soothe wearied hope, and worn regret assuage?

45 Lo! for firm youth a bower—a home for lapsing age

THE FIRST FATHERS²

They rear'd their lodges in the wilderness,
On built them cells beside the shadowy sea,
And there they dwelt with angels, like a dream!

So they unroll'd the Volume of the Book

5 And fill'd the fields of the Evangelist
With thoughts as sweet as flowers.

¹ The Scottish rowan, or mountain ash

² That is, of the church.

MAWGAN OF MELHUACH¹ 1832

'Twas a fierce night when old Mawgan died,
Men shudder'd to hear the rolling tide.

The wreckers fled fast from the awful
shore,

They had heard strange voices amid the roar.

5 "Out with the boat there," some one cried,—

"Will he never come? we shall lose the tide:

His berth is trim and his cabin stor'd,
He's a weary long time coming on board "

The old man struggled upon the bed:

10 He knew the words that the voices said,
Wildly he shriek'd as his eyes grew dim,
"He was dead! he was dead! when I buried him."

Hark yet again to the devilish roar,

"He was numbler once with a ship on shore,

15 'Come! come! old man, 'tis a vain delay,
We must make the offing by break of day "

Hard was the struggle, but at the last,
With a stormy pang, old Mawgan past,

20 And away, away, beneath their sight,
Glean'd the red sail at pitch of night.

FEATHERSTONE'S DOOM² 1831 1832

Twist thou and twine,³ in light and gloom
A spell is on thine hand,

The wind shall be thy changeful loom,
Thy web the shifting sand

5 Twine from this hour, in ceaseless toil,
On Blackrock's sullen shore,

Till cordage of the sand shall coil
Where crested surges roar.

'Tis for that hour, when, from the wave,

10 Near voices wildly cried,
When thy stern hand no succor gave,
The cable at thy side.

¹ Gilbert Mawgan, a noted wrecker on the sea-shore at Melhuach, Cornwall, is said to have buried alive a sea captain whom he found exhausted on the shore. It is reported that as Mawgan lay dying a vessel came into Melhuach Bay, and remained there until his death.

² Featherstone was a wrecker whose troubled spirit was supposed to be imprisoned on Blackrock, a prominent rock in Rude Bay, off the coast of Cornwall, until he should have accomplished his doom.

³ See Scott's Twist Ye, Twine Ye, 1 (p. 465).

Twist thou and twine! in light and gloom 45
 The spell is on thine hand;
 15 The wind shall be thy changeful loom,
 Thy web the shifting sand.

THE SILENT TOWER OF BOTTREAU
 1831 1832

Tintadgel bells ring o'er the tide,
 The boy leans on his vessel side,
 He hears that sound, and dreams of home
 Soothe the wild orphan of the foam.

5 "Come to thy God in time!"
 Thus saith their pealing chime.
 Youth, manhood, old age past,
 "Come to thy God at last."

But why are Bottreaux' echoes still?
 10 Her tower stands proudly on the hill,
 Yet the strange chough¹ that home hath found,

The lamb lies sleeping on the ground
 "Come to thy God in time!"
 Should be her answering chime.
 15 "Come to thy God at last!"
 Should echo on the blast

The ship rode down with courses free,²
 The daughter of a distant sea.
 Her sheet was loose, her anchor stor'd,
 20 The merry Bottreaux bells on board.
 "Come to thy God in time!"
 Rung out Tintadgel chime;
 Youth, manhood, old age past,
 "Come to thy God at last!"
 25 The pilot heard his native bells
 Hang on the breeze in stifful swells,
 "Thank God," with reverent brow he cried,
 "We make the shore with evening's tide"
 "Come to thy God in time!"
 30 It was his marriage chime.
 Youth, manhood, old age past,
 His bell must ring at last.

"Thank God, thou whining knave, on land,
 But thank, at sea, the steersman's hand," 35 The captain's voice above the gale.
 "Thank the good ship and ready sail."
 "Come to thy God in time!"
 Sad grew the boding chime:
 "Come to thy God at last!"
 40 Boom'd heavy on the blast.

Uprose that sea! as if it heard
 The mighty Master's signal-word.
 What thrills the captain's whitening lip?
 The death-groans of his sinking ship.

¹ A bird of the crow family.

² That is, with the sails attached to the lower yards of the ship hanging loose

"Come to thy God in time!"
 Swung deep the funeral chime:
 Grace, mercy, kindness past,
 "Come to thy God at last!"

Long did the rescued pilot tell—
 50 When gray hairs o'er his forehead fell,
 While those around would hear and weep—
 That fearful judgment of the deep.
 "Come to thy God in time!"
 He read his native chime:
 55 Youth, manhood, old age past,
 His bell rung out at last.

Still when the storm of Bottreaux' waves
 Is wakening in his weedy caves,
 Those bells, that sullen surges hide,
 60 Peal their deep notes beneath the tide.
 "Come to thy God in time!"
 Thus saith the ocean chime:
 Storm, billow, whirlwind past,
 "Come to thy God at last!"

"PATER VESTER PASCIT ILLA"
 1835 1840

Our bark is on the waters: wide around
 The wandering wave; above, the lonely sky.
 Hush! a young sea-bird floats, and that quick cry
 Shrieks to the levell'd weapon's echoing sound,
 5 Grasps its lank wing, and on, with reckless bound!
 Yet, creature of the surf, a sheltering breast
 Tonight shall haunt in vain thy far-off nest,
 A call unanswer'd search the rocky ground.
 Lord of Leviathan! when Ocean heard 10 Thy gathering voice, and sought his native breeze;
 When whales first plunged with life, and the proud deep
 Felt unborn tempests heave in troubled
 sleep;
 Thou didst provide, e'en for this nameless bird,
 Home, and a natural love, amid the surging seas.

DEATH SONG
 1835

There lies a cold corpse upon the sands
 Down by the rolling sea;
 Close up the eyes and straighten the hands,
 As a Christian man's should be.
 5 Bury it deep, for the good of my soul,
 Six feet below the ground;
 Let the sexton come and the death-bell toll,
 And good men stand around.

¹ "Your Father feeds them"—Matthew, 6:26

Lay it among the churchyard stones,
 10 Where the priest hath blessed the clay,
 I cannot leave the unburied bones,
 And I fain would go my way

ARE THEY NOT ALL MINISTERING SPIRITS?
 1840

We see them not—we cannot hear
 The music of their wing—
 Yet know we that they sojourn near,
 The Angels of the spring!

5 They glide along this lovely ground,
 When the first violet grows,
 Their graceful hands have just unbound
 The zone of yonder rose!

I gather it for thy dear breast,
 10 From stain and shadow free,
 That which an Angel's touch hath blest
 Is meet, my love, for thee!

QUEEN GUENNIVAR'S ROUND!
 1841

Naiad for Grecian waters!
 Nymph for the fountain-side!
 But old Cornwall's bounding daughters
 For gray Dundagel's tide.

5 The wild wind proudly gathers
 Round the ladies of the land,
 And the blue wave of their fathers
 If joyful where they stand.

Naiad for Grecian waters!
 10 Nymph for the fountain-side!
 But old Cornwall's bounding daughters
 For gray Dundagel's tide.

Yes! when memory rejoices
 In her long beloved theme,
 15 Fair forms and thrilling voices
 Will mingle with my dream.

Naiad for Grecian waters!
 Nymph for the fountain-side!
 But old Cornwall's bounding daughters
 20 For gray Dundagel's tide

TO ALFRED TENNYSON
 1859

They told me in their shadowy phrase,
 Caught from a tale gone by,
 That Arthur, King of Cornish praise,
 Died not, and would not die.

1 A kind of song sung by two or more persons, each taking up a strain in turn.

5 Dreams had they, that in fairy bowers
 Their living warrior lies,
 Or wears a garland of the flowers
 That grow in Paradise.

I read the rune¹ with deeper ken,
 10 And thus the myth I trace—
 A hard should rise, mid future men,
 The mightiest of his race.

He would great Arthur's deeds rehearse
 On gray Dundagel's shore,
 15 And so the King in laurel'd verse
 Shall live, and die no more!

JOHN WILSON
 ("Christopher North")
 (1785-1854)

From NOCTES AMBROSIANÆ
 1822-35

No. XLII—APRIL, 1829

SCENE I.—The snugger.³—Time, Eight o'clock.—The Union-Table,⁴ with tea and Coffee-pots, and the O'Doherty China-set—*Cold Round—Pies—Oysters—Rizzars*⁵
 5 —*Pickled Salmon, a How-Towdie*⁶ whirling before the fire over a large basin of mashed Potatoes—The Boiler on.—*A Bachelor's Kitchen*⁷ on the small Oval.⁸—A Dumb Waiter at each end of the Union.

NORTH—SHEPHERD⁹

10 Shepherd This I ca' comfort, sir. Everything within ourself—nae need to ring the bell the leevelang night—nae openin' o' cheepin',¹⁰ nae shuttin' o' clashin' doors—nae trampin' o' waiters across the carpet
 15 wi' creakin' shoon¹¹—or stumblin', clumsy coofs¹²—to the great spillin' o' gravy—but a' things, eatable and uneatable, either hushed into a cosy calm, or——
North Now light, James, the lamp of the 20 Bachelor's Kitchen with Tickler's card, and in a quarter of an hour, minus five minutes, you shall scent and see such steaks!
'Shepherd. Only look at the towdy, sir, how she swings sae granly roun' by my 25 garters, after the fashion o' a planet. It's a beautiful example o' centrifugal attraction. See till the fat dreep-dreepin' intil the

¹ A story or poem written in runes, symbols used in writing by early Germanic peoples

² Ambrosian Nights ³ A small room or den

⁴ joined table ⁵ dried herring

⁶ whole young hen

⁷ A vessel in which food is prepared, a Dutch oven

⁸ An elevated stand having an oval shape

⁹ "Christopher North" is a pseudonym of John Wilson, the Shepherd is James Hogg, known as "The Rittick Shepherd"

¹⁰ of squeaking ¹¹ shoes ¹² blockheads

ashet¹ o' mashed potawtoes, oilfying the crusted brown intil a mair delicious richness o' mixed vegetable and animal maitter! As she swings slowly twirling roun', I really canna say, sir, for I dinna ken, whether bany² back or fleshy briest³ be the maist temptin'! Sappy baith!⁴

North. Right, James—baste her—baste her—don't spare the flour. Nothing tells like the dredge-box.⁵

Shepherd. You're a capital man-cook, sir.

North. For plain roast and boil, I yield to no mortal man. Nor am I inconsiderable shakes at stews. What a beautiful blue magical light glimmers from the wonder-working lamp, beneath whose necromancy you already hear the sweet low bubble and squeak of the maturing steak! Off with the lid, James. [The SHEPHERD doffs the lid of the Bachelor's Kitchen.

Shepherd. What a pabblin'!⁶ A hotch-in⁷ like a sea in a squall, or a patfu⁸ o' boilin' parritch!⁹ What a sweet savor! Is't na like honeysuckle, sir, or sweet-brier, or broom, or whuns,¹⁰ or thyme, or rose¹¹, or carnations? Or rather like the scent o' these a' conglomerated thegither in the dewy mornin' air, when, as sune as you open the window, the hail house is overflowing wi' fragrance, and a body's a maist sick with the sweet, warm, thick air, that slowly wins its way, like palpable balm, arm in arm wi' the licht that waukens the yellow-billed blackbird in her nest amang the cottage creepers, or reopens the watchful een¹² o' her neighbor, the bonny spotted mavis!¹³ Let's pree't!¹⁴ [SHEPHERD tastes.

North. Ay—I could have told you so Rash man, to swallow liquid and solid fire! But no more spluttering. Cool your tongue with a caulker!¹⁵

Shepherd. That lamp's no canny.¹⁶ It intensifies betness intil an atrocity abune!¹⁷ natur. Is the skm flyped¹⁸ aff my tongue, sir? [SHEPHERD shows his tongue.

North. Let me put on my spectacles. A slight incipient inflammation not worth mentioning.

Shepherd. I houp¹⁹ an incipient inflammation's no a dangerous sort?

North. Is that indeed the tongue, my dear James, that trills so sweetly and so simply those wild Doric²⁰ strains? How deeply, darkly, beautifully red! Just like a rag of scarlet. No scurf—say rather no haze around the lambent light. A rod of fire¹—an arrow of flame.² A tongue of ten thousand, prophesying an eagle or raven life.

Shepherd. I aye like, sir, to keep a gude tongue in my head, ever since I wrote The Chaldee Manuscript.³

North. Humph!—no more infallible mark of a man of genius, James, than the shape of his tongue. It is uniformly long, so that he can shoot it out, with an easy grace, to the tip of his nose.

Shepherd. This way.

North. Precisely so. Fine all round the edge, from root to tip—underneath very venous—surface in color near as may be to that of a crimson curtain shining in setting sunlight. But the tip—James—the tip—

Shepherd. Like that o' the serpent's that deceived Eve, sir—curlin' up and down like the musical leaf o' some magical tree—

North. It is a singular fact with regard to the tongue, that if you cut off the half of it, the proprietor of the contingent remainder can only mumble—but cut it off wholly, and he speaks fully better than before.

Shepherd. That's a hang'd lee.

North. As true a word as ever I spoke, James.

Shepherd. Perhaps it may, sir, but it's a hang'd lee, nevertheless.

North. Dish the steaks, my dear James, and I shall cut down the howtowdie.

[NORTH and the SHEPHERD furnish up the Ambrosial tables, and sit down to serious devouring

North. Now, James, acknowledge it—don't you admire a miscellaneous meal?

Shepherd. I do. Breakfast, noon⁴, dinner, four-hours,⁵ and sooper a' in ane. A material emblem o' that spiritual substance, Blackwood's Magazine! Can it possibly be, sir, that we are two gluttons?

North. Gluttons we most assuredly are not; but each of us is a man of good appetite. What is gluttony?

Shepherd. Some mair steaks, sir?

North. Very few, my dear James, very few.

Shepherd. What's gluttony?

North. Some eggs!

¹ fish; platter

² bony

³ breast

⁴ juicy both

⁵ flour-sifter

⁶ bubbling

⁷ shaking

⁸ potful

⁹ porridge

¹⁰ turse; gorse

¹¹ eyes

¹² thrush

¹³ taste it

¹⁴ drink of liquor

¹⁵ not trustworthy

¹⁶ above

¹⁷ peeled

¹⁸ hope

¹⁹ simple; natural

¹ See James, 3:8

² See Jeremiah, 9:8

³ The Chaldee MS, the joint work of Hogg, Wilson, and Lockhart, appeared in Blackwood's Magazine, October, 1817 (vol. 2, pp. 89 ff.). It was a bitter satire, written in Biblical language, against the notables of Edinburgh; it gave such offence that it immediately was withdrawn

⁴ ten-o'clock lunch.

⁵ four-o'clock lunch.

Shepherd. Ae¹ spoonfu'. What a layer she had hae been. O but she's a prolific creature, Mr. North, your howtowdie! It's necessary to kill heaps o' yearocks,² or the hail kintra³ wud be a-cackle frae John o' Groat's House to St. Michael's Mount.⁴

North. Sometimes I eat meily as an amusement or pastime—sometimes for recreation of my animal spirits—sometimes on the philosophical principle of sustenance—sometimes for the mere sensual, but scarcely sinful, pleasure of eating, or, in common language, gormandizing—and occasionally, once a month or so, for all these several purposes united, as at this present blessed moment; so a few flakes, dear Shepherd, of that Westmoreland ham—lay the knife on it, and its own weight will sink it down through the soft sweet sappiness of fat and lean, undistinguishably blended as the colors of the rainbow, and out of all sight incomparably more beautiful.

Shepherd. As for me, I care nae mair about what I eat, than I do what kind o' bed I sleep upon, sir. I hate onything stinkin' or moldy at board—or onything damp or musty in bed. But let the vivres⁵ be but fresh and wholesome—and if it's but scones⁶ and milk, I shut my een, say a grace, fa' to, and am thankfu'.—let the bed be dry, and whether saft or hard, feathers, hair, caff,⁷ straw, or heather, I'm fast in ten minutes, and my soul waverin' awa like a butterfly until the land o' dreams.

North. Not a more abstemious man than old Kit North in his Majesty's dominions, on which the sun never sets. I have the most accommodating of palates.

Shepherd. Yes—it's a universal genius. I ken naething like it, sir, but your stomach. "Sure such a pair were never seen!" Had ye never the colic?

North. Never, James, never. I confess that I have been guilty of many crimes, but never of a capital crime,—never of colic.

Shepherd. There's muckle⁸ confusion o' ideans in the brains of the blockheads who accuse us o' gluttony, Mr. North. Gluttony may be defined "an immoral and unintellectual abandonment o' the sowl o' man to his gustative natur." I defy a brute animal to be a glutton. A swine's no a glutton. Nae cretur but man can be a glutton. A' the rest are prevented by the definition.

North. Is there any test of gluttony, James?

Shepherd. Watch twa men eatin'. As lang's there's a power or capacity o' smilin' on their cheeks, and in and about their een,—as lang's they keep lookin' at you, and round about the table, attendin' to or joinin' in the tank, or the speakin' cawm,¹—as lang's they every noo an' than lay doon their knife and fork, to ca' for yill,² or ask a young leddy to tak wine, or tell an anecdote,—as lang's they keep frequently ca'in' on the servant lad or lass for a clean plate—as lang's they glower on the framed pictures or prents on the wa', and askin' if the tane's³ originals and the tither⁴ proofs,—as lang's they offer to carve the tongue or turkey—depend on't they're no in a state o' gluttony, but are devourin' their soup, fish, flesh, and fowl, like men and Christians. But as sune's their clun gets creeshy⁵—their cheeks lank, sallow, and clunk-clunky⁶—their nos-tails wide—their een fixed—their faces close to their trencher—and themsel's dumbies⁷—then you may see a specimen "o' the immoral and unintellectual abandonment o' the sowl o' man to his gustative natur;" then is the fast, foul, fat feeder a glutton, the maist disgustfuest cretur that sits—and far aneath the level o' them that feed on a' fowers, out o' trochs⁸ on garbage.

North. Sensuality is the most shocking of all sins, and its name is Legion.

Shepherd. Ay, there may be as muckle gluttony on sowens⁹ as on turtle soup. A ploughman may be as greedy and as gutsy¹⁰ as an alderman. The sin lies not in the sense but in the sowl. Sir—a red-herring?

North. Thank ye, James.

Shepherd. Are you diinkin' coffee? Let me toast you a shawe o' bread, and butter it for you on baith sides, sir?

[The SHEPHERD kneels on the Tiger,¹¹ and stretches out the Trident¹² to Vulcan¹³]

North. Heaven will reward ye, James, for your piety to the old man.

Shepherd. Dinna think, sir, that I care about your last wull and testament. I'm

¹ one ² hens one year old ³ whole country
⁴ that is, from one end of the country to the other. John o' Groat's House is a locality in the extreme north-eastern part of Scotland.
⁵ Saint Michael's Mount is a rock off the coast of Cornwall.
⁶ victuals ⁷ chaff ⁸ much; great
⁹ gridle cakes

¹ calm ² shabby
³ ale ⁴ dummies
⁵ one's ⁶ troughs
⁷ other ⁸ porridge
⁹ greasy ¹⁰ gluttonous
¹¹ hearthrug into which is woven the image of a tiger
¹² fork (The Trident was a three-pronged spear carried by Neptune, god of the sea)
¹³ the fire (Vulcan was the blacksmith of the gods)

nae legacy-hunter—nae Post-obit.¹ But hae ye added the codicil?

North. The man who has not made his will at forty is worse than a fool—almost a knave.

Shepherd. I ken nae better test o' wisdom—wisdom in its higest sense—than a just last wull and testament. It blesseth generations yet unborn. It guardeth and strengthneth domestic peace—and maketh brethren to dwell together in unity.² Being dead, the wise testator yet liveth³—his spirit abideth invisible, but felt ower the roof-tree, and delighteth, morning and evening, in the thanksgiving Psalm.

North. One would think it were easy to act well in that matter.

Shepherd. One would think it were easy to act weel, sir, in a' matters. Yet hoo difficult! The sowl seems, somehow or ither, to lose her simplicity, to keep restlessly glourin' round and round about wi' a thousan' artificial ogles up a' the cross and by-paths leadin' nae single body kens whither, unless it be into biakes, and thuckets, and quagmires, and wildeinnesses o' moss—where ane may wander wearily and dearly up and doon for years, and never recover the richt road again, till death touches him on the shoulther, and doon he fa's amang them that were, leavin' a' that lucked up to him for his effects in doubt and dismay and desolation, wi' sore and bitter hearts, uncertain whether to gie vent to their feelings in blessings or in curses, in execration or prayer.

North. Of all the vices of old age, may gracious Heaven, my dearest James, forever shield me from avarice!

Shepherd. Nae fear o' that. There's either just ae enjoyment o' siller,⁴ or five hunder thousan' million. The rich maun either spend it thuck and fast, as a nightingale scatters her notes on the happy air—or sit upon his guineas, like a cloekin' hen on a heap o' yellow addled eggs amang the nettles.

North. Picturesquely true.

Shepherd. Oh, sir! what delight to a wise rich man in being lavish—in being prodigal! For these two words only carry blame along wi' them according to the character o' the giver or the receiver. Wha mair lavish—wha mair prodigal than the Sun? Yet let him shower his beams forever and ever all ower the Planetary System, frae Venus wi' her cestus¹ to Saturn wi' his ring, and nae the poorer, either in licht or in heat, is he—and nae the poorer will he ever be, till the hand that hung him on high shall cut the golden cord² by which he liveth in the sky, and he falls, his duty done, into the bosom of Chaos and Old Night!³

North. My dear Shepherd!

Shepherd. But the Sun he shineth wi' unborrowed licht. There's the bonnie moon, (God bless her mildest face, that loveth still to cheer the pensive night wi' a lustre lent her by the joyful day—to give to earth a' she receives frae heaven. Puir, senseless, ungrateful' creturs we! Eyeing her frae our ain narrow vales, we ca' her changelin' and inconstant! But is na she, sweet satellite, forever journeying on her gracious round, and whry will we grudge her smiles to them far frae us, seem' we are a' cludken to ae Maker, and according to his perfect laws, a' partakers in the same impartial bounty? Here's a nice brown shave for you, sir

[The SHEPHERD rises from his knees on the rug, takes the bread from the prongs of the Trident, and fresh butters it on both sides for MR NORTH, who receives it with a benign bow.]

North. Uncommonly yellow this butter, James, for the season. The grass must be growing—

Shepherd. Ay, you may hear 't growin'! What years for vegetation the last beautiful and glorious Thuee! The ongoings o' natur are in the lang run regular and steady,—but noo and then the mighty mother seems to obey some uncontrollable impulse far within her fair large bosom, and “wantons as in her prime,”⁴ outdoing her very self in beneficence to earth, and that mysterious concave we ca' heaven.

North. In spite of gout, rheumatism, lumbago, corns, and chilblains, into the Forest shall I wend my way, James, before midsummer.

Shepherd. And young and auld will be but ower happy to see you, sir, frae the lanely Douglas Tower to those o' Newark. Would ye believe 't, an old ash stallion⁵ in the garden hedge of Mount Benger shot out six seasons last year, the longest o' them nine, and the shortest seven feet lang! That was growin' for you, sir

¹ A post-obit is a bond given to secure a loan, and payable after death.

² See Psalm, 133 1.

³ See Hebrews, 11 4.

⁴ One enjoyment of small change.

¹ Girdle.

² See Ecclesiastes, 12 6.

³ See Paradise Lost, 1, 543; 2, 1036.

⁴ Paradise Lost, 5, 295.

⁵ Tree.

North. There has been much planting of trees lately, in the Forest, James?

Shepherd. To my taste, to tell the truth, rather ower muckle¹—especially o' nurses.²

North. Nurses! wet or dry nurses, James?

Shepherd. Baith. Larches and Scotch firs; or you may ca' them schoolmasters, that teach the young idea how to shoot.³ But thinnins⁴ in the Forest never can pay, I suspect; and except on bleaky knows,⁵ the haid wood wad grow better, in my opinion, left to themselfs, without either nurses or schoolmasters. The nurses are apt to overlav the weans,⁶ and the schoolmasters to forget, or what's waur,⁷ to flog their pupils; and thus the rising is a stunted generation.

North. Forty-five years ago, my dear James, when you were too young to remember much, I loved the Forest for its solitary single trees, ancient yew or sycamore, black in the distance, but when near, how gloriously green. Tall, delicately-feathered ash, whose limbs were still visible in latest summer's leafiness—birch, in early spring, weeping and whispering in its pensive happiness by the perpetual din of its own waterfall—oak, yellow in the suns of June—

Shepherd —

The grace of forest wood decayed,
And pastoral melancholy's

North. What lovely lines! Who writes like Wordsworth!

Shepherd. Tuts! Me ower young to remember muckle forty-five years ago! You're speekin' havers.⁸ I was then twal—and I remember everything I ever heard or saw since I was three year auld. I recollect the mornin' I was pitten intil breeks¹⁰ as distinctly as if it was this veira day. They hurt me sair atween the fork and the inside o' the knees—but oh! I was a prood man—and the lamb that I chased all the way frae my father's hut to Ettrick Manse, round about the kirk, till I caught it on a gowany¹¹ grave, and lay doon wi't in my arms on the sunny heap, had nae need to be ashamed o' itself,⁹ for I hunted it like a colley—although when I gruppit it at last, I held it to my beatin' bosom as tenderly as ever I hae since done wee Jamie, when pitten the dear cretur intil the crib that stauns at the side o' his mither's bed, after e'enin' prayers.

North. I feel not undelightfully, my dear James, that I must be waxing old—very old—for of the last ten years of my life I remember almost nothing except by an effort—whereas the first ten—commencing with that bright, clear, undying light that borders the edge of the oblivion of infancy—have been lately becoming more intensely distinct—so that often the past is with me as it were the present—and the sad gray-haired ancient is again a blest golden-headed boy, singing a chorus with the breeze, and the birds and the streams. Alas! and alack a day!

Shepherd. 'Tis only sae that we ever renew our youth. Oh, sir! I lumna' forgotten the color o' the plumage o' ae single dove that ever sat coom' of old on the growin' turf-riggin'² o' my father's hut! Ae great muckle, big, beautifu' ane in particular, blue as if it had dropt doon frae the sky—I see the noo,³ a' neck and bosom, coom' and coom' deep as distant thunder, round and round his mate, wha was whiter than the white sae-faem, makin' love to the snawy creture—wha cowered doon in fear afore her imperious and impassioned lord—yet in love stronger than fear—showing hoo in a' leevin'⁴ natur passions seemingly the maist remote frae ane another, coalesce into mysterious union by means o' ae pervading and interfusing speerit, that quickens the pulses o' that inscrutable secret—life!

North. All linnets have died, James—that race of loveliest hilters⁵ is extinct

Shepherd. No thae.⁶ Broom and bracken are tenanted by the glad, meek creturs still—but the chords o' music in our hearts are sair unstrung—the harp o' our heart has lost its melody. But come out to the Forest, my dear, my honored sir, and fear not then when we twa are walking thegither without speakin' among the hills, you

Will feel the airs that from them blow
A momentary bliss bestow⁷

and the wild, uncertain, waverin' music o' the Eolian harp that natur plays upon in the solitude, will again echo far, far awa' amang the recesses o' your heart, and the linty⁸ will sing as sweetly as ever amang the blossoms o' the milk-white thorn. Or, if you canna be brocht to feel sae, you'll

¹ over much

² trees planted to protect other trees while young

³ Thomson, The Seasons, Spring, 1153.

⁴ transplanted trees

⁵ the young ones

⁶ Wordsworth, Yarrow Vindict, 47-48 (p. 309).

⁷ nonsense

⁸ put into breeches

⁹ knolls

¹⁰ worse

¹¹ daisy-covered

¹ have not

² earthen roof

³ now

⁴ all living

⁵ singers

⁶ those

⁷ Gray, Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College, 15-16 (p. 57).

⁸ linnets

hae but to look in my wee Jamie's face, and his glistening een will convince you that Scotia's nightingale¹ still singeth as sweetly as of yore! But let us sit into the fire, sir.

North. Thank you, Shepherd—thank you, James

Shepherd (wheeling his father's chair to the ingle-corner, and singing the while)

"There's Christopher North, that won's² in von glen,

He's the king o' gude fallows and wales³ o' auld men!"

North I cannot bear, James, to receive such attention paid to my bodily weakness—I had almost said, my decrepitude—by any living soul but yourself. How is that, my dear Shepherd?

Shepherd. Because I treat you wi' tenderness, but no wi' pity—wi' sympathy, but no wi' compassion—

North. My dear James, ye must give us a book on synonyms. What delicacy of distinction!

Shepherd. I suspect, sir, that mother wut⁴ and mother feelin' hae mair to do wi' the truth o' metaphysical etymology and grammar, than either lair⁵ or labor. Ken the meanin', by self-experience, o' a' the nicest shades o' thoughts and feelings, and devil the fears but you'll ken the meanin's o' the nicest shades o' syllables and words.

North. Good, James. Language flows from two great sources—the head and the heart. Each feeds ten thousand rills⁶—

Shepherd. Reflectin' different imagery—but no sae very different either—for—you see—

North. I see nothing, James, little or nothing, till you blow away the intervening mist by the breath of genius, and then the whole world outshines, like a panorama with a central sun.

Shepherd. Ah! sir, you had seen the hale world afore ever I kent you—a perfect wandering Ulysses.

North Yes, James, I have circumnavigated the globe, and intersected it through all its zones, and, by Jupiter, there is not a climate comparable to that of Scotland.

Shepherd. I believ't. Blest be Providence for having saved my life frae the curse o' stagnant sky—a monotonous heaven. On flat land, and aneath an ever blue lift,⁷ I should soon hae been a perfeek idwit⁸

North. What a comical chap, James, you would have been, had you been born a negro!

Shepherd. Aye—I think I see you, sir, wi' great blubber lips, a mouthfu' of muckle white horse's teeth, and a head o' hair like the woo¹ atween a ram's horns when he's grown ancient among the mountains. What Desdemona could hae stood out against sic² an Othello?

North. Are negroes, gentlemen, to sit in both Houses of Parliament?³

Shepherd. Nae politics the nicht—nae politics. I'm sick o' politics. Let's speak about the weather. This has been a fine day, sirs.

North. A first-rate day, indeed, James. Commend me to a Day who does not stand shilly-shallying during the whole morning and forenoon, with hands in his breeches' pockets, or bitin' his nails, and scratching his head, unable to make up his mind in what fancy character he is to appear from meridian to sunset—but who—

Shepherd Breaks out o' the arms o' the dark-haired bright-ee'd night, with the power and pomp o' a Titan, and frightnin' that bit puir timid lassie the Dawn out o' her seven senses, in thunder and lightning a' at ance storms the sky, till creation is drenched in flood, bathed in fire, and rocked by earthquake. That's the day for a poet, sirs—that's a picture for the ee, and that's music for the lug⁴ o' imagination, sirs, till ane's verra speerit cums to creawte the war it tummles⁵ at, and to be composed o' the self-same yelements, gloomin' and boomin', blackenin' and brightenin', pourin' and roarin'. and awsomey confusin' and confoundin' heaven and earth, and this life and the life that is to come, and a' the passions that loup up at sights and sounds, joy, hope, fear, terror, exultation, and that mysterious up-ism' and downfa'in'⁶ o' our mortal hearts, connected some hoo or ither wi' the fleein' cluds, and the tossin' trees, and the red rivers in spate,⁷ and the sullen looks o' black bits o' sky like faces, together wi' ane and a' o' thae⁸ restless shows o' uneasy natr appertainin', God knows hoo, but maist certain sure it is so, to the region, the rueful region o' man's entailed inheritance—the grave!

North James, you are very pale—very white about the gills—are you well enough?

¹ The linnet.

² dwells

³ pick; choice

⁴ wit

⁵ learning

⁶ See Gray's The Progress of Poesy, 3-4 (p. 61).

⁷ sky

⁸ idiot

¹ wool

² such

³ A reference to the growing agitation for the abolition of negro slavery

⁴ ear

⁵ trembles

⁶ See Psalms, 139 2.

⁷ flood

⁸ those

Turn up your little finger. Pale! nay, now they are more of the color of my hat—as if

In the scowl of heaven, his face
Grew black as he was speaking.

The shadow of the thunder-cloud threatening the eyes of his imagination, has absolutely darkened his face of clay. He seems at a funeral, James!

Shepherd. Whare's the moral? What's the use of thunder, except in a free country? There's nae grandeur in the terror o' slaves flingin' themsells doon on their faces amang the sugar-canes, in a tornawdo. But the low quick beatin' at the heart o' a freeman, a bauld-faced son o' liberty, when simultawneous flash and crash rends Natur to her core, why that flutter, sir, that does homage to a Power aboon us, exalts the dreadful magnificence o' the instruments that Power employs to subjugate our sows to his sway, and makes thunder and lichtnin', in sic a country as England and Scotland, sublime.

North. The short and long of the matter seems to be, James, that when it thunders you fink.¹

Shepherd. Yes, sir, thunders frighten me into my senses.

North. Well said, James—well said.

Shepherd. Heaven forgive me, but ten out o' the eighteen wakin' hours, I am an atheist.

North. And I.

Shepherd. And a' men. Puir, pitifu', ungratefu', and meeseriable wretches that we are—waur than worms. An atheist's a godless man. Sweep a' thoughts o' his Maker out o' ony man's heart—and what better is he, as lang's the floor o' his being continues bare, than an atheist?

North. Little better indeed.

Shepherd. I envy—I honor—I venerate—I love—I bless the man, who, like the patriarchs of old, ere sin drowned the world, ever walks with God.

North. James, here we must not get too solemn—

Shepherd. That's true; and let me hope that I'm no sae forgetfu' as I fear. In this season o' the year, especially when the flowers are a' seen again in lauchin'² flocks ower the braes,³ like children returnin' to school after a lang snaw, I can wi' truth avoo,⁴ that the sight of a primrose is to me like the soun' o' a prayer, and that I seldom walk alone by myself for half a mile, without thochts sae calm and sae serene, and sae humble and sae grateful, that I houp I'm no deceivin' myself noo when I venture to ca' them—religious.

North. No, James, you are not self-deceived. Poetry melts into religion.

Shepherd. It is religion, sir, for what is religion but a clear—often a sudden—insicht, accompanied wi' emotion, into the dependance o' a' beauty and a' gloiy on the Divine Mind? A wee bit dew-wat gowany,¹ as it makes a scarcely perceptible sound and stir, which it often does, amang the grass that loves to shelter but not hide the bonnie earth-born stair, glintin' up sae kindly wi' its face into mine, while by good fortune my feet touched it not, has hundreds o' times affected me as profoundly as ever did the Sun himself setting in a' his glory—as profoundly—and, oh! far mair tenderly, for a thing that grows and grows, and becomes every hour mair and mair beautifu', and then hangs fixed for a season in the perfection o' its lovely delight, and then—wae is me—begins to be a little dim—and then dimmer and dimmer, till we feel that it is indeed—in very truth, there's nae denyin' it—fading—fading—faded—gone—dead—buried. Oh! sir, sic an existence as that has an overwhelmin' analogy to our ain life—and that I hae felt—no doubt I that you, my dear sir, hae felt it too—when on some saft, sweet, silent meense-breathin' morning² o' spring—far awa, perhaps, frae the smoke o' ony human dwellin', and walkin' ye cared na, kent na whither—sae eaily that the ground-bees were but beginnin' to hum out o' their biks³—when, I say, some flower suddenly attracted the heit within your ee, wi' a power like that o' the loadstone, and though, perhaps, the commonest o' the flowers that beautify the braes o' Scotland—only, as I said, a bit ordinary gowan—yet, what a sudden rush o' thochts and feelings overflowed your soul at the simple sight! while a' nature becam for a moment overspread wi' a tender haze be-longin' not to hersell, for there was naething there to bedim her brightness, but existin' only in your ain two silly een, sheddin' in the solitude a few holy tears!

North. James, I will trouble you for the red-herrings

¹ become frightened
² laughing
³ hills

⁴ avow

¹ dew-wet daisy
² See Gray's Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard, 17 (p. 59).
³ hives

FELICIA DOROTHEA HEMANS
(1793-1835)

A DIRGE

1822 1823

Calm on the bosom of thy God,
Fair spirit, rest thee now!
E'en while with ours thy footsteps trod
His seal was on thy brow.

5 Dust, to its narrow house beneath!
Soul, to its place on high!
They that have seen thy look in death
No more may fear to die.

ENGLAND'S DEAD

1822

Son of the Ocean Isle!
Where sleep your mighty dead?
Show me what high and stately pile
Is reared o'er Glory's bed.

6 Go, stranger! track the deep—
Free, free the white sail spread!
Wave may not foam, nor wild wind sweep,
Where rest not England's dead.

10 On Egypt's burning plains,
By the pyramid o'erswayed,
With fearful power the noonday reigns,
And the palm trees yield no shade,—

But let the angry sun
From heaven look fiercely red,
15 Unfelt by those whose task is done!—
There slumber England's dead.¹

The hurricane hath might
Along the Indian shore,
And far by Ganges' banks at night
20 Is heard the tiger's roar.—

But let the sound roll on!
It hath no tone of dread
For those that from their toils are gone,—
There slumber England's dead.²

25 Loud rush the torrent-floods
The Western wilds among,
And free, in green Columbia's woods,
The hunter's bow is strung,—

But let the floods rush on!
30 Let the arrow's flight be sped!
Why should They reckon whose task is done?—

There slumber England's dead.³

¹ English and French armies fought before Alexandria, Egypt, in 1801

² English and French armies fought a number of battles in India, 1748-1803

³ English armies fought against the French and Americans in America at various times, 1758-59, 1775-81, 1812-14.

The mountain-storms rise high
In the snowy Pyrenees, 35 And tossed the pine-boughs through the sky
Like rose-leaves on the breeze,—

But let the storm rage on!
Let the fresh wreaths be shed!
For the Roncesvalles' field is won,—
40 There slumber England's dead.¹

On the frozen deep's repose
'Tis a dark and dreadful hour,
When round the ship the ice-holds close,
And the northern night-clouds lower,—

45 But let the ice drift on!
Let the cold blue desert spread!
Their course with mast and flag is done—
Even there sleep England's dead.²

The warlike of the isles,
The men of field and wave!
50 Are not the rocks then funeral piles,
The seas and shores then grave?

Go, stranger! track the deep—
Free, free the white sails spread!
55 Wave may not foam, nor wild wind sweep,
Where rest not England's dead

THE GRAVES OF A HOUSEHOLD
1825

They grew in beauty side by side,
They filled one home with glee;
Their graves are severed far and wide,
By mount, and stream, and sea.

5 The same fond mother bent at night
O'er each fair sleeping brow,
She had each folded flower in sight—
Where are those dreamers now?

One, midst the forest of the West,
10 By a dark stream is laid—
The Indian knows his place of rest,
Far in the cedar-shade

The sea, the blue lone sea, hath one—
He lies where pearls lie deep,

¹ Roncesvalles, the famous pass in the Pyrenees, in which the rear-guard of Charlemagne's army was overwhelmed by the Basques in 778, is here used figuratively for Spain. English armies engaged in numerous battles in Spain against the Spanish and the French, the most noted of which were fought 1706-08, 1808-13.

² The most famous English naval battles were fought against the Spanish and the French, 1588, 1782-1805.

15 He was the loved of all, yet none
O'er his low bed may weep.

One sleeps where southern vines are drest
Above the noble slain.

He wrapt his colours round his breast
20 On a blood-red field of Spain

And one—o'er her the myrtle showers
Its leaves, by soft winds fanned,
She faded midst Italian flowers—
The last of that bright band

25 And parted thus they rest, who played
Beneath the same green tree,
Whose voices mingled as they played
Around one parent knee!

They that with smiles lit up the hall,
30 And cheered with song the hearth!—
Alas, for love! if thou wert all,
And naught beyond, O Earth!

THE LANDING OF THE PILGRIM FATHERS IN NEW ENGLAND 1620

The breaking waves dashed high
On a stern and rock-bound coast,¹
And the woods against a stormy sky
Their giant branches tossed,

5 And the heavy night hung dark,
The hills and waters o'er,
When a band of exiles mooted their bark
On the wild New England shore

Not as the conqueror comes,
10 They, the true-hearted, came,
Not with the roll of the stirring drums,
And the trumpet that sings of fame

Not as the flying come,
In silence and in fear,—
15 They shook the depths of the desert gloom
With their hymns of lofty cheer.

Amidst the storm they sang,
And the stars heard, and the sea;
And the sounding aisles of the dim woods rang

20 To the anthem of the free

The ocean eagle soared
From his nest by the white wave's foam,
And the rocking pines of the forest roared,—
This was their welcome home.

¹ This is not exactly true to fact

25 There were men with hoary hair
Amidst that pilgrim-band:
Why had they come to wither there,
Away from their childhood's land?

There was woman's fearless eye,
30 Lit by her deep love's truth;
There was manhood's brow serenely high,
And the fiery heart of youth.

What sought they thus afar?
Bright jewels of the mine?
35 The wealth of seas, the spoils of war?—
They sought a faith's pure shrine!

Ay, call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod;
They have left unstained what there they found,—
40 Freedom to worship God

THE HOMES OF ENGLAND 1827 1827

The stately Homes of England,
How beautiful they stand!
Amidst their tall ancestral trees,
O'er all the pleasant land;
5 The deer across their greensward bound
Through shade and sunny gleam,
And the swan glides past them with the sound
Of some rejoicing stream.

The merry Homes of England!
10 Around their hearths by night,
What gladsome looks of household love
Meet in the ruddy light
There woman's voice flows forth in song,
Or childish tale is told,
15 On lips move tunelessly along
Some glorious page of old.

The blessed Homes of England!
How softly on their bowers
Is laid the holy quietness
20 That breathes from Sabbath hours!
Solemn, yet sweet, the church-bell's chime
Floats through their woods at morn;
All other sounds, in that still time.
Of breeze and leaf are born.

25 The cottage Homes of England!
By thousands on her plains,
They are smiling o'er the silvery brooks,
And round the hamlet-fanes
Through glowing orchards forth they peep,
30 Each from its nook of leaves;
And fearless there the lowly sleep,
As the bird beneath their eaves.

The free, fair Homes of England!
 Long, long in hut and hall,
 35 May hearts of native proof be reared
 To guard each hallowed wall!
 And green forever be the groves,
 And bright the flowery sod,
 Where first the child's glad spirit loves
 40 Its country and its God!

WILLIAM MOTHERWELL
 (1797-1835)

THE SWORD CHANT OF THORSTEIN
 RAUDI
 1828

'Tis not the gray hawk's flight
 O'er mountain and mere,
 'Tis not the fleet hound's course
 Tracking the deer,
 5 'Tis not the light hoof print
 Of black steed or gray,
 Though sweltering it gallop
 A long summer's day,
 Which mete forth the lordships
 10 I challenge as mine,
 Ha! ha! 'tis the good brand
 I clutch in my strong hand,
 That can their broad marches
 And numbers define
 15 Land Giver! I kiss thee.

Dull builders of houses,
 Base tillers of earth,
 Gaping, ask me what lordships
 I owned at my birth,
 20 But the pale fools wax mute
 When I point with my sword
 East, west, north, and south,
 Shouting, "There am I lord!"
 Wold and waste, town and tower,
 25 Hill, valley, and stream,
 Trembling, bow to my sway
 In the fierce battle fray,
 When the star that rules Fate, is
 This falchion's¹ red gleam
 30 Mighty Giver. I kiss thee.

I've heard great harps sounding,
 In brave bower and hall,²
 I've drank the sweet music
 That bright lips let fall,
 35 I've hunted in greenwood,
 And heard small birds sing;
 But away with this idle
 And cold jargon;
 The music I love, is

¹ A kind of sword.

² The hall was the public dwelling of the Teutonic chieftain; the bower was the private apartments, especially of the women.

40 The shout of the brave,
 The yell of the dying,
 The scream of the flying,
 When this arm wields Death's sickle,
 And garners the grave.
 45 Joy Giver! I kiss thee.

Far isles of the ocean
 Thy lightning have known,
 And wide o'er the main land
 Thy horrors have shone.
 50 Great sword of my father,
 Stern joy of his hand,
 Thou hast carved his name deep on
 The stranger's red stand,
 And won him the glory
 55 Of undying song.
 Keen cleaver of gay crests,
 Sharp piercer of broad breasts,
 Grim slayer of heroes,
 And scourge of the strong.
 60 Fame Giver! I kiss thee.

In a love more abiding
 Than that the heart knows,
 For maiden more lovely
 Than summer's first rose,
 65 My heart's knit to thine,
 And lives but for thee;
 In dreamings of gladness,
 Thou'rt dancing with me,
 Brave measures of madness
 70 In some battle-field,
 Where armor is ringing,
 And noble blood springing,
 And cloven, yawn helmet,
 Stout hauberk and shield.
 75 Death Giver! I kiss thee

The smile of a maiden's eye
 Soon may depart;
 And light is the faith of Fair woman's heart;
 80 Changeful as light clouds,
 And wayward as wind,
 Be the passions that govern
 Weak woman's mind.
 But thy metal's as true
 85 As its polish is bright;
 When ills wax in number,
 Thy love will not slumber,
 But starlike, burns fiercer.
 The darker the night.
 90 Heart Gladdener! I kiss thee.

My kindred have perished
 By war or by wave—
 Now, childless and sireless,
 I long for the grave.

95 When the path of our glory
Is shadowed in death,
With me thou wilt slumber
Below the brown heath,
Thou wilt rest on my bosom,
100 And with it decay—
While harps shall be ringing,
And scalds¹ shall be singing
The deeds we have done in
Our old fearless day
105 Song Giver¹ I kiss thee.

JEANIE MORRISON
1832

I've wandered east, I've wandered west,
Through mony a weary way,
But never, never can forget
The luve o' life's young day!
6 The fire that's blawn on Beltane² e'en,
May weel be black gin³ Yule,
But blacker fa' awaits the heart
Where first fond luve grows cule.

Oh dear, dear Jeanie Morrison,
10 The thochts o' bygone years
Still fling their shadows ower my path,
And blind my een wi' tears
They blind my een wi' saut, saut tears,
And sair and sick I pine,
15 As memory idly summons up
The blithe blinks o' langsyne

'Twas then we luvit ilk ither⁴ weel,
'Twas then we twa did part,
Sweet time—sad time! twa bairns at scule
20 Twa banus, and but ae⁵ heart!
'Twas then we sat on ae laigh bink,⁶
To leir ilk ither leir,⁷
And tones, and looks, and smiles were shed,
Remembered evermair.

25 I wonder, Jeanie, aften yet
When sitting on that bink,
Cheek touchin' cheek, loof⁸ lock'd in loof,
What our wee heads could think
When bairn bent down ower ae braid page,
30 Wi' ae buik on our knee,
Thy lips were on thy lesson, but
My lesson was in thee

Oh, mind ye how we hung our heads,
How cheeks brent red wi' shame,
35 Whene'er the school-weans laughin' said,
We cleek'd⁹ thegither hame!
And mind ye o' the Saturdays

¹ Norse singers of heroic poems
² May-day
³ by the time of
⁴ each other
⁵ one
⁶ low bench
⁷ teach each other learning
⁸ hand
⁹ went arm in arm

(The scule then skail'¹ at noon)
When we ran aff to speel the braes²—
40 The broony³ braes o' June!

My head rins round and round about,
My heart flows like a sea,
As aye by aye the thochts rush back
O' scule-time and o' thee
45 Oh, mornin' life! Oh, mornin' luve!
Oh lichtsome days and lang,
When himmied⁴ hopes around our hearts,
Like simmer blossoms sprang!

O mind ye, luve, how aft we left
50 The deavin', dinsome⁵ town,
To wander by the green burnside,⁶
And hear its waters croon,
The simmer leaves hung ower our heads,
The flowers burst round our feet,
55 And in the gloamin' o' the wood,
The throssil whusslit⁷ sweet

The throssil whusslit in the wood,
The burn sang to the trees,
And we with Nature's heart in tune,
60 Concerted harmonies,
And on the knowe abune the burn,⁸
For hours thegither sat
In the silentness o' joy, till bairn
Wi' very gladness grat!⁹

65 Aye, aye, dear Jeanie Morrison,
Tears trinkled down your cheek,
Like dew-heads from a rose, yet nane
Had ony power to speak!
That was a time, a blessed time,
70 When hearts were fresh and young,
When freely gushed all feelings forth,
Unsyllabled—unsung!

I marvel, Jeanie Morrison,
Gin¹⁰ I hae been to thee
75 As closely twined wi' earliest thochts
As ye hae been to me?
Oh! tell me gin their music fills
Thine ear as it does mine,
Oh! say gin e'er your heart grows grit¹¹
80 Wi' dreamings o' langsyne?

I've wandered east, I've wandered west,
I've borne a weary lot,
But in my wanderings, far or near,
Ye never were forgot
85 The fount that first burst frae this heart,

¹ scattered
² covered with broom shrubs
³ honied
⁴ deafening, noisy
⁵ brookside
⁶ song thrush whistled
⁷ climb the hills
⁸ knoll above the brook
⁹ wept
¹⁰ whether; if ¹¹ great

Still travels on its way;
And channels deeper as it runs,
The love o' life's young day.

- O dear, dear Jeanie Morrison,
 90 Since we were sindered young,
 I've never seen your face, nor heard
 The music o' your tongue,
 But I could hug all wretchedness,
 And happy could I die,
 95 Did I but ken your heart still dreamed
 O' bygone days and me!

MY HEID IS LIKE TO REND,¹ WILLIE

1832

- My heid is like to rend, Willie,
 My heart is like to break—
 I'm wearin' aff my feet, Willie,
 I'm dyn' for your sake!
 5 Oh lay your cheek to mine, Willie,
 Your hand on my brest-bane—
 Oh say ye'll think on me, Willie,
 When I am deid and gane!
 It's vaim to comfort me, Willie,
 10 Sair grief maun hae² its will—
 But let me rest upon your brest,
 To sab and greet³ my fill
 Let me sit on your knee, Willie,
 Let me shed by⁴ your hair,
 15 And look into the face, Willie,
 I never sall see mair!

- I'm sittin' on your knee, Willie,
 For the last time in my life—
 A pun heart-broken thing, Willie,
 20 A mither, yet nae wife
 Ay, press your hand upon my heart,
 And press it mair and mair—
 Or it will burst the silken twine
 Sae strang⁵ is its despair!

- 25 Oh wae's me for the hour, Willie,
 When we thegither met—
 Oh wae's me for the time, Willie,
 That our first tryst was set!
 Oh wae's me for the loanin'⁶ green
 30 Where we were wont to gae—
 And wae's me for the destime,
 That gart⁷ me love thee sae!

- Oh! dinna⁸ mind my words, Willie,
 I downa⁹ seek to blame—
 35 But oh! it's hard to live, Willie,
 And dree¹⁰ a world's shame!

¹ burst² sore grief must have³ sob and weep⁴ part⁵ so strong⁶ lane⁷ made⁸ do not⁹ cannot¹⁰ endure

- Het tears are hailin'¹¹ ower your cheek,
 And hailin' ower your chin,
 Why weep ye sae for worthlessness,
 40 For sorrow and for sin?

- I'm weary o' this waird, Willie,
 And sick wi' a' I see—
 A canna live as I hae lived,
 Or be as I should be,
 45 But fauld into your heart, Willie,
 The heart that still is thine—
 And kiss aince mair the white, white cheek,
 Ye said was red langsyne

- A stoun'¹² gaes through my heid, Willie,
 50 A sair stoun' through my heart—
 Oh! haud me up and let me kiss
 Thy brow ere we twa part
 Anither, and anither yet!
 How fast my life-stings break!
 55 Fareweel! fareweel! through yon kirk-yaud
 Step lightly for my sake!

- The lav'rock³ in the lift,⁴ Willie,
 That hlt⁵ far ower our heid,
 Will sing the morn as merrily
 60 Abune⁶ the clay-cauld deid,
 And thus green turf we're sittin' on,
 Wi' dew-drops' slummeim' sheen,
 Will hap⁷ the heart that luvit thee
 As waird has seldom seen
 65 But oh! remember me, Willie,
 On land where'er ye be—
 And oh! think on the leal,⁸ leal heart,
 That ne'er luvit aye but thee!
 And oh! think on the cauld, cauld mools,⁹
 70 That file¹⁰ my yellow hair—
 That kiss the cheek, and kiss the chin,
 Ye never sall kiss mair!

THE FORESTER'S CAROL

1832

- Lusty Hearts! to the wood, to the merry
 green wood,
 While the dew with string pearls loads
 each blade,
 And the first blush of dawn brightly streams o'er the lawn,
 Like the smile of a rosy-cheeked maid.
 5 Our horns with wild music ring glad through each shaw,¹¹
 And our broad arrows rattle amain,

¹ pouring² pang³ lark⁴ sky⁵ sings cheerfully⁶ above⁷ cover⁸ loyal⁹ earth¹⁰ defile¹¹ grove

For the stout bows we draw, to the green woods give law,
And the Might is the Right once again!

Mark yon herds, as they brattle¹ and brush down the glade,

10 Pick the fat, let the lean rascals go,
Under favor 'tis meet that we tall² men should eat,— Nock³ a shaft and strike down that proud doe!

Well delivered, payfay⁴ convulsive she leaps,—

One bound more,—then she drops on her side,

15 On steel bath bit smart the life-strings of her heart,
And cold now lies the green forest's pride

Heave her up, and away!—should any base churl

Dare to ask why we range in this wood,
There's a keen arrow yare,⁵ in each broad belt to spare.

20 That will answer the knave in his blood!

Then forward my Hearts! like the bold reckless breeze

Our life shall whirl on in mad glee,
The long bows we bend, to the world's latter end,

Shall be borne by the hands of the Free!

SONG

1853

If to thy heart I were as near

As thou art near to mine,
I'd hardly care though a' the year
Nae sun on earth suld shine, my dear,

5 Nae sun on earth suld shine!

Twin starnies are thy glancin' een⁶—

A world they'd licht and man—
And gin⁷ that ye be my Christine,

Ae blink⁸ to me ye'll spare, my dear,

10 Ae blink to me ye'll spare!

My leesome⁹ May I've wooed too lang—

Aneath the tryslin' tree,
I've sung till a' the plantin'¹⁰ sang,

Wi' lays o' love for thee, my dear,

15 Wi' lays o' love for thee

¹ scamper² brave, bold³ fit to the string⁴ by my faith⁵ ready⁶ flashing eyes⁷ if⁸ one glance⁹ pleasant¹⁰ grove

The dew-drops glisten on the green,
The laverocks lit¹ on high,
We'll forth and down the loan,² Christine,
And kiss when nane is migh, my dear,
20 And kiss when nane is migh!

EBENEZER ELLIOTT (1781-1849)

SONG

1831

Tune—Robin Adair

Child, is thy father dead?

Father is gone!

Why did they tax his bread?

God's will be done!

5 Mother has sold her bed,

Better to die than wed!

Where shall she lay her head?

Home we have none!

Father clamm'd³ thrice a week—

10 God's will be done!

Long for work did he seek,

Work he found none

Teats on his hollow cheek

Told what no tongue could speak

15 Why did his master break?

God's will be done!

Doctor said air was best—

Food we had none,

Father, wuh panting breast,

20 Grown'd to be gone

Now he is with the blest—

Mother says death is best!

We have no place of rest—

Yes, we have one!

BATTLE SONG

1831

Day, like our souls, is fiercely dark;

What then? 'Tis day!

We sleep no more, the cock crows—hark!

To arms! away!

5 They come! they come! the knell is rung

Of us or them,

Wide o'er their march the pomp is flung

Of gold and gem

What collar'd hound of lawless sway,

10 To famine dear—

What pension'd slave of Attila,

Leads in the rear?

Come they from Scythian wilds afar,

Our blood to spill?

15 Wear they the livery of the Czar?

They do his will

Nor tassell'd silk, nor epaulette,

¹ larks sing cheerfully² lane³ went without food

Nor plume, nor torse¹—
 No splendor gilds, all sternly met,
 20 Our foot and horse.
 But, dark and still, we only glow,
 Condensed in me!
 Strike, tawdry slaves, and ye shall know
 Our gloom is fire.
 25 In vain your pomp, ye evil powers,
 Insults the land,
 Wrongs, vengeance, and the cause are ours,
 And God's right hand!
 Madmen! they trample into snakes
 30 The wormy clod!
 Like fire, beneath their feet awakes
 The sword of God!
 Behind, before, above, below,
 They rouse the brave,
 35 Where'er they go, they make a foe,
 Or find a grave

THE PRESS

WRITTEN FOR THE PRINTERS OF SHEFFIELD, ON THE PASSING OF THE REFORM BILL
 1832

God said—"Let there be light!"²
 Gloom darkness felt his might,
 And fled away,
 Then startled seas and mountains cold
 5 Shone forth, all bright in blue and gold,
 And cried—"Tis day! 'tis day!"
 "Hail, holy light!" exclaim'd
 The thunderous cloud, that flamed
 O'er daisies white,
 10 And, lo! the rose, in crimson dress'd,
 Lean'd sweetly on the lily's breast,
 And, blushing, murmur'd—"Light!"
 Then was the skylark born,
 Then rose th' embattled corn;³
 15 Then floods of praise
 Flow'd o'er the sunny hills of noon;
 And then, in stillest night, the moon
 Pour'd forth her pensive lays
 Lo, heaven's bright bow is glad!
 20 Lo, trees and flowers all clad
 In glory, bloom!
 And shall the mortal sons of God
 Be senseless as the trodden clod,
 And darker than the tomb?
 25 No, by the mind of man!
 By the swart artisan!
 By God, our Sire!
 Our souls have holy light within,
 And every form of grief and sin
 30 Shall see and feel its fire
 By earth, and hell, and heav'n,

The shroud of souls is riven!
 Mind, mind alone
 Is light, and hope, and life, and power!
 35 Earth's deepest night, from this bless'd hour,
 The night of minds is gone!
 "The Press!" all lands shall sing,
 The Press, the Press we bring,
 All lands to bless;
 40 O pallid Want! O Labor stark!
 Behold, we bring the second ark!
 The Press! the Press! the Press!

PRESTON MILLS

The day was fair, the cannon roar'd,
 Cold blew the bracing north,
 And Preston's Mills, by thousands, pour'd
 Their little captives forth
 5 All in their best they paced the street,
 All glad that they were free,
 And sang a song with voices sweet—
 They sung of Liberty!
 But from their hips the rose had fled,
 10 Like "death-in-life" they smiled,
 And still, as each pass'd by, I said,
 Alas! is that a child?
 Flags waved and men—a ghastly crew—
 March'd with them, side by side:
 15 While, hand in hand, and two by two,
 They moved—a living tide
 Thousands and thousands—all so white!—
 With eyes so glazed and dull!
 O God! it was indeed a sight
 20 Too sadly beautiful!
 And, oh, the pang their voices gave Refuses to depart!
 This is a wailing for the grave!
 I whisper'd to my heart.
 25 It was as if, where roses blush'd,
 A sudden blasting gale,
 O'er fields of bloom had rudely rush'd,
 And turn'd the roses pale.
 It was as if, in glen and grove,
 30 The wild birds sadly sung,
 And every linnet mourn'd its love,
 And every thrush its young.
 It was as if, in dungeon gloom,
 Where chain'd despair reclined,
 35 A sound came from the living tomb,
 And hymn'd the passing wind

¹ wreath used to support a crest
² See Genesis, 1:3

³ See Coleridge's The Rime of the Ancient Mariner, 103 (p. 338).

And while they sang, and though they smiled,

My soul groan'd heavily—

O who would be or have a child?

40 A mother who would be?

SPENSERIAN

I saw a horrid thing of many names,
And many shapes Some call'd it wealth, some power,

Some grandeur From its heart it shot
black flames,

That scorch'd the souls of millions,
hour by hour;

5 And its proud eyes rain'd everywhere a shower

Of hopeless life, and helpless misery;

For, spoused to fraud, destruction was its dower!

But its cold brightness could not hide from me

The parent base of crime, the nurse of poverty!

A POET'S EPITAPH

Stop, mortal! Here thy brother lies—
The poet of the poor.

His books were rivers, woods, and skies,
The meadow, and the moor,

5 His teachers were the torn heart's wail,
The tyrant, and the slave,

The street, the factory, the jail,
The palace—and the grave.

Sin met thy brother everywhere!

10 And is thy brother blam'd?

From passion, danger, doubt, and care,
He no exemption claim'd

The meanest thing, earth's feeblest worm,
He fear'd to scorn or hate;

15 But, honoring in a peasant's form
The equal of the great,

He bless'd the steward, whose wealth makes

The poor man's little, more,

Yet loath'd the haughty wretch that takes 20 From plunder'd labor's store

A hand to do, a head to plan,

A heart to feel and dare—

Tell man's worst foes, here lies the man
Who drew them as they are

SABBATH MORNING

Rise, young mechanic! Idle darkness
leaves

The dingy town, and cloudless morning
glows:

O rise and worship Him who spins and weaves

Into the petals of the hedge-side rose
5 Day's golden beams and all-embracing air!

Rise! for the morn of Sabbath riseth fair!

The clouds expect thee—Rise! the stone-chat¹ hops

Among the mosses of thy granite chair.
(Go tell the plover, on the mountain tops,
10 That we have cherish'd nests and hidden wings.

Wings? Ay, like those on which the seraph flings,

His sun-bright speed from star to star abroad,

And we have music, like the whisperings
Of streams in Heav'n—our labor is an ode

15 Of sweet sad praise to Him who loves the right.

And cannot He who spins the beauteous light,

And weaves the air into the wild flowers'
hues,

Give to thy soul the mountain torrent's might,

Or fill thy veins with sunbeams, and dif-
fuse

20 Over thy thoughts the greenwood's melody?

Yea, this and more He can and will for thee,

If thou wilt read, engraven on the skies
And restless waves, that "sloth is misery,"

And that our worth from our necessities
25 Flows, as the rivers from his clouds descend!"

THE WAY BROAD LEAF²

When Winter howls along the hill,
We find the broad-leaf'd plantain still;

The way broad-leaf, of herbs the chief,
We never miss the way broad-leaf,

5 'Tis common as the poor.

To soothe the cruel scorner's woes,
Beneath the scinner's feet it grows;

Neglected, trampled, still it thrives,
A creature of unnumber'd lives;

10 How like the trampled poor!

When roses die, it still remains,
Hoof-crush'd, beneath un pitying rains,

Roll'd o'er by ringing carts and wains,³
It suffers still, but ne'er complains;

15 Just like the helpless poor!

¹ A common European singing bird.

² the broad-leaf along the roads

³ wagons

- Scorn'd by the bluebells—or bent o'er
 Their graves beneath the sycamores—
 Meek, modest, silent, useful still,
 It loves to do the gentle will 20 Of Him who loves the poor!

RELIGION

- What is religion? "Speak the truth in love."
 Reject no good. Mend, if thou canst, thy lot.
 Doubting, enquire,—nor dictate till thou prove.
 Enjoy thy own—exceed not, trespass not.
 5 Pity the scorners of life's meanest thing
 If wrong'd, forgive—that Hate may lose his sting
 Think, speak, work, get—bestow, or wisely keep.
 So live, that thou may'st smile, and no one weep
 Be bless'd—like birds, that sing because they love,
 10 And bless—like rivers, singing to the sun,
 Giving and taking blessings, as they run;
 Or soft-voiced showers, that cool the answering grove,
 When cloudy wings are wide in heav'n
 display'd,
 And blessings brighten o'er the freshen'd
 sod,
 15 Till earth is like the countenance of God
 This is religion! saith the bard of trade.¹

PLAINT

- Dark, deep, and cold the current flows
 Unto the sea, where no wind blows,
 Seeking the land which no one knows.
 O'er its sad gloom still comes and goes
 5 The mingled wail of friends and foes,
 Borne to the land which no one knows
 Why shrieks for help yon wretch, who goes
 With millions, from a world of woes,
 Unto the land which no one knows?
 10 Though myriads go with him who goes,
 Alone he goes where no wind blows,
 Unto the land which no one knows.

- For all must go where no wind blows,
 And none can go for him who goes;
 15 None, none return whence no one knows.

¹ Elliott himself, who was known as "The Corn-Law Rhymer" from his Corn-Law Rhymes, written against the corn laws.

Yet why should he who shrieking goes
 With millions, from a world of woes,
 Reunion seek with it or those?

- Alone with God, where no wind blows,
 20 And Death, his shadow—doomed, he goes
 That God is there the shadow shows.

Oh, shoreless Deep, where no wind blows!
 And, thou, oh, Land which no one knows!
 That God is All, His shadow shows

BRYAN WALLER PROCTER
 ("Barry Cornwall")
 (1787-1874)

THE SEA
 1832

- The sea! the sea! the open sea!
 The blue, the fresh, the ever free!
 Without a mark, without a bound,
 It runneth the earth's wide regions 'round,
 5 It plays with the clouds, it mocks the skies,
 Or like a cradled creature lies.
 I'm on the sea! I'm on the sea!
 I am where I would ever be,
 With the blue above, and the blue below,
 10 And silence wheresoe'er I go,
 If a storm should come and awake the deep,
 What matter? I shall ride and sleep.
 I love (oh! how I love) to ride
 On the fierce foaming bustling tide,
 15 When every mad wave drowns the moon,
 Or whistles aloft his tempest tune,
 And tells how goeth the world below,
 And why the southwest blasts do blow.
 I never was on the dull tame shore,
 20 But I lov'd the great sea more and more,
 And backwards flew to her billowy breast,
 Like a bird that seeketh its mother's nest,
 And a mother she was, and is to me,
 For I was born on the open sea!
 25 The waves were white, and red the morn,
 In the noisy hour when I was born,
 And the whale it whistled, the porpoise rolled,
 And the dolphins bared their backs of gold,
 And never was heard such an outcry wild
 30 As welcomed to life the ocean-child!
 I've lived since then, in calm and strife,
 Full fifty summers a sailor's life,
 With wealth to spend and a power to range,
 But never have sought, nor sighed for change;
 35 And Death, whenever he come to me,
 Shall come on the wide unbounded sea!

THE STORMY PETREL
1832

A thousand miles from land are we,
Tossing about on the roaring sea,
From billow to bounding billow east,
Like fleecy snow on the stormy blast
5 The sails are scatter'd abroad, like weeds,
The strong masts shake like quivering
reeds,
The mighty cables, and iron chains,
The hull, which all earthly strength dis-
dains,
They strain and they crack, and hearts like stone
10 Their natural hard, proud strength disown.
Up and down! up and down!
From the base of the wave to the billow's
crown,
And midst the flashing and feathery foam
The stormy petrel finds a home,—
15 A home, if such a place may be,
For her who lives on the wide, wide sea,
On the craggy ice, in the frozen air,
And only seeketh her rocky lair
To warm her young, and to teach them spring
20 At once o'er the waves on their stormy wing.

O'er the deep! O'er the deep!
Where the whale, and the shark, and the sword-fish sleep,
Outflying the blast and the driving rain,
The petrel telleth her tale—in vain,
25 For the maimer curseth the warning bird
Who bringeth him news of the storms unheard!
Ah! thus does the prophet, of good or ill,
Meet hate from the creatures he serveth still
Yet he ne'er falters—So, petrel! spring
30 Once more o'er the waves on thy stormy wing!

THE HUNTER'S SONG
1832

Rise! Sleep no more! 'Tis a noble morn:
The dews hang thick on the fringed thorn,
And the frost shrinks back, like a beaten hound,
Under the steaming, steaming ground
5 Behold, where the billowy clouds flow by,
And leave us alone in the clear gray sky!
Our horses are ready and steady—So, ho!
I'm gone, like a dart from the Tartar's
bow
Hark, hark!—Who calleth the maiden
Morn

10 From her sleep in the woods and the stubble corn?
The horn,—the horn!
The merry, sweet ring of the hunter's horn.

Now, thorough the copse, where the fox is found,
And over the stream, at a mighty bound,
15 And over the high lands, and over the low,
O'er furrows, o'er meadows, the hunters go!
Away!—as a hawk flies full at its prey,
So flieeth the hunter, away,—away!
From the bust at the cover till set of sun, 20 When the red fox dies, and—the day is done!
Hark, hark!—What sound on the wind is borne?
'Tis the conquering voice of the hunter's horn
The horn,—the horn!
The merry, bold voice of the hunter's
horn

25 Sound! Sound the horn! To the hunter good
What's the gully deep or the roaring flood?
Right over he bounds, as the wild stag bounds,
At the heels of his swift, sure, silent hounds
O, what delight can a mortal lack,
30 When he once is firm on his horse's back,
With his stirrups short, and his snaffle strong,
And the blast of the horn for his morning
song?
Hark, hark!—now, home! and dream till morn
Of the bold, sweet sound of the hunter's horn!
35 The horn,—the horn!
O, the sound of all sounds is the hunter's horn!

LIFE
1832

We are born, we laugh, we weep;
We love, we droop, we die!
Ah! wherefore do we laugh or weep?
Why do we live, or die?
5 Who knows that secret deep?
Alas, not I!
Why doth the violet spring
Unseen by human eye?
1 A kind of bridle

- Who do the radiant seasons bring 10 Sweet thoughts that quickly fly?
 Why do our fond hearts cling
 To things that die?

- We toil,—through pain and wrong,
 We fight,—and fly,
 15 We love, we lose, and then, ere long,
 Stone-dead we lie.
 O life! is all thy song
 "Endure and—die"?!

PEACE! WHAT DO TEARS AVAIL
 1832

- Peace! what do tears avail?
 She lies all dumb and pale,
 And from her eye
 The spirit of lovely life is fading,
 5 And she must die!
 Why looks the lover wroth? the friend upbraiding?
 Reply, reply!

- Hath she not dwelt too long
 'Midst pain, and grief, and wrong?
 10 Then, why not die?
 Why suffer again her doom of sorrow,
 And hopeless lie?
 Why nurse the trembling dream until tomorrow?
 Reply, reply!

- Death! Take her to thine arms,
 In all her stainless charms,
 And with her fly
 To heavenly haunts, where clad in brightness,
 The Angels lie.
 20 Wilt bear her there, O Death! in all her whiteness?
 Reply, reply!

A POET'S THOUGHT
 1832

- Tell me, what is a poet's thought?
 Is it on the sudden born?
 Is it from the starlight caught?
 Is it by the tempest taught,
 5 Or by whispering morn?
 Was it cradled in the brain?
 Chain'd awhile, or nurs'd in night?
 Was it wrought with toil and pain?
 Did it bloom and fade again,
 10 Ere it burst to light?

No more question of its birth:
 Rather love its better part!

- 'Tis a thing of sky and earth,
 Gathering all its golden worth
 15 From the poet's heart.

THE POET'S SONG TO HIS WIFE

- How many summers, love,
 Have I been thine?
 How many days, thou dove,
 Hast thou been mine?
 5 Time, like the winged wind
 When 't bends the flowers,
 Hath left no mark behind,
 To count the hours!
 Some weight of thought, though loath
 10 On thee he leaves,
 Some lines of care round both
 Perhaps he weaves,
 Some tears,—a soft regret
 For joys scarce known,
 15 Some looks we half forget,—
 All else is flown

- Ah!—With what thankless heart
 I mourn and sing!
 Look, where our children start,
 20 Like sudden spring!
 With tongues all sweet and low
 Like a pleasant rhyme,
 They tell how much I owe
 To thee and time!

INSCRIPTION FOR A FOUNTAIN

- Rest! This little fountain runs
 Thus for aye.—It never stays
 For the look of summer suns,
 Nor the cold of winter days
 5 Whoso'er shall wander near,
 When the Syrian heat is worst,
 Let him hither come, nor fear
 Lest he may not slake his thirst:

- He will find this little river
 10 Running still, as bright as ever.
 Let him drink, and onward lie,
 Bearing but in thought, that I,
 Erosas, bade the Naiad fall,
 And thank the great god Pan for all!

A PETITION TO TIME
 1850

- Touch us gently, Time!
 Let us glide adown thy stream
 Gently,—as we sometimes glide
 Through a quiet dream.
 5 Humble voyagers are we,
 Husband, wife, and children three—(One is lost,—an angel, fled
 To the azure overhead.)

- Touch us gently, Time!
 10 We've not proud nor soaring wings:
 Our ambition, our content,
 Lies in simple things.
 Humble voyagers are we,
 O'er life's dim, unsounded sea,
 15 Seeking only some calm clime;—
 Touch us gently, gentle Time!

HARTLEY COLERIDGE
 (1796-1849)

SONG
 1833

- She is not fair to outward view
 As many maidens be,
 Her loveliness I never knew
 Until she smil'd on me,
 5 Oh! then I saw her eye was bright,
 A well of love, a spring of light
 But now her looks are coy and cold,
 To mine they ne'er reply,
 And yet I cease not to behold
 10 The love-light in her eye
 Her very frowns are fairer far
 Than smiles of other maidens are.

AN OLD MAN'S WISH
 1833

- I have lived, and I have loved,
 Have lived and loved in vain,
 Some joys, and many woes have proved,
 That may not be again,
 5 My heart is cold, my eye is sere,
 Joy wins no smile, and grief no tear.
 Fain would I hope, if hope I could,
 If sure to be deceived,
 There's comfort in a thought of good,
 10 Tho' 'tis not quite believed;
 For sweet is hope's wild warbled air,
 But, oh! its echo is despair.

WHITHER IS GONE THE WISDOM AND THE POWER
 1833

- Whither is gone the wisdom and the power
 That ancient sages scatter'd with the notes
 Of thought-suggesting lyres? The music floats
 In the void air; e'en at this breathing hour.
 5 In every cell and every blooming bower
 The sweetness of old lays is hovering still—
 But the strong soul, the self-constraining will,
 The rugged root that bare the winsome flower
 Is weak and wither'd. Were we like the Fays

- 10 That sweetly nestle in the foxglove bells,
 Or lurk and murmur in the rose-lipp'd shells
 Which Neptune to the earth for quit-rent¹ pays,
 Then might our pretty modern Philomels
 Sustain our spirits with their roundelay.

NOVEMBER
 1833

- The mellow year is hasting to its close;
 The little buds have almost sung their last,
 Their small notes twitter in the dreary blast—
 That shrill-piped harbinger of early snows;
 5 The patient beauty of the scentless rose,
 Oft with the Morn's hoar crystal quaintly
 glass'd,
 Hangs, a pale mourner for the summer
 past,
 And makes a little summer where it grows:
 In the chill sunbeam of the faint brief day
 10 The dusky waters shudder as they shine,
 The russet leaves obstruct the straggling way
 Of oozy brooks, which no deep banks define,
 And the gaunt woods, in ragged, scant array,
 Wrap their old limbs with sombre ivy twine

NIGHT
 1833

- The crackling embers on the hearth are dead,
 The indoor note of industry is still,
 The latch is fast, upon the window sill
 The small birds wait not for their daily bread,
 5 The voiceless flowers—how quietly they shed
 Their nightly odors;—and the household
 rill
 Murmurs continuous dulcet sounds that fill
 The vacant expectation, and the dead
 Of listening night And haply now she sleeps,
 10 For all the garrulous noises of the air
 Are hush'd in peace, the soft few silent
 weeps,
 Like hopeless lovers for a maid so fair:—
 Oh! that I were the happy dream that creeps
 To her soft heart, to find my image there.

¹ rent paid in commutation of service

TO SHAKSPEARE

1833

- The soul of man is larger than the sky,
 Deeper than ocean, or the abysmal dark
 Of the unfathom'd centre Like that Ark,
 Which in its sacred hold uplifted high,
 5 O'er the drown'd hills, the human family,
 And stock reserved of every living kind,¹
 So, in the compass of the single mind,
 The seeds and pregnant forms in essence lie,
 That make all worlds. Great poet, 'twas thy art
 10 To know thyself, and in thyself to be Whate'er love, hate, ambition, destiny,
 Or the firm, fatal purpose of the heart,
 Can make of man. Yet thou wert still the same,
 Serene of thought, unhurt by thy own flame.

MAY, 1840

1840

1850

- A lovely morn, so still, so very still,
 It hardly seems a growing day of spring,
 Though all the odorous buds are blossoming,
 And the small matin² birds were glad and shrill
 5 Some hours ago, but now the woodland rill
 Murmurs along, the only vocal thing,
 Save when the wee wren flits with stealthy
 wing,
 And cons by fits and bits her evening trill.
 Lovers might sit on such a morn as this 10 An hour together, looking at the sky,
 Nor dare to break the silence with a kiss,
 Long listening for the signal of a sigh;
 And the sweet Nun, diffused in voiceless
 prayer,
 Feel her own soul through all the brooding
 air.

"MULTUM DILEXIT"³

1848

1850

- She sat and wept beside His feet; the weight
 Of sin oppress'd her heart; for all the blame,
 And the poor malice of the worldly shame,
 To her was past, extinct, and out of date.
 5 Only the sin remain'd,—the leprous state;
 She would be melted by the heart of love,

¹ See Genesis, 7² morning³ "Much hath she loved." See Luke, 7 37-50.

By fires far fiercer than are blown to prove
 And purge the silver ore adulterate
 She sat and wept, and with her untress'd hair

- 10 Still wip'd the feet she was so bless'd to touch;
 And He wip'd off the soiling of despair
 From her sweet soul, because she lov'd so much.
 I am a sinner, full of doubts and fears.
 Make me a humble thing of love and tears.

HOMER

1850

- Far from the sight of earth, yet bright and plain
 As the clear noon-day sun, an "orb of
 song"
 Lovely and bright is seen, amid the throng
 Of lesser stars, that rise and wax and wane,
 5 The transient rulers of the fickle main,
 One constant light gleams through the dark and long
 And narrow aisle of memory How strong,
 How fortified with all the numerous train
 Of truths wert thou, great poet of mankind,
 10 Who told'st in verse as mighty as the sea,
 And various as the voices of the wind,
 The strength of passion rising in the glee
 Of battle. Fear was glorified by thee,
 And Death is lovely in thy tale enshrined.

PRAYER

1850

- There is an awful quiet in the air,
 And the sad earth, with moist, imploring
 eye,
 Looks wide and wakeful at the pondering
 sky,
 Like Patience slow subsiding to Despair
 5 But see, the blue smoke as a voiceless
 prayer,
 Sole witness of a secret sacrifice,
 Unfolds its tawny wreaths, and multiplies
 Its soft chameleon breathings in the rare
 Capacious ether,—so it fades away,
 10 And nought is seen beneath the pendent
 blue,
 The undistinguishable waste of day
 So have I dream'd!—oh, may the dream be true!—
 That praying souls are purged from mortal hue,
 And grow as pure as He to whom they pray.

APPENDIX

APPENDIX

ALEXANDER POPE (1688-1744)

From WINDSOR FOREST
1704 1713

Thy forests, Windsor ' and thy green retreats,
At once the Monarch's and the Muse's seats,
Invite my lays Be present, sylvan maids '
Unlock your springs, and open all your shades
Granville commands, your aid, O Muses, bring ' 5
What Muse for Granville can refuse to sing?
The groves of Eden, vanish'd now so long,
Live in description, and look green in song '
These, were my breast inspir'd with equal flame,
Like them in beauty, should be like in fame. 10
Here hills and vales, the woodland and the plain,
Here earth and water, seem to strive again,
Not chaos-like together crush'd and bruise'd,
But, as the world, harmoniously confus'd,
Where order in variety we see, 15
And where, tho' all things differ, all agree
Here waving groves a chequer'd scene display,
And part admit, and part exclude the day,
As some coy nymph her lover's warm address
Nor quite indulges, nor can quite repress, 20
There, interspers'd in lawns and op'ning glades,
Thin trees arise, that shun each other's shades
Here, in full light, the russet plains extend,
There wrapt in clouds, the bluish hills ascend
Ev'n the wild heath displays her purple dyes, 25
And midst the desert fruitful fields arise,
That, crown'd with tufted trees¹ and springing corn,
Like verdant isles the sable waste adorn.
Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber on the halm tree, 30
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn
Not proud Olympus yields a nobler sight,
Tho' gods assembled grace his tow'ring height,
Than what more humble mountains offer here, 35
Where, in their blessings, all those gods appear
See Pan with flocks, with fruits Pomona crown'd;
Here blushing Flora paints th' enamell'd ground;
Here Ceres' gifts in waving prospect stand,
And, nodding, tempt the joyful reaper's hand, 40
Rich Industry sits smiling on the plains,
And peace and plenty tell, a Stuart reigns.²
Not thus the land appear'd in ages past,
A dreary desert, and a gloomy waste,
To savage beasts and savage laws a prey, 45
And kings more furious and severe than they;
Who claim'd the skies, dispeopled air and floods,
The lonely lords of empty wilds and woods
'Till laid waste, they storm'd the dens and caves,
(For wiser brutes were backward to be slaves) 50
What could be free, when lawless beasts obey'd,
And ev'n the elements a tyrant sway'd?
In vain kind seasons swell'd the teeming grain,
Soft show'rs distill'd, and suns grew warm in vain;

The swain with tears his frustrate labor yields, 55
And famish'd dies amidst his ripen'd fields
What wonder then, a beast or subject slain
Were equal crimes in a despotic reign '
Both doom'd alike, for sportive tyrants bled,
But while the subject starv'd, the beast was fed 60
Proud Nimrod³ first the bloody chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man
Our haughty Norman boasts that barb'rous name,
And makes his trembling slaves, the royal game
The fields are ravish'd from th' industrious swains,⁴
From men their cities, and from gods their fanes 66
The levell'd towns with weeds lie cover'd o'er;
The hollow winds thro' naked temples roar;
Round broken columns clasping ivy twind,
O'er heaps of ruin stalk'd the stately hind, 70
The fox obscene to gaping tombs retires,
And savage howlings fill the sacred quires,⁴
Aw'd by the nobles, by his commons curst,
Th' oppressor rul'd tyrannic where he durst,
Stretch'd o'er the poor and church his iron rod, 75
And serv'd alike his vassals and his God.
Whom ev'n the Saxon spar'd and bloody lane,
The wanton victims of his sport remain.
But see, the man who spacious regions gave
A waste for beasts, himself deny'd a grave⁵ 80
Stretch'd on the lawn his second hope⁶ survey,
At once the chaser, and at once the prey
I o Rufus,⁷ tugging at the deadly dart.
Bleeds in the Forest like a wounded hart.
Succeeding monarchs heard the subjects' cries, 85
Nor saw displeas'd the peaceful cottage rise
Then gather'd flocks on unknown mountains fed,
O'er sandy wilds were yellow harvests spread,
The forests wonder'd at th' unusual grain,
And secret transport touch'd the conscious swain
Fair Liberty, Britannia's Goddess, rears 91
Her cheerful head, and leads the golden years Ye vig'rous swains¹ while youth ferments your blood,
And purer spirits swell the sprightly flood,
Now range the hills, the gameful woods beset, 95
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net
When milder autumn summer's heat succeeds,
And in the new-shorn field the partridge feeds,
Before his lord the ready spaniel bounds, 99
Panting with hope, he tries the furrow'd grounds,
But when the tainted gales the game betray,
Couch'd close he lies, and meditates the prey
Secure they trust th' unfaithful field beast,
'Till hov'ring o'er 'em sweeps the swelling net

¹ William I, King of England (1066-87). See Genesis, 10 8-9

² Among his other tyrannies, William I confiscated land in Hampshire, and made it into New Forest, a royal game preserve

³ The female of the red deer

⁴ Parts of churches used by singers

⁵ The burial ground for William in Normandy had to be purchased

⁶ Richard, Duke of Bernay, said to have been killed by a stag

⁷ William II, King of England (1087-1100) He was killed (possibly by accident) by an arrow shot by one of his own men while hunting in New Forest.

¹ An allusion to Paradise Lost.

² See L'Allegro, 78

³ Queen Anne (1702-14).

Thus (if small things we may with great compare)
When Albion sends her eager sons to war, 106
Some thoughtless town, with ease and plenty blest,
Near, and more near, the closing lines invest;
Sudden they seize th' amaz'd, defenceless prize,
And high in air Britannia's standard flies.¹ 110

See² from the brake³ the whirring pheasant springs,

And mounts exulting on triumphant wings!
Short is his joy, he feels the fiery wound,
Flutters in blood, and panting, beats the ground
Ah, what avail his glossy, varving dyes, 115
His purple crest and scarlet circled eyes,
The vivid green his shining plumes unfold,
His painted wings, and breast that flames with gold?

Nor yet, when moist Arcturus clouds the sky,
The woods and fields their pleasing toils deny 120
To plains with well-breath'd beagles we repair,
And trace the mazes of the circling hare (Beasts, urg'd by us, their fellow-beasts pursue,
And learn of men each other to undo) 124
With laugh'ring guns th' unwearied fowler roves,
When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves,
Where doves in flocks the leafless trees o'er shade,
And lonely wood-cocks haunt the wat'ry glade
He lifts the tube, and levels with his eye,
Straight a short thunder breaks the frozen sky 130
Oft, as in airy rings they skim the heath,
The clam'rous lapwings feel the leaden death,
Oft, as the mounting larks their notes prepare,
They fall, and leave their little lives in air

In genial spring, beneath the quiv'ring shade, 135
Where cooling vapors breathe along the mead,
The patient fisher takes his silent stand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand;
With looks unmov'd, he hopes the scaly breed,
And even the dancing cork and bending reed 140
Our plenteous streams, a various race supply
The bright-ey'd perch, with fins of Tyrian dye,⁴
The silver eel in shining volumes⁵ roll'd,
The yellow carp, in scales bedropp'd with gold,⁶
Swift trouts, diversified with crimson stains, 145
And pikes, the tyrants of the wat'ry plains.

Now Cancer glows with Phœbus' fiery car⁷
The youth rush eager to the sylvan war,
Swarm o'er the lawns, the forest walks surround,
Rouse the fleet hart, and cheer the opening hound
Th' impatient courser pants in every vein, 151
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain
Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost 154
See the bold youth strain up the threat'ning steep,
Rush thro' the thickets, down the valleys sweep,
Hang o'er their couriers' heads with eager speed,
And earth rolls back beneath the flying steed
Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress,⁸ and her virgin train, 160

Nor envy, Windsor⁹ since thy shades have seen
As bright a Goddess and as chaste a Queen,¹
Whose care, like hers, protects the avian reign,
The earth's fair light, and Empress of the main.

From AN ESSAY ON CRITICISM
1709 1711

PART I

'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill
Appear in writing or in judging ill,
But, of the two, less dangerous is th' offence
To tire our patience, than mislead our sense
Some few in that, but numbers err in this, 5
Ten censures² wrong for one who writes amiss,
A fool might once himself alone expose,
Now one in verse makes many more in prose
'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike, yet each believes his own 10
In poets as true genius is but rare,
True taste as seldom is the critic's share,
Both must alike from heav'n derive their light,
These born to judge, as well as those to write,
Let such teach others who themselves excel, 15
And censure freely who have written well
Authors are partial to their wit,³ 'tis true,
But are not critics to their judgment too?

Yet if we look more closely, we shall find
Most have the seeds of judgment in their mind 20
Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light,
The lines, tho' touch'd but faintly, are drawn right
But as the slightest sketch, if justly trac'd,
Is by ill coloring but the more disgrac'd,
So by false learning is good sense defac'd, 25
Some are bewilder'd in the maze of schools,
And some made cuckoos Nature meant but fools
In search of wit these lose their common sense,
And then turn critics in their own defence,
Each burns alike, who can, or cannot write, 30
Or with a rival's or an enunch's spite
All fools have still an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing side
If Mævius scribbled in Apollo's spite,
There are those who judge still worse than he can write 35

Some have at first for wits, then poets past,
Turn'd critics next, and prov'd plain fools at last.
Some neither can for wits nor critics pass,
As heavy mules are neither horse nor ass
Those half-learn'd wittlings, num'rous in our isle, 40
As half form'd insects on the banks of Nile,
Unfinish'd things, one knows not what to call,
Their generation's⁴ so equivocal
To tell⁵ 'em, would a hundred tongues require,
Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire. 45

But you who seek to give and merit fame,
And justly bear a critic's noble name,
Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,

¹ Probably an allusion to the easy capture of Gibraltar, in 1704.

² thicket

³ A purple dye made by the natives of ancient Tyre, Asia Minor, from the juice of shell fish.

⁴ colla

⁵ See Paradise Lost, 7, 406

⁶ The sun was in the sign of Cancer, — 4 c, it was the time of the summer solstice

⁷ Diana, the goddess of the chase

¹ Queen Anne.

² judge

³ knowledge; intellect, genius, creative power

⁴ persons possessing learning or knowledge of human nature

⁵ begetting

⁶ count

How far your genius, taste, and learning go,
Launch not beyond your depth, but be discreet, 50
And mark that point where sense and dulness meet.

Nature to all things fix'd the limits fit,
And wisely curb'd proud man's pretending wit.
As on the land while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains, 55
Thus in the soul while memory prevails,
The solid pow'r of understanding fails,
Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away
One science only will one genius fit, 60
So vast is art, so narrow human wit.
Not only bounded to peculiar arts,
But oft in those confined to single parts.
Like kings, we lose the conquests gain'd before,
By vain ambition still to make them more, 65
Each might his sev'ral province well command,
Would all but stoop to what they understand.

First follow Nature, and your judgment frame
By her just standard, which is still the same
Unerring Nature, still divinely bright, 70
One clear, unchang'd, and universal light,
Life, force, and beauty, must to all impart,
At once the source, and end, and test of Art,
Art from that fund each just supply provides,
Works without show, and without pomp presides. 75
In some fair body thus th' informing soul
With spirits feeds, with vigor fills the whole,
Each motion guides, and every nerve sustains,
Itself unseen, but in th' effects, remains
Some, to whom Heav'n in wit has been profuse, 80
Want as much more, to turn it to its use,
For wit and judgment often are at strife,
Tho' meant each other's aid, like man and wife
'Tis more to guide than spur the Muse's steed,
Restrain his fury, than provoke his speed, 85
The winged courser,¹ like a generous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course.

Those rules of old discovered, not devis'd,
Are Nature's still, but Nature's methodiz'd,
Nature, like liberty, is but restrain'd, 90
By the same laws which first herself ordain'd.
Hear how learn'd Greece her useful rules indites,
When to repress and when indulge our flights,
High on Parnassus top her sons she show'd,
And pointed out those arduous paths they trod, 95
Held from afar, aloft, th' immortal prize,
And urged the rest by equal steps to rise
Just precepts thus from great examples giv'n,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from Heav'n.
The gen'rous critic fann'd the poet's fire, 100
And taught the world with reason to admire
Then Criticism the Muse's handmaid prov'd,
To dress her charms and make her more belov'd,
But following wits from that intention stray'd,
Who could not win the mistress, woo'd the maid, 105
Against the poets their own arms they turn'd,
Sure to hate most the men from whom they learn'd
So modern 'pothecaries, taught the art
By doctor's bills² to play the doctor's part,
Bold in the practice of mistaken rules, 110

Prescribe, apply, and call their masters fools.
Some on the leaves of ancient authors prey,
Nor time nor moths e'er spoil'd so much as they
Some drily plain without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made, 115
These leave the sense, their learning to display,
And those explain the meaning quite away.

You then whose judgment the right course would steer,
Know well each ancient's proper character;
His fable,³ subject, scope in every page, 120
Religion, country, genius of his age,
Without all these at once before your eyes,
Cavil you may, but never criticise.
Be Homer's works your study and delight,
Read them by day, and meditate by night, 125
Thence form your judgment, thence your maxims bring,

And trace the Muses upward to their spring
Still with itself compar'd, his text peruse,
And let your comment be the Mantuan Muse.⁴

When first young Maro⁵ in his boundless mind 130
A work t' outlast immortal Rome design'd,
Perhaps he seem'd above the critic's law,
And but from Nature's fountains scorn'd to draw,
But when t' examine every part he came,
Nature and Homer were, he found, the same 135
Convinc'd, amaz'd, he cherks the bold design,
And rules as strict his labor'd work confine,
As if the Stagirite⁶ overlooked each line
Learn hence for ancient rules a just esteem,
To copy Nature is to copy them 140

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare,
For there's a happiness as well as care,
Music resembles poetry, in each
Are nameless graces which no methods teach,
And which a master hand alone can reach 145
If where the rules not far enough extend,
(Since rules were made but to promote their end)
Some lucky licence answer to the full
Th' intent propos'd, that licence is a rule
Thus Pegasus, a nearer way to take, 150
May boldly deviate from the common track;
From vulgar bounds with brave disorder part,
And snatch a grace beyond the reach of art,
Which, without passing thro' the judgment, gains
The heart, and all its end at once attains 155
In prospects thus, some objects please our eyes,
Which out of Nature's common order rise,
The shapeless rock, or hanging precipice
Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend, 160
But tho' the ancients thus their rules invade,
(As kings dispense with laws themselves have made),
Moderns beware! or if you must offend
Against the precept, ne'er transgress its end,
Let it be seldom, and compell'd by need, 165
And have, at least, their precedent to plead

¹ plot story

² Virgil, who was born near Mantua, Italy.

³ The family name of Virgil (Publius Virgilius Maro).

⁴ Aristotle (384-322 B. C.), the famous Greek philosopher, who was born in Stagira, a city in Macedonia, now a part of Turkey. His Poetics laid the foundation of literary criticism, and for centuries, especially in Pope's time, enjoyed an almost superstitious reverence.

¹ animating

² Pegasus

³ of good stock, thoroughbred, mettlesome

⁴ That is, on the heights of poetic fame

⁵ prescriptions

The critic else proceeds without remorse,
Seizes your fame and puts his laws in force

I know there are to whose presumptuous thoughts
Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults 170
Some figures monstrous and mis-shap'd appear,
Consider'd singly, or beheld too near,
Which, but proportion'd to their light or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace
A prudent chief not always must display 175
His powers in equal ranks, and fair array,
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay, seem sometimes to fly
Those oft are stratagems which errors seem,
Nor is it Homer nods, but we that dream 180

Still green with bays each ancient altar stands,
Above the reach of sacrilegious hands,
Secure from flames, from envy's fiercer rage,
Destructive war, and all involving age 184
See, from each clime the learn'd their incense bring 't
Hear, in all tongues, consenting peans ring '
In praise so just let ev'ry voice be joined,
And fill the general chorus of mankind
Hail, bards triumphant ' born in happier days,
Immortal heirs of universal praise 190
Whose honors with increase of ages grow,
As streams roll down, enlarging as they flow;
Nations unborn your mighty names shall sound,
And worlds applaud that must not yet be found '
Oh, may some spark of your celestial fire, 195
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire,
(That on weak wings, from far, pursues your flights;
Glow while he reads, but trembles as he writes)
To teach vain with a science little known,
T' admire superior sense, and doubt their own ' 200

From AN ESSAY ON MAN

EPISTLE I

Awake, my St John ' leave all meaner things
To low ambition and the pride of kings
Let us (since life can little more supply
Than just to look about us and to die)
Expatiate free¹ o'er all this scene of man , 5
A mighty maze ' but not without a plan ;
A wild, where weeds and flow'rs promiscuous shoot,
Or garden, tempting with forbidden fruit.
Together let us beat² this ample field,
Try what the open, what the covert yeld ; 10
The latent tracts, the giddy heights, explore
Of all who blindly creep, or sightless soar ,
Eye Nature's walks, shoot folly as it flies,
And catch the manners living as they rise ,
Laugh where we must, be candid³ where we can , 15
But vindicate the ways of God to man "

I Say first, of God above, or man below,
What can we reason, but from what we know ?
Of man, what see we but his station here
From which to reason or to which refer ? 20
Thro' worlds unnumber'd tho' the God be known,

¹ See Horace's Ars Poetica, 359-60

² Used here in the original sense of can

³ wander at will

⁴ pour, range over

⁵ lenient, charitable

⁶ See Paradise Lost, 1, 28

'Tis ours to trace him only in our own.

He, who through vast immensity can pierce,
See worlds on worlds compose one universe,
Observe how system into system runs, 25
What other planets circle other suns,
What vari'd being peoples every star,
May tell why Heav'n has made us as we are
But of this frame¹ the bearings, and the ties,
The strong connections, nice dependences, 30
Gradations just, has thy pervading soul
Look'd thro' ? or can a part contain the whole ?
Is the great chain, that draws all to agree,
And drawn supports, upheld by God, or thee ?

II Presumptuous man ' the reason wouldst thou find, 35

Why form'd so weak, so little, and so blind ?
First, if thou canst, the harder reason guess,
Why form'd no weaker, blinder, and no less ?
Ask of thy mother earth, why oaks are made
Taller or stronger than the weeds they shade ? 40
Or ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove.
Of systems possible, if 'tis contest
That Wisdom infinite must form the best,
Where all must full or not coherent be, 45
And all that rises, rise in due degree ,
Then, in the scale of reasoning life, 'tis plain,
There must be, somewhere, such a rank as man
And all the question (wrangle e'er so long)
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong ? 50

Respecting man, whatever wrong we call,
May, must be right, as relative to all
In human works, tho' labor'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain ,
In God's, one single can its end produce , 55
Yet serves to second too some other use
So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown,
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal ,
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole, 60

When the proud steed shall know why man re-
strains
His fiery course, or drives him o'er the plains ;
When the dull ox, why now he breaks the clod,
Is now a victim, and now Egypt's god²
Then shall man's pride and dullness comprehend 65
His actions³, passions⁴, being's, use and end ,
Why doing, suffering, check'd, impell'd , and why
This hour a slave, the next a deity

Then say not man's imperfect, Heav'n in fault ,
Say rather, man's as perfect as he ought 70
His knowledge measur'd to his state and place,
His time a moment, and a point his space
If to be perfect in a certain sphere,
What matter, soon or late, or here or there ?
The best today is as completely so, 75
As who began a thousand years ago

III Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of Fate,
All but the page prescrib'd, their present state '
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know :

¹ The structure of the universe.

² Apis, the sacred bull of Egypt.

- Or who could suffer being here below?
The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed today,
Had he thy reason, would he skip and play?
Pleas'd to the last, he crops the flow'ry food,
And licks the hand just rais'd to shed his blood.
Oh, blindness to the future! kindly given,
That each may fill the circle mark'd by Heav'n -
Who sees with equal eye, as God of all,
A hero perish, or a sparrow fall,
Atoms or systems into ruin hurl'd,
And now a bubble burst, and now a world
Hope humbly then, with trembling pinions soar,
Wait the great teacher Death, and God adore
What future bliss, he gives not thee to know,
But gives that hope to be thy blessing now.
Hope springs eternal in the human breast
Man never is, but always to be blest
The soul, uneasy and confin'd from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come
- Lo, the poor Indian! whose untutor'd mind
Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind,
His soul, proud science never taught to stray
I'er as the solar walk, or milky way,
Yet simple Nature to his hope has giv'n,
Behind the cloud-topp'd hill, an humbler Heav'n,
Some safer world in depths of woods embrac'd
Some happier island in the watery waste,
Where slaves, once more their native land behold,
No fiends torment, no Christians thirst for gold
To be, contents, his natural desire,
He asks no angel's wing, no seraph's fire;
But thinks, admitted to that equal sky
His faithful dog shall hear his company
- IV Go, wiser thou! and, in thy scale of sense
Weigh thy opinion against Providence,
Call imperfection what thou fancy'st such,
Say, "Here he gives too little, there too much;"
Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust!
Yet cry, "If man's unhappy, God's unjust!"
If man alone engross not Heaven's high care,
Alone made perfect here, immortal there,
Watch from his hand the balance and the rod,
Re-judge his justice, be the god of God.
In pride, in reasoning pride, our error lies;
All quit their sphere, and rush into the skies.
Pride still is aiming at the blest abodes,
Men would be angels, angels would be gods.
Aspiring to be gods, if angels fell,
Aspiring to be angels, men rebel
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sins against th' Eternal Cause
- V Ask for what end the heav'nly bodies shine, Earth for whose use? Pride answers, "'Tis for mine
For me kind Nature wakes her genial pow'r,
Suckles each herb, and spreads out ev'ry flow'r;
Annual for me the grape, the rose renew
The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew;
For me, the mine a thousand treasures brings;
For me, health gushes from a thousand springs;
Scars roll to waft me, suns to light me rise;
My footstool earth, my canopy the skies"
- But errs not Nature from this gracious end,
From burning suns when livid deaths descend,
1 pleasure of taste
- 80 When earthquakes swallow, or when tempests sweep
Towns to one grave, whole nations to the deep?
"No," 'tis reply'd, "the first Almighty Cause
Acts not by partial, but by gen'ral laws,
Th' exceptions few, some change, since all began
And what created perfect?"—Why then man?
If the great end be human happiness,
Then Nature deviates, and can man do less?
As much that end a constant course requires
Of show'rs and sunshine, as of man's desires,
As much eternal springs and cloudless skies,
As men forever temp'rate, calm, and wise
If plagues or earthquakes break not Heaven's design,
Why then a Borgia, or a Catiline?
Who knows but He, whose hand the lightning forms,
Who heaven, old ocean, and who wings the storms,
Pours fierce ambition in a Caesar's mind,
Or turns young Ammon loose to scourge mankind?
From pride, from pride, our very reasoning springs
Account for moral, as for nat'ral things
Why charge we Heav'n in those, in these acquit?
In both, to reason right is to submit,
Better for us, perhaps, it might appear,
Were there all harmony, all virtue here,
That never air or ocean felt the wind;
That never passion discompos'd the mind.
But all subsists by elemental strife,
And passions are the elements of life
The gen'ral order, since the whole began,
Is kept in Nature, and is kept in man.
- VI What would this man? Now upward will he soar,
And little less than angel, would be more.
Now looking downwards, just as griev'd appears
To want the strength of bulls, the fur of bears
Made for his use all creatures if he call,
Say what their use, had he the pow'r of all?
Nature to these, without profusion, kind,
The proper organs, proper pow'rs assigned,
Each seeming want compensated of course,
Here with degrees of swiftness, there of force;
All in exact proportion to the state,
Nothing to add, and nothing to abate
Each beast, each insect happy in its own -
Is Heav'n unkind to man, and man alone?
Shall he alone, whom rational we call,
Be pleas'd with nothing, if not bleas'd with all?
The bliss of man (could pride that blessing find)
Is not to act or think beyond mankind,
No pow'rs of body or of soul to share,
But what his nature and his state can bear.
Why has not man a microscope eye?
For this plain reason, man is not a fly
Say what the use, were finer optics giv'n,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n?
Or touch, if tremblingly alive all o'er,
To smart and agonize at every pore?
Or, quick effluvia darting through the brain,
Die of a rose in aromatic pain?
If Nature thund'ring in his op'ning ears,
And stunned him with the music of the spheres,
1 According to the old Ptolemaic astronomy, the earth was the center of the universe, with the planets and stars revolving about it in concentric spheres. The revolution of these spheres produced music too fine for mortal ears to hear.

How would he wish that Heav'n had left him still
The whisp'ring zephyr, and the purling rill?
Who finds not Providence all good and wise, 205
Alike in what it gives, and what denies?

VII. Far as Creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual,¹ mental pow'rs ascends
Mark how it mounts, to man's imperial race,
From the green myriads in the peopled grass 210
What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,
The mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam
Of smell, the headlong lioness between
And hound sagacious on the tainted green
Of hearing, from the life that fills the flood, 215
To that which warbles thro' the vernal wood
The spider's touch, how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line
In the nice bee, what sense so subtly true
From poisonous herbs extracts the healing dew? 220
How instinct varies in the grov'ling swine,
Compar'd, half-reas'ning elephant, with thine!
Twixt that and reason, what a nice barrier,
Forever sep'rate, yet forever near!
Remembrance and reflection how ally'd; 225
What thin partitions sense from thought divide
And middle natures, how they long to join,
Yet never pass th' insuperable line!
Without this just gradation, could they be Subjected, these to those, or all to thee? 230
The pow'rs of all subdu'd by thee alone,
Is not thy reason all these pow'rs in one?

VIII See, through this air, this ocean, and this earth,

All matter quick,² and bursting into birth.
Above, how high, progressive life may go! 235
Around, how wide! how deep extend below!
Vast chain of being! which from God began,
Natures ethereal, human, angel, man,
Beast, bird, fish, insect, what no eye can see,
No glass can reach, from infinite to thee, 240
From thee to nothing—On superior pow'rs
Were we to press, inferior might³ on ours,
Or in the full creation leave a void,
Where, one step broken, the great scale's destroy'd
From Nature's chain whatever link you strike, 245
Tenth, or ten thousandth, breaks the chain alike

And, if each system in gradation roll
Alike essential to th' amaying whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only but the whole must fall 250
Let earth unbalance'd from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky;
Let ruling angels from their spheres be hurl'd,
Being on being wreck'd, and world on world,
Heaven's whole foundations to their centre nod, 255
And Nature tremble to the throne of God
All this dread order break—for whom? for thee?
Vile worm!—Oh, madness! pride! impiety!

IX. What if the foot, ordain'd the dust to tread,
Or, hand, to toil, aspir'd to be the head? 260
What if the head, the eye, or ear repin'd
To serve mere engines to the ruling mind?
Just as absurd for any part to claim

To be another, in this gen'ral frame,¹
Just as absurd, to mourn the tasks or pains, 265
The great directing Mind of all ordains

All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and God the soul,
That chang'd through all, and yet in all the same,
Great in the earth, as in th' ethereal frame; 270
Warms in the sun, refreshes in the breeze,
Glow's in the stars, and blossoms in the trees,
Lives thro' all life, extends thro' all extent,
Spreads undivided, operates unspent;
Breathes in our soul, informs our mortal part, 275
As full, as perfect, in a hair as heart;
As full, as perfect, in vile man that mourns,
As the rapt seraph that adores and burns.²
To him no high, no low, no great, no small;
He fills, he bounds, connects, and equals all 280

X Cease then, nor order imperfection name.
Our proper bliss depends on what we blame
Know thy own point this kind, this due degree
Of blindness, weakness, Heav'n bestows on thee 285
Submit!—In this, or any other sphere,
Secure to be as blest as thou canst bear
Safe in the hand of one disposing Pow'r,
Or in the natal, or the mortal hour.
All nature is but Art, unknown to thee;
All chance, direction, which thou canst not see, 290
All discord, harmony not understood,
All partial evil, universal good
And, spite of pride, in erring reason's spite,
One truth is clear,—Whatever is, is right

SAMUEL JOHNSON (1709-1784)

From PREFACE TO SHAKSPEARE
1765

The poet, of whose works I have undertaken the revision, may now begin to assume the dignity of an ancient, and claim the privilege of established fame and prescriptive veneration. He has long outlived his century, the term commonly fixed as the test of literary merit. Whatever advantages he might once derive from personal allusions, local customs, or temporary opinions, have for many years been lost, and every topic of merriment, or motive of sorrow, which the modes of artificial life afforded him, now only obscure the scenes which they once illuminated. The effects of favor and competition are at an end, the tradition of his friendships and his enmities has perished, his works support no opinion with arguments, nor supply any faction with invectives, they can neither indulge vanity, nor gratify malignity, but are read without any other reason than the desire of pleasure, and are therefore prized only as pleasure is obtained; yet, thus unassisted by interest or passion, they have passed through variations of taste and changes of manners, and, as they devolved from 1 universe

² According to Jewish legend, the seraphs were angels who lived only a day, being consumed by fire in the ardor of their worship. See Longfellow's Randolph, which is based, in part, on this legend.

¹ pertaining to the senses

² alive

³ That is, inferior persons might press.

one generation to another, have received new honors at every transmission.

But because human judgment, though it be gradually gaining upon certainty, never becomes infallible, and approbation, though long continued, may yet be only the approbation of prejudice or fashion, it is proper to inquire by what peculiarities of excellence Shakspeare has gained and kept the favor of his countrymen

Nothing can please many, and please long, but just representations of general nature. Particular manners can be known to few, and therefore few only can judge how nearly they are copied. The irregular combinations of fanciful invention may delight awhile, by that novelty of which the common satiety of life sends us all in quest, but the pleasures of sudden wonder are soon exhausted, and the mind can only repose on the stability of truth.

Shakspeare is, above all writers, at least above all modern writers, the poet of nature, the poet that holds up to his readers a faithful mirror of manners and of life. His characters are not modified by the customs of particular places, unpracticed by the rest of the world, by the peculiarities of studies or professions, which can operate but upon small numbers, or by the accidents of transient fashions or temporary opinions; they are the genuine progeny of common humanity, such as the world will always supply and observation will always find. His persons act and speak by the influence of those general passions and principles by which all minds are agitated and the whole system of life is continued in motion. In the writings of other poets a character is too often an individual; in those of Shakspeare it is commonly a species.

It is from this wide extension of design that so much instruction is derived. It is this which fills the plays of Shakspeare with practical axioms and domestic wisdom. It was said of Euripides that every verse was a precept, and it may be said of Shakspeare that from his works may be collected a system of civil and economical produce. Yet his real power is not shown in the splendor of particular passages, but by the progress of his fable and the tenor of his dialogue, and he that tries to recommend him by select quotations will succeed like the pedant in Hercules, who, when he offered his house to sale, carried a brick in his pocket as a specimen.

It will not easily be imagined how much Shakspeare excels in accommodating his sentiments to real life but by comparing him with other authors. It was observed of the ancient schools of declamation that the more diligently they were frequented the more was the student disqualified for the world, because he found nothing there which he should ever meet in any other place. The same remark may be applied to every stage but that of Shakspeare. The theatre when it is under any other direction is peopled by such characters as were never seen, conversing in a language which was never heard, upon topics which will never arise in the commerce of mankind. But the dialogue of this author is often so evidently determined by the incident which produces it, and is pursued with so much ease and simplicity, that it seems scarcely to claim the merit of fiction but to have been gleaned by diligent selection out of common conversation and common occurrences.

Upon every other stage the universal agent is love, by whose power all good and evil is distributed and every action quickened or retarded. To bring a lover, a lady, and a rival into the fable, to entangle them in contradictory obligations, perplex them with oppositions of interest, and harass them with violence of desires inconsistent with each other, to make them meet in rapture and part in agony, to fill their mouths with hyperbolic joy and outrageous sorrow, to distress them as nothing human ever was distressed, to deliver them as nothing human ever was delivered, is the business of a modern dramatist. For this, probability is violated, life is misrepresented, and language is deprived. But love is only one of many passions, and as it has no great influence upon the sum of life, it has little operation in the dramas of a poet who caught his ideas from the living world and exhibited only what he saw before him. He knew that any other passion, as it was regular or exorbitant,¹ was a cause of happiness or calamity.

Characters thus ample and general were not easily discriminated and preserved, yet perhaps no poet ever kept his personages more distinct from each other. I will not say, with Pope, that every speech may be assigned to the proper speaker, because many speeches there are which have nothing characteristical, but, perhaps, though some may be equally adapted to every person, it will be difficult to find that any can be properly transferred from the present possessor to another claimant. The choice is right when there is reason for choice.

Other dramatists can only gain attention by hyperbolic or aggravated characters, by fabulous and unexampled excellence or depravity, as the writers of barbarous romances invigorated the reader by a giant and a dwarf, and he that should form his expectations of human affairs from the play or from the tale would be equally deceived. Shakspeare has no heroes, his scenes are occupied only by men, who act and speak as the reader thinks that he should himself have spoken or acted on the same occasion, even where the agency is supernatural, the dialogue is level with life. Other writers disguise the most natural passions and most frequent incidents, so that he who contemplates them in the book will not know them in the world. Shakspeare approximates the remote and familiarizes the wonderful; the event which he represents will not happen, but if it were possible its effects would probably be such as he has assigned; and it may be said that he has not only shown human nature as it acts in real exigencies but as it would be found in trials to which it cannot be exposed.

¹ not story

² Johnson means the modern stage only.

¹ according as

² out of its orbit, irregular

This, therefore, is the praise of Shakspeare, that his drama is the mirror of life, that he who has mased his imagination in following the phantoms which other writers raise up before him may here be cured of his delirious ecstasies by reading human sentiments in human language, by scenes from which a hermit may estimate the transactions of the world and a confessor predict the progress of the passions

His adherence to general nature has exposed him to the censure of critics who form their judgments upon narrower principles Dennis and Rymer think his Romans not sufficiently Roman,¹ and Voltaire censures his kings as not completely royal.² Dennis is offended that Menenius, a senator of Rome, should play the buffoon, and Voltaire perhaps thinks decency violated when the Danish usurper³ is represented as a drunkard. But Shakspeare always makes nature predominate over accident, and if he preserves the essential character, is not very careful of distinctions superinduced and adventitious. His story requires Romans or kings, but he thinks only on men. He knew that Rome, like every other city, had men of all dispositions; and, wanting a buffoon, he went into the senate-house for that which the senate-house would certainly have afforded him. He was inclined to show an usurper and a murderer not only odious but despicable; he therefore added drunkenness to his other qualities, knowing that kings love wine, like other men, and that wine exerts its natural powers upon kings. These are the petty cavils of petty minds. A poet overlooks the casual distinction of country and condition, as a painter, satisfied with the figure, neglects the drapery.

Shakspeare, with his excellences, has likewise faults, and faults sufficient to obscure and overwhelm any other merit. I shall show them in the proportion in which they appear to me, without envious malignity or superstitious veneration. No question can be more innocently discussed than a dead poet's pretensions to renown, and little regard is due to that bigotry which sets candor higher than truth.

His first defect is that to which may be imputed most of the evil in books or in men. He sacrifices virtue to convenience, and is so much more careful to please than to instruct that he seems to write without any moral purpose. From his writings, indeed, a system of social duty may be selected, for he that thinks reasonably must think morally; but his precepts and axioms drop casually from him, he makes no just distribution of good or evil, nor is always careful to show in the virtuous a disapprobation of the wicked, he carries his persons indifferently through right and wrong, and at the close dismisses them without further care and leaves their examples to operate by chance. This fault the barbarity of his age cannot extenuate, for it is always a writer's duty to make the world better, and justice is a virtue independent on time or place.

The plots are often so loosely formed that a very slight consideration may improve them, and so carelessly pursued that he seems not always fully to comprehend his own design. He omits opportunities of instructing or delighting, which the train of his story seems to force upon him, and apparently rejects those exhibitions which would be more affecting, for the sake of those which are more easy.

It may be observed that in many of his plays the latter part is evidently neglected. When he found himself near the end of his work and in view of his reward, he shortened the labor to snatch the profit. He therefore remits his efforts where he should most vigorously exert them, and his catastrophe is improbably produced or imperfectly represented.

He had no regard to distinction of time or place, but gives to one age or nation, without scruple, the customs, institutions, and opinions of another, at the expense not only of likelihood but of possibility. These faults Pope has endeavored, with more zeal than judgment, to transfer to his imagined interpolator.⁴ We need not wonder to find Hector quoting Aristotle,⁵ when we see the loves of Theseus and Hippolyta combined with the gothic mythology of fallics.⁶ Shakspeare, indeed, was not the only violator of chronology, for in the same age Sidney, who wanted not the advantages of learning, has, in his Arcadia, confounded the pastoral with the feudal times,⁷ the days of innocence, quiet, and security with those of turbulence, violence, and adventure.

In his comic scenes he is seldom very successful when he engages his characters in reciprocal demonstrations of smartness and contents of sarcasm. Their jests are commonly gross, and their pleasantry licentious, neither his gentlemen nor his ladies have much delicacy, nor are sufficiently distinguished from his clowns by any appearance of refined manners. Whether he represented the real conversation of his time is not easy to determine. The reign of Elizabeth is commonly supposed to have been a time of stateliness, formality, and reserve, yet perhaps the relaxations of that severity were not very elegant. There must, however, have been always some modes of gayety preferable to others, and a writer ought to choose the best.

In tragedy his performance seems constantly to

¹ See Pope's Preface to the Works of Shakspeare (1725).

² In Troilus and Cressida, II. 2, 163-167. Hector was the bravest of the Trojan warriors in the Trojan War, which took place at least eight centuries before the time of Aristotle (384-322 B. C.), the great Greek philosopher.

³ In A Midsummer Night's Dream, Theseus, an ancient Greek hero, and Hippolyta, Queen of the Amazons, are made contemporary with Oberon, Robin Goodfellow, and other characters of English folklore.

⁴ The days of ancient Greece with those of the Middle Ages.

¹ See Dennis's On the Genius and Writings of Shakspeare (1711), and Rymer's A Short View of Tragedy (1693).

² See Voltaire's "On Tragedy," in his Letters on the English (1738), and the Preface to Rembrandt, Part 3 (1748); also "Dramatic Art," in his Philosophical Dictionary (1764-66), and the Letter to the French Academy (1776).

³ Claudius in Hamlet.

be worse as his labor is more The effusions of passion which exigence forces out are for the most part striking and energetic, but whenever he solicits his invention or strains his faculties, the offspring of his throes is tumor, meanness, tediousness, and obscurity

In narration he affects a disproportionate pomp of diction and a wearisome train of circumlocution, and tells the incident imperfectly in many words which might have been more plainly delivered in few. Narration in dramatic poetry is naturally tedious, as it is unanimated and in active and obstructs the progress of the action, it should therefore always be rapid, and enlivened by frequent interruption Shakspeare found it an incumbrance, and, instead of lightening it by brevity, endeavored to recommend it by dignity and splendor

His declamations, or set speeches, are commonly cold and weak, for his power was the power of nature, when he endeavored, like other tragic writers, to catch opportunities of amplification, and, instead of inquiring what the occasion demanded, to show how much his stores of knowledge could supply, he seldom escapes without the pity or resentment of his reader.

It is incident to him to be now and then entangled with an unwieldy sentiment, which he cannot well express and will not reject, he struggles with it a while, and, if it continues stubborn, comprises it in words such as occur, and leaves it to be disentangled and evolved by those who have more leisure to bestow upon it

Not that always where the language is intricate the thought is subtle, or the image always great where the line is bulky, the equality of words to things is very often neglected, and trivial sentiments and vulgar ideas disappoint the attention, to which they are recommended by sonorous epithets and swelling figures

But the admirers of this great poet have most reason to complain when he approaches nearest to his highest excellence, and seems fully resolved to sink them in dejection and mollify them with tender emotions by the fall of greatness, the danger of innocence, or the crosses of love What he does best he soon ceases to do He is not soft and pathetic without some idle conceit or contemptible equivocation He no sooner begins to move than he counteracts himself, and terror and pity, as they are rising in the mind, are checked and blasted by sudden frigidity

A quibble is to Shakspeare what luminous vapors are to the traveller; he follows it at all adventures; it is sure to lead him out of his way, and sure to engulf him in the mire It has some malignant power over his mind, and its fascinations are irresistible Whatever be the dignity or profundity of his disquisition, whether he be enlarging knowledge or exalting affection, whether he be amusing attention with incidents or enchaining it in suspense, let but a quibble spring up before him and he leaves his work unfinished A quibble is the golden apple for which he will always turn aside from his career or stoop from his elevation. A quibble, poor and barren as it is, gave him such delight that he was content to purchase it by the sacrifice of reason, propriety, and truth. A quibble was to him the fatal Cleopatra¹ for which he lost the world and was content to lose it.

It will be thought strange that in enumerating the defects of this writer I have not yet mentioned his neglect of the unities,² his violation of those laws which have been instituted and established by the joint authority of poets and critics

For his other deviations from the art of writing, I resign him to critical justice without making any other demand in his favor than that which must be indulged to all human excellence—that his virtues be rated with his failings, but from the censure which this irregularity may bring upon him I shall, with due reverence to that learning which I must oppose, adventure to try how I can defend him

His histories, being neither tragedies nor comedies, are not subject to any of their laws nothing more is necessary to all the praise which they expect than that the changes of action be so prepared as to be understood, that the incidents be various and affecting, and the characters consistent, natural, and distinct No other unity is intended, and therefore none is to be sought

In his other works he has well enough preserved the unity of action He has not, indeed, an intrigue regularly perplexed and regularly unravelled; he does not endeavor to hide his design only to discover it, for this is seldom the order of real events and Shakspeare is the poet of nature but his plan has commonly, what Aristotle requires, a beginning, a middle, and an end, one event is concatenated³ with another, and the conclusion follows by easy consequence There are perhaps some incidents that might be spared, as in other poets there is much talk that only fills up time upon the stage; but the general system makes gradual advances, and the end of the play is the end of expectation.

To the unities of time and place he has shown no regard, and perhaps a nearer view of the principles on which they stand will diminish their value and withdraw from them the veneration which, from the time of Corneille,⁴ they have very generally received, by discovering that they have given more trouble to the poet than pleasure to the auditor

The necessity of observing the unities of time and place arises from the supposed necessity of making the drama credible The critics hold it impossible that an action of months or years can

¹ The beautiful Queen of Egypt for whom Antony gave up his share in the Roman government. The subtitle of Dryden's All for Love, which deals with the love of Antony and Cleopatra, is The World Well Lost

² The law of dramatic unities that in a drama the action must spring from a single controlling purpose and be represented as occurring in one place, that the supposed time within which the action develops must not exceed the actual time of performance, and that the scene must not shift from place to place

³ connected, linked

⁴ Pierre Corneille (1606-84), a noted French dramatist, whose late plays conformed rather closely to the classical rule regarding unities of place, time, and action.

be possibly believed to pass in three hours, or that the spectator can suppose himself to sit in the theatre while ambassadors go and return between distant kings, while armies are levied and towns besieged, while an exile wanders and returns, or till he whom they saw courting his mistress shall lament the untimely fall of his son. The mind revolts from evident falsehood, and fiction loses its force when it departs from the resemblance of reality. From the narrow limitation of time necessarily arises the contraction of place. The spectator, who knows that he saw the first act at Alexandria, cannot suppose that he sees the next at Rome,¹ at a distance to which not the dragons of Medea² could in so short a time have transported him, he knows with certainty that he has not changed his place, and he knows that place cannot change itself—that what was a house cannot become a plain, that what was Thebes can never be Persepolis.³

Such is the triumphant language with which a critic exults over the misery of an irregular poet, and exults commonly without resistance or reply. It is time, therefore, to tell him, by the authority of Shakespeare, that he assumes, as an unquestionable principle a position which, while his breath is forming it into words, his understanding pronounces to be false. It is false that any representation is mistaken for reality, that any dramatic fable in its materiality was ever credible or for a single moment was ever credited.

The objection arising from the impossibility of passing the first hour at Alexandria and the next at Rome, supposes that, when the play opens, the spectator really imagines himself at Alexandria, and believes that his walk to the theatre has been a voyage to Egypt and that he lives in the days of Antony and Cleopatra. Surely he that imagines this may imagine more. He that can take the stage at one time for the palace of the Ptolemies⁴ may take it in half an hour for the promontory of Actium. Delusion, if delusion be admitted, has no certain limitation, if the spectator can be once persuaded that his old acquaintance are Alexander and Cæsar, that a room illuminated with candles is the plain of Pharsalla or the bank of Granicus, he is in a state of elevation above the reach of reason or of truth, and from the heights of empyrean poetry may despise the circumscriptions of terrestrial nature. There is no reason why a mind thus wandering in ecstasy should count the clock, or why an hour should not be a century in that calenture⁵ of the brain that can make the stage a field

The truth is that the spectators are always in their senses, and know, from the first act to the last, that the stage is only a stage and that the players are only players. They came to hear a certain number of lines recited with just gesture and elegant modulation. The lines relate to some action, and an action must be in some place, but the different actions that complete a story may be in places very remote from each other, and where is the absurdity of allowing that space to represent first Athens and then Sicily, which was always known to be neither Sicily nor Athens but a modern theatre?

By supposition, as place is introduced, time may be extended, the time required by the fable elapses for the most part between the acts, for of so much of the action as is represented the real and poetical duration is the same. If in the first act preparations for war against Mithridates are represented to be made in Rome, the event of the war may without absurdity be represented, in the catastrophe, as happening in Pontus.¹ We know that there is neither war nor preparation for war, we know that we are neither in Rome nor Pontus, that neither Mithridates nor Lucullus are before us. The drama exhibits successive imitations of successive actions, and why may not the second imitation represent an action that happened years after the first, if it be so connected with it that nothing but time can be supposed to intervene? Time is, of all modes of existence, most obsequious to the imagination, a lapse of years is as easily conceived as a passage of hours. In contemplation we easily contract the time of real actions, and therefore willingly permit it to be contracted when we only see their imitation.

It will be asked how the drama moves² if it is not credited. It is credited with all the credit due to a drama. It is credited, whenever it moves, as a just picture of a real original, as representing to the auditor what he would himself feel if he were to do or suffer what is there signified to be suffered or to be done. The reflection that strikes the heart is not that the evils before us are real evils, but that they are evils to which we ourselves may be exposed. If there be any fallacy, it is not that we fancy the players, but that we fancy ourselves, unhappy for a moment, but we rather lament the possibility than suppose the presence of misery, as a mother weeps over her babe when she remembers that death may take it from her. The delight of tragedy proceeds from our consciousness of fiction; if we thought murders and treasons real, they would please no more.

Voltaire expresses his wonder that our author's extravagances are endured by a nation which has seen the tragedy of Cato. Let him be answered that Addison speaks the language of poets, and Shakespeare of men. We find in Cato innumerable beauties which enamor us of its author, but we see nothing that acquaints us with ¹ In the first act of Antony and Cleopatra, the scene shifts from Alexandria to Rome and then back to Alexandria.

² Medea was an enchantress, the daughter of the King of Colchis, an ancient province in Asia. In Medea, a play by Euripides (480-406 B.C.), the famous Greek tragic poet, she is borne through the air in a chariot drawn by winged dragons.

³ Thebes was the capital of Boeotia, in Greece: Persepolis was an ancient capital of Persia. The two places were far apart.

⁴ The residence of Cleopatra, the last of the royal family of the Ptolemies, in Alexandria, Egypt.

⁵ passion, ardor

¹ See Racine's Mithridate (1673) and Nathaniel Lee's Mithridates, King of Pontus (1678).

² affects the audience

human sentiments or human actions; we place it with the fairest and the noblest progeny which judgment propagates by conjunction with learning, but Othello is the vigorous and vivacious offspring of observation impregnated by genius. Cato affords a splendid exhibition of artificial and fictitious manners, and delivers just and noble sentiments, in diction easy, elevated, and harmonious, but its hopes and fears communicate no vibration to the heart, the composition refers us only to the writer, we pronounce the name of Cato, but we think on Addison

The work of a correct and regular writer is a garden accurately formed and diligently planted, varied with shades, and scented with flowers the composition of Shakespeare is a forest, in which oaks extend their branches, and pines tower in the air, interspersed sometimes with weeds, and brambles, and sometimes giving shelter to myrtles and to roses, filling the eye with awful pomp, and gratifying the mind with endless diversity. Other poets display cabinets of precious rarities, minutely finished, wrought into shape, and polished into brightness. Shakespeare opens a mine which contains gold and diamonds in unexhaustible plenty, though clouded by incrustations, debased by impurities, and mingled with a mass of meaner materials.

THE LIVES OF THE ENGLISH POETS

1777-80

1779-81

From POPE

Of composition there are different methods. Some employ at once memory and invention and, with little intermediate use of the pen, form and polish large masses by continued meditation, and write their productions only when, in their own opinion, they have completed them. It is related of Virgil that his custom was to pour out a great number of verses in the morning, and pass the day in retrenching exuberances, and correcting inaccuracies. The method of Pope, as may be collected from his translation,¹ was to write his first thoughts in his first words, and gradually to amplify, decorate, rectify, and refine them.

With such faculties, and such dispositions,² he excelled every other writer in poetical prudence he wrote in such a manner as might expose him to few hazards. He used almost always the same fabric of verse,³ and, indeed, by those few essays which he made of any other, he did not enlarge his reputation. Of this uniformity the certain consequence was readiness and dexterity. By perpetual practice, language had, in his mind, a systematical arrangement; having always the same use for words, he had words so selected and combined as to be ready at his call. This increase of facility he confessed himself to have perceived in the progress of his translation.

¹ Pope translated the Iliad and the Odyssey, and wrote imitations or translations of Horace and of several English poets, notably Chaucer

² Eighteenth century writers frequently used the plural where we use the singular.

³ That is, the heroic couplet.

But what was yet of more importance, his effusions were always voluntary, and his subjects chosen by himself. His independence secured him from drudging at a task, and laboring upon a barren topic. He never exchanged praise for money,¹ nor opened a shop of condolence or congratulation. His poems, therefore, were scarcely ever temporary. He suffered coronations and royal marriages to pass without a song; and derived no opportunities from recent events, nor any popularity from the accidental disposition of his readers. He never was reduced to the necessity of soliciting the sun to shine upon a birthday, of calling the graces and virtues to attend a wedding, or of saying what multitudes have said before him. When he could produce nothing new, he was at liberty to be silent.

His publications were for the same reason never hasty. He is said to have sent nothing to the press till it had lain two years under his inspection, it is at least certain that he ventured nothing without nice examination. He suffered the tumult of imagination to subside, and the novelties of invention to grow familiar. He knew that the mind is always enamored of its own productions, and did not trust his first fondness. He consulted his friends, and listened with great willingness to criticism, and what was of more importance, he consulted himself, and let nothing pass against his own judgment.

He professed to have learned his poetry from Dryden, whom, whenever an opportunity was presented, he praised through his whole life with unvaried liberality, and perhaps his character may receive some illustration if he be compared with his master.

Integrity of understanding and nicety of discernment were allotted in a less proportion to Dryden than to Pope. The rectitude of Dryden's mind was sufficiently shown by the dismissal of his poetical prejudices,² and the rejection of unnatural thoughts and rugged numbers. But Dryden never desired to apply all the judgment that he had. He wrote, and professed to write, merely for the people, and when he pleased others, he contented himself. He spent no time in struggles to rouse latent powers, he never attempted to make that better which was already good, nor often to mend what he must have known to be faulty. He wrote, as he tells us, with very little consideration, when occasion or necessity called upon him, he poured out what the present moment happened to supply, and, when once it had passed the press, ejected it from his mind, for when he had no pecuniary interest, he had no further solicitude.

Pope was not content to satisfy, he desired to excel, and therefore always endeavored to do his best, he did not court the candor,¹ but dared the judgment, of his reader, and expecting no indulgence from others, he showed none to himself. He examined lines and words with minute and punctilious observation, and retouched every part with indefatigable diligence till he had left nothing to be forgiven.

¹ According to Warburton, Pope is said to have been offered a large sum of money by the Duchess of Marlborough to write a good character of her husband but absolutely refused it. See J. Spence's Anecdotes, Observations, and Characters, of Books and Men, Collected from the Conversation of Mr. Pope and Other Eminent Persons of His Time (1820).

² Dryden finally abandoned the heroic couplet for blank verse.

For this reason he kept his pieces very long in his hands, while he considered and reconsidered them. The only poems which can be supposed to have been written with such regard to the times as might hasten their publication, were the two satires of Thuty-eight,² of which Doddsley told me that they were brought to him by the author that they might be fairly copied. "Almost every line," he said, "was then written twice over, I gave him a clean transcript, which he sent some time afterwards to me for the press, with almost every line written twice over a second time."

His declaration that his care for his works ceased at their publication was not strictly true. His parental attention never abandoned them, what he found amiss in the first edition, he silently corrected in those that followed. He appears to have revised the Iliad, and freed it from some of its imperfections, and the Essay on Criticism received many improvements after its first appearance. It will seldom be found that he altered without adding clearness, elegance, or vigor. Pope had perhaps the judgment of Dryden, but Dryden certainly wanted the diligence of Pope.

In acquired knowledge, the superiority must be allowed to Dryden, whose education was more scholastic, and who, before he became an author, had been allowed more time for study, with better means of information. His mind has a larger range, and he collects his images and illustrations from a more extensive circumference of science. Dryden knew more of man in his general nature, and Pope in his local manners. The notions of Dryden were formed by comprehensive speculation, and those of Pope by minute attention. There is more dignity in the knowledge of Dryden, and more certainty in that of Pope.

Poetry was not the sole praise of either, for both excelled likewise in prose; but Pope did not borrow his prose from his predecessor. The style of Dryden is capricious and varied, that of Pope is cautious and uniform. Dryden observes³ the motions of his own mind, Pope constrains his mind to his own rules of composition. Dryden is sometimes vehement and rapid, Pope is always smooth, uniform, and gentle. Dryden's page is a natural field, rising into inequalities, and diversified by the varied exuberance of abundant vegetation; Pope's is a velvet lawn, shaven by the scythe, and levelled by the roller.

Of genius, that power which constitutes a poet; that quality without which judgment is cold, and knowledge is inert; that energy which collects, combines, amplifies, and animates, the superiority must, with some hesitation, be allowed to Dryden. It is not to be inferred that of this poetical vigor Pope had only a little because Dryden had more, for every other writer since Milton must give place to Pope, and even of Dryden it must be said that, if he has brighter paragraphs, he has not better poems. Dryden's performances were always hasty, either excited by some external occasion, or extorted by domestic necessity, he composed without consideration, and published without correction. What his mind could supply at call, or gather in one excursion, was all that he sought, and all that he gave. The dilatory caution of Pope enabled him to condense his sentiments, to multiply his images, and to accumulate all that study might produce, or chance might supply. If the flights of Dryden therefore are higher, Pope continues longer on the wing. If of Dryden's fire the blaze is brighter, of Pope's the heat is more regular and constant. Dryden often surpasses expectation, and Pope never falls below it. Dryden is read with frequent astonishment, and Pope with perpetual delight.

This parallel will, I hope, when it is well considered, be found just, and if the reader should suspect me, as I suspect myself, of some partial fondness for the memory of Dryden, let him not too hastily condemn me for agitation and inquiry may, perhaps, show him the reasonableness of my determination.

EDMUND BURKE (1729-1797)

From REFLECTIONS ON THE REVOLUTION IN FRANCE
1790 1790

On the forenoon of the fourth of November last, Doctor Richard Price, a Non-Contingent minister of eminence, preached at the Dissenting meeting-house of the Old Jewry,¹ to his club or society,² a very extraordinary miscellaneous sermon, in which there are some good moral and religious sentiments, and not ill expressed, mixed up in a sort of porridge of various political opinions and reflections, but the Revolution in France is the grand ingredient in the caldron.³ I consider the address⁴ transmitted by the Revolution Society to the National Assembly, through Earl Stanhope,⁵ as originating in the principles of the sermon and as a corollary from them. It was moved by the preacher of that discourse. It was passed by those who came recking from the effect of the sermon, without any censure or qualification, expressed or implied. If, however, any of the gentlemen concerned shall wish to separate the sermon from the revolution, they know how to ¹ A street in the center of London, so named from a synagogue which formerly stood there.

² The Revolution Society formed in commemoration of the English Revolution of 1688. It sympathized with the French Revolution.

³ See Macbeth, IV, 1, 34.

⁴ An address of sympathy to the National Assembly of France.

⁵ Charles Stanhope, third Earl Stanhope (1753-1810), was chairman of the Revolution Society.

¹ Indulgence, kindness.

² Now known as Iphigeneia to the Ratifies, but first entitled One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirty-Eight, from the year of publication.

³ obeys, follows.

acknowledge the one and to disavow the other. They may do it, I cannot.

For my part, I looked on that sermon as the public declaration of a man much connected with literary caballers and intriguing philosophers, with political theologians and theological politicians, both at home and abroad. I know they set him up as a sort of oracle, because, with the best intentions in the world, he naturally philippized,¹ and chants his prophetic song in exact unison with their designs.

That sermon is in a strain which I believe has not been heard in this kingdom, in any of the pulpits which are tolerated or encouraged in it, since the year 1648, when a predecessor of Dr. Price, the Reverend Hugh Peters, made the vault of the king's own chapel at St James's ring with the honor and privilege of the saints,² who, with the "high plumes of God in their mouths," with the "two-edged sword in their hands, were to execute judgment on the heathen, and punishments upon the people, to bind their kings with chains and their nobles with fetters of iron."³ Few harangues from the pulpit, except in the days of your League⁴ in France or in the days of our Solemn League and Covenant⁵ in England, have ever breathed less of the spirit of moderation than this lecture in the Old Jewry. Supposing, however, that something like moderation were visible in this political sermon, yet politics and the pulpit are terms that have little agreement. No sound ought to be heard in the Church but the healing voice of Christian charity. The cause of civil liberty and civil government gains as little as that of religion by this confusion of duties. Those who quit their proper character, to assume what does not belong to them, are for the greater part, ignorant both of the character they leave and of the character they assume. Wholly unacquainted with the world in which they are so fond of meddling, and inexperienced in all its affairs on which they pronounce with so much confidence they have nothing of politics but the passions they excite. Surely the Church is a place where one day's truce ought to be allowed to the dissensions and animosities of mankind.

Before I read that sermon, I really thought I had lived in a free country, and it was an error I cherished, because it gave me a greater liking to the country I lived in. I was, indeed, aware that a jealous, ever-waking vigilance, to guard the treasure of our liberty, not only from invasion, but from decay and corruption, was our best wisdom and our first duty. However, I considered that treasure rather as a possession to be secured than as a prize to be contended for. I did not discern how the present time came to be so very favorable to all exertions⁶ in the cause of freedom. The present time differs from any other only by the circumstance of what is doing in France. If the example of that nation is to have an influence on this, I can easily conceive why some of their proceedings, which have an unpleasant aspect, and are not quite reconcilable to humanity, generosity, good faith, and justice, are palliated with so much milky good-nature towards the actors, and borne with so much heroic fortitude towards the sufferers. It is certainly not prudent to discredit the authority of an example we mean to follow. But allowing this, we are led to a very natural question—What is that cause of liberty, and what are those exertions in its favor, to which the example of France is so singularly auspicious? Is our monarchy to be annihilated, with all the laws, all the tribunals, and all the ancient corporations of the kingdom? Is every landmark of the country to be done away in favor of a geometrical and arithmetical constitution? Is the House of Lords to be voted useless? Is Episcopacy to be abolished? Are the Church lands to be sold to Jews and jobbers,⁷ or given to bribe new-invented municipal republics⁸ into a participation in sacrifice? Are all the taxes to be voted grievances, and the revenue reduced to a patriotic contribution or patriotic presents? Are silver shoe-buckles to be substituted in the place of the land-tax and the malt-tax, for the support of the naval strength of this kingdom? Are all orders, ranks, and distinctions to be confounded, that out of universal anarchy, joined to national bankruptcy, three or four thousand democracies⁹ should be formed into eighty-three, and that they may all, by some sort of unknown attractive power, be organized into one? For this end is the army to be seduced from its discipline and its fidelity, first by every kind of debauchery, and then by the terrible precedent of a donative¹⁰ in the increase of pay? Are the curates to be seduced from their bishops by holding out to them the delusive hope of a dole out of the spoils of their own order? Are the citizens of London to be drawn from their allegiance by feeding them at the expense of their fellow-subjects? Is a compulsory paper currency to be substituted in the place of the legal coin of this kingdom? Is what remains of the plundered stock of public revenue to be employed in the wild project of maintaining two armies to watch over and to fight with each other? If these are the ends and means of the

¹ That is, speaks as the mouth piece of the politicians. Because the priestess at Delphi gave oracles favorable to Philip of Macedon (336 B.C.), who was invading Greece, Demosthenes accused her of "philippizing."

² The Puritans. They executed Charles I in 1649.

³ Psalm, 149 6-8.

⁴ The Holy League (1576-93), formed by the Roman Catholics of France to prevent the succession of Henry of Navarre, to suppress the Huguenot party, and to enthroned the Catholic house of Guise. The Reflections were published in the form of a letter to Mr Dupont, a young gentleman of Paris.

⁵ An agreement (1643) between the reform parties of England and Scotland in support of Presbyterianism and the rights of Parliament.

⁶ Dr Price had asked his hearers to consider "the favorableness of the present times to all exertions in the cause of liberty."

⁷ The National Assembly abolished the old provinces of France, and divided the country into eighty-three departments.

⁸ brokers, speculators (The National Assembly of France decreed that church property could be confiscated for the use of the state.)

⁹ That is, city states or republics.

¹⁰ That is, English municipalities. Burke shared with others the opinion that France would break up into a number of independent republics.

¹¹ gift, present.

Revolution Society, I admit that they are well assorted, and France may furnish them for both with precedents in point

I see that your example is held out to shame us. I know that we are supposed a dull, sluggish race, rendered passive by finding our situation tolerable, and prevented by a mediocrity of freedom from ever attaining to its full perfection. Your leaders in France began by affecting to admire, almost to adore, the British Constitution, but as they advanced, they came to look upon it with a sovereign contempt. The friends of your National Assembly amongst us have full as mean an opinion of what was formerly thought the glory of their country. The Revolution Society has discovered that the English nation is not free. They are convinced that the inequality in our representation¹ is a "defect in our Constitution so gross and palpable as to make it excellent chiefly in form and theory,"²—that a representation in the legislature of a kingdom is not only the basis of all constitutional liberty in it, but of "all legitimate government, that without it a government is nothing but an usurpation":—that, "when the representation is partial, the kingdom possesses liberty only partially, and if extremely partial, it gives only a semblance, and if not only extremely partial, but corruptly chosen, it becomes a nuisance." Dr Price considers this inadequacy of representation as our fundamental grievance, and though, as to the corruption of this semblance of representation, he hopes it is not yet arrived to its full perfection of depravity, he fears that "nothing will be done towards gaining for us this essential blessing, until some great abuse of power again provokes our resentment, or some great calamity again alarms our fears, or perhaps till the acquisition of a pure and equal representation by other countries, whilst we are mocked with the shadow, kindles our shame." To this he subjoins a note in these words—"A representation chosen chiefly by the Treasury,³ and a few thousands of the dregs of the people, who are generally paid for their votes."

You will smile here at the consistency of those demagogues who, when they are not on their guard, treat the humbler part of the community with the greatest contempt, whilst, at the same time, they pretend to make them the depositories of all power. It would require a long discourse to point out to you the many fallacies that lurk in the generality and equivocal nature of the terms "inadequate representation." I shall only say here, in justice to that old-fashioned Constitution under which we have long prospered, that our representation has been found perfectly adequate to all the purposes for which a representation of the people can be desired or devised. I defy the enemies of our Constitution to show the contrary. To detail the particulars in which it is found so well to promote its ends would demand a treatise on our practical Constitution. I state here the doctrine of the revolutionists, only that you and others may see what an opinion these gentlemen entertain of the Constitution of their country, and why they seem to think that some great abuse of power, or some great calamity, as giving a chance for the blessing of a Constitution according to their ideas, would be much palliated to their feelings, you see why they are so much enamored of your fair and equal representation, which being once obtained, the same effects might follow. You see they consider our House of Commons as only "a semblance," "a form," "a theory," "a shadow," "a mockery," perhaps "a nuisance."

¹ Some boroughs were not represented in Parliament.

² Price, Discourse on the Love of our Country, Nov 4, 1789, 3rd edition, p. 39. The following quotations are from the same source.

³ The Treasury Board, consisting of five or more Lords of the Treasury including the Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

These gentlemen value themselves on being systematic, and not without reason. They must therefore look on this gross and palpable defect of representation, this fundamental grievance, (so they call it) as a thing not only vicious in itself, but as rendering our whole government absolutely illegitimate, and not at all better than a downright usurpation. Another revolution, to get rid of this illegitimate and usurped government, would of course be perfectly justifiable, if not absolutely necessary. Indeed, their principle, if you observe it with any attention, goes much further than to an alteration in the election of the House of Commons, for, if popular representation, or choice, is necessary to the legitimacy of all government, the House of Lords is, at one stroke, bastardized and corrupted in blood. That House is no representative of the people at all, even in "semblance" or in "form." The case of the crown is altogether as bad. In vain the crown may endeavor to screen itself against these gentlemen by the authority of the establishment made on the Revolution.¹ The Revolution, which is resorted to for a title, on their system, wants a title itself. The Revolution is built, according to their theory, upon a basis not more solid than our present formalities, as it was made by a House of Lords not representing anyone but themselves, and by a House of Commons exactly such as the present, that is, as they term it, by a mere "shadow and mockery" of representation.

Something they must destroy, or they seem to themselves to exist for no purpose. One set is for destroying the civil power through the ecclesiastical, another for demolishing the ecclesiastical through the civil. They are aware that the worst consequences might happen to the public in accomplishing this double ruin of Church and State; but they are so heated with their theories that they give more than hints that this ruin, with all the mischiefs that must lead to it and attend it, and which to themselves appear quite certain, would not be unacceptable to them, or very remote from their wishes. A man amongst them of great authority, and certainly of great talents, speaking of a supposed alliance between Church and State, says, "Perhaps we must wait for the fall of the civil powers, before this most unnatural alliance be broken. Calamitous, no doubt, will that time be. But what convulsion in the political world ought to be a subject of lamentation, if it be attended with so desirable an effect?"

¹ At the time of the Revolution of 1688, William and Mary were appointed joint sovereigns by Parliament.

You see with what a steady eye these gentlemen are prepared to view the greatest calamities which can befall their country¹

It is no wonder, therefore, that, with these ideas of everything in their Constitution and government at home, either in Church or State, as illegitimate and usurped, or at best as a vain mockery, they look abroad with an eager and passionate enthusiasm. Whilst they are possessed by these notions, it is vain to talk to them of the practice of their ancestors, the fundamental laws of their country the fixed form of a Constitution whose merits are confirmed by the solid test of long experience and an increasing public strength and national prosperity. They despise experience as the wisdom of unlettered men, and as for the rest they have wrought under ground a mine that will blow up, at one grand explosion all examples of antiquity, all precedents, charters, and acts of Parliament. They have "the rights of men." Against these there can be no prescription, against these no argument is binding, these admit no temperance and no compromise, anything withheld from their full demand is so much of fraud and injustice. Against these their rights of men let no government look for security in the length of its continuance, or in the justice and lenity of its administration. The objections of these speculativists, if its forms do not quadrate with their theories, are as valid against such an old and beneficent government as against the most violent tyranny or the greenest usurpation. They are always at issue with governments, not on a question of abuse but a question of competency and a question of title. I have nothing to say to the chummy subtilty of their political metaphysics. Let them be their amusement in the schools.

Ille se faciet in aula

*Æolus, et clauso, ventorum carcere regnet*²

But let them not break prison to burst like a Levanter,³ to sweep the earth with their hurricanes, and to break up the fountains of the great deep to overwhelm us!

Far am I from denying in theory full as far is my heart from withholding in practice (if I were of power to give or to withhold), the real rights of men. In denying their false claims of right I do not mean to injure those which are real, and are such as their pretended rights would totally destroy. If civil society be made for the advantage of man, all the advantages for which it is made become his right. It is an institution of beneficence, and law itself is only beneficence acting by a rule. Men have a right to live by that rule, they have a right to do justice, as between their fellows, whether their fellows are in public function or in ordinary occupation. They have a right to the fruits of their industry; and to the means of making their industry fruitful. They have a right to the acquisitions of their parents, to the nourishment and improvement of their offspring, to instruction in life, and to consolation in death. Whatever each man can separately do, without trespassing upon others, he has a right to do for himself, and he has a right to a fair portion of all which society, with all its combinations of skill and force, can do in his favor. In this partnership all men have equal rights, but not to equal things. He that has but five shillings in the partnership has as good a right to it as he that has five hundred pounds has to his larger proportion but he has not a right to an equal dividend in the product of the joint stock. And as to the share of power, authority, and direction which each individual ought to have in the management of the state, that I must deny to be amongst the direct original rights of man in civil society, for I have in my contemplation the civil social man,⁴ and no other. It is a thing to be settled by convention.

If civil society be the offspring of convention, that convention must be its law. That convention must limit and modify all the descriptions of constitution which are formed under it. Every sort of legislative, judicial, or executive power are its creatures. They can have no being in any other state of things, and how can any man claim, under the conventions of civil society, rights which do not so much as suppose its existence—rights which are absolutely repugnant to it? One of the first motives to civil society, and which becomes one of its fundamental rules, is, that no man should be judge of his own cause. By this each person has at once divested himself of the first fundamental right of uncovenanted man, that is, to judge for himself, and to assert his own cause. He abdicates all right to be his own governor. He inclusively, in a great measure, abandons the right of self defence, the first law of nature. Men cannot enjoy the rights of an uncivil and of a civil state together. That he may obtain justice, he gives up his right of determining what it is in points the most essential to him. That he may secure some liberty, he makes a surrender in trust of the whole of it.

Government is not made in virtue of natural rights, which may and do exist in total independence of it,—and exist in much greater clearness, and in a much greater degree of abstract perfection, but their abstract perfection is their practical defect. By having a right to everything they want everything. Government is a contrivance of human wisdom to provide for human wants. Men have a right that these wants should be provided for by this wisdom. Among these wants is to be reckoned the want, out of civil society, of a sufficient restraint upon their passions. Society requires not only that the passions of individuals should be subjected, but that even in the mass and body, as well as in the individuals, the inclinations of men should frequently be thwarted, their will controlled, and their passions brought into subjection. This can only be done by a power out of themselves, and not, in the exercise of its function, subject to that will and to those passions which it is its office to bridle and subdue. In this sense the restraints on men, as well as their liberties, are to be reckoned among their rights. But as the liberties and the

¹ As distinguished from man in his aboriginal state, before the existence of society.

¹ square, agree, correspond.

² Let Æolus pride himself in that court, and let him reign in the closed prison of winds (Æneid, 1, 140-41).

³ A strong easterly wind peculiar to the Mediterranean.

restrictions vary with times and circumstances, and admit of infinite modifications, they cannot be settled upon any abstract rule, and nothing is so foolish as to discuss them upon that principle.

The moment you abate anything from the full rights of men, each to govern himself, and suffer any artificial, positive limitation upon those rights, from that moment the whole organization of government becomes a consideration of convenience. This it is which makes the constitution of a state, and the due distribution of its powers, a matter of the most delicate and complicated skill. It requires a deep knowledge of human nature and human necessities, and of the things which facilitate or obstruct the various ends, which are to be pursued by the mechanism of civil institutions. The state is to have recruits to its strength, and remedies to its distempers. What is the use of discussing a man's abstract right to food or medicine? The question is upon the method of procuring and administering them. In that deliberation I shall always advise to call in the aid of the farmer and the physician, rather than the professor of metaphysics.

The science of constructing a commonwealth or renovating it, or reforming it, is, like every other experimental science, not to be taught a priori. Nor is it a short experience that can instruct us in that practical science, because the real effects of moral causes are not always immediate, but that which in the first instance is prejudicial may be excellent in its remoter operation, and its excellence may arise even from the ill effects it produces in the beginning. The reverse also happens, and very plausible schemes, with very pleasing commencements, have often shameful and lamentable conclusions. In states there are often some obscure and almost latent causes, things which appear at first view of little moment, on which a very great part of its prosperity or adversity may most essentially depend. The science of government being therefore so practical in itself, and intended for such practical purposes, a matter which requires experience, and even more experience than any person can gain in his whole life, however sagacious and observing he may be, it is with infinite caution that any man ought to venture upon pulling down an edifice, which has answered in any tolerable degree for ages the common purposes of society, or on building it up again, without having models and patterns of approved utility before his eyes.

These metaphysical rights entering into common life, like rays of light which pierce into a dense medium, are, by the laws of nature, refracted from their straight line. Indeed, in the gross and complicated mass of human passions and concerns, the primitive rights of men undergo such a variety of refractions and reflections that it becomes absurd to talk of them as if they continued in the simplicity of their original direction. The nature of man is intricate, the objects of society are of the greatest possible complexity, and therefore no simple disposition or direction of power can be suitable either to man's nature, or to the quality of his affairs. When I hear the simplicity of contrivance aimed at and boasted of in any new political constitutions, I am at no loss to decide that the artificers are grossly ignorant of their trade, or totally negligent of their duty. The simple governments are fundamentally defective, to say no worse of them. If you were to contemplate society in but one point of view, all the simple modes of polity,¹ are infinitely captivating. In effect each would answer its single end much more perfectly than the more complex. But it is better that the whole should be imperfectly and anomalously answered than that, while some parts are provided for with great exactness, others might be totally neglected, or perhaps materially injured, by the over-care of a favorite member.

The pretended rights of these theorists are all extremes, and in proportion as they are metaphysically true, they are morally and politically false. The rights of men are in a sort of middle, incapable of definition, but not impossible to be discerned. The rights of men in governments are their advantages, and these are often in balances between differences of good,—in compromises sometimes between good and evil, and sometimes between evil and evil. Political reason is a computing principle—adding, subtracting, multiplying, and dividing, morally and not metaphysically, or mathematically, true moral denominations.

By these theorists the right of the people is almost always sophistically confounded with their power. The body of the community, whenever it can come to act, can meet with no effectual resistance, but till power and right are the same, the whole body of them has no right inconsistent with virtue, and the first of all virtues, prudence. Men have no right to what is not reasonable, and to what is not for their benefit, for though a pleasant, writer said, "Luceat peris poetis,"² when one of them, in cold blood, is said to have leaped into the flames of a volcanic revolution, "ardentem frigidus Titanius instat." I consider such a frolic rather as an unjustifiable poetic license than as one of the franchises of Parnassus, and whether he were poet, or divine, or politician, that chose to exercise this kind of right, I think that more wise, because more charitable, thoughts would urge me rather to save the man than to preserve his brazen slippers as the monuments of his folly.

The kind of anniversary sermons to which a great part of what I write refers, if men are not shamed out of their present course, in commemorating the fact, will cheat many out of the principles and deprive them of the benefits of the Revolution they commemorate. I confess to you, Sir, I never liked this continual talk of resistance and revolution or the practice of making the extreme medicine of the Constitution its daily bread. It renders the habit of society dangerously valetudinary,³ it is taking periodical doses of mercury sublimated, and swallowing down re-

¹ government

² Poets have the right to die.

³ In cold blood he leaped into glowing Ætna. Empedocles, a Greek philosopher (5th cent. B.C.), is said to have died thus. A slipper, cast out in an eruption, was proof of his act.

⁴ sickly, infirm

peated provocatives of cantharides¹ to our love of liberty.

This distemper of remedy, grown habitual, relaxes and wears out, by a vulgar and prostituted use, the spring of that spirit which is to be exerted on great occasions. It was in the most patient period of Roman servitude² that themes of tyrannicide made the ordinary exercise of boys at school,—*cum primum sævos classis numerosa tyrannos*³. In the ordinary state of things, it produces in a country like ours the worst effects, even on the cause of that liberty which it abuses with the dissoluteness of an extravagant speculation. Almost all the high-bred republicans of my time have, after a short space, become the most decided, thorough-paced courtiers; they soon left the business of a tedious, moderate, but practical resistance, to those of us whom, in the pride and intoxication of their theories, they have slighted as not much better than Tories. Hypocrisy, of course, delights in the most sublime speculations, for, never intending to go beyond speculation, it costs nothing to have it magnificent. But even in cases where rather levity than fraud was to be suspected in these ranting speculations, the issue has been much the same. These professors, finding their extreme principles not applicable to cases which call only for a qualified or as I may say, civil and legal resistance, in such cases employ no resistance at all. It is with them a war or a revolution, or it is nothing. Finding their scheme of politics not adapted to the state of the world in which they live, they often come to think lightly of all public principle, and are ready, on their part to abandon for a very trivial interest what they find of very trivial value. Some, indeed, are of more steady and persevering natures, but these are eager politicians out of Parliament, who have little to tempt them to abandon their favorite projects. They have some change in the Church or State or both, constantly in their view. When that is the case, they are always bad citizens and perfectly unsure connections. For, considering their speculative designs as of infinite value and the actual arrangement of the state as of no estimation, they are at best, indifferent about it. They see no merit in the good, and no fault in the vicious management of public affairs; they rather rejoice in the latter, as more propitious to revolution. They see no merit or demerit in any man, or any action, or any political principle, any further than as they may forward or retard their design of change; they therefore take up one day, the most violent and stretched prerogative, and another time the wildest democratic ideas of freedom, and pass from the one to the other without any sort of regard to cause, to person, or to party.

In France you are now in the crisis of a revolution, and in the transit from one form of government to another you cannot see that character of men exactly in the same situation in which we see it in this country. With us it is militant, with you it is triumphant, and you know how it can act, when its power is commensurate to its will. I would not be supposed to confine these observations to any description of men, or to comprehend all men of any description within them,—no, far from it! I am as incapable of that injustice as I am of keeping terms with those who profess principles of extremes, and who, under the name of religion, teach little else than wild and dangerous politics. The worst of these politics of revolution is this: they temper and harden the breast in order to prepare it for the desperate strokes which are sometimes used in extreme occasions. But as these occasions may never arrive, the mind receives a gratuitous taint, and the moral sentiments suffer not a little, when no political purpose is served by the deprivation. This sort of people are so taken up with their theories about the rights of man that they have totally forgot his nature. Without opening one new avenue to the understanding, they have succeeded in stopping up those that lead to the heart. They have perverted in themselves, and in those that attend to them, all the well placed sympathies of the human breast.

This famous sermon of the Old Jewy breathes nothing but this spirit through all the political part. Plots, massacres, assassinations, seem to some people a trivial price for obtaining a revolution. A cheap bloodless reformation, a guiltless liberty, appear flat and vapid to their taste. There must be a great change of scene, there must be a magnificent stage effect, there must be a grand spectacle to rouse the imagination grown torpid with the lazy enjoyment of sixty years' security, and the still unanimating repose of public prosperity. The preacher found them all in the French Revolution. This inspires a juvenile warmth through his whole frame. His enthusiasm kindles as he advances, and when he arrives at his peroration, it is in a full blaze. Then viewing, from the Pisgah⁴ of his pulpit, the free, moral, happy, flourishing, and glorious state of France as in a bird-eye landscape of a promised land, he breaks out into the following rapture:—

"What an eventful period is this! I am thankful that I have lived to it, I could almost say, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation"⁵. I have lived to see a diffusion of knowledge which has undermined superstition and error—I have lived to see the rights of men better understood than ever, and nations panting for liberty which seemed to have lost the idea of it—I have lived to see thirty millions of people, indignant and resolute spurning at slavery and demanding liberty with an irresistible voice, their king led in triumph, and an arbitrary monarch surrendering himself to his subjects"⁶.

Before I proceed further, I have to remark that Dr. Price seems rather to overvalue the great

¹ A preparation of dried blister beetles

² During the time of Quintilian (c. 35—95 A. D.) and Juvenal (c. 60—140 A. D.) See Friedländer's Roman Life and Manners Under the Early Empire (trans by Freese), 3, pp 14-15

³ When the class in large numbers slays the cruel tyrants (Juvenal, Satires, 7, 151).

⁴ The mountain, east of the Dead Sea, from which Moses viewed the Promised Land just before his death. See Deuteronomy, 34 1-4

⁵ See Luke, 2 25-30

⁶ See p 1104n, 11ff

acquisitions of light which he has obtained and diffused in this age. The last century appears to me to have been quite as much enlightened. It had, though in a different place, a triumph as memorable as that of Dr Price, and some of the great preachers of that period partook of it as eagerly as he has done in the triumph of France. On the trial of the Reverend Hugh Peters for high treason,¹ it was deposed that, when King Charles was brought to London for his trial, the Apostle of Liberty in that day conducted the triumph. "I saw," says the witness, "his Majesty in the coach with six horses, and Peters riding before the king triumphing." Dr Price, when he talks as if he had made a discovery, only follows a precedent, for, after the commencement of the king's trial, this precursor, the same Dr Peters, concluding a long prayer at the royal chapel at Whitehall (he had very triumphantly chosen his place), said, "I have prayed and preached these twenty years, and now I may say with old Simeon, 'Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation.'" Peters had not the fruits of his prayer; for he neither departed so soon as he wished, nor in peace. He became (what I heartily hope none of his followers may be in this country) himself a sacrifice to the triumph which he led as pontiff. They dealt at the Restoration, perhaps, too hardly with this poor good man. But we owe it to his memory and his sufferings, that he had as much illumination and as much zeal, and had as effectually undermined all the superstition and error which might impede the great business he was engaged in, as any who follow and repeat after him in this age, which would assume to itself an exclusive title to the knowledge of the rights of men, and all the glorious consequences of that knowledge.

After this rally of the preacher of the Old Jewry, which differs only in place and time, but agrees perfectly with the spirit and letter of the rupture of 1648, the Revolution Society, the fabricators of governments, the heroic band of cashiers of monarchs,² electors of sovereigns, and leaders of kings in triumph, strutting with a proud consciousness of the diffusion of knowledge, of which every member had obtained so large a share in the donative, were in haste to make a generous diffusion of the knowledge they had thus gratuitously received. To make this bountiful communication, they adjourned from the church in the Old Jewry to the London Tavern, where the same Dr Price, in whom the fumes of his oracular tripod were not entirely evaporated, moved and carried the resolution, or address of congratulation, transmitted by Lord Stanhope to the National Assembly of France.

I find a preacher of the Gospel profaning the beautiful and prophetic ejaculation, commonly called "Nunc dimittis,"³ made on the first presentation of our Savior in the temple, and applying it, with an inhuman and unnatural rapture, to the most horrid, atrocious, and afflicting spectacle that perhaps ever was exhibited to the pity and indignation of mankind. This "leading in triumph," a thing in its best form unmanly and irrereligious, which fills our preacher with such unhallowed transports, must shock, I believe, the moral taste of every well born mind. Several English were the stupefied and indignant spectators of that triumph. It was (unless we have been strangely deceived) a spectacle more resembling a procession of American savages entering into Onondaga after some of their murders called victories, and leading into hovels hung round with scalps their captives overpowered with the scoffs and buffets of women as ferocious as themselves, much more than it resembled the triumphal pomp of a civilized martial nation,—if a civilized nation, or any men who had a sense of generosity, were capable of a personal triumph over the fallen and afflicted.

This, my dear Sir, was not the triumph of France. I must believe that, as a nation, it overwhelmed you with shame and horror. I must believe that the National Assembly find themselves in a state of the greatest humiliation in not being able to punish the authors of this triumph or the actors in it, and that they are in a situation in which any inquiry they may make upon the subject must be destitute even of the appearance of liberty or impartiality. The apology of that assembly is found in their situation, but when we approve what they must bear, it is in us the degenerate choice of a vitiated mind.

With a compelled appearance of deliberation, they vote under the dominion of a stern necessity. They sit in the heart, as it were, of a foreign republic: they have their residence in a city whose constitution has emanated neither from the charter of their king nor from their legislative power. There they are surrounded by an army not raised either by the authority of their crown or by their command, and which, if they should order to dissolve itself, would instantly dissolve them. There they sit, after a gang of assassins had driven away some hundreds of the members, whilst those who held the same moderate principles, with more patience or better hope, continued every day exposed to outrageous insults and murderous threats. There a majority, sometimes real, sometimes pretended, captive itself, compels a captive king to issue as royal edicts, at third hand, the polluted nonsense of their most licentious and giddy coffee-houses. It is notorious that all their measures are decided before they are debated. It is beyond doubt that, under the terror of the bayonet, and the lamp-post, and the torch of their houses, they are obliged to adopt all the crude and desperate measures suggested by clubs composed of a monstrous medley of all conditions, tongues, and nations. Among these are found persons in comparison of whom Catiline would be thought scrupulous, and Cethegus a man of sobriety and moderation. Nor is it in these clubs alone that the public measures are deformed into monsters. They undergo a previous distortion in academies,¹ intended as so many seminars for these clubs, which are set up in all the places of public resort. In these meetings of all sorts, every counsel, in proportion as it is daring and violent and perfidious, is taken for the mark of superior genius. Humanity and compassion are ridiculed as the fruits of superstition and ignorance. Tenderness to individuals is considered as treason to the public. Liberty is always to be estimated perfect as property is rendered insecure. Amidst assassination, massacre, and confiscation, perpetrated or meditated, they are forming plans for the good order of future society. Embracing in their arms the carcasses of base criminals, and promoting their relations on the title of their offences, they drive hundreds of virtuous persons to the same end, by forcing them to subsist by beggary or by crime.

¹ Peters was found guilty of treason on Oct. 13, 1660, on the ground that he was an accomplice in the death of Charles I (1625-49).

² Dr Price asserted that by the principles of the Revolution the people of England had acquired three fundamental rights. To choose their own governors, to cashier them for misconduct, and to frame a government for themselves.

³ Thou lettest depart; the first words of the Vulgate version of the song of Simeon (Luke, 2:29-32), which is used as a hymn or canticle in many churches.

The Assembly, their organ, acts before them the farce of deliberation with as little decency as liberty. They act like the comedians of a fair, before a riotous audience; they act amidst the tumultuous cries of a mixed mob of ferocious men, and of women lost to shame, who, according to their insolent fancies, direct, control, applaud, explode them, and sometimes mix and take their seats amongst them,—domineering over them with a strange mixture of servile petulance and proud, presumptuous authority. As they have inverted order in all things, the gallery² is in the place of the house. This Assembly, which overthrows kings and kingdoms, has not even the physiognomy and aspect of a grave legislative body,—nec color imperii, nec frons erat ulla senatus.³ They have a power given to them, like that of the Evil Principle, to subvert and destroy,—but none to construct, except such machines as may be fitted for further subversion and further destruction.

Who is it that admires, and from the heart is attached to national representative assemblies, but must turn with horror and disgust from such a profane burlesque and abominable perversion of that sacred institute? Lovers of monarchy, lovers of republics, must alike abhor it. The members of your Assembly must themselves groan under the tyranny of which they have all the shame, none of the direction, and little of the profit. I am sure many of the members who compose even the majority of that body must feel as I do, notwithstanding the applause of the Revolution Society. Miserable king! miserable Assembly! How must that Assembly be silently scandalized with those of their members who could call a day which seemed to blot the sun out of heaven "un beau jour!"⁴ How must they be inwardly indignant at hearing others who thought fit to declare to them, "that the vessel of the state would fly forward in her course towards regeneration with more speed than ever," from the stiff gale of treason and murder which preceded our preacher's triumph! What must they have felt, whilst, with outward patience and inward indignation, they heard of the slaughter of innocent gentlemen in their houses, that "the blood spilt was not the most pure!" What must they have felt, when they were besieged by complaints of disorders which shook their country to its foundations, at being compelled coolly to tell the complainants that they were under the protection of the law, and that they would address the king (the captive king) to cause the laws to be enforced for their protection, when the enslaved ministers of that captive king had formally notified to them that there were neither law nor authority nor power left to protect! What must they have felt at being obliged, as a felicitation on the present new year, to request their captive king to forget the stormy period of the last, on account of the great good which he was likely to produce to his people,—to the complete attainment of which good they adjourned the practical demonstrations of their loyalty, assuring him of their obedience when he should no longer possess any authority to command!

This address was made with much good-nature and affection, to be sure. But among the revolutions in France must be reckoned a considerable revolution in their ideas of politeness. In England we are said to learn manners at second-hand from your side of the water, and that we dress our behavior in the frippery of France. If so, we are still in the old cut, and have not so far conformed to the new Parisian mode of good breeding as to think it quite in the most refined strain of delicate compliment (whether in condolence or congratulation) to say, to the most humiliated creature that crawls upon the earth, that great public benefits are derived from the murder of his servants, the attempted assassination of himself and of his wife, and the mortification, disgrace, and degradation that he has personally suffered. It is a topic of consolation which our ordinary of Newgate⁵ would be too humane to use to a criminal at the foot of the gallows. I should have thought that the hangman of Paris, now that he is liberalized by the vote of the National Assembly, and is allowed his rank and arms in the l'heralds' College of the rights of men, would be too generous, too gallant a man, too full of the sense of his new dignity, to employ that cutting consolation to any of the persons whom the *l'ze-nation*⁶ might bring under the administration of his executive powers.

A man is fallen indeed, when he is thus flattered. The anodyne⁷ draught of oblivion, thus drugged, is well calculated to preserve a galling wakefulness, and to feed the living ulcer of a corroding memory. Thus to administer the opiate potion of amnesty, powdered with all the ingredients of scorn and contempt, is to hold to his

¹ learned societies

² During legislative sessions the galleries are sometimes occupied by spectators

³ There was neither aspect of empire nor semblance of senate

⁴ Beautiful day (Oct 6, 1789, the day on which the King and Queen of France were forcibly taken from Versailles and marched to Paris. (See p 1194a, 13 ff)

⁵ The Chaplain of Newgate prison.

⁶ high treason against the nation

⁷ soothing

lips, instead of "the balm of hurt minds,"¹ the cup of human misery full to the brim, and to force him to drink it to the dregs.

Yielding to reasons at least as forcible as those which were so delicately urged in the compliment on the new year, the king of France will probably endeavor to forget these events, and that compliment. But History, who keeps a durable record of all our acts, and exercises her awful censures over the proceedings of all sorts of sovereigns, will not forget either those events, or the era of this liberal refinement in the intercourse of mankind. History will record that, on the morning of the sixth of October, 1789, the king and queen of France,² after a day of confusion, alarm, dismay, and slaughter, lay down, under the pledged security of public faith, to indulge nature in a few hours of respite, and troubled, melancholy repose. From this sleep the queen was first startled by the voice of the sentinel at her door, who cried out to her to save herself by flight—that this was the last proof of fidelity he could give,—that they were upon him, and he was dead. Instantly he was cut down. A band of cruel ruffians and assassins, reeking with his blood, rushed into the chamber of the queen, and pierced with a hundred strokes of bayonets, and poulders the bed from whence this persecuted woman had but just time to fly almost naked, and, through ways unknown to the murderers, had escaped to seek refuge at the feet of a king and husband not secure of his own life for a moment.

This king, to say no more of him, and this queen, and their infant children (who once would have been the pride and hope of a great and generous people), were then forced to abandon the sanctuaries of the most splendid palace in the world, which they left swimming in blood, polluted by massacre, and strewn with mangled limbs and mutilated carcases. Thence they were conducted into the capital of their kingdom. Two had been selected from the unprovoked, unresisted, promiscuous slaughter which was made of the gentlemen of birth and family who composed the king's body-guard. These two gentlemen, with all the parade of an execution of justice, were cruelly and publicly dragged to the block, and beheaded in the great court of the palace. Their heads were stuck upon spears, and led the procession, whilst the royal captives who followed in the train were slowly moved along, amidst the horrid yells, and shrilling screams, and frantic dances, and infamous contumelies, and all the unutterable abominations of the furies of hell, in the abused shape of the vilest of women. After they had been made to taste, drop by drop, more than the bitterness of death, in the slow torture of a journey of twelve miles, protracted to six hours, they were, under a guard composed of those very soldiers who had thus conducted them through this famous triumph, lodged in one of the old palaces of Paris, now converted into a Bastille for kings.

Is this a triumph to be consecrated at altars, to be commemorated with grateful thanksgiving, or to be offered to the Divine Humanity with fervent prayer and enthusiastic ejaculation?—These Theban and Thracian orgies,³ acted in France, and applauded only in the Old Jewry, I assure you, kindle prophetic enthusiasm in the minds but of very few people in this kingdom although a saint and apostle, who may have revelations of his own, and who has so completely vanquished all the mean superstitions of the heart, may incline to think it pious and decorous to compare it with the entrance into the world of the Prince of Peace, proclaimed in an holy temple by a venerable sage, and not long before not worse announced by the voice of angels to the quiet innocence of shepherds.

At first I was at a loss to account for this fit of unguarded transport. I knew, indeed, that the sufferings of monarchs make a delicious repast to some sort of palates. There were reflections, which might serve to keep this appetite within some bounds of temperance. But when I took one circumstance into my consideration, I was obliged to confess that much allowance ought to be made for the society, and that the temptation was too strong for common discretion. I mean, the circumstance of the 10th French of the triumph, the animating cry which called for "all the sinners to be hanged on the lamp posts," might well have brought forth a burst of enthusiasm on the foreseen consequences of this happy day. I allow to so much enthusiasm some little deviation from prudence. I allow this prophet to break forth into hymns of joy and thanksgiving on an event which appears like the precursor of the Millennium, and the projected Fifth Monarchy,⁴ in the destruction of all Church establishments. There was, however, (as in all human affairs there is), in the midst of this joy, something to exercise the patience of these worthy gentlemen, and to try the long suffering of their faith. The actual murder of the king and queen, and their child, was wanting to the other auspicious circumstances of this "beautiful day." The actual murder of the bishops, though called for by so many holy ejaculations, was also wanting. A group of regicide and sacrilegious slaughter was, indeed, boldly sketched, but it was only sketched. It unhappily was left unfinished in this great history-piece of the massacre of innocents. What hardy pencil of a great master, from the school of the rights of men, will finish it, is to be seen hereafter. The age has not yet the complete benefit of that diffusion of knowledge that has undetermined superstition and error, and the king of France wants another object or two to consign to oblivion, in ¹ A reference to the secret rights and ceremonies practiced in the worship of ancient Greek and Roman deities, especially those ceremonies connected with the festival of Bacchus, which was celebrated with much extravagance and license.

² A song of joy or exultation. Io is a Greek and Latin exclamation of joy or triumph.

³ This was an actual cry of the Revolutionists.

⁴ The kingdom which a sect of religious fanatics during the time of Cromwell attempted to establish in England. They maintained that Christ was coming to assume authority. This kingdom was to be the fifth and last in the series of which the kingdoms of Assyria, Persia, Greece, and Rome were the preceding four.

¹ Macbeth, II, 2, 39.

² Judgment.

³ Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette.

consideration of all the good which is to arise from his own sufferings, and the patriotic crimes of an enlightened age

Although this work of our new light and knowledge did not go to the length that in all probability it was intended it should be carried, yet I must think that such treatment of any human creature must be shocking to any but those who are made for accomplishing revolutions. But I cannot stop here. Influenced by the inborn feelings of my nature, and not being illuminated by a single ray of this new-sprung modern light, I confess to you, Sir, that the exalted rank of the persons suffering, and particularly the sex, the beauty, and the amiable qualities of the descendant of so many kings and emperors, with the tender age of royal infants, insensible only through infancy and innocence of the cruel outrages to which their parents were exposed, instead of being a subject of exultation, adds not a little to my sensibility on that most melancholy occasion

I hear that the august person who was the principal object of our preacher's triumph, though he supported himself felt much on that shameful occasion. As a man, it became him to feel for his wife and his children, and the faithful guards of his person that were massured in cold blood about him, as a prince, it became him to feel for the strange and frightful transformation of his civilized subjects, and to be more grieved for them than solicitous for himself. It derogates little from his fortitude, while it adds infinitely to the honor of his humanity. I am very sorry to say it, very sorry indeed, that such personages are in a situation in which it is not unbecoming in us to praise the virtues of the great

I hear, and I rejoice to hear, that the great lady, the other object of the triumph, has borne that day (one is interested that beings made for suffering should suffer well), and that she bears all the succeeding days, that she bears the imprisonment of her husband, and her own captivity, and the exile of her friends and the insulting adulation of addresses, and the whole weight of her accumulated wrongs, with a serene patience, in a manner suited to her rank and race, and becoming the offspring of a sovereign distinguished for her piety and her courage,¹ that, like her, she has lofty sentiments, that she feels with the dignity of a Roman matron, that in the last extremity she will save herself from the last disgrace, and that, if she must fall, she will fall by no ignoble hand

It is now sixteen or seventeen years since I saw the queen of France, then the Dauphiness,² at Versailles, and surely never lighted on this orb, which she hardly seemed to touch, a more delightful vision. I saw her just above the horizon, decorating and cheering the elevated sphere she just began to move in—glittering like the morning-star, full of life and splendor and joy. Oh! what a revolution! and what an heart must I have, to contemplate without emotion that elevation and that fall! Little did I dream, when she added titles of veneration to those of enthusiastic, distant, respectful love, that she should ever be obliged to carry the sharp antidote against disgrace concealed in that bosom! Little did I dream that I should have lived to see such disasters fallen upon her in a nation of gallant men, in a nation of men of honor, and of cavaliers! I thought ten thousand swords must have leaped from their scabbards to avenge even a look that threatened her with insult. But the age of chivalry is gone! That of sophisters, economists, and calculators has succeeded, and the glory of Europe is extinguished forever. Never, never more, shall we behold that generous loyalty to rank and sex, that proud submission, that dignified obedience, that subordination of the heart, which kept alive, even in servitude itself, the spirit of an exalted freedom! The unbought grace of life, the cheap defence of nations, the nurse of manly sentiment and heroic enterprise, is gone! It is gone, that sensibility of principle, that chastity of honor, which felt a stain like a wound, which inspired courage whilst it mitigated ferocity, which ennobled whatever it touched, and under which vice itself lost half its evil by losing all its grossness!

This mixed system of opinion and sentiment had its origin in the ancient chivalry, and the principle, though varied in its appearance by the varying state of human affairs, subsisted and influenced through a long succession of generations, even to the time we live in. If it should ever be totally extinguished, the loss, I fear, will be great. It is this which has given its character to modern Europe. It is this which has distinguished it under all its forms of government and distinguished it to its advantage, from the states of Asia and possibly from those states which flourished in the most brilliant periods of the antique world. It was this, which, without confounding ranks, had produced a noble equality, and handed it down through all the gradations of social life. It was this opinion which mitigated kings into companions, and raised private men to be fellows with kings. Without force or opposition, it subdued the fierceness of pride and power, it obliged sovereigns to submit to the soft collar of social esteem, compelled stern authority to submit to elegance, and gave a domination, vanquisher of laws, to be subdued by manners.

But now all is to be changed. All the pleasing illusions which made power gentle and obedience liberal, which harmonized the different shades of life, and which by a bland assimilation incorporated into politics the sentiments which beautify and soften private society, are to be dissolved by this new conquering empire of light and reason. All the decent drapery of life is to be rudely torn off. All the superadded ideas, furnished from the wardrobe of a moral imagination, which the heart owns and the understanding ratifies, as necessary to cover the defects of our naked, shivering nature, and to raise it to dignity in our own estimation, are to be exploded as a ridiculous, absurd, and antiquated fashion.

¹ Maria Theresa, Empress of Austria and Queen of Hungary and Bohemia (1740-80).
² wife of the crown-prince

³ The phrasing of the following passage is admirable, but Burke's fervent imagination carries him somewhat beyond the bounds of strict truth.

On this scheme of things, a king is but a man, a queen is but a woman, a woman is but an animal, —and an animal not of the highest order. All homage paid to the sex in general as such, and without distinct views, is to be regarded as romance and folly. Regicide, and parricide, and sacrilege, are but fictions of superstition, corrupting jurisprudence by destroying its simplicity. The murder of a king, or a queen, or a bishop, or a father, are only common homicide, —and if the people are by any chance or in any way gainers by it, a sort of homicide much the most pardonable and into which we ought not to make too severe a scrutiny

On the scheme of this barbarous philosophy, which is the offspring of cold hearts and muddy understandings, and which is as void of solid wisdom as it is destitute of all taste and elegance, laws are to be supported only by their own terrors, and by the concern which each individual may find in them from his own private speculations, or can spare to them from his own private interests. In the groves of their academy,¹ at the end of every vista, you see nothing but the gallows. Nothing is left which engages the affections on the part of the commonwealth. On the principles of this mechanic philosophy, our institutions can never be embodied if I may use the expression, in persons, —so as to create in us love, veneration, admiration, or attachment. But that sort of reason which banishes the affections is incapable of filling their place. These public affections, combined with manners, are required sometimes as supplements, sometimes as correctives, always as aids to law. The precept given by a wise man, as well as a great critic, for the construction of poems, is equally true as to states — "Non satis est pulchra esse poemata, dulci sunt"² There ought to be a system of manners in every nation which a well formed mind would be disposed to relish. To make us love our country, our country ought to be lovely.

But power, of some kind or other, will survive the shock in which manners and opinions perish, and it will find other and worse means for its support. The usurpation, which, in order to subvert ancient institutions, has destroyed ancient principles, will hold power by arts similar to those by which it has acquired it. When the old feudal and chivalrous spirit of fealty, which, by freeing kings from fear, freed both kings and subjects from the precautions of tyranny,³ shall be extinct in the minds of men, plots and assassinations will be anticipated by preventive murder and preventive confiscation, and that long roll of grim and bloody maxims which form the political code of all power not standing on its own honor and the honor of those who are to obey it. Kings will be tyrants from policy, when subjects are rebels from principle

When ancient opinions and rules of life are taken away, the loss cannot possibly be estimated. From that moment we have no compass to govern us, nor can we know distinctly to what port we steer. Europe, undoubtedly, taken in a mass, was in a flourishing condition the day on which your Revolution was completed. How much of that prosperous state was owing to the spirit of our old manners and opinions is not easy to say, but as such causes cannot be indifferent in their operation, we must presume that, on the whole, their operation was beneficial

We are but too apt to consider things in the state in which we find them, without sufficiently adverting to the causes by which they have been produced, and possibly may be upheld. Nothing is more certain than that our manners, our civilization, and all the good things which are connected with manners and with civilization, have, in this European world of ours, depended for ages upon two principles, and were, indeed, the result of both combined. I mean the spirit of a gentleman, and the spirit of religion. The nobility and the clergy, the one by profession, the other by patronage, kept learning in existence, even in the midst of arms and confusions, and whilst governments were rather in their caves than formed. Learning paid back what it received to nobility and to priesthood, and paid it with usury, by enlarging their ideas, and by furnishing their minds. Happy, if they had all continued to know their indissoluble union, and their proper place! Happy, if learning, not debauched by ambition, had been satisfied to continue the instructor, and not aspired to be the master! Along with its natural protectors and guardians, learning will be cast into the mire and trodden down under the hoofs of a swinish multitude

If, as I suspect, modern letters owe more than they are always willing to own to ancient manners, so do other interests which we value full as much as they are worth. Even commerce, and trade, and manufacture, the gods of our economical politicians, are themselves perhaps but creatures, are themselves but effects, which, as first causes, we choose to worship. They certainly grew under the same shade in which learning flourished. They, too, may decay with their natural protecting principles. With you, for the present at least, they all threaten to disappear together. Where trade and manufactures are wanting to a people and the spirit of nobility and religion remains, sentiment supplies, and not always ill supplies, their place; but if commerce and the arts should be lost in an experiment to try how well a state may stand without these old fundamental principles, what sort of a thing must be a nation of gross, stupid, ferocious, and at the same time poor and sordid barbarians, destitute of religion, honor, or manly pride, possessing nothing at present, and hoping for nothing hereafter?

I wish you may not be going fast, and by the shortest cut, to that horrible and disgusting situation. Already there appears a poverty of conception, a coarseness and vulgarity, in all the proceedings of the Assembly and of all their instructors. Their liberty is not liberal. Their

¹ A reference to the Academy, or garden, in which Plato taught

² It is not enough for poems to be beautiful; they must appeal to the heart (Horace, Ars Poetica, 99)

³ As a matter of fact, the opposite of this is nearer the truth science is presumptuous ignorance Their humanity is savage and brutal

It is not clear whether in England we learned those grand and decorous principles and manners, of which considerable traces yet remain, from you, or whether you took them from us But to you, I think we trace them best You seem to me to be gentis incunabula nostra ¹ France has always more or less influenced manners in England, and when your fountain is choked up and polluted the stream will not run long or not run clear with us, or perhaps with any nation This gives all Europe, in my opinion, but too close and con-needed a concern in what is done in France. Excuse me, therefore, if I have dwelt too long on the atrocious spectacle of the sixth of October, 1789, or have given too much scope to the reflections which have arisen in my mind on occasion of the most important of all revolutions, which may be dated from that day I mean a revolution in sentiments, manners, and moral opinions As things now stand, with everything respectable destroyed without us, and an attempt to destroy within us every principle of respect, one is almost forced to apologise for harboring the common feelings of men.
¹ the cradle of our race

.

BIBLIOGRAPHIES AND CRITICAL NOTES

The following bibliographies are meant to serve as convenient reference lists for a study of the literature of the English Romantic Movement. Books containing critical discussions of the Movement or Period in general or of special phases of Romanticism are listed in the General Bibliography.

Memoirs of nearly all the writers are found in various editions of their works, and brief biographical accounts of each appear in The Encyclopedia Britannica and in the Dictionary of National Biography. Critical material, supplementary to the special critical references, is found in practically all of the bibliographies listed.

The editions of each writer's works are arranged usually in three groups—complete works, selections, important single works. Complete works and selections are arranged chronologically, single works, alphabetically. Unless otherwise specified, editions are in one volume. The bibliographies and the criticisms are arranged alphabetically by authors. Critical essays bearing simply names of writers as titles are listed only by the volume in which they are found; other essays are listed by title as well as by volume. More extended bibliographies than those given here may be found in The Cambridge History of English Literature.

The authors represented in this text are here arranged in alphabetical order.

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

HISTORY AND SOCIAL CONDITIONS

- Cambridge Modern History*, The 11 vols. ed. by Ward, Prothero and Leathes, Vols. 6 and 8 (London: Macmillan, 1902).
- Lacey, W. E. H. A History of England in the Eighteenth Century, 8 vols. (London: Longmans, 1878-90; New York: Appleton, 1883-90).
- Macaulay, J. B. The History of England from the Accession of James II, 5 vols. (London and New York: Longmans, 1849-61).
- Maitland, Hartmut. The History of England from the Commencement of the Nineteenth Century to the Commencement of the Twentieth Century, 4 vols. (London: Bell, 1849-51; Philadelphia: Porter, 1864).
- McCarthy, J., and McCarthy, J. H. A History of the Four Georges and of William IV, 4 vols. (London: Chatto, 1884-1901; New York: Harper, 1890-1901).
- Political History of England*, The 12 vols. ed. by W. Hunt and R. L. Poole. Vols. 9-11 (London and New York: Longmans, 1905-06).
- Social England*, 6 vols. ed. by H. D. Trill and J. S. Mann. Vols. 5 and 6 (London: Cassell, 1896-97; New York: Putnam, 1905).
- Walpole, H. A History of England from the Conclusion of the Great War in 1815, 6 vols. (new and revised ed., London and New York: Longmans, 1890).

HISTORY OF LITERATURE

- Beers, H. A. A History of English Romanticism in the Eighteenth Century (New York: Holt, 1898, 1910).
- Beers, H. A. A History of English Romanticism in the Nineteenth Century (New York: Holt, 1901-1910).
- Bradley, A. C. English Poetry and German Philosophy in the Age of Wordsworth (Manchester, Shearman, 1909).

- Bradley, A. C. Oxford Lectures on Poetry (London: Macmillan, 1909-1911).
- Brander, G. Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature, 6 vols. (London: Heinemann, 1901-05; New York: Macmillan, 1906).
- Brandl, A. Samuel Taylor Coleridge und die englische Romantik (Berlin, 1886). English translation by Lady Eastlake (London: Murray, 1887).
- Cambridge History of English Literature*, The, 14 vols. ed. by Ward and Waller. Vols. 9-11 (Cambridge Univ. Press, 1908; New York: Putnam).
- Comthorp, W. J. A History of English Poetry, 6 vols. Vols. 3-5 (London and New York: Macmillan, 1903-05).
- Comthorp, W. J. The Liberal Movement in English Literature (London: Murray, 1885, 1895).
- Cyclopedia of English Literature*, 3 vols., ed. by R. Chambers (new ed., Philadelphia: Lippincott, 1902-04).
- Dawson, W. J. The Makers of English Poetry (New York and London: Revell, 1906).
- Dawson, W. J. The Makers of English Prose (New York and London: Revell, 1906).
- Dennis, J. The Age of Pope (London: Bell, 1894, 1909; New York: Macmillan).
- Dictionary of National Biography*, 22 vols., ed. by L. Stephen and S. Lee (London: Smith, 1885-1901; Macmillan).
- Dowden, E. The French Revolution and English Literature (New York and London: Scribner, 1897).
- Dowden, E. Studies in Literature, 1789-1877 (London: Paul, 1878).
- Dowden, E. Transcripts and Studies (London: Paul, 1888).
- Early Reviews of English Poets, 1771-1845*, ed. by T. L. Hanes (Philadelphia: Egerton Press, 1904).
- Early Reviews of Great Writers, 1786-1837*, ed. by E. Stevenson (London: Scott, 1906).

- Eastlake, C L A History of the Gothic Revival (London, Longmans, 1872)
- Edinburgh, Quarterly, and Blackwood Reviews, ed. by W H Griffin (Belles Lettres ed Boston, Heath, in preparation)
- Elton, G A Survey of English Literature, 1780-1830, 2 vols (London, Arnold, 1912)
- Encyclopædia Britannica*, The, eleventh ed, 29 vols (The Encyclopædia Britannica Company, London and New York, 1910-11)
- Eyre-Todd, G Scottish Poetry of the Eighteenth Century (Glasgow, Hodge, 1896).
- Farley F E Scandinavian Influence on the English Romantic Movement (Studies and Notes in Philology and Literature, Vol 9, Harvard Univ. Press, 1903)
- Ford, J D M "English Influence upon Spanish Literature in the Early Part of the Nineteenth Century," Publication of the Modern Language Association of America, 1901 (n s 9 453)
- Garnett, R and Gosse E English Literature, an Illustrated Record, 4 vols, Vols 3 and 4 (London, Macmillan 1903-04)
- Gates, L E Studies and Appreciations (New York, Macmillan, 1900)
- Gautier, T Histoire du Romantisme (Paris, 1884).
- Gilfillan, G Galleries of Literary Portraits, 3 vols (London, Groombridge, 1845-54 New York Appleton, 1850-53, Everyman's Library ed, Dutton)
- Gosse, E From Shakespeare to Pope (Cambridge Univ Press, 1885, New York, Dodd)
- Gosse, E History of Eighteenth Century Literature (London, Macmillan, 1889)
- Griswold, Hattie T Home Life of Great Authors (Chicago, McClurg, 1887)
- Hancock, A E The French Revolution and the English Poets (New York, Holt, 1899)
- Havens, R D "Romantic Aspects of the Age of Pope," Publications of the Modern Language Association, Sept, 1912 (n s 20 297)
- Hedge, F H "Classic and Romantic," The Atlantic Monthly, March, 1856 (57 309)
- Heine, H Die romantische Schule (Hamburg, 1836), English translation by Fleishman (New York, Holt, 1882)
- Herford, C H The Age of Wordsworth (London, Bell, 1897, 1899, New York, Macmillan)
- Hilchman, W S and Gummere F B Lives of Great English Writers (Boston, Houghton, 1908)
- Hutton, R H Brief Literary Criticisms (London, Macmillan, 1906)
- Jack, A A Poetry and Prose (London, Constable 1911)
- Johnson, Samuel The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81), 3 vols, ed by G B Hill (London, Clarendon Press, 1905)
- Julleville, L Petit de l'Histoire de la Langue et de la Littérature française, 8 vols, Vols. 6 and 7 (Paris, Collin, 1908-09).
- Mackail, J W. Lectures on Poetry (London and New York, Longmans 1911)
- McClintock, W D "The Romantic and Classical in English Literature," The Chautauquan, Nov., 1891 (14:187).
- Millar, J H A Literary History of Scotland (London, Unwin, 1903, New York, Scribner)
- Millar, J H The Mid-Eighteenth Century (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1902, New York, Scribner)
- Minto, W The Literature of the Georgian Era (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1894)
- Nelson, W A Essentials of Poetry (Boston, Houghton, 1913)
- Olliphant, Mrs. Margaret W The Literary History of England in the End of the Eighteenth and Beginning of the Nineteenth Century, 2 vols. (London, Macmillan, 1883)
- Omond, T S The Romantic Triumph (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1900, New York, Scribner, 1900, 1909)
- Palgrave, F T Landscape in Poetry (London and New York Macmillan, 1897)
- Pater, W "Romanticism," Macmillan's Magazine, Nov, 1876 (35 64)
- Pater W Appreciations (London and New York, Macmillan, 1889, 1895)
- Pellissier, G The Literary Movement in France during the Nineteenth Century English translation by Britton (New York, Putnam 1897).
- Perry, T English Literature in the Eighteenth Century, 2 vols (New York, Harper, 1883)
- Phelps, W L The Beginnings of the English Romantic Movement (Boston, Glau 1893)
- Porterfield, A W An Outline of German Romanticism (Boston, Glau, 1914)
- Rawnsley, H D Literary Associations of the English Lakes, 2 vols (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1894 1906)
- Reed, E B English Lyrical Poetry (Yale Univ Press, 1912)
- Reynolds, Myra The Treatment of Nature in Poetry between Pope and Wordsworth (1896, Univ of Chicago Press, 1909)
- Rhys, E Lyrical Poetry (London Dent, 1913, New York, Dutton)
- Richardson, G F A Neglected Aspect of the English Romantic Revolt (Univ of California Press, 1915)
- Richter, H Geschichte der englischen Romantik (Halle, 1911)
- Robinson, H Crabb Diary, Reminiscences, and Correspondence, 3 vols, ed by T Sadler (London, Macmillan, 1869), 2 vols (1872, Boston, Fields, 1869, 1874)
- Saintsbury, G A History of Criticism and Literary Taste in Europe, 3 vols (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1900-04 1908, New York, Dodd)
- Saintsbury, G A History of English Prose Rhythm (London and New York, Macmillan, 1912)
- Saintsbury, G A History of English Prosody (London and New York, Macmillan, 1906-10)
- Saintsbury, G A History of Nineteenth Century Literature (London and New York, Macmillan, 1896)
- Saintsbury, G. Essays in English Literature, 1780-1860, First Series (London, Percival, 1890); Second Series (London, Dent, 1895; New York, Scribner).

- Saintsbury, G. The English Novel (London, Dent, 1912, New York, Dutton)
- Schelling, F. E. The English Lyric (Boston, Houghton, 1913).
- Scherer, W. A History of German Literature (Berlin, 1883), English translation by Mrs. F. C. Conybeare (London, Clarendon Press, 1886, New York, Scribner, 1888, 1912)
- Schiller, F. "Ueber naive und sentimentallische Dichtung," Sämmtliche Werke, Vol. 12 (Stuttgart, 1862).
- Schlegel, A. W. von Lectures on Dramatic Art and Literature, English translation by J. Black and A. J. W. Morrison (London, Bohn, 1846)
- Seudder, Vida D. The Life of the Spirit in the Modern English Poets (Boston, Houghton, 1895)
- Secombe, T. The Age of Johnson (London, Bell, 1899, 1909, New York, Macmillan)
- Shalrp, J. C. Aspects of Poetry (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1881, Boston, Houghton, 1882)
- Shalrp, J. C. On Poetic Interpretation of Nature (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1877, New York, Hurd, 1878, Boston, Houghton, 1885)
- Sharp, R. F. Architects of English Literature (London, Sonnenschein, 1900)
- Stedman, E. C. Victorian Poets (Boston, Houghton, 1875, 1887)
- Stephen, L. English Literature and Society in the Eighteenth Century (London, Duckworth, 1904, New York Putnam)
- Stephen, L. History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, 2 vols. (London, Smith, 1876, 1880, New York, Putnam, 1876, 1902).
- Stephen, L. Hours in a Library, 3 vols. (London, Smith, 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1890), 4 vols. (1907)
- Stephen, L. Studies of a Biographer, 4 vols. (London, Duckworth, 1898-1902, New York, Putnam)
- Simons, A. The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909, New York, Dutton)
- Taine, H. A. Histoire de la Littérature Anglaise, 2 vols. (Paris, 1863), English translation by H. Van Laun (Edinburgh, The Academy, 1871; New York, Holt, 1872, 1896)
- Texte, J. J. Romances et les origines du cosmopolitisme littéraire (Paris, 1895). English translation by J. W. Matthews (London, Duckworth, 1899, New York, Macmillan)
- Vaughan, C. E. The Romantic Revolt (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1900, New York, Scribner, 1907).
- Velch, J. The History and Poetry of the Scottish Border (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1874).
- Walker, H. The English Essay and Essayists (London, Dent, 1915, New York, Dutton).
- Walker, H. The Literature of the Victorian Era (Cambridge Univ. Press, 1910; New York, Putnam).
- Walker, H.: Three Centuries of Scottish Literature, 2 vols. (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1898; New York, Macmillan).
- Wernae, R. M. Romanticism and the Romantic School in Germany (New York, Appleton, 1909).
- Whipple, E. P. Essays and Reviews, 2 vols. (Boston, Osgood, 1849, Ticknor, 1861)
- Wilson, J. G. The Poets and Poetry of Scotland, 2 vols. (Glasgow, Blackie, 1876, 1877; New York, Harper)
- Woodberry, G. E. Makers of Literature (London and New York, Macmillan, 1901), first published as Studies in Letters and Life (Boston, Houghton, 1890)
- Wright, C. H. C. A History of French Literature (London and New York, Oxford Univ. Press, 1912).

MARK AKENSIDE (1721-1770), p. 44

EDITIONS

- Poetical Works*, ed. with a Life, by A. Dyce (Aldine ed. Edinburgh, Bell, 1835, New York, Macmillan)
- Poetical Works*, with Beattie, Text and Life by Dyce (British Poets ed. Boston, Houghton, 1854, 1880).
- Poetical Works*, with Dyer, ed. by B. A. Willmott (1855)
- Poetical Works*, ed. with a Life, by G. Gillilan (Edinburgh, 1857)

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

- Bucke, C. On the Life, Writings, and Genius of Akenside, with some Account of his Friends (1832).
- Dowden, E. in Ward's The English Poets, Vol. 3 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1909).
- Johnson, Samuel. The Lives of the English Poets (London, 1779-81), 3 vols. ed. by G. B. Hill (London, Clarendon Press, 1905)

CRITICAL NOTES

44. THE PLEASURES OF THE IMAGINATION

The title and much of the thought of this poem were suggested by Addison's essays on the same subject (Spectator, 411-421). The selections here printed are taken from the enlarged version of the poem published in three Books (and a fragment of a fourth) in 1757. The poem originally was published anonymously in three Books in 1744. It was the parent of a number of similarly named poems, among which are Warton's The Pleasures of Melancholy (p. 75), Campbell's The Pleasures of Hope (p. 417), and Rogers's The Pleasures of Memory (p. 207).

- 45a. 227a.—This passage should be compared with Addison's Spectator, 412

47. ODE TO THE EVENING STAR

This poem is sometimes entitled The Nightingale and Ode to Hesperus.

ANNE, COUNTESS OF WINCHILSEA 474.

(See WINCHILSEA)

JOANNA BAILLIE (1762-1851), p. 474EDITIONSDramatic and Poetical Works* (London, Longmans, 1851)BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISMHamilton, Catharine J. Women Writers, 2 vols. (London, Ward and Lock, 1892)Jeffrey, F. "Miss Baillie's Plays-on the Passions," The Edinburgh Review, July, 1803 (2 269)Mitford, Mary R. Recollections of a Literary Life, 3 vols. (London Bentley, 1852 1858)Plarr, G. "Walter Scott and Joanna Baillie," The Edinburgh Review, Oct., 1912, Jan., 1913 (216 355 217 170)Wilson, J. G. The Poets and Poetry of Scotland, 2 vols. (Glasgow, Blackie, 1876, New York, Harper).CRITICAL NOTES

"In reading Joanna Baillie's poetry we find her to possess a quickness of observation that neatly supplies the place of insight, a strongly moralized temperament delighting in natural things, a vigorous, simple style. These are not especially dramatic qualities, and although she won her reputation through her plays, the poetry by which she is remembered is chiefly of a pastoral kind. Her country songs written in the language of her early home, have the best qualities of Scottish national poetry, their simplicity, their cautious humor, endeared them at once to the national heart, they have the shrewdness and the freshness of the morning air, the homeliness of unsophisticated feeling. Such songs as Wood and Married and 'The Weary Pund o' Toun My Nanny O, and the lovely trysting song beginning 'The rowan glitters on the sword,' are among the treasures of Scottish minstrelsy."—A. Mary F. Robinson, in Ward's The English Poets, 4

"Or, if to touch such chord be thine,
Restore the ancient tragic line,
And emulate the notes that wrung
From the wild harp, which silent hung
By silver Avon's holy shore,
Till twice an hundred years roll'd o'er,
When she, the bold Enchantress, came,
With fearless hand and heart on flame!
From the pale willow snatch'd the treasure,
And swept it with a kindred measure,
Till Avon's swans while rung the grove
With Montfort's hate and Basil's love,
Awakening at the inspired strain,
Died their own Shakespeare liv'd again."

—Scott, in Introduction to Canto 3 of Marmion.

These lines are quoted as if they were spoken to Scott by his chief literary counsellor, William Erskine, Esq., to whom the Introduction is addressed. Montfort and Basil are characters in Joanna Baillie's dramas Basil and De Montfort, respectively. In contemporary criticism Miss Baillie was frequently declared equal to Shakespeare.

THE BEACON

In the sub-title, this play is characterized as "a serious musical drama", it contains a number of songs. The one printed here, found in Act II, sc. 1, is sung at night by a fisherman to his mate as they keep a beacon burning on the cliff to guide an expected boat to shore.

JAMES BEATTIE (1735-1803), p. 119EDITIONSPoetical Works*, ed., with a Life, by A. Dyce (Aldine ed., Edinburgh, Bell, 1831, New York, Macmillan, 1871)Poetical Works, with Collins, ed., with a Memoir by T. Miller (1846)Poetical Works, with Akenside (British Poets ed. Boston, Houghton, 1854, 1880)Poetical Works with Blair and Falconer, ed. with Lives, by G. Gilliland (Edinburgh, 1854, London, Cassell 1879)Letters, ed. by A. Mackie (Aberdeen, 1908)BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISMBower, A. An Account of the Life of James Beattie (1804)Forbes, Margaret. Beattie and his Friends (London, Constable, 1904)Forbes, W. An Account of the Life and Writings of James Beattie, including many of his Original Letters, 2 vols. (Edinburgh and London, 1806), 3 vols. (1807), 2 vols. (London, Roper, 1824)Graham, H. G. Scottish Men of Letters in the Eighteenth Century (London, Black, 1901, New York, Macmillan)Jeffrey, F. "Sir William Forbes's Life of Dr Beattie," The Edinburgh Review, April, 1807 (10 171)McCosh, J. The Scottish Philosophy (London, Macmillan, 1874, New York, Carter, 1875)Perry, T. S. "Gray, Collins, and Beattie," The Atlantic Monthly, Dec., 1880 (16 810)Walker, H. Three Centuries of Scottish Literature, 2 vols. (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1893, New York, Macmillan)CRITICAL NOTES

"I thanked you in my last for Johnson, I now thank you, with more emphasis, for Beattie, the most agreeable and amiable writer I ever met with, the only author I have seen whose critical and philosophical researches are diversified and embellished by a poetical imagination, that makes even the driest subject, and the leanest, a feast for an epicure in books. He is so much at his ease too, that his own character appears in every page, and which is very rare, we see not only the writer but the man and that man so gentle, so well-tempered, so happy in his religion and so humane in his philosophy, that it is necessary to love him, if one has the least sense of what is lovely. If you have not his poem called The Minstrel, and cannot borrow it, I must beg you to buy it for me, for though

I cannot afford to deal largely in so expensive a commodity as books, I must afford to purchase at least the poetical works of Beattie"—Cowper, in Letter to the Rev William Unwin, April 5, 1784

120.

THE MINSTREL

"The design was to trace the progress of a poetical genius, born in a rude age from the first dawning of fancy and reason, till that period at which he may be supposed capable of appearing in the world as a minstrel, that is, as an itinerant poet and musician, a character which, according to the notions of our forefathers, was not only respectable, but sacred

"I have endeavored to imitate Spenser in the measure of his verse, and in the harmony, simplicity, and variety of his composition. Antique expressions I have avoided, admitting however some old words, where they seemed to suit the subject, but I hope none will be found that are now obsolete, or in any degree not intelligible to a reader of English poetry.

"To those who may be disposed to ask what could induce me to write in so difficult a measure, I can only answer that it pleases my ear, and seems from its Gothic structure and original, to bear some relation to the subject and spirit of the poem. It admits both simplicity and magnificence of sound and of language, beyond any other stanza I am acquainted with. It allows the sententiousness of the couplet, as well as the more complex modulation of blank verse. What some critics have remarked of its uniformity growing at last tiresome to the ear, will be found to hold true only when the poetry is faulty in other respects"—Beattie's Preface

121. 50. Eighteenth century writers idealized America as a land of gold and precious stones

WILLIAM BECKFORD (1759-1844), p. 134

EDITIONS

The History of the Caliph Vathek, with an Introduction by H. Morley (London and New York, Cassell 1887)

The History of the Caliph Vathek, and European Travels, ed., with a Biographical Introduction, by G. T. Bettany (London and New York, Ward and Lock, 1891)

Vathek, an Arabian Tale, ed., with an Introduction by R. Garnett (London, Lawrence, 1893, 1900. Philadelphia, Lipincott, 1901)

The History of the Caliph Vathek, printed with the original Prefaces and Notes by Henley (Gem Classics ed. New York, Pott 1900)

The History of the Caliph Vathek, ed., with an Introduction by E. D. Ross (London, Methuen, 1901)

The Episodes of Vathek, French texts with English translation by F. T. Marzials, and with an Introduction by L. Melville (London, Swift, 1912, Philadelphia, Lipincott)

BIOGRAPHY

Benjamin, L. S. ("L. Melville") The Life and Letters of William Beckford of Fonthill (New York, Duffield, 1910)

Gregory, W. The Beckford Family (Bath, Simpkin, 1895)

Redding, C. Memoirs of William Beckford of Fonthill, 2 vols. (London, Skert, 1859)

CRITICISM

Benjamin, L. S. ("L. Melville") "William Beckford of Fonthill Abbey," The Fortnightly Review, Nov., 1909 (86 1011)

Hazlitt, W. "Fonthill Abbey," Essays on the Fine Arts (London, 1838), Collected Works, ed. by Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902 06., New York McClure) 9 348

More, P. E. The Drift of Romanticism (Shelburne Essays, Eighth Series. Boston, Houghton, 1913)

New Monthly Magazine, "The 'Conversations with the late W. Beckford, Esq.' " 1845 (72 18)

Poole, S. L. "The Author of Vathek," The Quarterly Review, Oct., 1910 (213 377)

Redding, C. "Recollections of the Author of Vathek," The New Monthly Magazine, June, July, 1844 (71 148 302)

Tiffany, O. The North American Review, April, 1860 (90 297)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benjamin, L. S. ("L. Melville") In his The Life and Letters of William Beckford of Fonthill (1910)

CRITICAL NOTES

131

VATHEK

This story originally was written in French. A surreptitious English translation by S. Henley, one of Beckford's friends was published in 1786, in the Preface Henley stated that the story was translated from the Arabic. Beckford published the original French text, in both Paris and Lausanne in 1787.

"I do not know from what source the author of that singular volume may have drawn his materials. Some of the incidents are to be found in the Bibliothèque Orientale, but for correctness of costume, beauty of description, and power of imagination, it far surpasses all European imitations and bears such marks of originality that those who have visited the East will find some difficulty in believing it to be more than a translation. As an Eastern tale, even Rasoolas must bow before it. His 'Happy Valley' will not bear a comparison with the 'Hall of Eblis'."—Byron, in note on The Giaour, 1 1328 (1813)

"European literature has no Oriental fiction which impresses the imagination so powerfully and permanently as Vathek. Portions of the story may be tedious or repulsive but the whole combines two things most difficult of alliance—the fantastic and the sublime"—Garnett, in Dictionary of National Biography (1885)

135a. 59. "In this heaven the paradise of Mahomet is supposed to be placed contiguous to the throne of Alla. Hagi Khalfah relates that Ben Iatmalah, a celebrated Doctor of Damasus, had the temerity to assert that, when the Most High erected his throne, he reserved a vacant place for Mahomet upon it"—Henley's note in first ed

138a. 37. "This is an apparent anachronism, but such frequently occur in reading the Arabian writers. Though the origin of spectacles can be traced back with certainty no higher than the thirteenth century, yet the art of staining glass is sufficiently ancient to have suggested in the days of Vathek the use of green as a protection to the eye from a glare of light"—Henley

139b. 14. "A phial of a similar potion is ordered to be instantaneously drank off in one of the Tales of Inatulla. 'These brewed enchantments' have been used in the East from the days of Homer. Milton in his Comus describes one of them, which greatly resembles the Indian's

And first behold this cordial julep here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds,
With spirits of balm, and fragrant syrups mix'd

Not that Nepenthes, which the wife of Thone
In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,
Is of such pow'r to stir up joy as this,
To life so friendly, or so cool to thirst."
[ll 672-78]—Henley

56. In the portion omitted, the Indian, kicked from the palace because of his insolence, forms himself into a ball, rolls through the streets of the city and across the valley, and plunges over the precipice into the gulf beneath. After many days and nights he reappears to Vathek, who has been waiting on the precipice, and promises to lead him to the palace of subterranean fire if he will abjure Mahomet. The promise is given, but before the journey can be begun, the Indian's thirst must be satisfied with the blood of fifty of the most beautiful sons of prominent men. Vathek treacherously makes the sacrifice, but the Indian immediately disappears. Endangered by the hostile attitude of the distracted parents of the sacrificed children, Vathek is advised by his mother to set out with a magnificent train in search of the region of wonders and delight. After numerous adventures, in which many of his company are lost, he comes to the happy valley of the Emir Fakreddin and is royally entertained in his beautiful palace. Vathek at once becomes enamored of Nourihar, the Emir's daughter, and, contrary to the wishes of her father, induces her to accompany him to the subterranean kingdom. Various beneficent Genii warn Vathek, on the way, to abandon his purpose, with the result that nearly all of his attendants desert him. (At this point the concluding selection begins.)

143b. 41. In the third French edition of Vathek, Beckford inserted here the titles of three of these stories. They have been published as The Episodes of Vathek (1912).

48. "The expedition of the Afrit in fetching Carathis is characteristic of this order of dives. We read in the Koran that another of the fraternity offered to bring the Queen of Saba's throne to Solomon before he could rise from his place, ch 27"—Henley.

THOMAS LOVELL BEDDOES (1803-1849), p. 1129

EDITIONS

Poetical Works, 2 vols., ed. with a Memoir, by E. Gosse (London, Dent, 1890, New York, Macmillan), reprinted in Temple Library ed.
Poems, ed. by R. Colles (Muses' Library ed. London, Dent, 1906, New York, Dutton, 1907)
Letters, ed. by E. Gosse (London, Mathews, 1894)

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

Gosse, E. Critical Kit-Kats (New York, Dodd, 1903), a reprint with slight additions, of the Memoir in Poetical Works (1890)
Hilliard, Kate. "A Strayed Singer," Lippincott's Magazine, Nov., 1873 (12 551)
Stoddard, R. H. Under the Evening Lamp (New York, Scribner, 1892, London, Gay)
Symonds, A. "The Poetical Works of Thomas Lovell Beddoes," The Academy, 1891 (40 128)
Wood, H. "T. L. Beddoes, a Survival in Style," The American Journal of Philology, 1883 (4 445)

CRITICAL NOTES

"Beddoes has sometimes been treated as a mainly bookish poet deriving from the Elizabethans and Shelley. I cannot agree with this. His very earliest work, written when he could not know much either of Shelley or Keats, shows, as they do, technique caught from Leigh Hunt. But this is quite dropped later, and his Elizabethanism is not imitation but inspiration. In this inspiration he does not follow but shares with his greater contemporaries. He is a younger and tragic counterpart to Charles Lamb in the intensity with which he has imbibed the Elizabethan spirit, rather from the night-shade of Webster and Tourneur than from the vine of Shakespeare. As wholes, his works are naught or naught but night-shade. But they contain passages, especially lyrics, of the most exquisite fancy and music, such as since the seventeenth century none but Blake and Coleridge had given"—Saintsbury, in A History of Nineteenth Century Literature (1896)

1129. POOR OLD PILGRIM MISERY

This song is found in Act I, sc 1, of The Bride's Tragedy. Hesperus sings it to his bride Floribel, after she has related a dream in which she was told to beware "of love, of sickness, and woe, and mad despair."

1130.

A HO' A HO'

This song is found in Act II, sc 1, of The Bride's Tragedy. It is sung by a boy in response to his master's request for a song. It is sometimes entitled Love Goes A-Hawking.

STREW NOT EARTH WITH EMPTY STARS

This song is found in Act I sc 1, of The Second Brother. It is sung by female attendants to Orazio, a self-proclaimed son of Bacchus, god of wine.

HOW MANY TIMES DO I LOVE THEE, DEAR?

This song is found in Act I, sc 3, of Torricione. It is sung by female attendants, at night in a garden to their mistress Veronica, to induce her to sleep.

TO SEA! TO SEA!

This song is found in Act I, sc 1, of Death's Jest Book. It is sung on a ship by sailors about to depart on a voyage to rescue their duke from captivity in a foreign country.

THE SWALLOW LEAVES HER NEST

This song is found in Act I, sc 4, of Death's Jest Book. It is heard from the waters after Sibylla has thrown herself upon the dead body of her lover, Wolfram, who has just been killed by the duke, his rival. Wolfram had learned that the duke had tried to poison him, and was killed because of this knowledge.

1131. . IF THOU WILT EASE THINE HEART

This song is found in Act II, sc 1, of Death's Jest Book. It is a dirge sung at the funeral of Wolfram in the presence of the duke, Sibylla, and others.

LADY, WAS IT FAIR OF THEE

This and the next song are found in Act IV, sc 3, of Death's Jest Book. The first is sung by Siegfried, a dejected courtier, beneath the window of his lady love, Amala. The second is sung to Amala by Athulf, another lover, who has taken poison because his brother has married her.

OLD ADAM, THE CARRION CROW

This and the next song are found in Act V, sc 3 of Death's Jest Book. The first is sung by the ghost of Wolfram, disguised as a fool, after he has listened to a drinking song by Siegfried. The second is a dirge sung by a funeral procession bearing Sibylla to her grave.

ROBERT BLAIR (1699-1746), p. 37

EDITIONS

Poetical Works, with Beattie and Falconer, ed., with Lives, by G. Gilfillan (Edinburgh, 1854; London and New York, Cassell, 1879).

The Grave, illustrated by Schiavonetti, from the original inventions of William Blake, 1804, 1818 (London, Methuen, 1908, New York, Appleton).

The Grave, ed., with a Preface, by F. W. Farrar (Philadelphia, Lippincott, 1860).

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

Graham, H. G. Scottish Men of Letters in the Eighteenth Century (London, Black, 1901, New York, Macmillan).

Wilson, J. G. The Poets and Poetry of Scotland, 2 vols. (Glasgow, Blackie, 1876, New York, Harper).

CRITICAL NOTES

THE GRAVE

"The Grave was the first and best of a whole series of mortuary poems. In spite of the epigrams of conflicting partisans, Night Thoughts must be considered as contemporaneous with it, and neither preceding nor following it. There can be no doubt, however, that the success of Blair encouraged Young to persevere in his far longer and more laborious undertaking. Blair's verse is less rhetorical, more exquisite, than Young's, and, indeed, his relation to that writer, though too striking to be overlooked, is superficial. He forms a connecting link between Otway and Crabbe, who are his nearest poetical kinsmen. His one poem, The Grave, contains seven hundred and sixty-seven lines of blank verse. It is very unequal in merit but supports the examination of modern criticism far better than most productions of the second quarter of the eighteenth century. As philosophical literature it is quite without value, and it adds nothing to theology. It rests solely upon its merit as romantic poetry."—Gosse, in Dictionary of National Biography (1886).

Bryant wrote Thanatopsis soon after reading this poem. Cf. Bryant's poem with lines 28-67 of The Grave.

WILLIAM BLAKE (1757-1827), p. 166

EDITIONS

Poetical Works, ed., with a Memoir, by W. M. Rossetti (Aldine ed. London, Bell, 1874, 1890, New York, Macmillan).

Works, Poetic, Symbolic, and Critical, 8 vols., ed., with a Memoir and Interpretation, by E. J. Ellis and W. B. Yeats (London, Quaritch, 1893).

Poetical Works, ed. by J. Sampson (Oxford Univ. Press, 1905).

Poetical Works, 2 vols., ed. by E. J. Ellis (London, Chatto, 1906). The only edition containing the Prophetic Books.

Poetical Works, including Minor Prophetic Books, ed. by J. Sampson (Oxford Univ. Press, 1913).

Poems and Specimens from the Prose Writings, ed. by J. Skipsey (Canterbury Poets ed.: London, Scott, 1885).

- Poems*, ed by W B Yeats (Muses' Library ed London, Lawrence, 1898, New York, Scribner, London, Routledge, 1905, New York, Dutton)
- Lyrical Poems*, ed, with an Introduction by W Raleigh, by J Sampson (Oxford Clarendon Press, 1906)
- Selections from the Symbolic Poems*, ed by F E Pierce (Yale Univ Press 1915)
- Songs of Innocence and Experience* (Chicago, Doubleday, 1916)
- Etchings*, arranged by W B Scott (London, Chatto, 1906)
- Letters*, ed, with a Life by F Tatham, by A G B Russell (London Methuen 1906, New York, Scribner)

BIOGRAPHY

- Ellis, E J The Real Blake, a Portrait Biography (London, Chatto, 1907, New York, Doubleday)
- Gilchrist A Life of William Blake, 2 vols (London, Macmillan 1861), ed by W G Robertson (London and New York, Lane, 1906)
- Sellincourt Basil de William Blake (London, Duckworth, 1909, New York Scribner)
- Stor, A T William Blake his Life, Character, and Genius (London, Sonnenschein, 1893)

CRITICISM

- Beeching H C Essays and Studies by Members of the English Association, Vol 3, 1912
- Benson, A C Essays (London, Heinemann, 1895 New York, Dutton)
- Berger, P Mysticism et Poésie (Paris, 1907), English translation by D H Conner, William Blake, Poet and Mystic (New York, Dutton, 1915)
- Brooke S A Studies in Poetry (London, Duckworth, 1907 New York Putnam)
- Chesterton, G K Blake (New York, Dutton, 1910).
- Garrett R "William Blake Painter and Poet," Portfolio, No 22, 1895
- Hewlett, H G "Imperfect Genius Will in Blake" The Contemporary Review, Oct, 1876 (28 765)
- Huneker, J G Egoists (New York, Scribner, 1909)
- Langridge, I William Blake (New York, Macmillan, 1904)
- Moore, T S "William Blake and his Aesthetic," Art and Life (London, Methuen, 1910)
- Moore, T S "William Blake, Poet and Painter," The Quarterly Review, Jan, 1908 (208:24)
- More, P E Shelburne Essays, Fourth Series (New York and London, Putnam, 1906)
- Morris, L R "William Blake the First of the Moderns," The Forum, June, 1914 (51 982)
- Russell, A G The Engravings of William Blake (London, Richards, 1912, Boston, Houghton)
- Scudder, H E "William Blake, Painter and Poet," Scribner's Monthly Magazine, June, 1880 (20 234)
- Stoddard, R H Under the Evening Lamp (New York, Scribner 1892, London, Gay)

- Swinburne, A C William Blake, a Critical Essay (London, Chatto, 1898, New York, Dutton, 1906)
- Symonds, A The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909, New York, Dutton)
- Symonds, A William Blake (New York, Dutton, 1907)
- Thomson J Biographical and Critical Studies (London, Reeves, 1896)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kevnes, G. L (In preparation)

CRITICAL NOTES

"To define the poetry of Blake one must find new definitions for poetry, but, these definitions once found, he will seem to be the only poet who is a poet in essence, the only poet who could, in his own words, 'enter into Noah's rainbow, and make a friend and companion of one of these images of wonder which always entreat him to leave mortal things' In this verse there is, if it is to be found in any verse the 'lyrical cry', and yet, what voice is it that cries in this disembodied ecstasy? The voice of desire is not in it, nor the voice of passion, nor the cry of the heart nor the cry of the sinner to God, nor of the lover of nature to nature It neither seeks nor aspires nor laments nor questions It is like the voice of wisdom in a child, who has not yet forgotten the world out of which the soul came It is as spontaneous as the note of a bird, it is an affirmation of life, in its song which seems mere music, it is the mind which sings, it is lyric thought What is it that transfixes one in any couplet such as this

"If the sun and moon should doubt They'd immediately go out"

It is no more than a nursery statement, there is not even an image in it, and yet it slugs to the brain, it cuts into the very flesh of the mind as if there were a great weight behind it Is it that it is an arrow and that it comes from so far, and with an impetus gathered from its speed out of the sky?

"The poetry of Blake is a poetry of the mind, abstract in substance, concrete in form, its passion is the passion of the imagination, its emotion is the emotion of thought, its beauty is the beauty of idea When it is simplest, its simplicity is that of some 'infant joy' too young to have a name, or of some 'infant sorrow brought aged out of eternity into the dangerous world, and there,

"Helpless, naked, piping loud,
Like a fiend hid in a cloud"

There are no men and women in the world of Blake's poetry, only primal instincts and the energies of the imagination"—Symonds, in The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (1909).

100.

TO THE MUSES

For the names and offices of the Muses, see Glossary under Muse

INTRODUCTION TO SONGS OF INNOCENCE

This was the initial poem in a volume of verse entitled Songs of Innocence, published in 1789. The following poems through A Dream (p. 168) were included in the volume.

168.

THE BOOK OF THIEL

This is one of Blake's so-called Prophetic or Symbolic Books, a series of writings in which he presents his ideas on ethics, morality, religion, etc. The names in the poem are of Blake's coinage.

"The regularity of its married fourteeners, the idyllic gentleness of its imagery, and the not unpleasant blending of simplicity and formalism in the diction, proclaim the mood of Songs of Innocence. It treats of the same all-pervading spirit of mutual love and self-sacrifice. In response to the gentle lamentations of the virgin Thel to whom life seems vain, and death utter annihilation, the lily of the valley, the cloud, the worm and the clod rise up to testify to the interdependence of all forms of being, under the Divine Image, and to show that death is not final extinction but the supreme manifestation of this impulse to 'willing sacrifice of self.' Blake's original conclusion to this argument is lost for the last section has not any perceptible connection in its context. In it the whole conception of life is changed. This world is a dark prison, and the physical senses are narrow windows darkening the infinite soul of man by excluding the wisdom and joy of eternity, the condition of which is freedom. The source of this degradation is the tyranny of abstract moral law, the mind-forged manacles upon natural and therefore, innocent desires. Its symbols are the silver rod of authority and the golden bowl of a restrictive ethic that would mete out the immeasurable spirit of love. Here Blake is clearly enough in the grip of the formal antinomianism that produced the later 'prophecies.' — I. P. R. Willis in The Cambridge History of English Literature, Vol. 11, ch. 9.

1. Seraphim — In the first edition of the poem this line read "The daughters of Mne Seraphim." In Blake's system "Mne" was the name given to the Mother of All.

170.

THE CLOD AND THE PEBBIE

The following poems through A Cradle Song (p. 172) were included in a volume of verse entitled Songs of Experience, published in 1794. Some of the poems in this volume were simply new versions of poems in Songs of Innocence.

171.

THE TIGER

After reading this poem, Lamb declared the author to be "one of the most extraordinary persons of the age."

A POISON TREE

This poem is sometimes entitled Christian Forbearance.

172

AUGURIES OF INNOCENCE

The lines are printed as rearranged by Rossetti. For the order in which they come in Blake's manuscript, see Blake's Poetical Works, ed. by Sampson (1907).

1-4. With these lines compare Tennyson's Flower in the Crannied Wall, as follows:

Flower in the crannied wall,
I pluck you out of the crannies,
I hold you here, root and all, in my hand,
Little flower—but if I could understand
What you are, root and all, and all in all,
I should know what God and man is.

173.

THE MENTAL TRAVELLER

"The Mental Traveller indicates an explorer of mental phenomena. The mental phenomenon here symbolized seems to be the career of any great idea or intellectual movement—as, for instance, Christianity, chivalry, art, etc.—represented as going through the stages of—1, birth, 2, adversity and persecution, 3, triumph and maturity, 4, decadence through over-ripeness, 5, gradual transformation, under new conditions, into another renovated idea, which again has to pass through all the same stages. In other words the poem represents the action and reaction of Ideas upon society, and of society upon Ideas."—Rossetti's note in Poetical Works (1874). "The babe

I take to signify human genius or intellect which none can touch and not be consumed except the 'woman old faith or love' all weaker things pain and pleasure hatred and love fly with shrieking averted faces from before it. The gray and cruel nurse, custom or religion, cruelties and torments the child, feeding herself upon his agony to false fresh youth. Grown older he wedd her, custom, the daily life of men, once married to the fresh intellect, bears fruit to him of profit and pleasure.

but through such union he grows old the sooner, soon runs but wander round and look over his finished work and gathered treasure the tragic passions and splendid achievements of his spirit kept fresh in verse or color.

The 'female babe' sprung from the fire that burns always on his hearth is the issue or result of genius which, being too strong for the father, flows into new channels and follows after fresh ways.

The out-cast intellect can then be vivified only by a new love.

Then follow the stages of love, and the phases of action and passion bred from either stage."—Swinnburne, in William Blake (1898).

174.

MILTON

Milton is one of Blake's late Prophetic Books. See note on The Book of Thel, above.

In Milton, Blake gives a mythical account of the progress of poetry. The poet Milton transmigrates into the body of Blake and through him gives assurance of the reign of the imagination and of the renewal of the human spirit in poetry.

TO THE QUEEN

This poem, addressed to Queen Charlotte, wife of George III, King of England (1760-1820), was written as the Dedication of Blake's designs for Blair's The Grave (p. 87).

WILLIAM LISLE BOWLES

(1762-1850), p. 164

EDITIONS

Poetical Works, 2 vols, ed. with a Memoir and critical Dissertation, by G. Gillman (Edinburgh, 1855)

Poetical Works (London, Cassell, 1879)

Poetical Works, with Lamb and H. Coleridge, ed. by W. Tirebuck (Canterbury Poets ed. London, Scott, 1887).

CRITICISM

Beers, H. A. "Coleridge, Bowles, and the Pope Controversy," A History of English Romanticism in the Nineteenth Century (New York, Holt, 1901, 1910)

Casson, T. E. Eighteenth Century Literature; an Oxford Miscellany (London, Frowde, 1909)

Coleridge, S. T. Biographia Literaria, ch. 1 (London, 1817, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1907).

Haslitt, W. "Pope, Lord Byron, and Mr. Bowles," The London Magazine, 1821, Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure), 11, 486

Quarterly Review, The, Nov., 1809 (2 281)

Saintsbury, G. A History of Criticism (Edinburgh and London, Blackwood, 1900-04, 1908, New York, Dodd)

CRITICAL NOTES

"I had just entered on my seventeenth year, when the sonnets of Mr. Bowles, twenty in number, and just then published in a quarto pamphlet, were first made known and presented to me, by a school-fellow who had quitted us for the University, and who, during the whole time that he was in our first form (or in our school language a Quincian), had been my patron and protector. I refer to Dr. Middleton, the truly learned, and every way excellent Bishop of Calcutta. It was a double pleasure to me, and still remains a tender recollection, that I should have received from a friend so revered the first knowledge of a poet by whose works, year after year, I was so enthusiastically delighted and inspired. My earliest acquaintances will not have forgotten the undisciplined eagerness and impetuous zeal, with which I labored to make proselytes, not only of my companions, but of all with whom I conversed, of whatever rank, and in whatever place. As my school finances did not permit me to purchase copies, I made, within less than a year and a half, more than forty transcriptions, as the best presents I could offer to those who had in any way won my regard. And with almost equal delight did I receive the three or four following publications of the same author. My obligations to Mr. Bowles were indeed important, and for radical good. At a very premature age, even before my fifteenth year, I had bewildered myself in metaphysics, and in theological controversy. This preposterous pursuit was, beyond doubt, injurious both to my natural powers, and to the progress of my education. It would perhaps have been destructive, had it been continued, but from this I was auspiciously withdrawn, partly indeed by an accidental introduction to an amiable family, chiefly, however, by the genial influence of a style of poetry, so tender and yet so manly, so natural, and real, and yet so dignified and harmonious, as the sonnets, etc., of Mr. Bowles."—Coleridge, in Biographia Literaria, ch. 1 (1817)

See Coleridge's To the Reverend W. L. Bowles (p. 329)

"As the English romantic poets went forth to combat the classic school with its super-sense and pride of strict rules, and to endow the poetry of the fairy tale with new life, their first halt was under the shadow of Bowles. Compared with such a poet of the intellect as Pope, who had maintained that, with a clear head and dexterous style, nothing was too prosaic to be converted into poetry, such an elegant as Bowles, who aimed at all effect through the heart, was a most refreshing contrast"—A. Brandl, in Samuel Taylor Coleridge and the English Romantic School, English Translation by Lady Eastlake (1887)

See Byron's English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, 327-34 (p. 490)

164.

AT TYNEMOUTH PRIORY

Tynemouth Priory is a noted ruin of an ancient church in Tynemouth, a city at the mouth of the River Tyne, in Northumberland-shire, England. The city is noted as a watering-place, also for its picturesque cliffs.

THE BELLS, OSTEND

Ostend is a famous sea-side resort in Belgium.

BAMBOROUGH CASTLE

Bamborough Castle is an ancient castle in Bamborough, a village on the coast of Northumberland-shire, England.

EDMUND BURKE (1729-1797), p. 1186

EDITIONS

Works, 9 vols. (Boston, 1839), revised, 12 vols. Boston, Little, 1865-67, 1894)

Works and Correspondence, 8 vols. (London, Livingston, 1852)

Works, 8 vols. (London, Bohn, 1854-55, Macmillan).

Complete Works, 6 vols., with an Introduction and Prefaces by F H. Willis and F W Raftery (World's Classics ed. Oxford Univ. Press, 1906-08).

Selections, 3 vols., ed by E J Payne (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1874, 1892-98)

American Speeches and Letters, ed by H Law (Everyman's Libr ed New York, Dutton, 1908).

Correspondence, 4 vols., ed by E Fitzwilliam and R Bourke (London, Rivington, 1844)

Reflections on the Revolution in France, ed by F G Selby (London, Macmillan, 1890)

Speeches on America, ed by F G Selby (London, Macmillan 1895)

Speeches on Irish Affairs, ed by M Arnold (London, Macmillan, 1881).

BIOGRAPHY

Croly G A Memoir of the Political Life of the Rt Hon E Burke (London, Blackwood, 1840)

MacKnight, T History of the Life and Times of Edmund Burke, 3 vols. (London, Chapman, 1858)

Morley, J Edmund Burke (English Men of Letters Series London, Macmillan, 1879, New York Harper)

Prior, Sir James Memoir of the Life and Character of Edmund Burke, with Specimens of his Poetry and Letters (1824, London, Bell, 1878, New York, Macmillan)

CRITICISM

Birrell A Obiter Dicta, Second Series (London, Stock, 1885, 1886, New York, Scribner)

Dawson, W J The Makers of English Prose (New York and London, Revell, 1906)

Dowden, E "Anti Revolution Edmund Burke," The French Revolution and English Literature (New York and London, Scribner, 1897)

Haslitt, W "Character of Mr Burke" Political Essays (London, 1819, Collected Works, ed Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York McClure), 8 250, 325

Howard, W G "Burke among the Forerunners of Learning," Publications of the Modern Language Association, 1907 (n s 15 608)

MacCunn, J The Political Philosophy of Burke (London, Arnold, 1913; New York, Longmans).

Maurice, F D The Friendship of Books (London and New York, Macmillan, 1874)

Meusel, F Edmund Burke und die Französische Revolution (Berlin, Weidmann, 1913)

Minto, W A Manual of English Prose Literature (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1872, 1886, Boston, Ginn, 1901)

Morley, J Edmund Burke, an Historical Study (London, Macmillan, 1867, 1898).

Napier, Sir J Lectures, Essays, and Letters (London, Longmans, 1888)

Pillans, T D Edmund Burke, Apostle of Justice and Liberty (London, Watts, 1905)

Rogers, A K "Burke's Social Philosophy," The American Journal of Sociology, July, 1912 (18 51)

Stephen, Sir J F Howe Sabbath, 3 series (London, Macmillan, 1891-92)

Stephen, L History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, 2 vols (London, Smith, 1876, 1902, New York, Putnam)

Wilson, W Mere Literature (Boston, Houghton, 1896)

CRITICAL NOTES

1186. REFLECTIONS ON THE REVOLUTION IN FRANCE

"This extraordinary book was published near the outbreak of the French Revolution and justly takes rank as one of the masterpieces of English literature. It is at once a condemnation of the Revolution, and a prophecy of the evils the Revolution would produce. As a specimen of denunciatory writing, it is probably one of the most remarkable ever produced in any language. It pours out torrent after torrent, Niagara after Niagara. But though it is repetitious and therefore somewhat monotonous, it abounds in shrewd judgments, in brilliant pictures, and in prophecies that seem inspired. At times it is so unfair and so unjust that some have attempted to explain its excesses by the presumption that Burke had lost his reason. There is no need, however, of resorting to this violent hypothesis. Burke's mind was always essentially denunciatory in its nature, and he was never able to be quite just either to men or to political methods he disliked. Moreover, though he was a passionate friend of liberty, he never believed liberty was to be secured or preserved by submitting political affairs to the control of masses of ignorant men. These characteristics of his mind and of his political doctrines are quite sufficient to account for the peculiarities of what, with all its drawbacks, must probably be considered the greatest work of the greatest writer of English prose"—C K Adams, in A Manual of Historical Literature (1882)

During the period 1789-92, the French Revolution found many supporters in England among poets, political philosophers, and clergymen. Most prominent among these groups were Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Southey, Godwin, Fox, and Wilkes, and Priestly and Price. All of these openly and fervently glorified everything that was being done in the name of Liberty. With these enthusiasts, Burke was entirely at variance. To him the Revolution meant only the overthrow of an established civilization, and he vigorously protested. For the contrasting view, see the selections from Godwin's An Enquiry concerning Political Justice (pp 213 ff.)

The style of Burke's prose, so far as form goes, is neither Classic nor Romantic.

The Reflections opens with a statement of Burke's attitude toward the Constitution Society and the Revolution Society, English clubs which approved of the proceedings in France.

- 1187a. 40. In the portion omitted, Burke discusses the style of Paine's sermon and his assertions that the people of England have the right to choose their own governors, to cashier them for misconduct, and to frame a government for themselves.
- 1188b. 55. A man amongst them.—A reference probably to Fox, Godwin, or Wilkes, all of whom vigorously supported the French Revolution.
- 1191a. 16-17 Thorough-paced courtiers.—Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Southey were at first ardent Republicans but the excesses and the failures of the French Revolution led them finally to become Tories.
- 1193a. 33-34 Inverted order.—Cl with the story of the Englishman who once satirically remarked that French infants could not be good—it wore blue, a color meant by God for cravats.

ROBERT BURNS (1759-1796), p 175

EDITIONS

- Life and Works* 4 vols., ed by R Chambers (1851-52) revised by W Wallace (Edinburgh, Chambers, 1896-97, New York Longmans).
- Poems, Songs, and Letters*, ed by E Smith (Globe ed London and New York, Macmillan, 1865).
- Works*, 6 vols., ed by W S Douglas (Edinburgh, Simkin 1877-79, Paterson, 1883).
- Poetical Works*, 8 vols., ed with a Memoir by G A Aitken (Vine ed London, Bell, 1892-98, New York, Macmillan).
- Poetical Works* 3 vols., ed by J L Robertson (Oxford Univ Press, 1890).
- Poetry*, 4 vols., ed, with an Essay on Burns's Life, Genius and Achievement, by W E Henley and T F Henderson (Centenary ed Edinburgh Jack, 1896-97, Boston, Houghton).
- Complete Poetical Works*, ed, with Henley's essay from the Centenary ed, by W E Henley (Cambridge ed Boston, Houghton, 1897).
- Poetical Works*, ed with a Life, by W Wallace (London and Edinburgh Chambers, 1902).
- Complete Poetical Works*, ed, with an Appreciation by Lord Roseberry (London, Nelson, 1902).
- Complete Poems*, ed by J L Robertson (Oxford Univ Press, 1906).
- Correspondence*, 2 vols., ed by W Wallace (New York, Dodd, 1895).
- Letters*, selections, ed with an Introduction by J L Robertson (Camelot ed London, Scott, 1897).
- Selections from the Poems*, ed by I G Dow (Athenaeum Press ed Boston, Ginn 1895).
- Songs now First Printed with the Melodies for Which They Were Written*, ed by J C Dick (Oxford Univ Press, 1907).

BIOGRAPHY

- Angellier, A. Robert Burns. La vie et les œuvres, 2 vols (Paris, Hachette, 1893).

- Blackie, J. S. Life of Robert Burns (Great Writers Series London, Scott, 1888).
- Dougall, C. S. The Burns Country (London and New York, Macmillan, 1911).
- Halliburton, H. In Scottish Fields (Edinburgh, Paterson, 1890).
- Henderson, T. F. Robert Burns (London, Methuen, 1904).
- Lockhart, J. G. Life of Robert Burns (1828), enlarged ed by W S Douglas (London, Bohn, 1882).
- Setoun, G. Robert Burns (Famous Scots Series Edinburgh and London, Anderson, 1896).
- Shalrp, J. C. Robert Burns (English Men of Letters Series London, Macmillan, 1879, New York, Harper).

CRITICISM

- Arnold, M. "The Study of Poetry," Essays in Criticism, Second Series (London, Macmillan, 1888).
- Brooke, S. A. Theology in the English Poets (London, King, 1874, 1880, New York, Dutton 1910).
- Brown, G. D. Blackwood's Magazine, Aug., 1896 (160-184).
- Carlyle, T. "Essay on Burns," The Edinburgh Review, Dec. 1828 (48-27) Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, 4 vols (Boston Houghton, 1880).
- Carlyle, T. "The Hero as Man of Letters. On Heroes, Hero-Worship, and the Hero in History" (1841 New York and London, Longmans 1906-1909).
- Collver, R. Clear Grit (Boston, American Unitarian Assn., 1913).
- Craigie, W. A. A Primer of Burns (Edinburgh, Jack, 1896).
- Curtis, G. W. Orations and Addresses, 3 vols (New York, Harper, 1894).
- Dawson, W. I. The Makers of English Poetry (New York and London, Revell, 1906).
- Dowden, E. "Early Revolutionary Group and Antagonists," The French Revolution and English Literature (New York and London, Scribner, 1897).
- Emerson, R. W. (1859) Miscellaneous (Boston, Houghton, 1878, 1911).
- Giddes, F. "Homes of Burns," Littell's Living Age, Oct., 1913 (279-360).
- Graham, H. G. Scottish Men of Letters in the Eighteenth Century (London, Black, 1901, New York, Macmillan).
- Hidden, J. C. "Bonnie Annie Laurie with New Researches concerning the Subject and the Author of the Famous Song," The Century Magazine March, 1914 (87-785).
- Harper, G. M. "Robert Burns's Country," Scribner's Magazine, Dec., 1908 (44-641).
- Hawthorne, N. "Some of the Haunts of Burns," The Atlantic Monthly, Oct., 1860 (6-395). Our Old Home (1863), Complete Works, 13 vols (Boston Houghton 1893).
- Hazlitt, W. "On Burns and the Old English Ballads," Lectures on the English Poets (London, 1818), Collected Works, 13 vols., ed by A. R.

Waller and A Glover (London, Dent, 1902 06, New York, McClure) 5 123

Jack, A A "Burns (Natural or Spontaneous Poetry)," Poetry and Prose (London, Constable, 1911)

Jeffrey, F "Reliques of Burns," The Edinburgh Review, Jan., 1809 (18 249), Contributions to the Edinburgh Review (Modern British Essayists Philadelphia, Carey, 1840).

Kellow, H A Burns and His Poetry (New York, Dodge, 1912)

Lank A Letters to Dead Authors (London and New York, Longmans, 1886, 1892, Scribner, 1898)

Nelson, W A "Burns in English," Kittredge Anniversary Papers (Boston, Ginn, 1913)

Quiller-Couch, A T Adventures in Criticism (New York, Scribner, 1896)

Ridling, W H "The Land o' Burns," Harper's New Monthly Magazine, July, 1879 (50 180)

Scott, Sir Walter "Reliques of Robert Burns," The Quarterly Review, Feb., 1809 (1 19)

Shalip, J C "Nature in Collins, Gray, Goldsmith Cowper, and Burns," On the Poetic Interpretation of Nature (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1877, New York, Hurd, 1878, Boston, Houghton, 1885)

Shalip, J C "Scottish Song and Burns" Aspects of Poetry (Oxford Clarendon Press, 1881, Boston, Houghton 1882)

Speeches and Essays on Burns (Washington, Jean Armour Burns Club 1908)

Stevenson R L "Some Aspects of Robert Burns," Familiar Studies of Men and Books (1882), Works, 10 vols (New York, Scribner, 1914)

Velich J The Feeling for Nature in Scottish Poetry, 2 vols (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1887)

Walker, H Three Centuries of Scottish Literature, 2 vols (Glasgow, MacLehose 1893, New York, Macmillan).

Watson John ("Ian MacLaren") "Robert Burns the Voice of the Scots People" Concerning Books and Bookmen (London, Nisbet, 1912, New York, Doran)

Wilson, J "Genius and Character of Burns," Essays Critical and Imaginative, 4 vols, ed by J P Ferrier (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1855-06)

CONCORDANCE

Reid, J B Complete Concordance to the Poetry and Songs of Burns (Glasgow, Kerr, 1889).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Anderson J P In Blackie's Life of Robert Burns (1866)

Angus, W C The Printed Works of Robert Burns (Glasgow, Hodge, 1899)

Ewing, J C Selected List of the Works of Robert Burns, and of Books upon his Life and Writings (1809)

Ewing, J C Bibliography of Robert Burns to 1796 (1909)

M'Kie, J J Bibliography of Burns (Kilmarnock, 1881).

CRITICAL NOTES

"(One song of Burns's is of more worth to you than all I could think for a whole year in his native country His misery is a dead weight upon the nimbleness of one's quill—I tried to forget it—to drink today without any care—to write a merry sonnet—it won't do—he talked with bitches—he drank with blackguards he was miserable—We can see horribly clear, in the works of such a man his whole life as if we were God's spies"—Kents, in Letter to Reynolds, July 13, 1818, "As if we were God's spies," is a phrase in King Lear, V, 3, 17

"All that remains of Burns, the writings he has left, seem to us, as we hinted above no more than a poor mutilated fraction of what was in him, brief, broken glimpses of a genius that could never show itself complete, that wanted all things for completeness culture leisure, true effort, nay, even length of life His poems are, with scarcely any exception, mere occasional effusions, poured forth with little premeditation, expressing by such means as offered, the passion, opinion, or humor of the hour Never in one instance was it permitted him to grapple with any subject with the full collection of his strength to fuse and mould it in the concentrated fire of his genius To try by the strict rules of art such imperfect fragments, would be at once unprofitable and unfair Nevertheless there is something in these poems marred and defective as they are which forbids the most fastidious student of poetry to pass them by Some sort of enduring quality they must have for after fifty years of the wildest vicissitudes in poetic taste, they still continue to be read, nay are read more and more eagerly, more and more extensively, and this not only by literary virtuosos, and that class upon whom transitory causes operate most strongly but by all classes down to the most hard, unlettered and truly natural class, who read little and especially no poetry, except because they find pleasure in it The grounds of so singular and wide a popularity, which extends in a literal sense from the palace to the hut and over all regions where the English tongue is spoken, are well worth inquiring into After every just deduction, it seems to imply some rare excellence in these works What is that excellence?

"To answer this question will not lead us far The excellence of Burns is, indeed among the rarest, whether in poetry or prose but at the same time it is plain and easily recognized his sincerity, his indisputable air of truth Here are no fabulous woes or joys no hollow fantastic sentimentalities no whe-drawn refinings either in thought or feeling the passion that is traced before us has glowed in a living heart, the opinion he utters has risen in his own understanding, and been a light to his own steps He does not write from hearsay, but from sight and experience, it is the scenes that he has lived and labored amidst, that he describes those scenes, rude and humble as they are, have kindled beautiful emotions in his soul, noble thoughts, and definite resolves, and he speaks forth what is in him, not from any outward call of vanity or interest, but because his heart is too full to be silent. He speaks it with such melody and modulation as he can, 'in homely rustic jingle', but it is his own, and genuine"—Carlyle, in Essay on Burns (1828)

See Wordsworth's At the Grave of Burns (p. 291)

175 O, ONCE I LOV'D A BONIE LASS

"For my own part, I never had the least thought or inclination of turning poet till I got once heartily in love, and then rhyme and song were in a manner the spontaneous language of my heart. The following composition was the first of my performances and done at an early period of life, when my heart glowed with honest, warm simplicity, unacquainted and uncorrupted with the ways of a wicked world. The performance is, indeed, very puerile and silly, but I am always pleased with it, as it recalls to my mind those happy days when my heart was yet honest and my tongue was sincere. The subject of it was a young girl who really deserved all the praises I have bestowed on her. The seventh stanza has several minute faults, but I remember I composed it in a wild enthusiasm of passion, and to this hour I never recollect it but my heart melts and my blood rallies at the remembrance"—Burns, Commonplace Book, 1783 85

MARY MORISON

According to Gilbert Burns, Mary Morison was the subject of Burns's and I'll Kiss Thee Yet, Yet, the heroine of which has been thought to be either Mary Campbell or Elison Begbie. Henley and Henderson state (The Poetry of Robert Burns) that a Mary Morison lived at Mauchline from 1784, "said to have been as beautiful as amiable." She died in 1791

MY NANIE, O

"As I have been all along a miserable dupe to love, and have been led into a thousand weaknesses and follies by it, for that reason I put the more confidence in my critical skill in distinguishing foppery and conceit from real passion and nature. Whether the following song will stand the test, I will not pretend to say, because it is my own, only I can say it was, at the time, real"—Burns, Commonplace Book, 1784

176. POOR MAILIN'S ELEGY

The stanza-form of this poem had been used for elegies by Sempill, Ramsay, and Ferguson, Scottish poets before Burns

177. TO DAVIE

This poem was addressed to David Sillar (1760-1830), son of a farmer near Tarbolton. He was a teacher in the parish school at Tarbolton, and a grocer in Irvine, before he published, in 1789, a volume of poems in imitation of Burns. Failing to get literary work in Edinburgh, he returned to Irvine, where he took up teaching again. He had considerable skill as a fiddler and as a poet

EPISTLE TO J. LAPRAIK

John Lapraik (1727-1807) was an Ayrshire poet. Burns addressed two subsequent Epistles to him, both written in 1785

178a. 13-17. The song referred to is Lapraik's When I Upon Thy Bosom Lean

179. EPISTLE TO THE REV JOHN M'MATH

John M'Math (1781-1825) was a convivial preacher, and a friend of Burns

Holy Willie's Prayer

And send the godly in a pet² to pray—Pope³

Argument

Holy Willie was a rather oddish bachelor elder in the parish of Mauchline and much and justly famed for that polemical chattering which ends in tipping orthodoxy and for that spiritualised bawdry which refines to liquorish devotion. In a seasonal process with a gentleman in Mauchline—a Mr. Gavin Hamilton—Holy Willie and his priest Father Auld, after full hearing in the Presbytery of Ayr (came off but second best owing partly to the oratorical powers of Mr Robert Aiken. Mr. Hamilton's counsel, but chiefly to Mr. Hamilton's being one of the most irreproachable and truly respectable characters in the country. On losing his process the muse overheard him at his devotions as follows—

O Thou that in the heavens does dwell,
Wha, as it pleases best Thyself,
Sends aye to Heaven an' ten to Hell
A' for Thy glory,
And no for onle guld or ill
They've done befor' Thee ' 5

I bless and praise Thy matchless might,
When thousands Thou hast left in night,
That I am here befor' Thy night,
For gifts an' grace 10
A burning and a shining light
To a' this place

What was I, or my generation,
That I should get sic exaltation?
I, wha deserv'd most just damnation
For broken laws 15
Six thousand years ere my creation,
Thro' Adam's cause '

When from my mither's womb I fell
Thou might hae plung'd me deep in Hell,
To gnash my gums, and weep, and wail
In burning lakes,
Where damnd devils roar and yell,
Chain'd to their stakes 20

Yet I am here, a chosen sample,
To show Thy grace is great and ample.
I'm here a pillar o' Thy temple,
Strong as a rock,
A guide, a buckler, and example
To a' Thy flock 25

But yet, O Lord! confess I must
At times I'm fash'd' wi' fleshly lust,
An' sometimes, too, in worldly trust,
Vile self gets in,
But Thou remembers we are dust,
Defiled wi' sin 30

¹ Holy Willie was William Fisher (1787-1809), a strict elder in the parish church at Mauchline

² fit of peevishness

³ The Rape of the Lock, 4, 64

⁴ troubled

O Lord ' yestreen, Thou kens, wi' Meg—
Thy pardon I sincerely beg—
O, may 't ne'er be a living plague
To my dishonor!
An' I'll ne'er lift a lawless leg
Again upon her.

40

Besides, I farther maun' avow—
Wi' Leezie's lass, three times, I trow—
But, Lord, that Friday I was fou,^a
When I cam near her,
Or else, Thou kens, Thy servant true
Wad never steer^b her.

45

Maybe Thou lets this fleshly thorn
Buffet Thy servant e'en and morn,
Lest he owre proud and high should turn
That he's sae gifted
If sae, Thy han' maun' e'en be borne
Until Thou lift it

50

Lord, bless Thy chosen in this place,
For here Thou has a chosen race!
But God confound their stubborn face
An' blast their name,
Wha bring Thy elders to disgrace
An' open shame!

55

60

Lord, mind Gau'n Hamilton's deserts—
He drinks, an' swears, an' plays at cartes,^c
Yet has sae moule takin' arts
Wi' great and sma',
Frae God's ain Priest the people's hearts
He steals awa.

65

And when we chasten'd him therefore,
Thou kens how he bred sic a splore,^d
And set the warld in a roar
(O' laughin' at us)
Curse Thou his basket and his store,
Kail an' potatoes!

70

Lord, hear my earnest cry and pray'r,
Against that Presby'try of Ay'r!
Thy strong right hand, Lord, mak it bare
Upo' their heads!
Lord, visit them, and dinna spare,
For their misdeeds!

75

O Lord my God! that glib-tongu'd Aiken,
My vera heart and flesh are quakin,
To think how we stool'd sweatin', shakin,
An' plish'd wi' dread,
While he, wi' hingin' lip an' anakin,^e
Held up his head

80

Lord in Thy day o' vengeance try him!
Lord, visit him wha did employ him!
And pass not in Thy mercy by them,
Nor hear their pray'r,
But for Thy people's sake destroy them,
An' dinna spare!

85

90

But, Lord, remember me and mine
Wi' mercies temporal and divine,
That I for grace an' gear^f may shine
Excell'd by none,
And a' the glory shall be Thine—
Amen, Amen!

95

S. The gown and band were worn by clergymen, the black bonnet was worn by elders

180.

THE JOLLY BEGGARS

— "The Burns of this 'puissant and splendid production,' as Matthew Arnold calls it—this irresistible presentation of humanity caught in the act and summarised forever in the terms of art—comes into line with diverse poets of repute, from our own Dekker and John Fletcher to the singer of len Gucus (1818) and to Vieux Vagabond (1880) [The Beggars and The Old Vagabond, written by the French poet, Jean de Béranger (1780-1857)] and approves himself their master in the matter of such qualities as humor, vision, lyrical potency, descriptive style, and the faculty of swift, dramatic presentation, to a purpose that may not be gainsaid. It was suggested by a chance visit (in company with Richmond and Smith) to the 'dow-house' of Poozie Nansie, as Agnes Gibson was nicknamed, in The Cowgate, Mauchline,—"Henley and Henderson For Arnold's comment see "The Study of Poetry." Essays in Criticism, Second Series (1888).

"Perhaps we may venture to say, that the most strictly poetical of all his poems is one which does not appear in Currie's Edition; but has been often printed before and since, under the humble title of The Jolly Beggars. The subject truly is among the lowest in Nature, but it only the more shows our poet's gift in raising it into the domain of art. To our minds, this piece seems thoroughly compacted, melted together, refined; and poured forth in one flood of true liquid harmony. It is light, airy, soft of movement, yet sharp and precise in its details, every face is a portrait that vaude carin, that wee Apollo, that Son of Mars, are Scottish, yet ideal, the scene is at once a dream, and the very Ragcastle of 'Poozie-Nansie'. Farther, it seems in a considerable degree complete, a real self-supporting whole, which is the highest merit in a poem. The blanket of the night is drawn asunder for a moment, in full, ruddy, flaming light, these rough tattered-demons are seen in their bolstorous revel, for the strong pulse of life vindicates its right to gladness even here, and when the curtain closes, we prolong the action, without effort, the next day as the last, our Cand and our Ballad-monger are singing and soldiering, their 'brats and callets' are hawking, begging, cheating, and some other night, in new combinations, they will wring from Fate another hour of wassail and good cheer. Apart from the universal sympathy with man which this again bespeaks in Burns, a genuine inspiration and no inconsiderable technical talent are manifested here. There is the fidelity, humor, warm life and accurate painting and grouping of some Teniers,¹ for whom hostlers and carousing peasants are not without significance. It would be strange, doubtless, to call this the best of Burns's writings, we mean to say only that it seems to us the most perfect of its kind as a piece of poetical composition, strictly so called. In The Beggar's Opera,² in The Beggar's Bush,³ as other critics⁴ have already remarked, there is nothing which, in real poetic vigor equals this

¹ David Teniers (1610-90), a Flemish painter of common scenes and characters.

² By John Gay (1685-1732).

³ By John Fletcher (1579-1625).

⁴ Particularly Lockhart, in his Life of Burns.

^a must ^b full; drunk ^c molest, meddle with ^d cards ^e such a fuss ^f sneering ^g wealth

Canstata, nothing, as we think, which comes within many degrees of it"—Caityle, in Essay on Burns (1828)

9. The epithet Pousie is of doubtful meaning. A similar word, pousie, is a nickname for cat; and cat and pousie are both slang for laid woman. Pousie is Scotch for pusse or money. Pousse means pushing, as in the word pousse-cafe, a glass of various liquors taken immediately after coffee. In eighteenth century slang, a pushing-school is a brothel.

185.

THE HOLY FAIR

"The satire is chiefly concerned with the 'tent preaching outside the church while the communion services went on within. In Mauchline the preaching tent was pitched in the churchyard, whence a back entrance gave access to Nannie Tinnock's tavern, and the sacrament was observed once a year, on the second Sunday in August."—Hendley and Henderson. The stanza is an old one in Scotch poetry.

187a 188. See Hamlet, I 5 15 16

I could a tale unfold whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul

188.

THE COTTER'S SATURDAY NIGHT

Robert Aiken (1730-1807), to whom the poem is inscribed, was an old friend of the Burns family. He frequently read Burns's poems in public. As Burns had not read Spenser when he wrote this poem, he must have borrowed the stanza-form from the Spenserian Imitators—Shenstone, Thomson, and Beattie—with whom he was familiar. According to Burns's brother, Gilbert, the plan and title of the poem were suggested by Ferguson's The Farmer's Ingle, the first two stanzas of which follow:

When glomin' gray out owre the welkin keeks,¹
When lawties ca' his owen to the byre,
When Thrasher John sair dung² his burn door knecks,³

And hisy⁴ lasses at the dightin⁵ tire,
What bangs tu' lea⁶ the evening's comin' cauld,
And gar⁷ snaw-tippit winter freeze in vain,
Gais dowrie⁸ mortals look bauld blithe and bauld,
Nor fleev⁹ wi' a the poorth¹⁰ o' the plain,
Begin, my Muse, and chant in hamely strain

Frae the big stack, weel winnow¹¹ on the hill,
Wi' divots theekit¹² frae the west and diff,
Sods, peats, and heathery turfs the chimley fill
And gar their thick'ning smeeke salute the lift¹³
The gudeman new come hame is blithe to find,
When he out owre the hallan¹⁴ flings his een,
That ilk¹⁵ turn is handled to his mind,
That a' his homie looks sae coo¹⁶ and clean,
For cleanly house lo'es he, though e'er sae mean.

¹ peeps, looks² A pet name for a dog.³ oxen to the cowhouse⁴ much wearied⁵ shuts fastens⁶ dry, dusty⁷ winnowing⁸ partition between the door and the fire-place⁹ every, each¹⁰ overcomes, full loyally¹¹ makes, compels¹² woeful¹³ scared¹⁴ poverty¹⁵ with turf thatched¹⁶ sky¹⁷ snug;

TO A MOUSE

Burns's brother Gilbert says that the poem was composed while Burns was plowing, after he had turned up a mouse's nest and had saved the little creature from the "murdering pattle" of the boy who was leading the horses.

191.

ADDRESS TO THE DEIL

"The Address is, in part, a good-natured burlesque of the Miltonic ideal of Satan, and this is effected 'by the introduction,' to use the words of Gilbert Burns, of ludicrous accounts and representations,' from various quarters,' of that 'august personage' Burns in his despairing moods was accustomed to form the strongest admiration for Milton's Arch-Fiend and his dauntless superiority of his desperate circumstances and his far-seeing apostrophe, although it takes the form of an exclamation of pity—and was accepted merely as such by the too-too sentimental yet austere Carlyle—is in reality a satiric thrust at the old Satanic dogma."—Hendley and Henderson, in The Poetry of Robert Burns

194

TO A MOUNTAIN DAISY

"I have here likewise enclosed a small piece, the very latest of my productions. I am a good deal pleased with some sentiments myself, as they are just the native querulous feelings of a heart which, as the elegantly melting Gray says, 'melancholy has marked for her own'."—Burns, in a letter to John Kenedy, April 20, 1786. The poem was first entitled The Gowan [The Daisy].

Cf. Wordsworth's poems on the same subject (pp. 288-90).

1. The red tips on the white petals of the daisy are said to be the gift of Mars. Cf. Chaucer's Prologue to The Legend of Good Women (A, 519-22).

In remembrance of him and in honour,
'Bellia made the daisies and the flout
Y-crowned al with whyt, as men may see,
And Mars yaf to him coronat reed, pardie,
In stede of rubies, set among the whyte

195.

OF A' THE AIRS

This song, written as a compliment to Mrs Burns shortly after the poet's arrival in Edinburgh, while his wife was still in Ayrshire. Additional stanzas, appearing in some versions of the poem, were the work of John Hamilton, an Edinburgh music-seller.

196.

MY HEART'S IN THE HIGHLANDS

"The first half stanza of this song is old; the rest is mine"—Burns, in Interleaved Copy.

JOHN ANDERSON MY JO

This song is derived from a broad ditty current in the 18th century. The line "John Anderson, My Jo, John" is found in a song composed as early as 1580.

SWEET AFTON

In a letter sent with the poem to Mrs Dunlop Feb. 5, 1780, Burns states that the poem was written as a compliment to the "small river Afton that flows into Nith, near New Cumnock, which has some charming, wild, romantic scenery on its banks." Probably no special heroine was in the poet's mind.

197. WILLIE BURN'D A PICK OF MAUT

"The air is Masterston's, the song mine. The occasion of it was this—Mr Wm Nicol of the High School, Edinburgh, during the autumn vacation being at Moffat, honest Allan (who was at that time on a visit to Daliswinton) and I went to pay Nicol a visit. We had such a joyous meeting that Mr Masterston and I agreed, each in our own way, that we should celebrate the business."—Burns in Interleaved Copy. Allan Masterston was a teacher in the Edinburgh High School from 1789 to his death, in 1799.

TAM O' SHANTER

21. It was a custom for young men and maidens to part off by drawing slips of paper with names written on them.

198. THOU LING'RING STAR

This poem is sometimes entitled To Mary in Heaven. The subject of the song was Mary Campbell, daughter of a sailor at Clyde. She is commemorated in several other poems by Burns. "My 'Highland Lassie' was a warm-hearted, charming young creature as ever blessed a man with generous love. After a pretty long tract of the most ardent reciprocal attachment we met by appointment on the second Sunday of May, in a sequestered spot by the banks of Ayr, where we spent the day in taking farewell, before she should embark for the West Highlands to arrange matters for our projected change of life. At the close of the autumn following she crossed the sea to meet me at Greenock, where she had scarce landed when she was seized with a malignant fever, which hurried my dear girl to the grave in a few days, before I could even hear of her illness."—Burns's Note to My Highland Lassie O in Interleaved Copy.

TAM O' SHANTER

This poem is based upon legends current in the neighborhood of Burns's birth place which is within a mile of Alloway Kirk and the old bridge over the River Doon. The following legend, sent by Burns to Francis Grose, is one of the many witch-stories relating to Alloway Kirk.

"On a market-day in the town of Ayr, a farmer from Cairick, and consequently whose way lay by the very gate of Alloway Kirkyard, in order to cross the River Doon at the old bridge, which is about two or three hundred yards further on than the said gate, had been detained by his business till by the time he reached Alloway it was the wizard hour between night and morning. Though he was terrified with a blaze streaming from the Kirk, yet, as it is a well-known fact, that to turn back on these occasions is running by far the greatest risk of mischief, he prudently advanced on his road. When he had reached the gate of the Kirkyard, he was surprised and entertained, through the ribs and arches of an old Gothic window, which still faces the highway, to see a dance of witches merrily footing it around their old sooty blackguard master, who was keeping them all alive with the power of his bagpipe. The farmer, stopping his horse to observe them a little, could plainly descry the faces of many old women of his acquaintance and neighborhood. How the gentleman was dressed, tradition does not say, but that the ladies were all in their smocks, and one of them happening unluckily to have a smock which was considerably too short to answer all the purpose of that piece of dress, our farmer was so tickled that he involuntarily burst out with a loud laugh, 'Weel luppen, Maggy wi' the short sark' and recollecting himself, instantly spurred his horse to the top of his speed. I need not mention the universally known fact, that no diabolical power can pursue you beyond the middle of a running stream. Lucky it was for the poor farmer that the River Doon was so near, for notwithstanding the speed of the horse, which was a good one when he reached the middle of the arch of the bridge, and consequently the middle of the stream, the pursuing vengeful hags were so close at his heels that one of them actually springing to seize him, but it was too late, nothing was on her side of the stream but the horse's tail, which immediately gave way at her infernal grip, as it blasted by a stroke of lightning, but the farmer was beyond her reach. However, the unsightly tailless condition of the vigorous steed was, to the last hour of the noble creature's life, an awful warning to the Cairick farmers not to stay too late in Ayr markets."

The poem was a favorite with Burns. "I look on Tam o' Shanter to be my standard performance in the poetical line. 'Tis true both the one [his new-born son] and the other discover a spice of toquish waggery that might perhaps be as well spared, but then they also show in my opinion, a force of genius and a finishing polish that I despair of ever excelling."—Burns, in Letter to Mrs. Dunlop, April 11, 1791.

"Probably Burns drew the suggestion of his hero, Tam o' Shanter, from the character and adventures of Douglas Graham (1739-1811), son of Robert Graham, farmer of Douglas-town, tenant of the farm of Shanter on the Cairick Shore and owner of a boat which he had named Tam o' Shanter. Graham was noted for his convivial habits, which his wife's rising tendency rather to confirm than to eradicate. Tradition relates that once, when his long tailed gray mare had waited even longer than usual for her master at the tavern door, certain humorists plucked her tail to such an extent as to leave it little better than a stump, and that Graham, on his attention being called to its state next morning, swore that it had been depleted by the witches at Alloway Kirk."—MS Notes by D. Auld of Ayr in Edinburgh University Library, quoted by Henley and Henderson.

201.

IN FLOWERY BANKS

Burns wrote three versions of this song; the others are entitled Sweet are the Banks and The Banks o' Doon.

"I do not know whether anybody, including the editor himself, has ever noticed a peculiar coincidence which may be found in the arrangement of the lyrics in Sir Francis Palgrave's Golden Treasury. However that may be, two poems, each of them extremely well known, are placed side by side, and their juxtaposition represents one vast revolution in the poetical manner of looking at things. The first is Goldsmith's almost too well known

When lovely woman stoops to folly
And finds too late that men betray;
What charm can soothe her melancholy?
What art can wash her guilt away?

"Immediately afterwards comes, with a sudden and thrilling change of note, the voice of Burns

Ye banks and braes o' bonie Doon
How can ye blume sae fair?
How can ye chant, ye little birds,
And, I sae fu' o' care?

Thou'll break my heart, thou bonie bird
(That sings upon the bough,
Thou minds me of the happy days,
When my fause Love was true.

"A man might read those two poems a great many times without happening to realize that they are two poems on exactly the same subject—the subject of a trusting woman deserted by a man. And the whole difference—the difference struck by the very first note of the voice of anyone who reads them—is this fundamental difference that Goldsmith's words are spoken about a certain situation, and Burns's words are spoken in that situation. In the transition from one of these lyrics to the other, we have a vital change in the conception of the functions of the poet; a change of which Burns was in many ways the beginning"—Chesterton in Robert Browning (1903)

AN FOND KISS

This poem was sent to a Mrs Maclehoze, of Edinburgh, with whom Burns had a love affair just before his marriage with Jean Armour. Scott once remarked that the first four lines of the poem were worth a thousand romances.

Cf Burns's poem with the following opening stanza from The Parting Kiss by Robert Dodsley (1703-64)

One fond kiss before we part,
Drop a tear and bid adieu;
Tho' we never, my fond heart
Till we meet shall pant for you.

202.

SAW YE BONIE LESLEY

"Bonie Lesley" was Miss Leslie Ballie, of Mayfield, Ayrshire. "Mr B., with his two daughters, . . . passing through Dumfries a few days ago on their way to England, did me the honor of calling on me, on which I took my horse—though God knows I could ill spare the time—and accompanied them fourteen or fifteen miles, and dined and spent the day with them. 'Twas about nine, I think, that I left them, and riding home I composed the following ballad"—Burns, in Letter to Mrs Dunlop, Aug 22, 1792

HIGHLAND MARY

The subject of this song was Mary Campbell. See note to Thou Ling'ring Star, p. 1215. "The foregoing song pleases me; I think it is in my happiest manner . . . The subject of the song is one of the most interesting passages of my youthful days, and I own that I would be much flattered to see the verses set to an air which would ensure celebrity. Perhaps, after all, 'tis the still glowing prejudice of my heart that throws a borrowed lustre over the merits of the composition"—Burns, in Letter to Thomson, Nov 14, 1792

203.

SCOTS, WHA HAE

In a Letter to Thomson, Sept., 1793, after remarking on the tradition that the old air Hry Tutti Tutti was Robert Bruce's march at the Battle of Bannockburn, Burns says "This thought, in my solitary wanderings, roused me to a pitch of enthusiasm on the theme of liberty and independence, which I threw into a kind of Scottish ode, fitted to the air, that one might suppose to be the gallant royal Scot's address to his heroic followers, on that eventful morning." That the French Revolution was partly responsible for the poem is clear from the Postscript in which Burns says "The accidental recollection of that glorious struggle for freedom, associated with the glowing ideas of some other struggles of the same nature, not quite so ancient, roused my rhyming mania."

Robert Bruce and the Scots won a decisive victory over the English at Bannockburn, June 24, 1314, and made Scotland independent until the kingdoms were united in 1603

A RED, RED ROSE

The way in which Burns built up some of his poems from old songs and ballads is admirably shown by comparing this famous song with the following stanzas, taken from the songs indicated

Her cheeks are like the roses
That blossom fresh in June,
O, she's like a new-strung instrument
That's newly put in tune
—The Wanton Wife of Cantle Gate

Now fare thee well, my dearest dear,
And fare thee well awhile;
Altho' I go, I'll come again
If I go ten thousand mile,
Dear love,
If I go ten thousand mile
—The Unkind Parents.

The day shall turn to night, dear love,
And the rocks melt with the sun,
Before that I prove false to thee,
Before my life be gone, dear love,
Before my life be gone

—The Loyal Lover's Faithful Promise.

The seas they shall run dry,
And rocks melt into sands,
Then I'll love you still, my dear,
When all those things are done
—The Young Man's Farewell to His Love.

Fare you well, my own true love,
And fare you well for a while,
And I will be sure to return back again,
If I go ten thousand mile
—The True Lover's Farewell

204. CONTENTED WI' LITTLE

"I have some thoughts of suggesting to you to prepare a vignette . . . to my song Contented wi' Little and Cantic wi' Mair, in order the portrait of my face and the picture of my mind may go down the stream of Time together"—Burns, in Letter to Thomson, May, 1795

LASSIE WI' THE LINT-WHITE LOCKS

"The piece has at least the merit of being a regular pastoral, the vernal morn, the summer noon, the autumnal evening, the winter night, are regularly rounded"—Burns, in Letter to Thomson, Nov, 1794 The subject of the poem was the daughter of William Lorimer, a farmer near Dumfries, she is commemorated in a number of Burns's songs. "I assure you that to my lovely friend you are indebted for many of your best songs of mine Do you think that the sober gin house routine of existence could inspire a man with life, and love, and joy—could fire him with enthusiasm or melt him with pathos equal to the genius of your book? No, No! Whenever I want to be more than ordinary in song—to be in some degree equal to your diviner air—do you imagine I fast and pray for the celestial emanation? Tout au contraire! [all to the contrary] I have a glorious recipe, the very one that for his own use was invented to the Divinity of Healing and Poesy, when erst he piped to the flocks of Admetus I put myself in the regimen of admiring a fine woman, and in proportion to the adorability of her charms, in proportion you are delighted with my verses"—Letter to Thomson

The "Divinity of Healing and Poesy" is Apollo For slaying the Cyclops, Apollo was forced to serve as a shepherd to Admetus, King of Thessaly See Lowell's The Shepherd of King Admetus

IS THERE FOR HONEST POVERTY

The meter and the phrase "for a' that" Burns borrowed from older songs A Jacobite song, published in 1750, has the following chorus

For a' that and a' that,
And twice as muckle's a' that,
He's far beyond the seas the night,
Yet he'll be here for a' that.

See Burns's The Jolly Beggars, 255-82 (p. 184)

205. O, WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST

This poem was written during Burns's last illness, in honor of Jessie Lewars, who was of great service to the Burns household at that time Burns composed the verses to a favorite melody of Miss Lewars, after she had played it on the piano. She is commemorated also in other songs by Burns

PREFACE TO THE FIRST, OR KILMARNOCK EDITION OF BURNS'S POEMS

10. See Songs of Solomon, 4 12—"A garden inclosed is my sister, my spouse; a spring shut up, a fountain sealed," also Isaiah, 29 11—"And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed"

GEORGE GORDON BYRON
(1788-1824) p. 484

EDITIONS

- Poetical Works* (Oxford University Press, 1890).
- Poetical Works*, ed, with a Memoir, by E H Coleridge (London, Murray, 1905, New York, Scribner)
- Works* Poetry, 7 vols, ed by E H Coleridge, Letters and Journals, 6 vols, ed by R E Prothero (London, Murray, 1898-1904, New York, Scribner)
- Complete Poetical Works*, ed, with a Biographical Sketch, by P E More (Cambridge ed, Boston, Houghton, 1906)
- Letters, 1804-1813*, ed by W E Henley (Vol 1 of "Works", no more published London, Macmillan, 1897)
- Letters and Journals*, selections, ed with an Introduction, by Mathilde Blind (Camelot ed London, Scott, 1886)

BIOGRAPHY

- Ackermann, R Lord Byron, sein Leben, seine Werke, sein Einfluss auf die deutsche Literatur (Heidelberg, 1901)
- Boynton, P. H. "The London of Lamb and Byron," London in English Literature (Univ. of Chicago Press, 1913)
- Castelar, E Vida de Lord Byron (Havana, 1873). English Translation by Mrs A. Arnold (London, 1875, New York, Harper, 1876)
- Dallas, A R C Recollections of the Life of Lord Byron, from the Year 1806 to the End of 1814 (London, C Knight, 1824)
- Else, K Lord Byron (Berlin, 1870), English Translation (London, Murray, 1872).
- Galt, J The Life of Lord Byron (London, Colburn, 1830, Sisley, 1908, New York, Cassell, 1911).

- Gamba, P. A Narrative of Lord Byron's Last Journey to Greece (London, Murray, 1825)
- Graham, W. Last Links with Byron, Shelley, and Keats (London, Smithers, 1899)
- Gribble, F. H. The Love Affairs of Lord Byron (New York, Scribner, 1910)
- Guiccioli, Teresa. Lord Byron jugé par les témoins de sa vie (Paris, 1868), English Translation by H. E. H. Jerminham, My Recollections of Byron and those of Eye-Witnesses of his Life (London, 1869)
- Hayman, H. Harper's New Monthly Magazine, Feb., 1894 (88 365).
- Hobhouse, J. C. (Lord Broughton) Recollections of a Long Life, 6 vols (London, Murray, 1909-11)
- Hunt, Leigh. Lord Byron and some of his Contemporaries, with Recollections of the author's Life, and of his Visit to Italy, 3 vols (Paris, 1828, London, Colburn)
- Jeaffreson, J. C. The Real Lord Byron, 2 vols. (London, Hurst, 1883)
- Koeppel, E. Lord Byron (Berlin, 1903)
- Mayne, Ethel C. Byron, 2 vols (New York, Scribner, 1913)
- Medwin, T. Conversations of Lord Byron (London, Colburn, 1824)
- Mondot, A. Histoire de la vie et des écrits de Lord Byron (Paris, Durand, 1860)
- Moore, T. The Life of Lord Byron with his Letters and Journals and Illustrative Notes (London, Murray, 1830)
- Nichol, J. Byron (English Men of Letters Series, London, Macmillan, 1880, New York, Harper)
- Noel, R. Life of Byron (Great Writers Series, London, Scott, 1890, New York, Scribner; Simmons)
- Trelawny, F. J. Recollections of the Last Days of Shelley and Byron (London, Moxon, 1878); Records of Shelley, Byron, and the Author, 2 vols (London, Pickering, 1878, Frowde, 1906, New York, Dutton, 1905, Oxford Univ. Press, 1906).
- Brandes, G. Shelley and Lord Byron (Leipzig, Barsdorf, 1893)
- Brougham, H. "Hours of Idleness," The Edinburgh Review, Jan., 1808 (11 285)
- Caine, T. Hall. Cobbets of Criticism (London, Stock, 1862, 1885)
- Chesterton, G. K. "The Optimism of Byron," Twelve Types (London, Humphreys, 1902, 1910), Varied Types (New York, Doubt, 1903, 1909)
- Chew, S. C. The Dramas of Lord Byron (Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1915)
- Collins, J. C. "The Collected Works of Byron," Studies in Poetry and Criticism (London, Bell, 1905, New York, Macmillan, 1906), printed in The Quarterly Review, April, 1905 (202 429).
- Dawson, W. J. The Makers of English Poetry (New York and London, Revell, 1906)
- Dowden, E. "Renewed Revolutionary Advance," The French Revolution and English Literature (New York and London, Scribner, 1897)
- Eckermann, J. P. Conversations with Goethe (Leipzig, 1837), English Translation by S. M. Fuller (Boston, Munroe, 1849), by J. Oxenford 2 vols (London 1850)
- Edgumbe, R. Byron the Last Phase (New York Scribner, 1906)
- Edinburgh Review*, The See Brougham, Jeffrey and Wilson
- Estève, E. Byron et le romantisme français (Paris, Hachette, 1907)
- Fuess, C. M. Lord Byron as a Satirist in Verse (Columbia University Press, 1912)
- Hancock, A. E. The French Revolution and the English Poets (New York, Holt, 1899)
- Henley, W. E. Views and Reviews (London Nutt, 1890, New York, Scribner)
- Hutton, R. H. Literary Essays (London, Macmillan, 1871, 1908)
- Jack, A. A. "Byron (Oratorical Poetry)," Poetry and Prose (London, Constable, 1911)
- Jeffrey, F. Criticisms in The Edinburgh Review "Beppo," Feb., 1811 (29 302), "Cain," Feb., 1822 (36 413), "Childe Harold's Pilgrimage," Cantos I and II, Feb., 1812 (19 406), Canto III, Dec., 1816 (27 277), "Heaven and Earth," Feb., 1823 (38 27), "Manfred," Aug., 1817 (28 418), "Marina Fahlora," July, 1821 (35 271), "Sardanapalus," Feb., 1822 (36 413), "The Bride of Abydos," April, 1814 (23 198), "The Corsair," April, 1814 (23 198), "The Giaour," July, 1813 (21 299), "The Prisoner of Chillon and Other Poems," Dec., 1816 (27 277), "The Prophecy of Dante," July, 1821 (35 271), "The Two Foscari," Feb., 1822 (36 413)
- Lang, A. Letters to Dead Authors (London and New York, Longmans, 1886, 1892, Scribner, 1893)
- Leonard, W. Byron and Byronism in America (New York, Lemcke, 1907)
- Macauley, T. B. "Moore's Life of Byron," The Edinburgh Review, June, 1830 (53 544), Critical and Historical Essays, 2 vols (London and New York, Longmans, 1898).

CRITICISM

- Arnold, M. Essays in Criticism, Second Series (London, Macmillan, 1888)
- Austin, A. "Wordsworth and Byron," The Bridling of Pegasus (London and New York, Macmillan, 1910)
- Blackwood's Magazine* "Lord Byron," Feb., 1825 (17 181); "Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, Canto IV," May, 1818 (3 216), "Don Juan," Aug., 1819 (5 512), July, 1823 (14 88), "Heaven and Earth," Jan., 1823 (13 72), "Manfred," June, 1817 (1 280), "Mazeppa," July, 1819 (5 429), "The Doge of Venice," April, 1821 (9 93), "The Lament of Tasso," Nov., 1817 (2 142; "Werner," Dec., 1822 (12 710)
- Brandes, G. "Byron, The Passionate Personality," Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature, 4 vols (London, Heinemann, 1901-05, New York, Macmillan, 1906)

Miller, Barnette Leigh Hunt's Relations with Byron, Shelley, and Keats (Columbia Univ Press, 1910)

More, P E "The Wholesome Revival of Byron," The Atlantic Monthly, Dec, 1898 (82 801)

More, P E "A Note on Byron's Don Juan," Shelburne Essays, Third Series (New York, and London, Putnam, 1906)

Morley, J Critical Miscellanies, First Series (London, Macmillan, 1871)

Payne, W M The Greater English Poets of the Nineteenth Century (New York, Holt, 1907, 1909)

Pyre, J F A "Byron in our Day," The Atlantic Monthly, April, 1907 (99 542)

Quarterly Review, The "Cain," July, 1822 (27 476), "Childe Harold's Pilgrimage," (Cantos I and II, March, 1812 (7 180), Canto III, Oct, 1816 (16 172), Canto IV, April, 1818 (19 215), "Lara," July, 1814 (11 428), "Marino Faliero," July, 1822 (27 476), "Fardanapalus," July, 1822 (27 476), "The Bride of Abydos," Jan, 1814 (10 331), "The Corsair," July, 1814 (11 428), "The Giaour," Jan, 1814 (10 331), "The Prisoner of Chillon," Oct, 1816 (16 172), "The Two Foscari," July, 1822 (27 476)

Reid, W American and English Studies, 2 vols (New York, Scribner, 1913)

Sainte-Beuve, C A Chateaubriand et son Groupe littéraire, Vol I, ch 15 (Paris, Garnier, 1848)

Schmidt, G B O Romances and Byron (1890)

Schmidt, J Portraits aus dem neunzehnten Jahrhundert Lord Byron (Berlin, Hertz, 1878)

Sichel, W "Byron as War Poet" The Fortnightly Review, Jan, 1916 (105 127)

Swinnburne, A C Essays and Studies (London, Chatto, 1875)

Swinnburne, A C "Wordsworth and Byron," Miscellanies (London, Chatto, 1886, 1911, New York, Scribner).

Symonds, J A In Ward's The English Poets, Vol 4 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1911)

Symonds, A The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909, New York, Dutton)

Trent, W P "The Byron Revival," The Authority of Criticism (New York, Scribner, 1899)

Watts-Dunton, T In Chamber's Cyclopedia of English Literature, Vol 3 (Philadelphia Lip-pincott 1904)

Woodberry, G E "Byron's Centenary," Studies in Letters and Life (Boston, Houghton, 1890), Makers of Literature (London and New York, Macmillan, 1901)

Woodberry, G E The Inspiration of Poetry (New York, Macmillan, 1910)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Anderson, J P In Noel's Life of Byron (1890)
Coleridge, E H In Words of Lord Byron, Poetry, Vol 7 (1898-1904)

CRITICAL NOTES

"The great thing in Byron is genius, that quality so perilous to define, so evanescent in its aroma, so impossible to mistake. If ever a man breathed whom we recognize (athwart much poor and useless work, when strictly tested) as emphatically the genius, that man was Byron, and, if ever genius made poetry its mouthpiece, covering with its transcendent utterances a multitude of sins whether against art or against the full stature of perfect manhood, Byron's is that poetry"—W M. Rossetti, in Literary of Famous Poets (1878)

"Few poets excel him in the instantaneous sympathy he creates, even among minds having no mental affinity with his own. He is eminently the poet of passion. In almost all the changes of his mood, the same energy of feeling glows in his verse. The thought or emotion uppermost in his mind at any one time, whether it be bad or good, seems to sway, for the moment, all the faculties of his nature. He has a passionate love for evil, a passionate love for nature, for goodness, for beauty, and, we may add, a passionate love for himself. When he sits in the place of the scoffer, his words betray the same inspiration from impulse,—the same passion, though condensed into bitterness and mockery"—E P Whipple, in Essays and Reviews, 1845)

See Keats's To Byron (p 752), also Jeffrey's criticism on Byron (pp 904 ff)

Byron is caricatured in Mr Cypress in Thomas Love Peacock's Nightmare Abbey

444.

LACHIN Y GAIR

One of the poems in Hours of Idleness "Lachin y Gair, or, as it is pronounced in the Erse, Lach na Garr, towers proudly pre-eminent in the Northern Highlands. One of our modern tourists mentions it as the highest mountain, perhaps, in Great Britain. Be that as it may, it is certainly one of the most sublime and picturesque amongst our 'Caledonian Alps'. Its appearance is of a dusky hue, but the summit is the seat of eternal snows. Near Lachin y Gair I spent some of the early part of my life, the recollection of which has given birth to the following stanzas"—Byron's Preface

17-18; 25-26. The two quotations in this poem have not been identified. In phrasing they bear striking similarity to expressions in Macpherson's Ossian, of which Byron was a great admirer. Note the following, which occur frequently in Ossian "ghosts of the dead," "night came rolling down" "sweet as breathing gale" Numerous rhythmic sentences like the following also are found "Her voice was like the harp, when the distant sound comes, in the evening, on the soft rustling breeze of the vale"—(The War of Independence)

445. ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS

A hostile criticism of Byron's Hours of Idleness in The Edinburgh Review, Jan, 1808, inspired Byron to write this satire, which was first published anonymously. The following selection from the review of Hours of Idleness shows the tenor of that criticism

"The poetry of this young lord belongs to the class which neither gods nor men are said to permit. Indeed we do not recollect to have seen a quantity of verse with so few deviations in either direction from that exact standard. His effusions are spread over a dead flat, and can no more get above or below the level than if they were so much stagnant water . . . We must beg leave seriously to assure him that the mere rhyming of the final syllable, even when accompanied by the presence of a certain number of feet,—nay, although (which does not always happen) those feet should scan regularly, and have been all counted accurately upon the fingers,—is not the whole art of poetry. We could entreat him to believe that a certain portion of liveliness, somewhat of fancy, is necessary to constitute a poem, and that a poem in the present day, to be read, must contain at least one thought either in a little degree different from the ideas of former writers or differently expressed . . . But whatever judgment may be passed on the poems of this noble minor, it seems we must take them as we find them, and be content, for they are the last we shall ever have from him. He is at best, he says, but an intruder into the groves of Parnassus; he never lived in a garret, like thoroughbred poets, and 'though he once roved a careless mountaineer in the Highlands of Scotland,' he has not of late enjoyed this advantage. Moreover, he expects no profit from his publication, and whether it succeeds or not, 'it is highly improbable, from his situation and pursuits hereafter,' that he should again condescend to be an author. Therefore let us take what we get and be thankful. What right have we poor devils to be nice? We are well off to have got so much from a man of this lord's station, who does not live in a garret, but 'has the away' of Newstead Abbey. Again we say, let us be thankful, and, with honest Sancho, bid God bless the giver, nor look the gift-horse in the mouth.—The Edinburgh Review, January, 1808 (The article, formerly attributed to Francis Jeffrey, was written by Henry Brougham, one of the founders of The Edinburgh Review, and Lord Chancellor of England, 1830-34.)

Byron's original purpose was to satirize only contemporary poetry, of which he held a very low opinion. After reading Lalla Rookh, by Thomas Moore, Byron wrote Murray, Sept. 15, 1817, as follows: "With regard to poetry in general, I am convinced, the more I think of it, that he and all of us—Scott, Southey, Wordsworth, Moore, Campbell, I—are all in the wrong, one as much as another; that we are upon a wrong revolutionary poetical system, or systems, not worth a damn in itself, and from which none but Rogers and Crabbe are free. . . I am the more confirmed in this by having lately gone over some of our classics, particularly Pope, whom I tried in this way—I took Moore's poems and my own and some others, and went over them side by side with Pope's, and I was really astonished (I ought not to have been so) and mortified at the ineffable distance in point of sense, harmony, effect, and even imagination, passion, and invention, between the little Queen Anne's man and us of the Lower Empire." Byron shortly came to disapprove of his English Bards and Scotch Reviewers. In 1816, he wrote in the margin, "The greater part of this satire I most sincerely wish had never been written—not only on account of the injustice of much of the critical and some of the personal part of it, but the tone and temper are such as I cannot approve."

486. 82. "This was not just. Neither the heart nor the head of these gentlemen are at all what they are here represented. At the time this was written, I was personally unacquainted with either"—Byron, in ed. of 1816.

488. 222. Southey's Madoc is in two parts, the first is "Madoc in Wales," the second is "Madoc in Astlan" (Mexico, from a tribe of Indians living there).

489. 235ff. In the annotated copy of the fourth edition Byron has written "Unjust" opposite the criticism on Wordsworth and Coleridge, lines 235-48 and 255-58.

490. 331. In 1807, Bowles issued an edition of Pope's Works in which he declared that Pope was only a second-class poet. A heated controversy followed, in which Byron and Bowles were the chief opponents. For a summary of the dispute see Byron's Letters and Journals (ed. by R. E. Prothero), Vol. 5, p. 522, also Saintsbury's A History of Criticism, 3, 279-82.

491. 391. Byron first wrote Helicon instead of Hippocrene. He made the correction in the edition of 1816.

406. "Mr. Cottle, Amos, Joseph, I don't know which, but one or both, once sellers of books they did not write, and now writers of books they do not sell, have published a pair of epics—Alfred (poor Alfred! I've been at him too!)—Alfred and The Fall of Cambria"—Byron, in ed. of 1816.

492. 432-53. "Too ferocious—this is mere insanity"—Byron, in ed. of 1816. Byron thought that Jeffrey wrote the review of Hours of Idleness. When Jeffrey praised Byron's later poems, Byron wrote to Moore (April 9, 1814): "As for Jeffrey, it is a very handsome thing of him to speak well of an old antagonist, and what a mean mind dared not do," and in 1822 he wrote in Don Juan (10, 16)

And all our little fends, at least all mine,
Dear Jeffrey, once my most redoubted foe
(As far as rhyme and criticism combine
To make such puppets of us things below),
Are over—here's a health to "Auld lang Syne!"

I do not know you, and may never know
Your face—but you have acted on the whole
Most nobly, and I own it from my soul.

484. "All this is bad, because personal."—Byron, in ed. of 1816.

493. 539. In the portions omitted, Byron pays his respects to a number of minor writers including the dramatists of the period.

494. 857. "I consider Crabbe and Coleridge as the first of these times, in point of power and genius"—Byron, in ed. of 1816.

496. THE BRIDE OF ABYDOS

This was first entitled Zwizka. Byron says that he wrote it in four nights "Whether it succeeds or not is no fault of the public, against whom I have no complaint. But I am much more indebted to the tale than I can ever be to the most partial reader, as it wrung my thoughts from reality to imagination—from selfish regrets to vivid recollections—and recalled me to a country replete with the brightest and darkest, but always most lively colors of my memory"—Byron, in Journal, Dec 5, 1813.

Byron had fallen in love with Lady Frances, wife of his friend James Wedderburn Webster, whom he had been visiting at Ashton Hall, Rotherham. From Byron's letters it is to be inferred that he sought safety in flight. The poem was written to allay the distress of the love affair. Abydos is a town in Asia Minor on the Hellespont, the scene of the romance of Hero and Leander.

"The undoubted fact that The Bride of Abydos, as well as The Giaour, embodies recollections of actual scenes and incidents which had burnt themselves into the memory of an eye witness, accounts not only for the fervent heat at which these Turkish tales were written, but for the extraordinary glamor which they threw over contemporary readers, to whom the local coloring was new and attractive, and who were not out of conceit with 'good Monsieur Melancholy'"—E. H. Coleridge, in Introduction to The Bride of Abydos.

1. This line was probably suggested by Goethe's "Kennst du das Land wo die Citronen blühen?"

502. 70. The Koorbec text, or verse of the throne (Sura II, "Chapter of the Heifer," 257), is as follows: "God, there is no God but He, the living, the self-subsistent. Slumber takes Him not, nor sleep. His is what is in the heavens and what is in the earth. Who is it that intercedes with Him save by His permission? He knows what is before them and what behind them, and they comprehend not aught of His knowledge but of what He pleases. His throne extends over the heavens and the earth, and it tires Him not to guard them both, for He is high and grand"—The Qur'an, translated by E. H. Palmer, Sacred Books of the East (1880), 6, 40.

503. 388. Ocean-Patriarch—Noah.

510. ODE TO NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE

"I don't know—but I think I, even I (an insect compared with this creature), have set my life on casts not a millionth part of this man's. But, after all, a crown may not be worth dying for. Yet, to outlive *Lodè*¹ for this!" Oh that Juvenal or Johnson could rise from the dead! 'Expende—quot libras in duce summo invenies?'² I knew they were light in the balance of mortality, but I thought their living dust weighed more carats. Alas! this imperial diamond hath a flaw in it, and is now hardly fit to stick in a glazier's pencil,—the pen of the historian won't rate it worth a ducat Pasha! 'some thing too much of this.' But I won't give him up even now, though all his admirers have, 'like the thanes, fallen from him'."³—Byron, in Journal, April 9, 1814.

511. SHE WALKS IN BEAUTY

The following six poems were included in Byron's Hebrew Melodies. The first two are not Hebrew melodies, but genuine love-songs.

512. MY SOUL IS DARK

See Macpherson's Oona-Morai (p. 92a, 32 33).

HEROD'S LAMENT FOR MARIAMNE

Herod, surnamed "The Great," was King of Judea (40-4, B. C.) In a fit of jealousy he executed his beautiful wife Mariamne. The story is the theme of Stephen Phillips's Herod, A Tragedy (1900).

513. THE DESTRUCTION OF SENNACHERIB

Sennacherib was a king of Assyria who invaded Palestine in the 7th century B. C. See 2 Kings, 18 13.

515. THE PRISONER OF CHILLON

This poem was written in two days at a small inn, where Byron and Shelley were detained by bad weather during a tour of Lake Geneva. François Bonivard (1493-c1570) was prior of a small monastery outside Geneva. Being a lover of independence, he joined the patriots who were trying to make Geneva a republic, free from the control of Charles III, Duke of Savoy. Charles, therefore, removed Bonivard from office and imprisoned him in the Castle of Chillon, from 1530 to 1536. When Chillon was captured by the Bernese in 1536, he was released, made a member of the Council of Geneva, and awarded a house and a pension of 200 crowns a year.

¹ Napoleon won a victory over the Austrians at Lodi, Italy, on May 10, 1796. The victory gained him the epithet, "Little Corporal."

² Weigh [the ashes of Hannibal]—how many pounds do you find in that great leader?—Juvenal, Satires, 10, 147.

³ Hamlet, III, 2, 79.

⁴ Macbeth, V, 3, 49.

516. 107-111. In respect of accuracy and in-accuracy of detail, Ruskin states that these lines fulfill the conditions of poetry in contradistinction to history. "Instead of finding, as we expected, the poetry distinguished from the history by the omission of details, we find it consisting entirely in the addition of details, and instead of its being characterised by regard only of the invariable, we find its whole power to consist in the clear expression of what is singular and particular!"—Ruskin, Modern Painters, Part IV, ch 1, sec. 9.

519. EPISTLE TO AUGUSTA

The Quarterly Review for Jan., 1831 (44 202) says that there is nothing in the whole body of Byron's poetry "more mournfully and desolately beautiful" than these stanzas.

521. DARKNESS

This poem should be compared with Campbell's The Last Man (p 423). See note on The Last Man, p 1229.

522. PROMETHEUS

Byron was always a lover and a worshipper of Prometheus and frequently alludes to him in his poems "The conception of an immortal sufferer at once beneficent and defiant, appealed alike to his passions and his convictions and awoke a peculiar enthusiasm"—E. H. Coleridge, Note to Prometheus in his edition of Byron's Poetical Works

SONNET TO LAKE LEMAN

Lake Lemán is Lake Geneva, situated between Switzerland and France.

523. CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE

"The following poem was written, for the most part, amidst the scenes which it attempts to describe. It was begun in Albania; and the parts relative to Spain and Portugal were composed from the author's observations in those countries. Thus much it may be necessary to state for the correctness of the descriptions. The scenes attempted to be sketched are in Spain, Portugal, Epirus, Acarnania, and Greece. There, for the present, the poem stops, its reception will determine whether the author may venture to conduct his readers to the capital of the East, through Ionia and Phrygia these two cantos are merely experimental.

"A fictitious character is introduced for the sake of giving some connection to the piece, which, however, makes no pretension to regularity. It has been suggested to me by friends, on whose opinions I set a high value, that in this fictitious character, Childe Harold, I may incur the suspicion of having intended some real personage this I beg leave, once for all, to disclaim—Harold is the child of imagination, for the purpose I have stated. In some very trivial particulars, and those merely local, there might be grounds for such a notion; but in the main points, I should hope, none whatever" . . . —From Preface to the First and Second Cantos

"What helps it now, that Byron bore,
With haughty scorn which mock'd the smart,
Through Europe to the Ætolian shore
The pageant of his bleeding heart?
That thousands counted every groan,
And Europe made his woe her own?"
—Arnold, in Stanzas from the Grande Chartreuse

Childe is used by Byron as in the old ballads and romances, signifying a youth of noble birth, usually one awaiting knighthood

528. 32, 9. "Have you never seen a stick broken in the middle, and yet cohering by the rind? The fibres, half of them actually broken and the rest sprained, and, though tough, unsustaining? Oh, many, many are the broken-hearted for those who know what the moral and practical heart of the man is."—Coleridge, Anima Poeta (ed E H Coleridge, 1805), 303

537. 90. See Shelley's Idonais, 54 (p 737) Shelley's idealistic pantheism evidently influenced Byron here, the two were frequently together during the week when this Canto was written

91. "It is to be recollected that the most beautiful and impressive doctrines of the divine Founder of Christianity were delivered, not in the Temple, but on the Mount. Were the early and rapid progress of what is called Methodism to be attributed to any cause beyond the enthusiasm excited by its vehement faith and doctrines (the truth or error of which I presume neither to canvass nor to question), I should venture to ascribe it to the practice of preaching in the fields, and the unstudied and extemporaneous effusions of its teachers. The Mussulmans, whose erroneous devotion (at least in the lower orders) is most sincere, and therefore impressive are accustomed to repeat their prescribed orisons and prayers, wherever they may be, at the stated hours—of course, frequently in the open air, kneeling upon a light mat (which they carry for the purpose of a bed or cushion as required), the ceremony lasts some minutes, during which they are totally absorbed, and only living in their supplication nothing can disturb them. On me the simple and entire sincerity of these men, and the spirit which appeared to be within and upon them, made a far greater impression than any general rite which was ever performed in places of worship"—Byron

92. "The thunder-storm to which these lines refer occurred on the 13th of June, 1816, at midnight. I have seen, among the Acroceraunian mountains of Chilmari, several more terrible, but none more beautiful"—Byron.

94. 1-9. The similarity between these lines and Coleridge's probably is due to the fact that Byron had seen Christabel in manuscript.

540. 111. Cf this stanza with Burns's Epistle to the Rev John M'Math, 43-45 (p 180)

541. 117, 1. "His allusions to me in Ohilde Harold are cruel and cold, but with such a semblance as to make me appear so, and to attract sympathy to himself. It is said in this poem that hatred of him will be taught as a lesson to his child. I might appeal to all who have ever heard me speak of him, and still more to my own heart, to witness that there has been no moment when I have remembered injury otherwise than affectionately and sorrowfully. It is not my duty to give way to hopeless and wholly unrequited affection, but so long as I live my chief struggle will be probably not to remember him too kindly"—Lady Byron, in Letter to Lady Anne Lindsay, quoted by E. H. Coleridge in his edition of Byron's Poetical Works

1, 1-2. "The Bridge of Sighs (i. e., Ponte dei Sospiri) is that which divides, or rather joins the palace of the Doge to the prison of the state. It has two passages: the criminal went by the one to judgment, and returned by the other to death, being strangled in a chamber adjoining, where there was a mechanical process for the purpose." Byron, in Letter to Murray (July 1, 1817), in which was enclosed the first stanza of Canto III

543. 25. In the stanzas omitted Byron reflects upon the possibility of his name's being barred by Oblivion

"from out the temple where the dead
Are honor'd by the nations."

543. 25. In the stanzas omitted Byron reflects upon the influence of suffering upon the human heart and mind

544. 79. In the stanzas omitted Byron writes of various Italian cities, temples, castles, etc., and of the famous men associated with each—Petrarch, Tasso, Galileo, Michelangelo, Dante, Roccaccio, and others

80. The Goths sacked Rome in 410 and later. The Christians destroyed temples to satisfy religious frenzy and to secure building material

95. In the stanzas omitted Byron writes of the great conquerors of Rome—Sylla, Pompey, and Cæsar—and of the nothingness of man

97, 7. Some editors take the "base pageant" to be the empire and court of Napoleon.

545. 94. This stanza furnishes an example of Byron's vigorous optimism and keen political foresight. His passion for freedom led him to believe and to proclaim that democracy was the most powerful force of the time and that it finally would prevail

128. In the stanzas omitted Byron writes of several tombs, columns and other objects and places of note of the persons concerned with each, and of the influence of love on human life

130, 2. When visited by Byron, and for long afterwards, the ruins of the Coliseum were covered with shrubs and flowers

132. The appeal to Nemesis in this stanza should be compared with Byron's Far, Far, Far (p 513), Stanza to Augusta (p 515), Epistle to Augusta (p 519), Ohilde Harold's Pilgrimage, 3, 69-75 and 111-18 (pp 534-41), and Manfred, 1, 1, 192-201 (p 552)

547, 175. In the stanzas omitted Byron writes of the Pantheon, the dungeon of the Church of St Nicholas, the Mole of Hadrian, the Church of St Peter's, the art treasures in the Vatican, the death of Princess Charlotte, and the village of Nemi

548. 180, 9. Byron made the same error in The Idiot, 94. "Where now my head must lay." This error was more common in Byron's day than it is now.

549.

MANFRED

John Wilson suggested in an article in Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine, July, 1817, that Manfred was borrowed from Marlowe's Dr Faustus. From this opinion Jeffrey dissented in his review of Manfred published in The Edinburgh Review, Aug., 1817 (Vol 28, 430-31). He says: "It is suggested in an ingenuous paper in a late number of The Edinburgh Magazine that the general conception of this piece and much of what is excellent in the manner of its execution have been borrowed from The Tragical History of Dr Faustus of Marlow, and a variety of passages are quoted which the author considers as similar and, in many respects, superior to others in the poem before us. We cannot agree in the general terms of this conclusion, but there is, no doubt, a certain resemblance, both in some of the topics that are suggested and in the cast of the diction in which they are expressed. But these and many other smooth and fanciful verses in this curious old drama prove nothing, we think, against the originality of Manfred, for there is nothing to be found there of the pride, the abstraction, and the heart-rooted misery in which that originality consists. Faustus is a vulgar sorcerer, tempted to sell his soul to the devil for the ordinary price of sensual pleasure and earthly power and glory—and who shrinks and shudders in agony when the forfeit comes to be exacted. The style, too, of Marlow, though elegant and scholar like, is weak and childish compared with the depth and force of much of what we have quoted from Lord Byron, and the disgusting buffoonery and low farce of which his piece is principally made up place it much more in contrast, than in any terms of comparison, with that of his noble successor. In the tone and pitch of the composition, as well as in the character of the diction in the more solemn parts, the piece before us reminds us much more of the Prometheus of Æschylus than of any more modern performance. The tremendous solitude of the principal person—the supernatural beings with whom alone he holds communion—the guilt—the firmness—the misery—are all points of resemblance to which the grandeur of the poetic imagery only gives a more striking effect. The chief differences are that the subject of the Greek poet was sanctified and exalted by the established belief of his country, and that his terrors are nowhere tempered with the sweetness which breathes from so many passages of his English rival." Murray sent this review to Byron, who replied (Oct 12, 1817) as follows.

"Many thanks for The Edinburgh Review, which is very kind about Manfred, and defends its originality, which I did not know that anybody had attacked. I never read, and do not know that I ever saw, the Faustus of Marlow, and had, and have, no dramatic works by me in English except the recent things you sent me, but I heard Mr Lewis translate verbally 'some scenes of Goethe's Faust (which were some good, and some bad) last summer,—which is all I know of the history of that magical personage, and as to the germs of Manfred, they may be found in the Journal which I sent to Mrs Leigh.

Shortly before I left Switzerland I have the whole scene of Manfred before me, as if it was but yesterday, and could point it out, spot by spot, torrent and all. Of the Prometheus of Æschylus I was passionately fond as a boy (it was one of the Greek plays we read thrice a year at Harrow) . . .

As to the Faustus of Marlow, I never read, never saw, nor heard of it—at least, thought of it, except that I think Mr. Gifford mentioned in a note of his which you sent me, something about the catastrophe, but not as having anything to do with mine, which may or may not resemble it, for anything I know. The Prometheus, if not exactly in my plan, has always been so much in my head that I can easily conceive its influence over all or anything that I have written,—but I deny Marlow and his progeny, and beg that you will do the same."

In June, 1820, Goethe published his review of Manfred. "Byron's tragedy, Manfred, was to me a wonderful phenomenon, and one that closely touched me. This singular intellectual poet has taken my Faustus to himself, and extracted from it the strangest nourishment for his hypochondriac humor. He has made use of the impelling principles in his own way, for his own purposes, so that no one of them remains the same, and it is particularly on this account that I cannot enough admire his genius. The whole is in this way so completely formed anew that it would be an interesting task for the critic to point out, not only the alterations he has made, but their degree of resemblance with, or dissimilarity to, the original; in the course of which I cannot deny that the gloomy heat of an unbounded and exuberant despair becomes at last oppressive to us. Yet is the dissatisfaction we feel always connected with esteem and admiration."—From Hoppner's Translation (Moore's Life of Byron, 448). Goethe's review was first published in Kunst und Alterthum, 2, 2, 191. See Goethe's Sämmtliche Werke (Stuttgart, 1874), 13, 640-42.

On June 7, 1820, Byron sent Goethe's comment to Murray, with the following letter: "Enclosed is something which will interest you, to-wit, the opinion of the Greatest man of Germany—perhaps of Europe—upon one of the great men of your advertisements, (all 'famous hands,' as Jacob Tonson used to say of his ragamuffins),—in short, a critique of Goethe's upon Manfred. There is the original, Mr. Hoppner's translation, and an Italian one. Keep them all in your archives,—for the opinions of such a man as Goethe, whether favorable or not, are always interesting, and this is, moreover favorable. His Faust I never read, for I don't know German, but Matthew Monk Lewis, in 1816 at Coligny, translated most of it to me viva voce, and I was naturally much struck with it, but it was the Staubach and the Jungfrau, and something else, much more than Faustus that made me write Manfred. The first scene however, and that of Faustus are very similar."

568. SO WE'LL GO NO MORE A ROVING

This poem was sent in a letter to Thomas Moore, dated Feb 28, 1817, following this statement "At present, I am on the invalid regimen myself. The Carnival—that is, the latter part of it, and sitting up late o' nights, had knocked me up a little. But it is over,—and it is now Lent, with all its abstinence and sacred music. The mummings closed with a masked ball at the Fenice, where I went, as also to most of the ridottos, etc., etc., and, though I did not dispart much upon the whole, yet I find 'the sword wearing out the scabbard,' though I have but just turned the corner of twenty-nine."

The Fenice is a theatre in Venice. A ridotto is a public entertainment consisting of music and dancing, often in masquerade. "The sword wearing out the scabbard," is a French saying.

MY BOAT IS ON THE SHORE

This poem is sometimes entitled To Thomas Moore. It was incorporated in a letter to Moore, dated July 10, 1817. The first stanza was written in April, 1816.

569. STRAHAN, TONSON, LINTOT OF THE TIMES

This poem is sometimes entitled To Mr Murray. William Strahan (1715-85), Jacob Tonson (c1650-1786), and Barnaby Lintot (1675-1786) were prominent publishers of their times.

11. Murray bought an interest in Blackwood's Edinburgh Monthly Magazine in Aug., 1818, and held it until Blackwood purchased the magazine in Dec., 1819.

569.

MAZEPPA

This poem is based on a passage in Voltaire's Histoire de Charles XII, which Byron printed as the "Advertisement" to his poem.

Ivan Stepanovitch Mazeppa (1644-1710) was a Cossack chief, a native of Poland. He made love to the wife (Theresa, line 202) of Lord Falbowski (the Palatine, line 155), and being discovered in the intrigue was bound to a horse which was furiously terrorized and turned loose. Mazeppa later became a chief and fought against Russia on the side of Charles XII of Sweden.

574. 549. Cf. Christabel, 216-17 (p. 345).

577.

DON JUAN

This poem is usually regarded as Byron's masterpiece. Goethe described it as "a work of boundless genius" (Kunst und Alterthum, 1821). After receiving Cantos III, IV, and V, Shelley wrote Byron (Oct. 21, 1821): "This poem carries with it at once the stamp of originality and defiance of imitation. Nothing has ever been written like it in English, nor, if I may venture to prophesy, will there be, unless carrying upon it the mark of a secondary and borrowed light. . . . You are building up a drama such as England has not yet seen, and the task is sufficiently noble and worthy of you." In the introductory note to the poem in the Cambridge edition of Byron, Paul Elmer More says, "In one sense Don Juan is a satire, to many critics the greatest satire ever written, but it is something still more than that. It is the epic of modern life."

The first five cantos of Don Juan were published by Murray (1819-21) without name of author or publisher, but Byron's authorship was readily recognized. The name of the hero was taken from a Spanish traditional story regarding the profligacy of one Don Juan de Tenorio. With the exception of his libertinism, Byron's hero bears no likeness to the legendary character. For the history of the legend, see Ticknor's History of Spanish Literature (Boston, Houghton, 1888), 2,380-81. Don Juan figures also in comedies by the Spaniard Tólez, Molière, T. Corneille, and Goldoni. In an opera by Mozart, and in a ballet by Gluck. The stanza form of Don Juan is the same as Byron had used in Beppo in 1817. In a letter to Murray dated March 25, 1818, he says of Beppo: "Whistlecraft was my immediate model. . . . But . . . Bernal is the father of that kind of writing, which, I think, suits our language, too, very well—we shall see by the experiment. If it does, I shall send you a volume in a year or two." Francesco Bernal was an Italian poet of the early 16th century. "Whistlecraft" was the pseudonym of J. H. Frere in The Monks and the Giants (1817); the first two stanzas of his poem are as follows.

I've often wished that I could write a book
Such as all English people might peruse,
I never should regret the pains it took,
That's just the sort of fame that I should choose.

To sail about the world like Captain Cook,
I'd sling a rot up for my favorite Muse,
And we'd take verses out to Demarara,
To New South Wales, and up to Niagara.

Poets consume excusable commodities,
They raise the nation's spirit when victorious,
They drive an export trade in whims and oddities,

Making our commerce and revenue glorious,
As an industrious and pains-taking body 't is
That poets should be reckoned meritorious
And therefore I submissively propose
To erect one Board for Verse and one for Prose.

Captain James Cook (1728-79) was a noted English navigator. Demarara is a city and county in British Guiana, South America.

Writing to Moore, Sept. 19, 1818, Byron says: "I have finished the first Canto (a long one, of about 180 octaves) of a poem in the style and manner of Beppo, encouraged by the good success of the same. It is called Don Juan, and is meant to be a little quietly facetious upon everything. But I doubt whether it is not—at least, as far as it has yet gone—too free for these very modest days. However, I shall try the experiment, anonymously, and if it don't take, it will be discontinued. It is dedicated to Southey in good, simple, savage verse, upon the Laureate's politics, and the way he got them." After Cantos I and II were published on July 15, 1819, Murray asked Byron for the plan of the poem. Byron wrote him in part as follows (Aug. 12, 1819): "You ask me for the plan of Donny Johnny. I have no plan—I had no plan, but I had or have materials. . . . You are too earnest and eager about a work never intended to be serious. Do you suppose that I have any intention but to giggle and make giggle?—a playful satire, with a little poetry as could be helped was what I meant." After the completion of Canto V, Byron again wrote Murray (Feb. 16, 1821): "The 5th is so far from being the last of D J that it is hardly the beginning. I meant to take him the tour of Europe, with a proper mixture of siege, battle, and adventure, and to make him finish as Anacharsis Clootz in the French Revolution. To how many cantos this may extend, I know not, nor whether (even if I live) I shall complete it, but this was my notion. I meant to have him a Cavalier Serenite in Italy, and a cause for a divorce in England, and a Sentimental 'Werther-faced man' in Germany, so as to show the different ridicules of the society in each of those countries, and to have displayed him gradually gâté and blasé [spoiled and satiated with pleasure] as he grew older, as is natural. But I had not quite fixed whether to make him end in Hell, or in an unhappy marriage, not knowing which would be the severest. The Spanish tradition says Hell—but it is probably only an Allegory of the other state. You are now in possession of my notions on the subject." Clootz was condemned to death by Robespierre and executed in 1794. "Wertherised man" is a phrase from Moore's The Fudge Family in Paris, 5, 95. Werther is the sentimental hero of Goethe's The Sorrows of Werther.

579. 5. In the stanzas omitted, Byron enumerates a number of possible epic heroes, all of whom are rejected as unsuited to his purpose.

583. 36, 6. "I could have forgiven the dagger or the bowl,—anything, but the deliberate desolation piled upon me, when I stood alone upon my hearth, with my household gods shivered around me * * * Do you suppose I have forgotten it? It has comparatively swallowed up in me every other feeling, and I am only a spectator upon earth, till a tenfold opportunity offers."—Byron, in Letter to Moore, Sept. 19, 1818. See Marino Faliero, III 2, 361-64.

584. 44, 7-8. "Fact" There is, or was, such an edition, with all the obnoxious epigrams of Martial placed by themselves at the end — Byron.

585. 240. In the stanzas omitted, Byron tells the story of Don Juan's infatuation for a married woman named Donna Julia, which resulted in his being sent abroad to "mend his former morals."

587. Canto II, 44.—In the stanzas omitted, Juan embarks for Leghorn, Italy, the home of relatives. On the way the vessel is wrecked in a prolonged storm, described in the poem in detail. Byron's indebtedness for the shipwreck to G. Balgell's Shipwrecks and Disasters at Sea (1812) was pointed out in an article in The Monthly Magazine, Aug., 1821. In a letter to Murray, dated Aug. 23, 1821, Byron wrote: "With regard to the charges about the shipwreck, I think that I told you and Mr. Hobhouse, years ago that there was not a single circumstance of it not taken from fact, not, indeed, from any single shipwreck, but all from actual facts of different wrecks. Almost all Don Juan is real life, either my own, or from people I know." J. C. Hobhouse, Lord Broughton (1786-1809), was an English statesman and writer, and a friend of Byron.

589. 103. Of the survivors of the wreck only four are alive as the long boat approaches one of the Cyclades, in the Aegean Sea.

593. 174. The stanzas omitted record Haidée's daily ministrations to Juan, which result in a love-affair.

599. 28, 4. One of Wordsworth's poems is entitled The Waggoner, it was published in 1815.

609. Canto XI.—In the cantos omitted, Juan recovers and is sent as a captive slave to a Turkish market, where he is purchased by the Sultana. He finally escapes, and after numerous adventures at the Court of Russia and elsewhere, he finally arrives in London, where he is well received by persons of high society.

610. 69, 1. Regarding the hostile attack upon Keats, published in The Edinburgh Review, April, 1818, Keats wrote George and Georgiana Keats (Oct. 14 or 15, 1818) as follows: Reynolds has returned from a six weeks' enjoyment in Devonshire—he is well, and persuades me to publish my Pot of Basil as an answer to the attacks made on me in Blackwood's Magazine and The Quarterly Review. There have been two letters in my defence in The Chronicle and one in The Examiner, copied from the Alfred Exeter Paper, and written by Reynolds. I do not know who wrote those in The Chronicle. This is a mere matter of the moment—I think I shall be among the English Poets after my death. Even as a matter of present interest the attempt to crush me in The Quarterly has only brought me more into notice, and it is a common expression among book men 'I wonder The Quarterly should cut its own throat'.

"It does me not the least harm in society to make me appear little and ridiculous. I know when a man is superior to me and give him all due respect—he will be the last to laugh at me and as for the rest I feel that I make an impression upon them which insures me personal respect while I am in sight whatever they may say when my back is turned."

J. H. Reynolds was an intimate friend of Keats. For the letters published in The Chronicle, see Keats's Letter to Hessey (p. 864), and note (p. 1294).

For a full account of the matter of Keats's suffering under these attacks, see Colvin's Life of Keats, ch. 6, and Rossetti's Life of Keats, ch. 5.

612. 86. The stanzas omitted contain reflections on the transitoriness of worldly fame.

613. 100. Byron conducts his hero through five more cantos without bringing him back to Spain, and leaves the story unfinished.

WHEN A MAN HATH NO FREEDOM TO FIGHT FOR AT HOME

This poem was sent in a letter to Moore, dated Nov. 5, 1820, as a memorial chant for one who might be killed fighting for the cause of the Italian Revolution.

FOR ORFORD AND FOR WAIDEGRAVE

This poem is sometimes entitled To Mr Murray. It was sent in a letter to Murray, dated Aug. 23, 1821, refusing an offer of £2000 for Sardanapalus, The Two Foscari, and three cantos of Don Juan. Murray had previously published works of Horace Walpole, Earl of Orford (1717-97) and of James Earl Waldegrave (1685-1741).

THE VISION OF JUDGMENT

This poem was written as a satire upon Robert Southey, the author of A Vision of Judgment (see p. 409), in which George III, who had just died (1820), was completely vindicated. In the Preface to his poem, Southey went out of his way to attack the moral character of Byron. Following is the Preface to Byron's poem.

"It hath been wisely said, that 'One fool makes many,'¹ and it hath been poetically observed—

'That fools rush in where angels fear to tread'
—Pope.²

"If Mr. Southey had not rushed in where he had no business, and where he never was before, and never will be again, the following poem would not have been written. It is not impossible that it may be as good as his own, seeing that it cannot, by any species of stupidity, natural or acquired, be worse. The gross flattery, the dull impudence, the renegade intolerance, and implausible cant, of the poem by the author of Wat Tyler,³ are something so stupendous as to form the sublime of himself—containing the quintessence of his own attributes.

"So much for his poem—a word on his Preface. In this Preface it has pleased the magnanimous Laureate to draw the picture of a supposed 'Ratank School,' the which he doth recommend to the notice of the legislature, thereby adding to his other laurels the ambition of those of an Informer. If there exists anywhere, except in his imagination, such a School, is he not sufficiently armed against it by his own intense vanity? The truth is that there are certain writers, whom Mr. S. imagines, like Mr. R., to have 'talked of him, for they laughed contemptuously.'

"I think I know enough of most of the writers to whom he is supposed to allude, to assert, that they, in their individual capacities, have done more good in the charities of life, to their fellow-creatures, in any one year than Mr. Southey has done harm to himself by his absurdities in his whole life, and this is saving a great deal. But I have a few questions to ask.

"1stly, Is Mr. Southey the author of Wat Tyler?

"2ndly, Was he not refused a remedy at law by the highest judge of his beloved England, because it was a blasphemous and seditious publication?

"3rdly, Was he not entitled by William Smith, in full parliament, 'a rancorous renegade'?"

"4thly, Is he not poet laureate, with his own lines on Martin the regicide staring him in the face?"

"And 5thly, Putting the four preceding items together, with what conscience dare he call the attention of the laws to the publications of others, be they what they may?"

"I say nothing of the cowardice of such a proceeding its meanness speaks for itself, but I wish to touch upon the motif, which is neither more nor less than that Mr. S. has been laughed at a little in some recent publications, as he was of yore in the Anti Jacobin,⁴ by his present patrons. Hence all this 'skimble-scamble stuff' about 'Ratank,' and so forth.

However, it is worthy of him—qualls ab incepto.⁵

"If there is anything obnoxious to the political opinions of a portion of the public in the following poem, they may thank Mr. Southey. He might have written hexameters, as he has written everything else, for aught that the writer cared—had they been upon another subject. But to attempt to canonize a monarch, who, whatever were his household virtues, was neither a successful nor a patriot king,—inasmuch as several years of his reign passed in war with America and Ireland, to say nothing of the aggression upon France,—like all other exaggeration, necessarily begets opposition. In whatever manner he may be spoken of in this new Vision, his public career will not be more favorably transmitted by history. Of his private virtues (although a little expensive to the nation) there can be no doubt.

"With regard to the supernatural personages treated of, I can only say that I know as much about them, and (as an honest man) have a better right to talk of them than Robert Southey. I have also treated them more tolerantly. The way in which that poor insane creature, the Laureate, deals about his judgments in the next world, is like his own judgment in this. If it was not completely ludicrous, it would be something worse. I don't think that there is much more to say at present.

QUEVEDO REDIVIVUS"

617. 34, 1-3. In 1812, John Mason Good had published an edition of The Book of Job translated from the original Hebrew. He included in the notes numerous quotations from the Hebrew and the Arabic versions, and in an Introduction supported the historical character of the Book.

624. 94, 1. "Yesterday, at Holland House, I was introduced to Southey—the best-looking bard I have seen for some time. To have that poet's head and shoulders, I would almost have written his Sapphics. He is certainly a prepossessing person to look on, and a man of talent, and all that, and—there is his eulogy"—Byron, in Letter to Moore, Sept. 27, 1813.

626. ON THIS DAY I COMPLETE MY THIRTY-SIXTH YEAR

"This morning Lord Byron came from his bedroom into the apartment where Colonel Stanhope and some friends were assembled, and said with a smile—"You were complaining, the other day, that I never write any poetry now—this is my birthday, and I have just finished something, which, I think, is better than what I usually write." He then produced these noble and affecting verses, which were afterwards found written in his journals, with only the following introduction: 'Jan 22. on this day I complete my 36th year.'—Gamba, in A Narrative of Lord Byron's Last Journey to Greece (1825).

¹ An old proverb found in many languages.

² An Essay on Criticism, 3, 66.

³ A violent revolutionary epic written by Southey in 1794.

⁴ Farquhar, The Beau's Stratagem, III, 1, 81-84.

⁵ William Smith (1756-1835), an English politician, and member of Parliament, attacked Southey in the House of Commons on March 14, 1817. See Southey's reply To William Smith, Esq., M.P.

⁶ See p. 625a, n. 1.

⁷ A paper originated in 1797 with the purpose of ridiculing the French Revolution and its supporters in England.

¹ Such he has been from the first—Horace, Ars Poetica, 127.

² Quevedo revived. Francis Gómez de Quevedo (1580-1645) was a vigorous Spanish writer of satire and polemical verse. He was called "The Captain of Combat." He was also noted as a duelist.

THOMAS CAMPBELL (1777-1844) p. 417

EDITIONS

- Poetical Works*, ed. by W. M. Rossetti (London, Moxon, 1871).
Poetical Works, ed., with a Sketch of Campbell's Life, by W. Allingham (Aldine ed., London, Bell, 1875).
Complete Poetical Works, ed., with Notes, by J. L. Robertson (Oxford University Press, 1907).
Selected Poems, ed., with a Prefatory Notice, by J. Hogben (Canterbury poets ed., London, Scott, 1885).
Poems, selected by L. Campbell (Golden Treasury Series, London, Macmillan, 1904).

BIOGRAPHY

- Beattie, W. The Life and Letters of Thomas Campbell, 3 vols. (London, Moxon, 1849).
 Hadden, J. C. Thomas Campbell (Famous Scots Series, Edinburgh, Anderson, 1899).

CRITICISM

- Blackwood's Magazine* "Theodoric," Jan., 1825 (17 102).
 Hazlitt, W. The Spirit of the Age (London, 1825), Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-1906, New York, McClure), 4 348.
 Irving, W. Biographies and Miscellaneous Papers (Bohn Library ed., London, Bell, 1867).
 Jeffrey, F. Criticisms in The Edinburgh Review "Gertrude of Wyoming," April, 1809 (14 1), "Theodoric, with Other Poems," Jan., 1825 (41 271).
Quarterly Review, The "Gertrude of Wyoming," May, 1809 (1 241).
 Saintsbury, G. Essays in English Literature, Second Series (London, Dent, 1895, New York, Scribner).
 Symonds, A. The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909, New York, Dutton).
 Tuckerman, H. T. "Thomas Campbell, the Popular Poet," Essays Biographical and Critical (Boston, Phillips, 1857).
 Wilson, J. G. The Poets and Poetry of Scotland, Vol. 2 (Glasgow, Blackie, 1876, New York, Harper).

CRITICAL NOTES

417. THE PLEASURES OF HOPE

This poem should be compared as to subject and title with Akenside's The Pleasures of the Imagination (p. 44), Warton's The Pleasures of Melancholy (p. 75), and Rogers's The Pleasures of Memory (p. 207).

"Much of the success of the poem was no doubt due to the circumstance that it touched with such sympathy on the burning questions of the hour. If, as Stevenson remarks, the poet is to speak efficaciously, he must say what is already in his hearer's mind. This Campbell did, as perhaps no English poet had done before. The French Revolution, the partitution of Poland, the abolition of negro-slavery—these had set the passion for freedom burning in many breasts, and The Pleasures of Hope gave at once vigorous and feeling expression to the doctrine of the universal brotherhood of man. . . . It is not easy at this time of day to approach The Pleasures of Hope without a want of sympathy, if not an absolute prejudice, resulting from a whole century of poetical development."—J. C. Hadden, in Thomas Campbell (1899).

"The very name of this work discovered its adhesion to eighteenth-century tradition. It was a tame, 'correct' essay, in a mode already entirely outworn."—Gosse, in A Short History of Modern English Literature (1897).

419.

YE MARINERS OF ENGLAND

"The Battle of the Baltic and Ye Mariners of England are without rivals in their own class, and Campbell deserves recognition as a true romanticist and revolutionary force in poetry, although fighting for his own hand, and never under the flag of Wordsworth and Coleridge. For the time being, however, Campbell did more than they to break down in popular esteem the didactic convention of the classic school."—Gosse, in A Short History of Modern English Literature (1897).

15. This poem is said to have been written in 1799-1800, on the prospect of a war with Russia (II 5-6), but it must have been revised later, for Nelson fell at Trafalgar in 1805. He was severely wounded at the Battle of Copenhagen, April 2, 1801.

31. Meteor flag—A reference to the color of the British flag and to the old belief that meteors portend calamity.

420.

HOHENLINDEN

At the village of Hohenlinden, Bavaria, the Austrian army, the "Ilun" in this poem, was defeated by the French (the "Frank") in December, 1800. Campbell did not witness the battle, as was erroneously believed, but he was on the continent at the time and witnessed at least one skirmish. Scott was fond of this ballad, but Campbell himself spoke rather contemptuously of its "drum and trumpet lines."

"In the genuine success of Hohenlinden every line is a separate emphasis, but all the emphasis is required by the subject, is in its place. The third and brief repeated monotony of the metre give the very sound of cannonading, each line is like a crackle of musketry. What is obvious in it, even, comes well into a poem which depends on elements so simple for its success; indeed, its existence."—Symonds, in The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (1909).

LOCHIEL'S WARNING

Donald Cameron, a Scottish Highland chieftain known as "Gentle Lochiel," joined the Young Pretender, Charles Edward, in the Jacobite uprising of 1745. He was wounded at Culloden in a battle against the English forces under the Duke of Cumberland, and fled to France, where he died in 1748. The Wizard in this poem forecasts the defeat of Cameron at Culloden.

422. THE BATTLE OF THE BALTIC

"It is an attempt to write an English ballad on the Battle of Copenhagen, as much as possible in that plain, strong style peculiar to our old ballads which tell us the when, where, and how the event happened—without gaud or ornament but what the subject essentially and easily affords"—Campbell, in Letter to Dr Currie, April 24, 1805, quoted in Beattie's Life and Letters of Thomas Campbell.

The Battle of Copenhagen was fought on April 2, 1801. Russia, Prussia, Sweden, and Denmark formed a neutrality league against England in December, 1800. England declared war, and a fleet under Parker and Nelson was dispatched against the Danish fleet at Copenhagen. Parker held eight ships in reserve while Nelson led twelve to the attack. The engagement was so fierce that Parker signaled to "Discontinue the action." In reading the signal Nelson applied his blind eye to the telescope, all the time he kept his own signal flying—"Move in closer." He finally won a decisive victory.

In its first form the poem contained 162 lines. Following are the first four stanzas as originally written.

Of Nelson and the North
Sing the day,
When, their haughty powers to vex,
He engaged the Danish decks,
And with twenty floating wrecks
Crowned the fray 5

All bright, in April's sun,
Shone the day,
When a British fleet came down,
Through the island of the crown 10
And by Copenhagen town
Took their stay

In arms the Danish shore
Proudly shone,
By each gun the lighted brand 15
In a bold determined hand,
And the Prince of all the land
Led them on

For Denmark here had drawn
All her might, 20
From her battle-ships so vast
She had hewn away the mast,
And at anchor to the last
Bade them fight

23. "Hearts of oak."—The phrase is quoted from the old ballad Ye Gentlemen of England.

423. THE LAST MAN

"Did you see The Last Man in my last number? Did it immediately remind you of Lord Byron's poem of Darkness? [See p. 521.] I was a little troubled about this appearance of my having been obliged to him for the idea. The fact is, many years ago I had the idea of this Last Man in my head, and distinctly remember speaking of the subject to Lord B. I recognised when I read his poem Darkness, some traits of the picture which I meant to draw, namely, the ships floating without living hands to guide them—the earth being blank—and one or two more circumstances. On soberly considering the matter, I am entirely disposed to acquit Lord Byron of having intentionally taken the thoughts. It is consistent with my own experience to suppose that an idea, which is actually one of memory, may start up, appearing to be one of the imagination, in a mind that has forgot the source from which it borrowed that idea. I believe this. Nevertheless, to have given the poem to the world with a note, stating this fact, would have had the appearance of picking a quarrel with the noble bard, and this appearance I much dislike, from the kindly feeling I have towards him, in consequence of his always having dealt kindly by me"—Campbell, in a Letter to Mr. Gray, Sept. 5, 1823, quoted in Beattie's Life and Letters of Thomas Campbell. An article in The London Magazine and Review, 1825, suggests as the source of this poem, a former popular novel entitled The Last Man, or Omegarus and Syderia, a Romance in Futurity (2 vols., 1806).

424. THE DEATH-BOAT OF HELIGOLAND

This poem probably refers to the Jacobites, who, under the leadership of Charles Edward Stuart, the Young Pretender, instituted a rebellion in Scotland in 1745. The badge of the Stuarts was the white rose, the standard of Charles Edward was white, blue, and red. The reference in line 36 is probably to make it clear that the faction did not belong to the Irish revolutionists, whose badge was green. Heligoland is an island in the North Sea, it was ceded by Great Britain to Germany in 1890.

THOMAS CHATTERTON
(1752-1770), p. 125

EDITIONS

Poetical Works, 2 vols. (British Poets ed. Boston, Houghton, 1857)

Poetical Works, 2 vols., ed., with an Essay on the Rowley Poems, by W. W. Skeat, and a Memoir by E. Bell (Aldine ed. London, Bell, 1871, 1875, New York, Macmillan).

Complete Poetical Works, 2 vols., ed., with a Biographical Introduction, by H. D. Roberts (Muses' Library ed. London, Routledge, 1906; New York, Dutton).

The Rowley Poems, ed., with an Introduction, by M. E. Hare (Oxford University Press, 1911).

Poems, ed., by J. Richmond (Canterbury Poets ed. London, Scott, 1885).

BIOGRAPHY

- Masson, D. Chatterton (Edinburgh, Constable, 1899, New York, Dodd, 1901).
 Russell, C E Thomas Chatterton, the Marvellous Boy (New York, Moffat, 1908, London, Richards, 1909)
 Wilson, D Thomas Chatterton (London, Macmillan, 1869)

CRITICISM

- Beers, H A History of English Romanticism in the Eighteenth Century (New York, Holt, 1898, 1910)
Blackwood's Magazine April, 1870 (107 453)
 Haslitt, W "On Burns, and the Old English Ballads," Lectures on the English Poets (London, 1818), Collected Works, ed Waller and Glover, London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure, 8 123
 Ingram, J H "Chatterton and his Associates," Harper's New Monthly Magazine, July, 1883 (67 225).
 Ingram, J H The True Chatterton (New York Scribner, 1910)
 Mitford, Mary R Recollections of a Literary Life (London, Bentley, 1855, 1888)
 Richter, Helene Weimer Beiträge zur englische Philologie, 1900
 Scott, W "The Works of Thomas Chatterton" The Edinburgh Review, April, 1804 (4 214)
 Watts Dunton, T in Ward's The English Poets, Vol 3 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1909)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hare, M E In his edition of Chatterton's The Rowley Poems (1911)
 Roberts, H D In his edition of Chatterton's Complete Poetical Works (1906)

CRITICAL NOTES

"I thought of Chatterton, the marvellous Boy.
 The sleepless Soul that perished in his pride"
 —Wordsworth, Resolution and Independence, 43-44 (p 284)

"The purest English, I think—or what ought to be purest—is Chatterton's. The language had existed long enough to be entirely uncorrupted of Chaucer's Gallicisms, and still the old words are used. Chatterton's language is entirely northern. I prefer the native music of it to Milton's, cut by feet."—Keats, in Letter to George and Georgiana Keats, Sept 22, 1819. See also Keats's To Chatterton (p 752)

The following poems of Chatterton belong to what are known as the Rowley Poems. Chatterton invented a vocabulary, based upon the usage of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, and employed it in the composition of a number of poems, which he palmed off as the work of Thomas Rowley, a fictitious priest of fifteenth century Bristol. For an account of the controversy which was waged over these poems, see "History of the Rowley Controversy," in Poetical Works (British Poets ed., 1857). Chatterton's acknowledged poems are all written in the conventional eighteenth century manner.

125.

BRISTOWE TRAGEDIE

This poem is probably based upon the execution of Sir Baldwin Fulford for treason at Bristol (Bristowe), in 1461. During the Wars of the Roses, Fulford opposed the claim of Edward IV to the English throne.

130. THE ACCOUNTS OF W. CANYNGE'S FEAST

This poem is ascribed to William Canynge, whom Chatterton makes a friend and patron of Rowley. William Canynge (c 1400-74) was a rich and influential citizen of Bristol. He was mayor of the city, and rebuilt at his own expense the famous Bristol Church of St Mary. He appears as a defender of Fulford in Bristowe Tragedie.

Some editors print a comma after kerpe and a semi-colon after style, and interpret here style as high style. Chatterton's Glossary defines here only as they.

ÆLLA

"Ælla, a Tragycal Enterlude, or Discoorcyng Tragedie, wrotten by Thomas Rowle, plaied before Maistre Canynge, at the howse Nempte the Bodde Lodge, aloue before the Duke of Norfolk, Johan Howard"—Chatterton's Title Page

132. AN EXCELENTE BALADE OF CHARITE

"Thomas Rowley, the author, was born at Norton Malreward, in Somersetshire, educated at the Convent of St Kenna, at Keynewham, and died at Westbury in Gloucestershire"—Chatterton

134

EPITAPH ON ROBERT CANYNGE

Chatterton submitted this poem on vellum as a fragment of the original manuscript of Rowley.

WILLIAM COBBETT (1763,1835), p. 1002

EDITIONS

- Works of Peter Porcupine*, 12 vols (London, at the Crown and Mitre, 1801)
Selections from Political Works, 6 vols., ed., with a Biographical Preface, by J M and J P Cobbett (London, Cobbett, 1835)
Advice to Young Men (London, 1829, Oxford University Press, 1906)
English Grammar (London, 1817), ed., with a Memoir, by R Waters (1888), ed by H L Stephen (London, Oxford University Press, 1906).
Political Register (1802-35)
Rural Rides, 2 vols (London, Cullley, 1910), 2 vols., ed., with an Introduction, by E Thomas (Everyman's Library ed. New York, Dutton, 1912), selected and ed. by J H Lobban (Cambridge University Press, 1908).

BIOGRAPHY

- Benjamin, L. S. ("L. Melville") Life and Letters of William Cobbett in England and America, 2 vols (London and New York, Lane, 1913).
 Carlyle, E. I. William Cobbett A Study of his Life as Shown in his Writings (London, Constable, 1904)
 Melville, L. See Benjamin, L. S.
 Selby, J. Biographies of John Wilkes and William Cobbett (1870)
 Smith, E. William Cobbett, 2 vols (London, Low, 1876)

CRITICISM

- Benjamin, L. S. ("L. Melville") The Fortnightly Review, April, 1912 (91 675)
Edinburgh Review, The "Cobbett's Political Register", July, 1807 (10 386)
 Gaskell, C. M. The Nineteenth Century, Feb., 1886 (19 238)
 Hazlitt, W. "Character of Cobbett," Table Talk (London, 1821), The Spirit of the Age (London, 1817), Collected Works, ed. Walter and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-04, New York, McClure), 6 50, 4, 334
 Jeffrey, F. "Cobbett's Cottage Economy," The Edinburgh Review, Feb., 1823 (38 105)
 Lytton, H. Chronicles and Characters (London, Chapman and Hall, 1807)
 Minto, W. A Manual of English Prose Literature (Edinburgh Blackwood 1872, 1886, Boston, Ginn, 1901)
 Saintsbury, G. Essays in English Literature, Second Series (London, Dent, 1895, New York, Scribner)
 Saintsbury, G. Macmillan's Magazine, Dec., 1891 (65 95)
 Stephen, Sir J. F. "Cobbett a model John Bull" Horæ Sabbaticæ, Vol. 3 (London, Macmillan, 1891 92)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benjamin, L. S. ("L. Melville") A Bibliography of First Editions of William Cobbett In Benjamin's Life and Letters of William Cobbett (1913)

CRITICAL NOTES

From Ecloga on William Cobbett

O bear him where the rain can fall,
 And where the winds can blow,
 And let the sun weep o'er his pall
 As to the grave ye go!
 And in some little lone churchyard,
 Beside the growing corn,
 Lay gentle Nature's stern prose hard,
 Her mightiest peasant-born
 Yea, let the wild flower wed his grave,
 That bees may murmur near,
 When o'er his last home bend the brave
 And say—"A man lies here!"
 For Britons honor Cobbett's name,
 Though rashly oft he spoke,
 And none can scorn, and few will blame,
 The low-laid heart of oak
 See, o'er his prostrate branches, see!
 Even factious hate consents
 To reverence, in the fallen tree,
 His British lineaments

—Ebeneser Elliott (1835)

"Peasant-bred, with a passion for farming, and a most genuine, if quite unpoetic, love of the open country and all that it could offer eye or ear, he depleted, with Dutch honesty, the rural England that he knew how to see, its fertility and beauty, the misery that had descended on many of its inhabitants, the decent prosperity remaining to others. And he was master of a style in which to express his knowledge. It is not one of those great styles which enbalm their authors' memory, but it was serviceable. He is vigorous, plain, and absolutely unaffected. The aptest words come to him with most perfect ease. His eloquence springs from vivid insight into the heart of his theme, and from a native fervor and energy that do not need art to blow them into flame. Apart from his plebeian virulence he shows a natural good taste in writing. The flaccid elegance and pompous rotund verbiage then in vogue are, by him left on one side. If he cannot frame a period, every sentence has its work to do, and every sentence tells. What mars his farmer's Odyssey, Rural Rides, is, perhaps, the excess of this very disregard for fine writing. They are notes of what he saw, and notes must often be brief, formless, and disconnected. Imagination and the charm it gives are, indeed, absent throughout, but his sympathetic realism has an attraction of its own. He scans the look and manners of the laborers, he calculates whether they have bacon to eat, he descants on the capabilities of the soil, and he is able to impress upon his readers the strength of his interest in these things, and of his enjoyment of field and woods and streams and the palatable salmon that inhabit the latter. He seems to give an unconscious demonstration how excellent a tongue English could be for a man, who saw and felt keenly, to express the facts as he saw them, and the emotions which possessed him.—C. W. Prentiss Orton, in The Cambridge History of English Literature, 11 ch. 2 1007b. 20-30. "To refute lies is not, at present, my business, but it is my business to give you, in as small a compass as possible, one striking proof that they are lies, and thereby to put you well upon your guard for the whole of the rest of your life. The opinion acutely inculcated by these 'historians' is this, that, before the Protestant times came, England was, comparatively, an insignificant country, having few people in it, and those few wretchedly poor and miserable. Now, take the following undeniable facts. All the parishes in England are now (except where they have been united, and two, three, or four, have been made into one) in point of size what they were a thousand years ago. The county of Norfolk is the best cultivated of any one in England. This county has now 731 parishes and the number was formerly greater. Of these parishes 22 have now no churches at all, 74 contain less than 100 souls each and 208 have no parsonage-house. Now, observe, every parish had, in old times, a church and a parsonage house. The county contains 2092 square miles, that is to say, something less than 3 square miles to each parish, and that is 1920 statute acres of land, and the size of each parish is, on an average, that of a piece of ground about one mile and a half each way, so that the churches are, even now, on an average, only about a mile and a half from each other. Now, the questions for you to put to yourself are these: Were churches formerly built and kept up without being wanted, and especially by a poor and miserable people? Did these miserable people build 74 churches out of 731, each of which 74 had not a hundred souls belonging to it? Is it a sign of an augmented population, that 22 churches out of 731 have tumbled down and been effaced? Was it a country thinly inhabited by miserable people that could build and keep a church in every piece of ground a mile and a half each way, besides having, in this same county, 77 monastic establishments and 142 free chapels? Is it a sign of augmented population, ease, and plenty, that, out of 731 parishes, 268 have suffered the parsonage-houses to fall into ruins, and their sites to become patches of nettles and of brambles? Put these questions calmly to yourself: common sense will dictate the answers, and truth will call for an expression of your indignation against the lying historians and the still more lying population mongers"—Cobbett, in Advice to Young Men, Letter I, 52

See note on Hanzas on Seeing the Speaker Asleep, p. 1314b

HARTLEY COLERIDGE (1796-1849), p. 1171

EDITIONS

- Poems*, 2 vols., ed., with a Memoir, by D. Coleridge (London, Moxon, 1851)
Poems, ed. by W. Bailey-Kempling (Ulverston, 1908)
Complete Poetical Works, ed. by R. Colles (New York, Dutton, 1908)
Poetical Works, with Bowles and Lamb, ed., with a Biographical Introduction, by W. Tirebuck (Canterbury Poets ed. London, Scott, 1887)
Essays and Marginalia, 2 vols., ed. by D. Coleridge (London, Moxon, 1851)

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

- Bagehot, W. The Prospective Review, July, 1853,
Literary Studies, 3 vols., ed. by R. H. Hutton (London and New York, Longmans, 1878-79, 1895)
Caine, T. Hall Cobwebs of Criticism (London, Stock, 1882, 1885).
Dawson, J. Jr. "Hartley Coleridge and Wordsworth," Macmillan's Magazine, Jan., 1886 (13 282)
Dowden, E. In Ward's The English Poets, Vol. 4 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1910).

- Graham, H. Splendid Failures (London and New York, Longmans, 1913).
Hilliard, G. S. Littell's Living Age, April, 1849 (21 161).
Littell's Living Age May, 1851 (29 235), June, 1851 (29 555, 605); "Hartley Coleridge as Man, Poet, Essayist," July, 1851 (30 145), Aug., 1851 (30 387).
Macmillan's Magazine "Reminiscences of Hartley Coleridge," Nov., 1865 (18 31), same article in The Eclectic Magazine, Jan., 1866 (66 109) and in Littell's Living Age, Dec., 1865 (87 483)
Rawnaley, H. D. Literary Associates of the English Lakis, 2 vols. (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1894, 1906)
Stoddard, R. H. Under the Evening Lamp (New York, Scribner, 1892, London, Gay)

CRITICAL NOTES

"His poems are full of graceful beauty, but almost all fall below the level of high poetry. They are not sufficiently powerful for vivid remembrance, and are much too good for oblivion. . . . The one species of composition in which he is a master is the sonnet, which precisely suited both his strength and his limitations. His sonnets are among the most perfect in the language"—Richard Garnett, in Dictionary of National Biography (1887)

See Wordsworth's To H. C. (p. 288)

1172

HOMER

An earlier but inferior version of this sonnet was printed in 1833

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE (1772-1834), p. 328

EDITIONS

- Complete Works*, 7 vols., ed. by W. G. T. Shedd (New York, Harper, 1858, 1884)
Works, 8 vols., ed. by T. Ashe, Poetical Works, 2 vols. (Aldine ed. London, Bell, 1885, New York, Macmillan), Prose Works, 6 vols. (Bohn Library ed. London, Bell, 1885, New York, Macmillan)
Poetical Works, ed., with a Biographical Introduction, by J. D. Campbell (Globe ed. London, Macmillan, 1893, 1909)
Poems and Dramatic Works, ed. by W. Knight (New York, Scribner, 1906).
Poems, ed., with an Introduction, by E. H. Coleridge (London and New York, Lane, 1907)
Poetical Works (Astor ed. Crowell, New York, 1908)
Complete Poetical Works, 2 vols., ed. by E. H. Coleridge (Oxford Univ. Press, 1912)
Poems, ed. by E. H. Coleridge (Oxford Univ. Press, 1912)
Poetry, ed. by R. Garnett (Muses' Library ed. London, Lawrence, 1898, New York, Scribner).

Select Poems, ed., with a Critical Introduction, by A. J. George (Boston, Heath, 1902)

Anima Poetae, ed by E. H. Coleridge (Boston, Houghton, 1895)

Biographia Epistolaria, 2 vols., ed by A. Turnbull (Bohn Library ed. London, Bell, 1911, New York, Macmillan)

Biographia Literaria, 2 vols., ed by J. Shawcross (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1907)

Letters, 1795-1834, 2 vols., ed by E. H. Coleridge (London, Heinemann, 1895, Boston, Houghton)

Letters Hitherto Uncollected, ed by W. F. Prideaux (1913)

Literary Criticism, ed., with an Introduction, by J. Mackail (London, Frowde, 1908)

Lyrical Ballads, ed by E. Dowden (London, Nutt, 1890, 1898), ed by T. Hutchinson (London, Duckworth, 1898, 1907), ed., with an Introduction, by H. Littledale (London and New York, Oxford Univ Press, 1911)

Table Talk, ed by H. Morley (Morley's Universal Library ed. London, Routledge, 1883)

BIOGRAPHY

Aynard, J. La Vie d'un Poète Coleridge (Paris Hachette, 1907)

Brandl, A. Samuel Taylor Coleridge und die englische Romantik (Berlin, 1886), English translation by Lady Eastlake (London, Murray, 1887)

Caine, T. H. Life of Samuel Taylor Coleridge (Great Writers Series. London, Scott, 1887).

Campbell, J. D. Samuel Taylor Coleridge (London, Macmillan, 1894)

Carlyle, T. The Life of John Sterling, ch. 8 (London, Chapman, 1851, 1858)

Coleridge, S. T. Anima Poetae, Biographia Literaria, Letters.

Cottle, J. Early Recollections, Chiefly relating to the Late S. T. Coleridge (London, Houlston, 1837, 1847).

De Quincey, T. "Coleridge and Opium Eating," Blackwood's Magazine, Jan., 1845 (57-117), Collected Writings, ed. Mazon (London, Black, 1888-90, 1896-97) 5, 179

Gillman, J. The Life of Samuel Taylor Coleridge (London, Pickering, 1838; only one volume published)

Hunt, Leigh. Autobiography, ch. 16 (London, Smith, 1850, 1906), 2 vols., ed by R. Ingpen (London, Constable, 1903, New York, Dutton).

Knight, W. A. Coleridge and Wordsworth in the West Country (New York, Scribner, 1914)

Lamb, C. Christ's Hospital Five and Thirty Years Ago (London, 1820)

Nandford, Mrs. H. Thomas Paine and his Friends, 2 vols. (London, Macmillan 1888)

Trull, H. D. Coleridge (English Men of Letters Series. London, Macmillan, 1884. New York, Harper).

Wordsworth, Dorothy. Journals (New York, Macmillan, 1897).

CRITICISM

Bayne, P. Essays in Biography and Criticism, Second Series (Boston, Gould, 1858).

Beers, H. A. "Coleridge, Bowles and the Pope Controversy," A History of English Romanticism in the Nineteenth Century (New York, Holt, 1901, 1910)

Blackwood's Magazine "Biographia Literaria," Oct., 1817 (2-3), "Coleridge's Poetical Works," Oct., 1834 (86-542), "The Lake School of Poets," Oct., 1819 (6-3)

Brandes, G. "Naturalistic Romanticism," Main Currents of Nineteenth Century Literature, Vol. 4 (London, Heinemann, 1905, New York, Macmillan, 1906)

Brooke, S. A. Theology in the English Poets (London, King, 1874, New York, Dutton, 1910)

Dawson, W. J. The Makers of English Poetry (New York and London, Revell 1906)

Dowden, E. "Early Revolutionary Group and Antagonists," The French Revolution and English Literature (New York and London, Scribner, 1897)

Dowden, E. "Coleridge as a Poet," New Studies in Literature (London, Paul, 1895, 1902)

Edinburgh Review, The "Christabel, Kubla Khan. The Pains of Sleep," Sept., 1816 (27-58)

Eggleston, A. J. "Wordsworth Coleridge, and the Spy," The Nineteenth Century, Aug., 1908 (64-300)

Forster, J. Great Teachers (London, Redway, 1898)

Garnett, R. "The Poetry of Coleridge," Essays of an Ex-Librarian (London, Heinemann 1901)

Hancock, A. E. The French Revolution and the English Poets (New York, Holt, 1890)

Haney, J. L. The German Influence on S. T. Coleridge (Philadelphia, 1903)

Hazlitt, W. "Mr Coleridge," The Spirit of the Age (London, 1825), "On the Living Poets," Lectures on the English Poets (London, 1818), "My First Acquaintance with Poets," The Liberal, 1823—Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure), 4, 212, 5, 143, 12, 259

Helmholz, A. A. The Indebtedness of S. T. Coleridge to A. W. Schlegel (Univ of Wisconsin Press, 1907)

Jeffrey, F. "Biographia Literaria," The Edinburgh Review, Aug., 1817 (28-498)

Johnson, C. F. Three Americans and Three Englishmen (New York, Whitaker, 1886)

Lowell, J. R. Democracy and Other Addresses (Boston, Houghton, 1887)

Mill, J. S. Dissertations and Discussions, 4 vols. (London, Longmans, 1859-67, 1873-75)

Pater, W. Appreciations (London and New York, Macmillan, 1889, 1895)

Payne, W. M. The Greater English Poets of the Nineteenth Century (New York, Holt, 1907, 1909)

Quarterly Review, The "Remorse," April, 1814 (11-177)

- Rawnsley, H. D. Literary Associations of the English Lakes, 2 vols (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1894, 1906)
- Robertson, J. M. New Essays Toward a Critical Method (London, Lane, 1897)
- Royds, Kathleen Coleridge and His Poetry (New York, Dodge, 1912)
- Saintsbury, G. "Coleridge and Southey," Essays in English Literature, Second Series (London, Dent, 1895, New York, Scribner)
- Shairp, J. C. Studies in Poetry and Philosophy (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1872, 1886, Boston, Houghton, 1880, 1887)
- Stephen, L. Hours in a Library, 3 vols (London, Smith, 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1899), 4 vols. (1907)
- Stoddard, R. H. Under the Evening Lamp (New York, Scribner, 1892, London, Gay)
- Stork, C. W. "The Influence of the Popular Ballad on Wordsworth and Coleridge," Publications of the Modern Language Association, Sept., 1914 (n s 22 299)
- Swinburne, A. C. Essays and Studies (London, Chatto, 1875)
- Symonds, A. The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909, New York, Dutton)
- Watson, W. "Coleridge's Supernaturalism," Exposition in Criticism (London, Mathews, 1893, New York, Macmillan)
- Whipple, E. P. "Coleridge as a Philosophic Critic," Essays and Reviews (Boston, Osgood, 1849, Ticknor, 1861)
- Woodberry, George E. "Sir George Beaumont, Coleridge, and Wordsworth," Studies in Letters and Life (Boston, Houghton, 1890), Makers of Literature (New York and London, Macmillan, 1901)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, J. P. In Caine's Life of Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1887)
- Haney, J. L. A Bibliography of S. T. Coleridge (Philadelphia, Egerton Press, 1903, London, Gay, 1904)
- Jack, A. A. and Bradley, A. C. A Short Bibliography of Coleridge (1912)
- Shepherd, R. H. The Bibliography of Coleridge, revised by W. F. Prideaux (London, Hollings, 1901)
- Wise, T. J. A Bibliography of the Writings in Prose and Verse of S. T. Coleridge (London, Bibliographical Society, 1913)

CRITICAL NOTES

"His best work is but little, but of its kind it is perfect and unique. For exquisite music of metrical movement and for an imaginative phantasy, such as might belong to a world where men always dreamt, there is nothing in our language to be compared with Christabel, 1805, and Kubla Khan, and to The Ancient Mariner published as one of the Lyrical Ballads, in 1798. The little poem called Love is not so good, but it touches with great grace that with which all sympathise

All that he did excellently might be bound up in twenty pages, but it should be bound in pure gold"
—S. A. Brooke, in English Literature (1870)

"You will see Coleridge—he who sits obscure
In the exceeding lustre and the pure
Intense irradiation of a mind
Which, with its own internal lightning blind,
Flashes wearily through darkness and despair—
A cloud-encircled meteor of the air,
A hooded eagle among blinking owls"
—Shelley, in Letter to Maria Gisborne,
II 202-08 (1820)

See Lamb's Christ's Hospital Five and Thirty Years Ago (p 931) and note, p 1208a, also Hazlitt's My First Acquaintance with Poetry (p 1028)

Coleridge is caricatured in Mr Flosky in Thomas Love Peacock's Nightmare Abbey

328.

TO A YOUNG ASS

See Byron's satiric reference to this poem in English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, 261-64 (p 489)

27-31 A reference to Pantisocracy. See Coleridge's Pantisocracy and n 1 (p 328)

329.

LA FAYETTE

Marquis de La Fayette (1757-1834) was a celebrated French general and statesman. He left France in 1792 to avoid the consequences of his opposition to the Jacobins, and was imprisoned as a political suspect by the Prussians and Austrians, 1792-97. He returned to France in 1799.

KOSKIUŃSKO

Thaddeus Kosciuszko (1746-1817) was a famous Polish patriot and general. He was commander of the Polish insurrection of 1794, and was defeated and taken prisoner on Oct 10 of that year. He was released in 1796. See Campbell's The Pleasures of Hope, 349-418 (pp 418-19)

TO THE REVEREND W. L. BOWLES

Coleridge probably intended to dedicate the 1797 edition of his Poems to Bowles. On Nov 14, 1796, Lamb wrote as follows: "Coleridge, I love you for dedicating your poetry to Bowles. Genius of the sacred fountain of tears it was he who led you gently by the hand through all this valley of weeping, showed you the dark-green yew trees, and the willow shades."

See Coleridge's comment on Bowles in Critical Notes, p 1208

THE ÆOLIAN HARP

This poem was written Aug 24, 1795, nearly two months before Coleridge's marriage (Oct 4, 1795). The Æolian harp is a musical instrument consisting of a box with strings stretched across it. It is usually placed at a window, where the wind striking it produces music. It is named from Æolus, god of the winds.

331. ODE ON THE DEPARTING YEAR

This poem, in a shorter form, was first entitled Ode for the Last Day of the Year 1796. In the early version, the first stanza was called Strophe I, the second, Strophe II, the third, Epode, the fourth, Antistrophe I, the fifth, Antistrophe II, the remaining stanza, Epode II. In the 1797 edition Coleridge prefixed the following Argument, which in the 1803 edition was distributed in notes.

The Ode commences with an address to the Divine Providence that regulates into one vast harmony all the events of time, however calamitous some of them may appear to mortals. The second strophe calls on men to suspend their private joys and sorrows, and devote them for a while to the cause of human nature in general. The first epode speaks of the Empress of Russia, who died of an apoplexy on the 17th of November, 1796, having just concluded a subsidiary treaty with the kings combined against France. The first and second antistrophe describe the image of the Departing Year, etc., as in a vision. The second epode prophesies, in anguish of spirit, the downfall of this country.

332. 40. "A subsidiary Treaty had been just concluded and Russia was to have furnished more effectual aid than that of pious manifestoes to the Powers combined against France. I rejoice—not over the deceased Woman (I never dared figure the Russian Sovereign to my imagination under the dear and venerable Character of Woman—Woman, that complex term for Mother, Sister, Wife!) I rejoice, as at the disembodying of a Daemon! I rejoice, as at the extinction of the evil Principle impersonated! This very day, six years ago, the massacre of Ismail was perpetrated. THIRTY THOUSAND HUMAN BEINGS, MEN, WOMEN, AND CHILDREN, murdered in cold blood, for no other crime than that their garrison had defended the place with perseverance and bravery. Why should I recall the poisoning of her husband, her iniquities in Poland, or her late unmotivated attack on Persia, the desolating ambition of her public life, or the bloodinous excesses of her private hours? I have no wish to qualify myself for the office of Historiographer to the King of Hell!"—Coleridge

333. 135. Abandon'd of Heaven.—"The poet from having considered the peculiar advantages, which this country has enjoyed, passes in rapid transition to the uses, which we have made of these advantages. We have been preserved by our insular situation, from suffering the actual horrors of war ourselves, and we have shown our gratitude to Providence for this immunity by our eagerness to spread those horrors over nations less happily situated. In the midst of plenty and safety we have raised or joined the yell for famine and blood. Of the one hundred and seven last years, fifty have been years of war. Such wickedness cannot pass unpunished. We have been proud and confident in our alliances and our fleets—but God has prepared the canker-worm, and will smite the gowds of our pride. 'Art thou better than populous No, that was situate among the rivers, that had the waters round about it, whose rampart was the Sea? Ethiopia and Egypt were her strength and it was infinite. But and Lublin were her helpers. Yet she was carried away, she went into captivity and they cast lots for her honorable men, and all her great men were bound in chains. Thou also shalt be drunken, all thy strongholds shall be like fig trees with the first ripe figs, if they be shaken, they shall even fall into the mouth of the eater. Thou hast multiplied thy merchants above the stars of heaven. Thy crowned are as the locusts, and thy captains as the great grasshoppers which camp in the hedges in the cool day, but when the sun ariseth they flee away, and their place is not known where they are. There is no healing of thy bruise, thy wound is grievous, all, that hear the report of thee, shall clap hands over thee: for upon whom hath not thy wickedness passed continually?' Nahum, chap. iii."—Coleridge.

334. THIS LIME-TREE BOWER MY PRISON

"In the June of 1797 some long-expected friends, paid a visit to the author's cottage, and on the morning of their arrival, he met with an accident, which disabled him from walking during the whole time of their stay. One evening, when they had left him for a few hours, he composed the following lines in the garden-bower"—Coleridge's prefatory note.

The friends referred to were Wordsworth and his sister Dorothy, and Lamb. Coleridge wrote Southey in July about the visit, as follows: "Charles Lamb has been with me for a week. He left me Friday morning. The second day after Wordsworth came to me dear Sara accidentally emptied a skillet of boiling milk on my foot, which confined me during the whole of C. Lamb's stay and still prevents me from all walks longer than a furlong."

8-20. The spot here described was a favorite meeting place of Wordsworth, Coleridge, and their Alfoxden friends. See Wordsworth's Lines Written in Early Spring (p. 231), and note, p. 1760b.

335. THE RIME OF THE ANCIENT MARINER

This poem was first printed anonymously in the first edition of Lyrical Ballads (1798). Many archaisms intended to make it resemble the old popular ballads were removed in the second edition (1800). It was first published under the author's name in Sibylline Leaves (1817), where it appeared with a marginal gloss (printed in this text in footnotes) and a Latin motto from T. Burnet's Archæologia Philoſophicæ (1692), of which the following is a translation:

"I readily believe that there are more invisible beings in the universe than visible. But who shall explain to us the nature, the rank and kinship, the distinguishing marks and graces of each? What do they do? Where do they dwell? The human mind has circled round this knowledge, but never attained to it. Yet there is profit, I do not doubt, in sometimes contemplating in the mind, as in a picture, the image of a greater and better world lest the intellect, habituated to the petty details of daily life, should be contracted within too narrow limits and settle down wholly on trifles. But, meanwhile, a watchful eye must be kept on truth, and proportion observed, that we may distinguish the certain from the uncertain, day from night."

For the origin of the poem, see Coleridge's Biographia Literaria, 14 (pp 372-78), and Wordsworth's note on We Are Seven (p. 1357b). The following additional statement by Wordsworth was reported to H. N. Coleridge by the Rev. Alexander Dyce: "The Ancient Mariner was founded on a strange dream, which a friend of Coleridge had, who fancied he saw a skeleton ship, with figures in it. We had both determined to write some poetry for a monthly magazine, the profits of which were to defray the expenses of a little excursion we were to make together. The Ancient Mariner was intended for this periodical, but was too long. I had very little share in the composition of it, for I soon found that the style of Coleridge and myself would not assimilate. Besides the lines (in the fourth part):

'And thou art long, and lank, and brown,
As is the ribbed sea-sand'—

I wrote the stanza (in the first part):

'He holds him with his glittering eye—
The Wedding-Guest stood still,
And listens like a three-years' child
The Mariner hath his will'— and four or five lines more in different parts of the poem, which I could not now point out. The idea of 'shooting an albatross' was mine, for I had been reading Shelley's Voyages, which probably Coleridge never saw. I also suggested the reanimation of the dead bodies, to work the ship" (Note printed in Campbell's ed. of The Works of Coleridge [1893], S. T. C. ed. 1852.) See Lamb's comment on Wordsworth's note on the poem, published in the second edition of Lyrical Ballads (p. 919a, 49 ff.).

It has been suggested that Coleridge took some hints for his poem from Capt. T. James's Strange and Dangerous Voyage (1633) and from The Letter of Saint Paulinus to Marcellus (1618). The letter tells the story of a wonderful voyage, on which a sole survivor was aided in the navigation of the ship by Christ and angels. Borrowings from these sources, however, are too slight to lessen the glory of Coleridge's inventive genius.

Regarding the probability of the poem, and its moral, Coleridge remarked as follows (Table Talk, May 31, 1800): "Mrs. Barbauld once told me that she admired The Ancient Mariner very much, but that there were two faults in it,—it was improbable, and had no moral. As for the probability, I owned that that might admit some question, but as to the want of a moral, I told her that in my own judgment the poem had too much, and that the only, or chief fault, if I might say so, was the obtrusion of the moral sentiment so openly on the reader as a principle or cause of action in a work of pure imagination. It ought to have had no more moral than the Arabian Nights' tale of the merchant's sitting down to eat dates by the side of a well and throwing the shells aside, and lo! a genie starts up and says he must kill the aforesaid merchant because one of the date shells had, it seems, put out the eye of the genie's son." Mrs. Barbauld (1748-1825) was an English poet and essayist.

"It is enough for us here that he has written some of the most poetical poetry in the language, and one poem, The Ancient Mariner, not only unparalleled, but unsurpassed in its kind, and that kind of the rarest. It is marvellous in its mastery over that delightfully fortuitous inconsequence that is the adamant logic of dreamland. Coleridge has taken the old ballad measure and given to it by an indefinable charm, wholly his own, all the sweetness, all the melody and compass of a symphony. And how picturesque it is in the proper sense of the word. I know nothing like it. There is not a description in it. It is all picture."—J. R. Lowell, in "Address on Unveiling the Bust of Coleridge in Westminster Abbey, 7 May, 1885," Democracy and Other Addresses (1887).

The poem is here printed in the revised text of 1820.

337. 164. "I took the thought of 'grinning for joy' from poor Burnett's remark to me, when we had climbed to the top of P'linlimmon, and were nearly dead with thirst. We could not speak for the constriction, till we found a little puddle under a stone. He said to me, 'You grinned like an idiot.' He had done the same"—Coleridge, in Table Talk, May 31, 1830. George Burnett (c1766-1811) was a miscellaneous writer, interested with Coleridge and Southey in the scheme of Pantisocracy. P'linlimmon is a mountain in Wales.

338. 210-11. "It is a common superstition among sailors that something evil is about to happen whenever a star dogs the moon"—Coleridge, in a manuscript note. The star within the nether tip of the horned moon, however, exists only in Coleridge's imagination.

339. 314. Possibly a reference to the Northern Lights, or Aurora Borealis.

343.

CHRISTABEL .

"The first part of the following poem was written in the year 1797, at Stowey, in the county of Somerset. The second part, after my return from Germany, in the year 1800, at Keswick, Cumberland. Since the latter date, my poetic powers have been, till very lately, in a state of suspended animation. But as, in my very first conception of the tale, I had the whole present to my mind, with the wholeness, no less than the liveliness of a vision, I trust that I shall be able to embody in verse the three parts yet to come, in the course of the present year. It is probable that if the poem had been finished at either of the former periods, or if even the first and second part had been published in the year 1800, the impression of its originality would have been much greater than I dare at present expect. But for this I have only my own indolence to blame. The dates are mentioned for the exclusive purpose of precluding charges of plagiarism or servile imitation from myself. For there is amongst us a set of critics, who seem to hold, that every possible thought and image is traditional, who have no notion that there are such things as fountains in the world, small as well as great, and who would therefore charitably derive every rill they behold flowing, from a perforation made in some other man's tank. I am confident, however, that as far as the present poem is concerned, the celebrated poets whose writings I might be suspected of having imitated, either in particular passages, or in the tone and the spirit of the whole, would be among the first to vindicate me from the charge, and who, on any striking coincidence, would permit me to address them in this doggerel version of two monkish Latin hexameters.

'Tis mine and it is likewise yours;
But an if this will not do,
Let it be mine, good friend ' for I Am the poorer of the two

"I have only to add that the metre of the Christabel is not, properly speaking, irregular, though it may seem so from its being founded on a new principle namely, that of counting in each line the accents, not the syllables. Though the latter may vary from seven to twelve, yet in each line the accents will be found to be only four. Nevertheless, this occasional variation in number of syllables is not introduced wantonly, or for the mere ends of convenience, but in correspondence with some transition in the nature of the imagery or passion"—Coleridge's original Preface

The poets referred to above are Scott, who heard the poem read in 1801, and Byron, who heard it in 1811

The poem was intended for publication in the second edition of Lyrical Ballads (1800);

but Coleridge never completed it. In Table Talk, July 6, 1833, Coleridge said: "I could write as good verses now as ever I did, if I were perfectly free from vexations, and were I in the ad libitum hearing of fine music, which has a sensible effect in harmonising my thoughts, and in animating and, as it were, lubricating my inventive faculty. The reason of my not finishing Christabel is not that I don't know how to do it—for I have, as I always had, the whole plan entire from beginning to end in my mind, but I fear I could not carry on with equal success the execution of the idea, an extremely subtle and difficult one." The poem was finally published by Murray on the recommendation of Byron.

Coleridge's plan for the completion of the story is thus related by Mr. Gillman, who cared for Coleridge during the last years of his life. "The following relation was to have occupied a third and fourth canto, and to have closed the tale. Over the mountains, the Bard, as directed by Sir Leoline, hastes with his disciple, but in consequence of one of those inundations supposed to be common to this country, the spot only where the castle once stood is discovered—the edifice itself being washed away. He determines to return. Geraldine, being acquainted with all that is passing, like the weird sisters in Macbeth, vanishes. Reappearing, however, she awaits the return of the Bard, exciting in the meantime, by her wily arts, all the anger she could rouse in the Baron's breast, as well as that jealousy of which he is described to have been susceptible. The old Bard and the youth at length arrive, and therefore she can no longer personate the character of Geraldine, the daughter of Lord Roland de Vaux, but changes her appearance to that of the accepted though absent lover of Christabel. Now ensues a courtship most distressing to Christabel, who feels, she knows not why, great disgust for her once favored knight. This coldness is very painful to the Baron, who has no more conception than herself of the supernatural transformation. She at last yields to her father's entreaties, and consents to approach the altar with this hated suitor. The real lover, returning, enters at this moment, and produces the ring which she had once given him in sign of her betrothment. Thus defeated, the supernatural being Geraldine disappears. As predicted, the castle bell tolls, the mother's voice is heard, and, to the exceeding great joy of the parties, the rightful marriage takes place after which follows a reconciliation and explanation between the father and daughter."—Quoted from Gillman's The Life of Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1838).

"For my part, I cannot compare Kubla Khan with Christabel. The magical beauty of the latter has been so long canonized in the world's estimate, that to praise it now would be unseemly. It brought into English poetry an atmosphere of wonder and mystery, of weird beauty and pity combined, which was quite new at the time it appeared, and has never since been approached. The movement of its subtle cadences has a union of grace with power, which only the finest lines of Shakespeare can parallel. As we read Christabel and a few other of Coleridge's pieces, we recall his own words

'In a half-sleep we dream,
And dreaming hear thee still, O singing lark!
That singest like an angel in the clouds'—

J. C. Shairp, in "Poetic Style in Modern English Poetry," Aspects of Poetry (1881)

The meter of Christabel was used by Scott in The Lay of the Last Minstrel, and by other poets in imitation or ridicule of Coleridge's poem. The following poem was written by James Hogg, and published with other pieces imitative of his contemporaries in a volume entitled The Poet's Mirror (1816)

Isabelle

Can there be a moon in heaven tonight,
That the hill and the gray cloud seem so light?
The air is whitened by some spell,
For there is no moon, I know it well.
On this third day the sages say
(Tis wonderful how well they know)
The moon is journeying far away,
Bright somewhere in a heaven below,

It is a strange and lovely night,
A grayish pale, but not white!
Is it rain, or is it dew,
That falls so thick I see its hue?
In says it follows, one, two, three,
Down the air so merrily,
Said Isabelle, so let it be!

Why does the Lady Isabelle
Sit in the damp and dewy dell,
Counting the racks of dizzily rain,
And how often the rill cries over again?
For she's harping harping in the brake,
Craik, craik—Craik, craik—

Ten times nine, and thrice eleven;—
The last call was an hundred and seven Craik, Craik—the hour is near—
Let it come, I have no fear!
Yet it is a dreadful work, I wis,
Such doings in a night like this!

Sounds the river harsh and loud?
The stream sounds harsh but not loud
There is a cloud that seems to hover
By western hill the churchyard over,
What is it like?—'Tis like a whale,
'Tis like a shark with half the tail,
Not half, but third and more,
Now 'tis a wolf, and now a boar,
Its face is raised—it cometh here,
Let it come—there is no fear
There's two for heaven, and ten for hell,
Let it come—'tis well—'tis well!
Said the Lady Isabelle.

What ails that little cut-tailed whelp,
That it continues to yelp, yelp?
Yelp, yelp, and it turns its eye
Up to the tree and half to the sky,
Half to the sky and full to the cloud,
And still it whines and barks aloud.
Why I should dread I cannot tell
There is a spirit, I know it well!
I see it in you falling beam—
Is it a vision or a dream?
It is no dream, full well I know
I have a woeful deed to do!
Hush, hush, thou little murmurer;
I tell thee, hush—the dead are near!

If thou knewest all, poor tail-less whelp, 55
Well mightest thou tremble, growl, and yelp,
But thou knowest nothing, hast no part
(Simple and stupid as thou art)
Save gratitude and truth of heart
But they are coming by this way 60
That have been dead for a year and a day,
Without challenge, without change,
They shall have their full revenge
They have been sent to wander in woe
In the lands of fume and the lands of snow, 65
But those that are dead
Shall the greenward tread,
And those that are living
Shall soon be dead!
None to pity them none to help, 70
Thou mayest quake, my cut-tailed whelp!

There are two from the grave
That I fain would save,
Full hard is the world
For the young and the brave! 75
Perchance they are wrapt in vision sweet,
While the passing breezes kiss their feet,
And they are dreaming of joy and love!—
Well, let them go—there's room above
* * * * *

Yet they are coming! and they are three! 80
Jesu Maria! can it be?

The Conclusion

Sleep on! fair maiden of Borrowdale!
Sleep, O sleep, and do not wake,
Dream of the dance, till the foot be pale,
And the beautiful ankle shiver and shake, 85
Till thou shalt press, with feeling bland,
Thine own fair breast for lover's hand
Thy heart is light as summer breeze,
Thy heart is joyous as the day
Man never form of angel sees, 90
But thou art fair as they
So lovers ween, and so they say,
So thine shall ween for many a day
The hour's at hand, O woe is me!
For they are coming, and they are three 95

343: 49-52. (Of these lines with the following entry in Dorothy Wordsworth's Journal "March 7, 1798. William and I drank tea at Coleridge's. A cloudy sky. Observed nothing particularly interesting—the distant prospect obscured. One only leaf upon the top of a tree—the sole remaining leaf—danced round and round like a rag blown by the wind." Of these lines, Ruskin says ("Of the Pathetic Fallacy," Modern Painters, Part IV, ch 12, sec 6) "When Coleridge speaks of "The one red leaf the last of its clan,

That dance as often as dance it can,"

he has a morbid, that is to say, a so far false, idea about the leaf—he fancies a life in it, and will, which there are not, confuses its powerlessness with choke, its fading death with merriment, and the wind that shakes it with music. Here, however, there is some beauty, even in the morbid passage."

346. Part II.—The inspiration for Part II of the poem was the Hymn to Teresa by Richard Crashaw, an English poet of the 16th century. The scenery in Part II is that of the Lake district, England.

347. 408-28. Coleridge regarded these lines as "the best and sweetest passage" he ever wrote. Nonthey may be referred to in the passage. See Byron's Child Harold's Pilgrimage, III, 94 (p 587).

349. The Conclusion to Part II.—These lines have little obvious relation to the rest of the poem and probably were not meant originally to be a part of it. They were sent to Southey in a letter of May 6, 1801, and probably were written about that time. J. D. Campbell, in his edition of Coleridge's Poetical Works, says that these lines do not occur in any of the three extant manuscripts of the poem.

350. FROST AT MIDNIGHT

7. My cradled infant—His son Hartley.

24. At school—Coleridge entered Christ's Hospital in 1782 and remained there until he went to Cambridge University in 1791. See Lamb's Christ's Hospital Five and Thirty Years Ago (p. 931).

37. Stern preceptor—Bower, the famous master of Christ's Hospital, noted for his flogging proclivities. In Table Talk, May 27, 1830, Coleridge says: "I had one just flogging. When I was about thirteen, I went to a shoe-maker, and begged him to take me as his apprentice. He, being an honest man, immediately took me to Bowyer, who got into a great rage, knocked me down, and even pushed Crispin rudely out of the room. Bowyer asked me why I had made myself such a fool? to which I answered, that I had a great desire to be a shoemaker, and that I hated the thought of being a clergyman. 'Why so?' said he—'Because, to tell you the truth, sir,' said I, 'I am an infidel.' For this, without more ado, Bowyer flogged me,—wisely, as I think—soundly, as I know. Any whining or sermonizing would have gratified my vanity, and confirmed me in my absurdity, as it was, I was laughed at, and got heartily ashamed of my folly."

42. Sister—Coleridge was very fond of his sister Ann, who was five years his senior. She died in 1791.

53 While at school, Coleridge used to lie upon the roof and gaze at the clouds and stars.

54ff. The prophecy expressed in these lines was fulfilled in 1800, when Coleridge moved to Greta Hall, Keswick, in the Lake district.

What we most admire is the avowal of his sentiments, and public censure of the unprincipled and atrocious conduct of France. The poem itself is written with great energy. The second, third, and fourth stanzas contain some of the most vigorous lines we have ever read. The lines in the fourth stanza—

"To scatter rage and trait'rous guilt Where peace her jealous home had built," to the end of the stanza are particularly expressive and beautiful."

The following Argument was prefixed to the poem in an 1802 edition.

"First Stanza An invocation to those objects in nature the contemplation of which had inspired the poet with a devotional love of liberty. Second Stanza The exultation of the poet at the commencement of the French Revolution, and his unqualified abhorrence of the Alliance against the Republic. Third Stanza The blasphemous and horrors during the domination of the Terrorists regarded by the poet as a transient storm, and as the natural consequence of the former despotism and of the foul superstition of Popery. Reason, indeed, began to suggest many apprehensions, yet still the poet struggled to retain the hope that France would make conquests by no other means than by presenting to the observation of Europe a people more happy and better instructed than under other forms of government. Fourth Stanza Switzerland and the poet's recantation. Fifth Stanza An address to liberty, in which the poet expresses his conviction that those feelings and that grand ideal of freedom which the mind attains by its contemplation of its individual nature, and of the sublime surrounding objects (see stanza the first) do not belong to men, as a society, nor can possibly be either gratified or realized, under any form of human government, but belong to the individual man, so far as he is pure, and inflamed with the love and adoration of God in nature."

351. FRANCE AN ODE

This poem was inspired by the French invasion of Switzerland (Helvetia) in 1798. It was printed in The Morning Post, April 16, 1798, with the following introduction, entitled Original Poetry:

"The following excellent ode will be in unison with the feelings of every friend to liberty and foe to oppression, of all who, admiring the French Revolution, detest and deplore the conduct of France towards Switzerland. It is very satisfactory to find so zealous and steady an advocate for freedom as Mr. Coleridge concur with us in condemning the conduct of France towards the Swiss Cantons. Indeed his concurrence is not singular, we know of no friend to liberty who is not of his opinion.

352. THE NIGHTINGALE

The scenery of this poem is that of the Quantock hills about Nether Stowey and Alfoxden, in Somersetshire, England. The poem was first published in Lyrical Ballads, in 1798.

353. THE BALLAD OF THE DARK LADIE

A manuscript note by Coleridge states that this poem was intended originally to contain 190 lines. See note on Lot c, p. 1240b.

KUBLA KHAN

This poem was first published with the title Kubla Khan, or a Vision in a Dream, it was prefaced with the following note:

Of The Fragment of Kubla Khan

"The following fragment is here published at the request of a poet of great and deserved celebrity [Lord Byron], and, as far as the author's own opinions are concerned, rather as a psychological curiosity, than on the ground of any supposed poetic merits."

"In the summer of the year 1797, the author, then in ill health, had retired to a lonely farmhouse between Porlock and Linton, on the Exmoor confines of Somerset and Devonshire. In consequence of a slight indisposition, an anodyne had been prescribed, from the effects of which he fell asleep in his chair at the moment that he was reading the following sentence, or words of the same substance, in Purchas's Pilgrimage: 'Here the Khan Kubla commanded a palace to be built, and a stately garden thereunto. And thus ten miles of fertile ground were inclosed with a wall.' The author continued for about three hours in a profound sleep, at least of the external senses, during which time he has the most vivid confidence, that he could not have composed less than from two to three hundred lines, if that indeed can be called composition in which all the images rose up before him as things, with a parallel production of the correspondent expressions, without any sensation or consciousness of effort. On awaking he appeared to himself to have a distinct recollection of the whole, and taking his pen, ink, and paper, instantly and eagerly wrote down the lines that are here preserved. At this moment he was unfortunately called out by a person on business from Porlock, and detained by him above an hour and on his return to his room, found, to his small surprise and mortification, that though he still retained some vague and dim recollection of the general purport of the vision, yet, with the exception of some eight or ten scattered lines and images, all the rest has passed away like the images on the surface of a stream into which a stone has been cast, but, alas! without the after restoration of the latter."

Then all the charm
Is broken—all that phantom-world so fair
Vanishes, and a thousand circlets spread,
And each mis-shape [s] the other Stay awhile,
Poor youth! who scarcely dar'st lift up thine eyes—
The stream will soon renew its smoothness, soon
The visions will return! And lo, he stays,
And soon the fragments dim of lovely forms
Come trembling back, unite, and now once more
The pool becomes a mirror

[From Coleridge's The Picture, or, the Lover's Resolution, 91-100]

"Yet from the still surviving recollections in his mind, the author has frequently purposed to finish for himself what had been originally as it were, given to him Алтын Эдир дэу,³ but the tomorrow is yet to come."

"Were we compelled to the choice, I for one would rather preserve Kubla Khan and Christabel than any other of Coleridge's poems. It is more conceivable that another man should be born capable of writing The Ancient Mariner than one capable of writing these. The former is perhaps the most wonderful of all poems. In reading it we seem rapt into that paradise revealed to Swedenborg, where music and color and perfume were one, where you could hear the hues and see the harmonies of heaven. For absolute melody and splendor it were hardly rash to call it the first poem in the language."—A. C. Swinburne, in Essays and Studies (1875).

"In Coleridge's Kubla Khan we have no wrestling with spiritual questions, no lofty solution of the problem of conduct found through brooding on the beauties of nature. Instead, a thousand impressions received from the senses from records of Oriental travel, from numberless romantic tales, have been taken in by the author, dissolved as in a crucible by the fierce heat of his imagination, and are poured forth a molten stream of sensuous imagery, incalculable in its variety of suggestion, yet homogeneous, unified, and, despite its fragmentary character the ultimate expression of a whole romantic world"—Neilson, in Essentials of Poetry (1912).

358. 14-16. These are three of the lines referred to by Kipling in his Wireless: "Remember that in all the millions permitted there are no more than five—five little lines—of which one can say, 'These are the magic. These are the vision. The rest is only poetry.'" The other two lines are in Keats's Ode to a Nightingale, 69-70 (p. 832).

359.

LINES

Coleridge sent this poem in a letter to his wife with the following comment: "At the inn they brought us an Album, or Stamm-Buch, requesting that we would write our names and something or other as a remembrance that we had been there. I wrote the following lines which I send to you, not that they possess a grain of merit as poetry, but because they contain a true account of my journey from the Brocken to Elblinrode."

LOVE

This poem was first published in The Morning Post, Dec. 21, 1799, under the title Introduction to the Tale of the Dark Ladie, and with the following introductory letter, addressed to the editor of The Morning Post:

"Sir,
"The following poem is the Introduction to a somewhat longer one, for which I shall solicit insertion on your next open day. The use of the old ballad word Ladie for Lady is the only piece of obsolescence in it, and as it is professedly a tale of ancient times, I trust, that 'the affectionate lovers of venerable antiquity' (as Camden¹ says) will grant me their pardon, and perhaps may be induced to admit a force and propriety in it. A heavier objection may be adduced against the author, that in these times of fear and expectation, when novelties explode around us in all directions, he should presume to offer to the public a silly tale of old-fashioned love; and, five years ago, I own, I should have allowed and felt the force of this objection. But, alas! explosion has succeeded explosion so rapidly that novelty itself ceases to appear new; and it is possible that now, even a simple story, wholly unsuited with politics or personality, may find some attention amid the hubbub of revolutions, as to those who have resided a long time by the falls of Niagara, the lowest whispering becomes distinctly audible. S. T. COLERIDGE."

¹ "In Xamdu did Cublai Can build a stately Palace, encompassing sixteen miles of plaine ground with a wall, wherein are fertile Meddowes, pleasant Springs, delightful Streames, and all sorts of beasts of chase and game, and in the midst thereof a sumptuous house of pleasure"—Purchas his Pilgrimage (1628 ed.) 4, 18, 418.

² Tomorrow, I shall sing a sweeter song—Theocritus, Idylls, 1, 182.

³ William Camden (1551-1623), an English antiquary and historian.

O leave the lily on its stem,
O leave the rose upon the spray,
O leave the elder-bloom, fair maids!
And listen to my lay

A cypress and a myrtle bough,
This morn around my harp you twin'd,
Because it fashion'd mournfully
Its murmurs in the wind.

And now a tale of love and woe,
A woeful tale of love I sing
Hark, gentle maidens, hark! it sighs
And trembles on the string

But most, my own dear Genevieve!
It sighs and trembles most for thee!
O come and hear the cruel wrongs
Befel the Dark Ladie!

Few sorrows hath she of her own,
My hope, my joy, my Genevieve!
She loves me best whenever I sing
The songs that make her grieve

Then came Lore as we know it, with slight changes, and the following concluding stanzas.

And now once more a tale of woe,
A woeful tale of love, I sing
For thee, my Genevieve! it sighs,
And trembles on the string

When last I sang the cruel scorn
That craz'd this bold and lonely Knight,
And how he roam'd the mountain woods,
Nor rested day or night;

I promised thee a sadder tale
Of man's perfidious cruelty
Come, then, and hear what cruel wrong
Befel the Dark Ladie

360. DEJECTION AN ODE

This poem was first addressed to Wordsworth and was printed in The Morning Post on his wedding-day, Oct 4, 1802. In this version Wordsworth was referred to as "Edmund," and that name occurred where "Lady" is found in the present text, and where "Otway" appears in l. 120. An earlier version contained the name "William" throughout. An estrangement between the two poets was the cause of the later substitutions.

362. HYMN BEFORE SUNRISE IN THE VALE OF CHAMOUNI

This poem was first printed in The Morning Post, Sept 11, 1802, with the following introductory note by the author

"Chamouni is one of the highest mountain valleys of the Barony of Faucigny in the Savoy Alps, and exhibits a kind of fairy world, in which the wildest appearances (I had almost said horrors) of nature alternate with the softest and most beautiful. The chain of Mont Blanc is its boundary, and besides the Arve it is filled with sounds from the Arveiron, which rushes from the melted glaciers, like a giant, mad with joy, from a dungeon, and forms other torrents of snow-water, having their rise in the glaciers which slope down into the valley. The beautiful Gentiana Major, or great gentian, with blossoms of the brightest blue, grows in large companies a few steps from the never-melted ice of the glaciers. I thought it an affecting emblem of the boldness of human hope, venturing near, and, as it were, leaning over the brink of the grave. Indeed, the whole vale, its every light, its every sound, must needs impress every mind not utterly callous with the thought—'Who would be, who could be an atheist in this valley of wonders!' If any of the readers of The Morning Post have visited this vale in their journeys among the Alps, I am confident that they will not find the sentiments and feelings expressed, or attempted to be expressed, in the following poem, extravagant."

In later editions the poem was preceded by the following note

"Besides the rivers Arve and Arveiron, which have their sources in the foot of Mont Blanc, five conspicuous torrents rush down its sides, and within a few paces of the glaciers, the Gentiana Major grows in immense numbers, with its flowers of loveliest blue."

As a matter of fact, Coleridge never was at Chamouni, his poem is based upon a translation of Ode to Chamouny, a German poem by Friederike Brün (1785-1835) addressed to Klopstock (1724-1803). See Shelley's Mont Blanc (p. 646)

364. INSCRIPTION FOR A FOUNTAIN ON A HEATH

Of this poem with the following concise lines from Tennyson's Bala and Balan (21-25) -

So coming to the fountain-side beheld
Bala and Balan sitting statuelike, Brethren, to right and left the spring, that down,
From beneath a plume of lady-fern,
Sang, and the sand danced at the bottom of it

THE PAINS OF SLEEP

"God forbid that my worst enemy should ever have the nights and the sleeps that I have had night after night—surprised by sleep, while I struggled to remain awake, starting up to bless my own loud scream that had awakened me—yes, dear friend! till my repeated night-yells had made me a nuisance in my own house. As I live and am a man, this is an unexaggerated tale. My dreams became the substances of my life"—Coleridge, in Letter to Thomas Poole, Oct 3, 1803

365. TO A GENTLEMAN

61-62. In place of these lines, the manuscript copy of Jan, 1807, contained the following

Dear shall it be to every human heart,
To me how more than dearest! me, on whom
Comfort from thee, and utterance of thy love,
Came with such heights and depths of harmony
Such sense of wings unlifting, that its might Scatter'd and quell'd me, till my thoughts became

A bodilly tumult; and thy faithful hopes,
Thy hopes of me, dear friend, by me unfelt
Were troublous to me, almost as a voice,
Familiar once, and more than musical,
As a dear woman's voice to one cast forth,
A wanderer with a worn-out heart forlorn,
Mid strangers pining with untended wounds
O friend, too well thou know'st, of what sad years
The long suppression had benumb'd my soul

366.

TIME REAL AND IMAGINARY

"There is a fine prophecy here of the two main activities of the coming century—Science and Poetry. Tennyson's Parnassus should be read as expressing a similar truth a century later. In this notion of the sister we have an idea which was fundamental with Wordsworth, as in We are Seven and Intimations of Immortality."—George, in his edition of Coleridge's Select Poems (1902).

HEAR, SWEET SPIRIT, HEAR THE SPELL

This song is found in Act III, sc 1, 69-82, of Remorse. It is sung from behind the scenes in proof of the power of Alvar, disguised as a sorcerer, to call up spirits of the departed

A SUNNY SHAFT DID I BEHOLD

This song is found in Act II, sc 1, 65-80, of Zapolya. It is sung by Glycine, the orphan daughter of a military chief, as she carries food to a friend who has gone to seek an enemy in a savage wood 367.

THE KNIGHT'S TOMB

Coleridge states that these lines were composed as a metrical experiment

YOUTH AND AGE

As first printed in 1828, this poem closed with l. 38. The first draft, entitled Arca Spontanea, was written in 1823. The remaining lines, added in 1834, were first written and published, in a slightly different form, in 1832, under the title of The Old Man's Sign; a Sonnet.

368.

WORK WITHOUT HOPE

"Though I am at present sadly below even my par of health, or rather unhealth, and am the more depressed thereby from the consciousness that in this yearly resurrection of Nature from her winter sleep, amid young leaves and blooms and twittering nest-building birds, the sun so glad some, the breezes with such healing on their wings, all good and lovely things are beneath me, above me, and everywhere around me, and all from God, while my incapability of enjoying, or, at best, languor in receiving them, is directly or indirectly from myself, from past procrastination, and cowardly impatience of pain"—Coleridge, in Letter to Lady Beaumont, March 18, 1826.

THE GARDEN OF BOCCACCIO

This poem was first published in The Age of sake for 1829, to accompany The Garden of Boccaccio, an engraving by Thomas Stothard (1755-1834), an English painter and illustrator. Boccaccio was a noted Italian writer of the 14th century

369. 100. "I know few more striking or more interesting proofs of the overwhelming influence which the study of the Greek and Roman classics exercised on the judgments, feelings, and imaginations of the literati of Europe at the commencement of the restoration of literature, than the passage in the Filicopo of Boccaccio, where the sage instructor, Racheo, as soon as the young prince and the beautiful girl Biancofiore had learned their letters, sets them to study the Iliad Book, Ovid's Art of Love."—Coleridge's note

PHANTOM OR FACT

"This picture of the poet's spiritual youth returning from heaven, and at the same time not recognizing its former dwelling-place is full of the most piteous pathos yet imagined. It is a bit of darkness from the depths of his soul. It is full of the mystery of Hamlet's riddling speeches."—George, in Select Poems (1902)

370.

THE WANDERINGS OF CAIN

"A prose composition, one not in metre at least, seems prima facie to require explanation or apology. It was written in the year 1798, near Nether Stowey, in Somersetshire, at which place (sanctum et amabile nomen! rich by so many associations and recollections) the author had taken up his residence in order to enjoy the society and close neighborhood of a dear and honored friend, T. Poole, Esq. The work was to have been written in concert with another [Wordsworth], whose name is too venerable within the precincts of genius to be unnecessarily brought into connection with such a trifle, and who was then residing at a small distance from Nether Stowey. The title and subject were suggested by myself, who likewise drew out the scheme and the contents for each of the three books or cantos, of which the work was to consist, and which, the reader is to be informed, was to have been finished in one night! My partner undertook the first canto. I the second and which ever had done first, was to set about the third. Almost thirty years have passed by, yet at this moment I cannot without something more than a smile moot the question which of the two things was the more impracticable, for a mind so eminently original to compose another man's thoughts and fancies, or for a taste so austere pure and simple to imitate The Death of Abel? Methinks I see his grand and noble countenance as at the moment when having despatched my own portion of the task at full finger-speed, I hastened to him with my manuscript—that look of humorous despondency fixed on his almost blank sheet of paper, and then its silent mock-piteous admission of failure struggling with the sense of the exceeding ridiculousness of the whole scheme—which broke up in a laugh and The Ancient Mariner was written instead

"Years afterward, however, the draft of the plan and proposed incidents, and the portion executed, obtained favor in the eyes of more than one person, whose judgment on a poetic work could not but have weighed with me, even though no parental partiality had been thrown into the same scale, as a make weight. and I determined on commencing anew, and composing the whole in stanzas, and made some progress in realizing this intention, when adverse gales drove my bark off the 'Fortunate Isles' of the Muses, and then other and more momentous interests prompted a different voyage, to firmer anchorage and a securer port. I have in vain tried to recover the lines from the pallid tablet of my memory and I can only offer the introductory stanza, which had been committed to writing for the purpose of procuring a friend's judgment on the metre, as a specimen —

Enclinctured with a twine of leaves,
That leafy twine his only dress!
A lovely boy was plucking fruits
By moonlight, in a wilderness
The moon was bright, the air was free,
And fruits and flowers together grew
(On many a shrub and many a tree
And all put on a gentle hue,
Hanging in the shadowy air
Like a picture rich and rare
It was a climate where, they say,
The night is more beloved than day
But who that beauteous boy beguiled,
That beauteous boy to linger here?
Alone, by night, a little child,
In place so silent and so wild—
Has he no friend, no loving mother near?

"I have here given the birth, parentage, and premature decease of The Wanderings of Cain, a Poem,—intreating, however, my readers, not to think so meanly of my judgment as to suppose that I either regard or offer it as any excuse for the publication of the following fragment (and I may add, of one or two others in its neighborhood) in its primitive crudity. But I should find still greater difficulty in forgiving myself were I to record pro tudio publico a set of petty mishaps and annoyances which I myself wish to forget. I must be content therefore with assuring the friendly reader, that the less he attributes its appearance to the author's will, choice, or judgment, the nearer to the truth he will be."—Coleridge (1828)

The Death of Abel is a drama by Solomon Gessner (1780-88), a Swiss poet and painter.

372. BIOGRAPHIA LITERARIA

"It has been my lot to have had my name introduced both in conversation, and in print, more frequently than I find it easy to explain, whether I consider the fewness, unimportance, and limited circulation of my writings, or the retirement and distance, in which I have lived; both from the literary and political world. Most often it has been connected with some charge which I could not acknowledge, or some principle which I had never entertained. Nevertheless, had I had no other motive or incitement, the reader would not have been troubled with this exculpation. What my additional purposes were, will be seen in the following pages. It will be found, that the least of what I have written concerns myself personally. I have used the narration chiefly for the purpose of giving a continuity to the work, in part for the sake of the miscellaneous reflections suggested to me by particular events, but still more as introductory to a statement of my principles in politics, religion, and philosophy, and an application of the rules, deduced from philosophical principles, to poetry and criticism. But of the objects, which I proposed to myself, it was not the least important to effect, as far as possible, a settlement of the long continued controversy concerning the true nature of poetic diction; and at the same time to define with the utmost impartiality the real poetic character of the poet, by whose writings this controversy was first kindled, and has been since fuelled and fanned."—Opening paragraph of Biographia Literaria, ch. 1.

375. In Chapter 15 is discussed the symptoms of poetic power as elucidated in an analysis of Shakspeare's Perseus and Adonis and Lucrece; Chapter 16 considers the points of difference between the poets of the early 19th century and those of the 15th and 16th centuries

378a. 49-51. See Her Eyes Are Wild (p 229). The following stanzas are from The Idiot Boy.

'Tis eight o'clock,—a clear March night,
The moon is up,—the sky is blue,
The owl, in the moonlight air,
Shouts from nobody knows where;
He lengthens out his lonely shout,
Hailoo! hailoo! a long hailoo!

—Why bustle thus about your door,
What means this bustle, Betty Foy?
Why are you in this mighty fret?
And why on horseback have you set
Him whom you love, your Idiot Boy?

Scarcely a soul is out of bed;
Good Betty, put him down again;
His lips with joy they burr at you;
But, Betty! what has he to do
With stirrup, saddle, or with rein?

But Betty's bent on her intent;
For her good neighbor Susan Gale,
Old Susan, she who dwells alone,
Is sick, and makes a piteous moan,
As if her very life would fall.

There's not a house within a mile,
No hand to help them in distress;
Old Susan lies a-bed in pain,
And sorely puzzled are the twain,
For what she ails they cannot guess.

And Betty's husband's at the wood,
Where by the week he doth abide,
A woodman in the distant vale,
There's none to help poor Susan Gale,
What must be done? what will betide?

And Betty from the lane has fetched
Her pony, that is mild and good,
Whether he be in joy or pain,
Feeding at will along the lane,
Or bringing fagots from the wood.

And he is all in travelling trim,—
And, by the moonlight, Betty Foy
Has on the well-girt saddle set
(The like was never heard of yet)
Him whom she loves, her Idiot Boy.

And he must post without delay
Across the bridge and through the dale,
And by the church, and o'er the down,
To bring a doctor from the town,
Or she will die, old Susan Gale.

There is no need of boot or spur,
There is no need of whip or wand,
For Johnny has his holly-bough,
And with a hurly-burly now
He shakes the green bough in his hand.

And Betty o'er and o'er has told
The Boy, who is her best delight,
Both what to follow, what to shun,
What do, and what to leave undone,
How turn to left, and how to right

And Betty's most especial charge,
Was, "Johnny! Johnny! mind that you
Come home again, nor stop at all,—
Come home again, whate'er befall,
My Johnny, do, I pray you, do."

To this did Johnny answer make,
Both with his head and with his hand,
And proudly shook the bridle too,
And then ' his words were not a few,
Which Betty well could understand

And now that Johnny is just going,
Though Betty's in a mighty flurry,
She gently pats the pony's side,
On which her Idiot Boy must ride,
And seems no longer in a hurry

But when the pony moved his legs,
Oh! then for the poor Idiot Boy!
For joy he cannot hold the bridle,
For joy his head and heels are idle,
He's idle all for very joy

And, while the pony moves his legs,
In Johnny's left hand you may see
The green bough motionless and dead
The moon that shines above his head
Is not more still and mute than he

His heart it was so full of glee
That, till full fifty yards were gone,
He quite forgot his holly whip,
And all his skill in horsemanship
Oh! happy, happy, happy John.

And while the mother, at the door,
Stands fixed, her face with joy o'erruns,
Proud of herself, and proud of him,
She sees him in his travelling trim,
How quietly her Johnny goes.

The silence of her Idiot Boy,
What hopes it sends to Betty's heart!
He's at the guide-post—he turns right;
She watches till he's out of sight,
And Betty will not then depart

Burr, burr—now Johnny's lips they burr,
As loud as any mill, or near it,
Meek as a lamb the pony moves,
And Johnny makes the noise he loves,
And Betty listens, glad to hear it.

Away she hies to Susan Gale:
Her Messenger's in merry tune;
The owlets hoot, the owlets curr,
And Johnny's lips they burr, burr, burr,
As on he goes beneath the moon

381. Chapter 18.—Coleridge's prefatory summary of Chapter 18 is all that is omitted here

382. The rest of Chapter 18 contains a discussion of the origin and elements of meter

Chapters 19-21 are concerned with an examination and application of Wordsworth's object as expressed in the Preface to the Lyrical Ballads

384b. 5. Prefatory letter to Hobbes—William Davenant (1605-68) an English poet and dramatist, addressed the Preface to Gondibert (1650) to his friend Thomas Hobbes (1588-1679), a celebrated English philosopher

395a. 48. Cf. Chapman's An Humorous Day's Mirth, 8, 225 "Black is a pearl in a woman's eye"

WILLIAM COLLINS (1721-1759) p. 48

EDITIONS

Poetical Works, ed by W M Thomas (Aldine ed London, Bell, 1871, New York, Macmillan)

Poems, ed, with a Life and Critical Study, by W C Bronson (Athenaeum Press ed Boston, Ginn, 1898)

Poems, with Johnson, Goldsmith, and Gray, ed
by T M Ward (Muses' Library ed; London, Routledge, 1905, New York, Dutton)

Poems, ed by C Stone (Oxford Univ. Press, 1907)

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

Athenaeum, The, Jan 5, 1856

70 Hazlitt, W. "On Swift, Young, Gray, Collins, Etc.," Lectures on the English Poets (London, 1818), Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06; New York, McClure), 5, 104

75 Johnson, S. The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81), 3 vols, ed by G B Hill (London, Clarendon Press, 1905)

80 Montégut, Emile Recours de Lecture d'un Critique
(Paris, 1891)

Perry, T S "Gray, Collins, and Beattie," The Atlantic Monthly, Dec, 1880 (46 810)

85 Shairp, J C "Nature in Collins, Gray, Goldsmith, Cowper and Burns," On Poetic Interpretation of Nature (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1877; New York, Hurd, 1878; Boston, Houghton, 1885)

90 Swinburne, A C Miscellanies (London, Chatto, 1886, 1911, New York, Scribner)

CRITICAL NOTES

95 "Have you seen the works of two young authors, a Mr. Warton and Mr. Collins, both writers of odes? It is odd enough, but each is the half of a considerable man, and one the counterpart of the other. The first has but little invention, very poetical choice of expression, and a good ear; the second, a fine fancy, modelled upon the antique, a bad ear, great variety of words and images, with no choice at all. They both deserve to last some years, but will not"—Gray, in Letter to Wharton, Dec 27, 1746

"He loved fairies, genii, giants, and monsters, he delighted to rove through the meanders of enchantment, to gaze on the magnificence of golden palaces, to repose by the water-falls of Elysian gardens. This was, however, the character rather of his inclination than his genius, the grandeur of wildness and the novelty of extravagance were always desired by him, but not always attained. Yet, as diligence is never wholly lost, if his efforts sometimes caused harshness and obscurity, they likewise produced in happier moments sublimity and splendor. This idea which he had formed of excellence led him to oriental fictions and allegorical imagery, and perhaps, while he was intent upon description, he did not sufficiently cultivate sentiment . . . His diction was often harsh, unskillfully labored, and injudiciously selected. He affected the obsolete when it was not worthy of revival, and he puts his words out of the common order, seeming to think, with some later candidates for fame, that not to write prose is certainly to write poetry. His lines commonly are of slow motion, clogged and impeded with clusters of consonants. As men are often esteemed who cannot be loved, so the poetry of Collins may sometimes extort praise when it gives little pleasure"—Samuel Johnson, in "Collins," The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81).

"There are very few poets from whose wheat so little chaff has been winnowed as from that of Collins. His entire existing work does not extend to much more than fifteen hundred lines, at least two thirds of which must live with the best poetry of the century. Collins has the touch of a sculptor, his verse is clearly cut and direct, it is marble pure, but also marble cold. Each phrase is a wonder of felicitous workmanship, without emphasis, without sense of strain. His best strophes possess an extraordinary quiet melody, a soft harmonious smoothness as of some divine and aerial creature singing in artless, perfect numbers for its own delight"—Gosse, in A History of Eighteenth Century Literature (1888)

49. ODE ON THE POETICAL CHARACTER

This is supposed to be modeled on the Greek odes of Pindar, which were divided into a strophe and antistrophe of identical form, and an epode, or after-song, of different form. The strophe originally was the movement of the chorus in the Greek choral dance from the right to the left of the orchestra; the antistrophe was the return movement.

55 ff. The cliff is symbolical of Milton's poetry.

50. ODE WRITTEN IN THE BEGINNING OF THE YEAR 1746

This ode probably commemorates the English who had fallen in recent battles at Fontenoy, Belgium (May 11, 1745), in a battle with the French in the War of the Austrian Succession, at Prestonpans, Scotland (Sept. 21, 1745), and at Falkirk, Scotland (Jan. 17, 1746), in battles with the forces of Charles Edward Stuart, the Young Pretender. In all of these battles, the English were defeated with enormous losses.

ODE TO EVENING

"The most perfect and original poem of Collins, as well as the most finely appreciative of nature, is his Ode to Evening. No doubt evening is personified in his address as 'mild composed,' and 'calm votaries,' but the personification is so delicately handled, and in so subdued a tone, that it does not jar on the feelings as such personifications too often do.

There is about the whole ode a subdued twilight tone, a remoteness from men and human things, and a pensive evening musing, all the more expressive, because it does not shape itself into definite thoughts, but reposes in appropriate images"—Shairp, in On Poetic Interpretation of Nature (1877) 9-12. Cf. Macbeth, III, 2, 40-43

Ere the bat hath flown
His cloistered flight, are to black Hecate's summons
The shard-borne beetle with his drowsy hums
Hath rung night's yawning peal.

51.

THE PASSIONS

52. 95. Sphere descended—Heaven descended
109. Recording sister—Clio, the Muse of history

ON THE DEATH OF MR THOMSON

This poem is an elegy on James Thomson, the poet. See p. 18.

53. AN ODE ON THE POPULAR SUPERSTITIONS OF THE HIGHLANDS OF SCOTLAND

This poem, which was left unfinished by Collins was not published until after his death. Soon after it appeared in its incomplete form, what purported to be a perfect copy of the ode as revised by Collins was published in London. The bracketed passages in the text are supplied from this version, which is the one usually adopted.

"The whole Romantic School, in its germ, no doubt, but yet unmistakably foreshadowed, lies already in the Ode on the Superstitions of the Highlands. He [Collins] was the first to bring back into poetry something of the antique fervor, and found again the long-lost secret of being classically elegant without being pedantically cold"—Lowell, in "Pope," My Study Window (1871)

56. 192-205. Jerusalem Delivered, by the Italian poet Torquato Tasso (1544-95), was translated into English by Fairfax in 1600. The following stanzas (18-41-48, 46) explain the allusions in Collins's lines.

He drew his sword at last and gave the tree
A mightie blow, that made a gaping wound,
Out of the rift red streames he trickling see
That all beebled the verdant plaine around,
His haire start vp, yet once againe stroake he,
He would glue ouer till the end he found
Of this aduerture, when with plaint and mone,
(As from some hollow graue) he heard one grone.

Enough enough the voice lamenting said,
Tendered thou hast me hurt, thou didst me
driue
Out of the bodie of a noble maid,
Who with me liu'd, whom late I kept on liue,
And now within this woeful Cypress laid,
My tender rinde thy weapon sharpe doth rue,
Cruell, I't not enough thy foes to kill,
But in their graues wilt thou torment them
still?

I was Clorinda, now imprison'd heere,
(Yet not alone) within this plant I dwell,
For euerie Pagan Lord and Christian peere,
Before the citie wall'd last day that fell,
(In bodie new or graue, I wote not cleere)
But here they are confin'd by magikes spell,
So that each tree hath life, and sense such as thou,
A murderer if thou cut one twist art thou
Thus his fierce hart which death had scorned oft,
Whom no strange shape, or monster could dismay,
With fained shewes of tender loue made soft,
A spirit false did with vaine plaints betray,
A whirling winde his sword beaue vp aloft,
And through the Forrest bare it quite away

"BARRY CORNWALL" (See PROCTER)

WILLIAM COWPER (1731-1800), p. 145

EDITIONS

- Works*, 15 vols, ed., with a Life, by R. Southey (London, Baldwin, 1830-37)
Poetical Works, 8 vols, ed., with a Memoir by T. Mitford, by J. Bruce (Aldine ed London, Bell, 1830-31, 1865, New York, Macmillan)
Poetical Works, ed., with a Biographical Introduction, by W. Benham (Globe ed London, Macmillan, 1870)
Poems, 2 vols, ed by H. T. Griffith (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1874)
Poems, ed. by H. S. Milford (Oxford Univ. Press, 1906)
Selections from the Poetical Works, ed., with an Introduction, by J. O. Murray (Athenæum Press ed Boston, Ginn, 1898).
Unpublished and Uncollected Poems, ed by T. Wright (Cameo Poets ed London, Collins, 1900)
Letters, ed by W. Benham (Golden Treasury ed : London, Macmillan, 1884)
Correspondence, 4 vols, ed by T. Wright (London, Hodder, 1904; New York, Dodd).
Letters, selected and edited by E. V. Lucas (World's Classics ed : Oxford Univ. Press, 1908, 1911)
Selected Letters, 2 vols, ed., with a Memoir, by J. G. Fraser (New York, Macmillan, 1912)

BIOGRAPHY

- Smith, G. Cowper (English Men of Letters Series : London, Macmillan, 1880; New York, Harper)

- Wright, T. The Life of Cowper (London, Unwin, 1902).

CRITICISM

- Bagehot, W. The National Review, July, 1855; Literary Studies, 3 vols., ed. by R. H. Hutton (London and New York, Longmans, 1878-79, 1895).
Birrell, A. Res Judicate (London, Stock, 1892, New York, Scribner).
Brooke, S. A. Theology in the English Poets (London, King, 1874; New York, Dutton, 1910).
Cheever, G. R. Lectures on the Life, Genius, and Insanity of Cowper (London, Nisbet, 1856)
Dobson, Austin Eighteenth Century Vignettes (London, Chatto, 1892, New York, Dodd)
Dowden, E. "Cowper and William Hayley," Essays Modern and Elizabethan (London, Dent, 1910, New York, Dutton)
Hazlitt, W. "On Thomson and Cowper," Lectures on the English Poets (London, 1818), Collected Works, ed Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure), 5, 85
Jeffrey, F. "Hayley's Life of Cowper," The Edinburgh Review, April, 1803 (2 64)
More, P. E. "The Correspondence of William Cowper," Shelburne Essays, Third Series (New York and London, Putnam, 1906)
Norman, H. J. "Melancholy of Cowper," The Westminster Review, June, 1911 (175 638)
North American Review, The, A review of "British Poetry at the Close of the Last Century, 4 vols.," Jan 1836 (42 67)
Sainte-Beuve, C. A. Causeries du Lundi, Vol 9 (Paris, 1854), English trans by K. P. Wormeley, as Portraits of the Eighteenth Century (New York, Putnam, 1905) and by E. Lee, as Essays of Sainte Beuve (Camelot Series ed London Scott, 1892)
Shalrp, J. C. "Nature in Collins, Gray, Goldsmith, Cowper, and Burns" On Poetic Interpretation of Nature (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1877; New York, Hurd, 1878, Boston, Houghton, 1885).
Shorter, C. K. Immortal Memories (New York, Harper, 1907)
Steele, F. W. "Catholicism and English Literature in the Eighteenth Century" The American Catholic Quarterly Review, Oct., 1911 (86 634).
Stephen, L. "Cowper and Rousseau," Hours in a Library, 3 vols (London, Smith, 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1899), 4 vols., (1907)
Woodberry, G. E. "Three Men of Piety," Makers of Literature (New York, Macmillan, 1901).

CONCORDANCE

- Neve, J. A Concordance to the Poetical Works of William Cowper (London, Low, 1887)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Murray, J. O. In Selections from the Poetical Works of William Cowper (Athenæum Press ed ; Boston, Ginn, 1898)

CRITICAL NOTES

"What a world are you daily conversant with, which I have not seen these twenty years, and shall never see again' The arts of dissipation (I suppose) are nowhere practiced with more refinement or success than at the place of your present residence. By your account of it, it seems to be just what it was when I visited it, a scene of idleness and luxury, music, dancing, cards, walking, riding, bathing, eating, drinking, coffee, tea, scandal, dressing, yawning, sleeping, the rooms perhaps more magnificent, because the proprietors are grown richer, but the manners and occupations of the company just the same. Though my life has long been like that of a recluse, I have not the temper of one, nor am I in the least an enemy to cheerfulness and good humor, but I cannot envy you your situation. I even feel myself constrained to prefer the silence of this nook, and the snug fireside in our own diminutive parlor, to all the splendor and gaiety of Brighton

"You ask me, how I feel on the occasion of my approaching publication. Perfectly at my ease. If I had not been pretty well assured beforehand that my tranquillity would be but little endangered by such a measure, I would never have engaged in it, for I cannot bear disturbance. I have had in view two principal objects, first, to amuse myself,—and secondly, to compass that point in such a manner, that others might possibly be the better for my amusement. If I have succeeded, it will give me pleasure, but if I have failed, I shall not be mortified to the degree that might perhaps be expected. I remember an old adage (though not where it is to be found), 'Œne viuit, qui Œne latuit,' [he has lived well who has kept hidden (Ovid, Tristia, III, 4, 25)], and if I had recollected it at the right time, it should have been the motto to my book. By the way, it will make an excellent one for Retirement, if you can but tell me whom to quote for it. The critics cannot deprive me of the pleasure I have in reflecting, that so far as my leisure has been employed in writing for the public, it has been conscientiously employed, and with a view to their advantage. There is nothing agreeable, to be sure, in being chronicled for a dunce, but I believe there lives not a man upon earth who would be less affected by it than myself. With all this indifference to fame, which you know me too well to suppose me capable of affecting, I have taken the utmost pains to deserve it. This may appear a mystery or a paradox in practice, but it is true. I considered that the taste of the day is refined, and delicate to excess, and that to disgust the delicacy of taste by a slovenly inattention to it, would be to forfeit at once all hope of being useful, and for this reason, though I have written more verse this last year than perhaps any man in England, I have finished, and polished, and touched, and retouched, with the utmost care. If after all I should be converted into waste paper, it may be my misfortune, but it will not be my fault. I shall bear it with the most perfect serenity."—Cowper, in Letter to the Rev. William Unwin, Oct. 6, 1781.

"Your fear lest I should think you unworthy of my correspondence, on account of your delay to answer, may change sides now, and more properly belongs to me. It is long since I received your last, and yet I believe I can say truly, that not a post has gone by me since the receipt of it that has not reminded me of the debt I owe you, for your obliging and unreserved communications both in prose and verse, especially for the latter, because I consider them as marks of your peculiar confidence. The truth is, I have been such a verse-maker, myself, and so busy in preparing a volume for the press, which I imagine will make its appearance in the course of the winter, that I hardly had leisure to listen to the calls of any other engagement. It is however finished, and gone to the printers, and I have nothing now to do with it, but to correct the sheets as they are sent to me, and consign it over to the judgment of the public. It is a bold undertaking at this time of day, when so many writers of the greatest abilities have gone before, who seem to have anticipated every valuable subject, as well as all the graces of poetical embellishment, to step forth into the world in the character of a bard, especially when it is considered that luxury, idleness, and vice, have debauched the public taste, and that nothing hardly is welcome but childish fiction, or what has at least a tendency to excite a laugh. I thought, however, that I had stumbled upon some subjects, that had never before been poetically treated, and upon some others, to which I imagined it would not be difficult to give an air of novelty by the manner of treating them. My sole drift is to be useful, a point which however I knew I should in vain aim at, unless I could be likewise entertaining. I have therefore fixed these two strings upon my bow, and by the help of both have done my best to send my arrow to the mark. My readers will hardly have begun to laugh, before they will be called upon to correct that levity, and peruse me with a more serious air. As to the effect, I leave it alone in His hands, who can alone produce it: neither prose nor verse can reform the manners of a dissolute age, much less can they inspire a sense of religious obligation, unless assisted and made efficacious by the power who superintends the truth. He has vouchsafed to impart."—Cowper, in Letter to Mr. Cowper, his cousin, Oct. 19, 1781.

"I did not write the line that has been tampered with, hastily, or without due attention to the construction of it, and what appeared to me its only merit is, in its present state, entirely annihilated.

"I know that the ears of modern verse-writers are delicate to an excess, and their readers are troubled with the same squeamishness as themselves. So that if a line do not run as smooth as quicksilver they are offended. A critic of the present day serves a poem as a cook serves a dead turkey, when she fastens the legs of it to a post, and draws out all the sinews. For this we may thank Pope; but unless we could imitate him in the closeness and compactness of his expression, as well as in the smoothness of his numbers, we had better drop the imitation, which serves no other purpose than to emaculate and weaken all we write. Give me a manly, rough line, with a deal of meaning in it, rather than a whole poem full of musical periods, that have nothing but their oily smoothness to recommend them!

"I have said thus much, as I hinted in the beginning, because I have just finished a much longer poem than the last, which our common friend will receive by the same messenger that has the charge of this letter. In that poem there are many lines, which an ear, so nice as the gentleman's who made the above-mentioned alteration, would undoubtedly condemn, and yet (if I may be permitted to say it) they cannot be made smoother without being the worse for it. There is a roughness on a plum, which nobody that understands fruit would rub off, though the plum would be much more polished without it. But lest I tire you, I will only add, that I wish you to guard me from all such meddling, assuring you that I always write as smoothly as I can, but that I never did, never will, sacrifice the spirit or sense of a passage to the sound of it"—Cowper, in Letter to Mr Johnson, his publisher, undated (No. 330 in Lucas's ed.).

145.

OLNEY HYMNS

This was a collection of hymns written by Cowper and John Newton at Olney, Cowper's residence in Buckinghamshire from 1767 to 1780.

"The profound personal religion, gloomy even to insanity as it often became, which fills the whole of Cowper's poetry, introduced a theological element into English poetry which continually increased till it died out with Browning and Tennyson"—Stopford Brooke, in English Literature (1880).

LIGHT SHINING OUT OF DARKNESS

This hymn is often entitled God Moves in a Mysterious Way. According to legend, Cowper one day proposed to commit suicide at a certain place as a sacrifice required of God, but as the driver of the vehicle could not find the place, Cowper returned home and composed this poem.

THE TASK

"The history of the following production is briefly this—A lady, fond of blank verse, demanded a poem of that kind from the author, and gave him the Sofa for a subject. He obeyed, and, having much leisure, connected another subject with it, and, pursuing the train of thought to which his situation and turn of mind led him, brought forth at length, instead of the trifle which he at first intended, a serious affair—a Volume!"—From Cowper's prefatory Advertisement. The lady referred to was Mrs. Austin, a friend of Cowper.

"I send you four quires of verse [The Task], which having sent, I shall dismiss from my thoughts, and think no more of, till I see them in print. I have not after all found time or industry enough to give the last hand to the points. I believe, however, they are not very erroneous, though in so long a work, and in a work that requires nicety in this particular, some inaccuracies will escape. Where you find any, you will oblige me by correcting them.

"In some passages, especially in the Second Book, you will observe me very satirical. Writing on such subjects I could not be otherwise. I can write nothing without aiming at usefulness. It were beneath my years to do it, and still more dishonorable to my religion. I know that a reformation of such abuses as I have censured is not to be expected from the efforts of a poet, but to contemplate the world, its follies, its vices, its indifference to duty, and its strenuous attachment to what is evil, and not to reprehend were to approve it. From this charge at least I shall be clear, for I have neither tacitly nor expressly flattered either its characters or its customs. I have paid one, and only one compliment, which was so justly due, that I did not know how to withhold it, especially having so fair an occasion,—I forget myself, there is another in the First Book to Mr Throckmorton,—but the compliment I mean is to Mr Smith. It is, however, so managed, that nobody but himself can make the application, and you, to whom I disclose the secret, a delicacy on my part, which so much delicacy on his obliged me to the observance of.

"What there is of a religious cast in the volume I have thrown towards the end of it, for two reasons, first, that I might not revolt the reader at his entrance—and secondly, that my best impressions might be made last. Were I to write as many volumes as Lope de Vega, or Voltaire, not one of them would be without this tincture. If the world like it not, so much the worse for them. I make all the concessions I can, that I may please them, but I will not please them at the expense of conscience.

"My descriptions are all from nature—not one of them second-handed. My delineations of the heart are from my own experience—not one of them borrowed from books, or in the least degree conjectural. In my numbers, which I have varied as much as I could (for blank verse without variety of numbers is no better than bladder and string), I have imitated nobody, though sometimes perhaps there may be an apparent resemblance, because at the same time that I would not imitate, I have not affectedly differed.

"If the work cannot boast a regular plan (in which respect, however, I do not think it altogether indefensible), it may yet boast, that the reflections are naturally suggested always by the preceding passage, and that except in the Fifth Book, which is rather of a political aspect, the whole has one tendency, to discountenance the modern enthusiasm after a London life, and to recommend rural ease and leisure, as friendly to the cause of piety and virtue"—Cowper, in Letter to the Rev William Unwin, Oct 10, 1784 Throckmorton and Smith were friends of Cowper Lope de Vega, a Spanish dramatist and poet of the 17th century, is said to have written 1800 plays, besides 400 poems Voltaire was a prolific French writer of the 18th century

"How do you like Cowper? Is not The Task a glorious poem? The religion of The Task, bating a few scraps of Calvinist divinity, is the religion of God and nature, the religion that exalts, that ennobles man"—Robert Burns, in Letter to Mrs. Dunlop, Dec 25, 1795.

"I have been reading The Task with fresh delight I am glad you love Cowper I could forgive a man for not enjoying Milton, but I would not call that man my friend, who should be offended with the divine chit-chat of 'Cowper'"—Lamb, in Letter to Coleridge, Dec 5, 1796 The phrase quoted by Lamb was Coleridge's

"Is the kitchen-garden indeed poetical? To-day, perhaps, but tomorrow, if my imagination is barren I shall see there nothing but carrots and other kitchen stuff It is my sensation which is poetic, which I must respect, as the most precious flower of beauty Hence a new style It is no longer a question, after the old oratorical fashion, of boxing up a subject in a regular plan, dividing it into symmetrical portions, arranging ideas into files, like the pieces on a draught-board Cowper takes the first subject that comes to hand— one which Lady Austin gave him at haphazard—The Sofa, and speaks about it for a couple of pages, then he goes whither the bent of his mind leads him, describing a winter evening, a number of interiors and landscapes, mingling here and there all kinds of moral reflections, stories, dissertations, opinions, confidences, like a man who thinks aloud before the most intimate and beloved of his friends "The best didactic poems," says Southey [Life of Cowper, I 341], 'when compared with The Task are like formal gardens in comparison with woodland scenery.' This is his great poem, The Task. If we enter into details, the contrast is greater still He does not seem to dream that he is being listened to, he only speaks to himself He does not dwell on his ideas, to set them in relief, and make them stand out by repetitions and antitheses, he marks his sensation and that is all We follow it in him as it is born, and we see it rising from a former one swelling, falling, remounting as we see vapor issuing from a spring, and insensibly rising, unrolling, and developing its shifting forms Thought, which in others was curdled and rigid, becomes here mobile and fluent, the rectilinear verse grows flexible, the noble vocabulary widens its scope to let in vulgar words of conversation and life At length poetry has again become lifelike, we no longer listen to words, but we feel emotions, it is no longer an author but a man who speaks. His life is there perfect, beneath its black lines, without falsehood or concoction, his whole effort is bent on removing falsehood and concoction When he describes his little river, his dear Ouse, 'slow winding through a level plain of spacious meads, with cattle sprinkled o'er' [The Task, I, 163-64 (p 146)], he sees it with his inner eye, and each word, measure, sound, answers to a change of that inner vision It is so in all his verses they are full of personal emotions, genuinely felt, never altered or disguised; on the contrary, fully expressed, with their transient shades and fluctuations; in a word, as they are, that is, in the process of production and destruction, not all complete, motionless, and fixed, as the old style represented them. Herein consists the great revolution of the modern style The mind, outstripping the known rules of rhetoric and eloquence, penetrates into profound psychology, and no longer employs words except to mark emotions"—Taine, in History of English Literature, Book 4, ch 1

148. 500 ff. Cf. Blake's The Book of Thel, 93 ff. (p 170).

THE POPULAR-FIELD

"People nowadays, I believe, hold this style and metre light, I wish there were anyone who could put words together with such exquisite flow and evenness"—Palgrave, in Personal Recollections, printed in Alfred Lord Tennyson, A Memoir by his Son (1897)

149. ON THE RECEIPT OF MY MOTHER'S PICTURE OUT OF NORFOLK

"I have lately received from a female cousin of mine in Norfolk, whom I have not seen these thirty years, a picture of my own mother She died when I wanted two days of being six years old, yet I remember her perfectly, find the picture a strong likeness of her, because her memory has been ever precious to me, have written a poem on the receipt of it a poem which, one excepted, I had more pleasure in writing, than any that I ever wrote That one was addressed to a lady whom I expect in a few minutes to come down to breakfast, and who has supplied to me the place of my own mother—my own invaluable mother, these six-and-twenty years. Some sons may be said to have had many fathers—but a plurality of mothers is not common —Cowper, in Letter to Mrs. King March 12, 1790

Cowper refers to Miss Unwin, the poem addressed to her is To Mary (p 153)

150. 46 ff. Cf this passage with the following stanza from Tennyson's In Memoriam (102, 1-4)

We leave the well-beloved place
Where first we gazed upon the sky.
The roof, that heard our earliest cry,
Will shelter one of stranger race

181. YARDLEY OAK

Elton regards this fragment as the best work of Cowper's imagination. (4 Survey of English Literature, 1780-1830 1, 84) The tree described in this poem stood in Yardley hunting ground, near Cowper's house in Buck inghamshire, England. It was nearly 23 feet in girth, it is said to have been planted by the daughter of William the Conqueror.

183. 148. The following lines, crossed through in the manuscript, are sometimes printed in the poem between lines 143 and 144

Thou, like myself, hast stage by stage at-tain'd
Life's wintry bourn, thou, after many years,
I after few, but few or many prove
A span in retrospect, for I can touch
With my least finger's end my own decease
And with extended thumb my natal hour,
And hadst thou also skill in measurement
As I, the past would seem as short to thee
Evil and few—said Jacob—at an age
Thrice mine, and few and evil, I may think
The Prediluvian race, whose buxom youth
Endured two centuries, accounted theirs
"Shortliv'd as foliage is the race of man
The wind shakes down the leaves, the bud ding grove
Soon teems with others, and in spring they grow
So pass mankind. One generation meets its destin'd period, and a new succeeds"
Such was the tender but undue complaint
Of the Mæonian in old time, for who Would drawl out centuries in tedious strife
Severe with mental and corporeal ill
And would not rather chuse a shorter race
To glory, a few decads here below?

The quoted lines are from Cowper's translation of the Iliad, 6, 175-79. The Mæonian is Homer, reputed to have been a native of ancient Mæonia, in Lydia, Asia Minor

TO MARY

This poem is addressed to Mrs Mary Unwin, Cowper's friend and companion for thirty-four years. See above note on On the Receipt of my Mother's Picture

GEORGE CRABBE (1754-1832), p. 154

EDITIONS

- Poetical Works*, 8 vols., ed., with his Letters and Journals and a Life, by his son (London, Murray, 1834), in 1 vol (1901)
Poems, 8 vols., ed. by A. W. Ward (Cambridge English Classics ed. Cambridge Univ Press, 1905-07, New York, Putnam)
Poetical Works, ed., with a Critical Introduction by A. J. and B. M. Carlyle (Oxford Univ Press, 1914).
Selections from the Poems, ed., with an Introduction, by A. Deane (London, Methuen, 1908).

BIOGRAPHY

- Ainger, A. Crabbe (English Men of Letters Series New York and London, Macmillan, 1903)

- Broadley, A. M. and Jerrold, W. The Romance of an Elderly Poet (London, Paul, 1913).
Huchon, B.: Un Poète Réaliste, George Crabbe (Paris, 1906), English trans. by F. Clarke, as George Crabbe and His Times (New York, Dutton, 1907)
Kebbel, T. E. Life of George Crabbe (Great Writers Series London, Scott, 1888)

CRITICISM

- Brooke, S. A. "From Pope to Cowper," Theology in the English Poets (London, King, 1874, New York, Dutton, 1910)
Collins, J. C. "The Poetry of Crabbe," The Fortnightly Review, Oct., 1907 (82 575)
Elton, O. "The Poetry of Crabbe," Blackwood's Magazine, Jan., 1909 (185 78)
Gifford, W. "The Borough," The Quarterly Review, Nov., 1810 (4 281)
Harlitt, W. "Mr Campbell and Mr Crabbe," The Spirit of the Age (London, 1825), "On Thomson and Cowper," Lectures on the English Poets (London, 1818), Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure), 4, 343; 5, 85.
Hutton, W. H. "Some Memories of Crabbe," Cornhill Magazine, June, 1901 (63 750)
Jeffrey, J. Criticisms in The Edinburgh Review—"The Borough," April, 1810 (16 30), "Poems," April, 1808 (12 131), "Tales in Verse," Nov., 1812 (20 277), "Tales of the Hall," July, 1819 (32 116)
Lockhart, J. G. "Life and Poems of Crabbe," The Quarterly Review, Jan., 1824 (50 408)
More, P. E. "A Plea for Crabbe," The Atlantic Monthly, Dec., 1901 (88 850)
More, P. E. Shelburne Essays, First Series (New York and London, Putnam, 1906)
Saintsbury, G. Essays in English Literature, 1780-1860, First Series (London, Percival, 1890, New York, Scribner)
Shorter, C. K. Immortal Memories (New York, Harper, 1907)
Stephen, L. Hours in a Library, 3 vols. (London, Smith, 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1899), 4 vols. (1907).
Symonds, A. The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909, New York, Dutton)
Walpole, S. Essays, Political and Biographical (New York, Dutton, 1908).
Woodberry, G. E. "A Neglected Poet," The Atlantic Monthly, May, 1880 (45 624), Makers of Literature (New York, Macmillan, 1901)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, J. P.: In Kebbel's Life of George Crabbe (1888)
Bartholomew, A. T. In Poems by George Crabbe, ed. by A. W. Ward (1905-07).
Huchon, B. In George Crabbe and His Times, translated by F. Clarke (1907)

CRITICAL NOTES

"Yet Truth sometimes will lend her noblest fires,
And decorate the verse herself inspires
This fact in Virtue's name let Crabbe attest, Though nature's sternest painter, yet the best"
—Byron, in English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, 855 58 (p. 494)

"There was in each of the four British poets, who illuminated this darkest period just before the dawn, the determination to be natural and sincere. It was this that gave Cowper his directness and his delicacy, it was this which stamps with the harsh mark of truth the sombre vignettes of Crabbe, just as truly as it gave the voluptuous ecstasy to the songs of Blake, and to the strong, homely verse of Burns its potent charm and mastery. It was reality that was rising to drive back into oblivion the demons of conventionality, of 'regular diction,' of the proprieties and machinery of composition, of all the worn-out bogies with which poetical old women frightened the baby talents of the end of the eighteenth century. Not all was done, even by these admirable men. In Burns himself we constantly hear the old verbiage grating and grinding on, in his slow movements Crabbe is not to be distinguished from his predecessors of a hundred years, Cowper is forever showing qualities of grace and elegant amenity which tempt us to call him, not a forerunner of the nineteenth, but the finest example of the eighteenth-century type. Yet the revolt against rhetorical convention is uppermost, and that it is which is really the characteristic common feature of this singularly dissimilar quartette, and when the least inspired, the least revolutionary of the four takes us along the dismal coast that his childhood knew so well, and bids us mark how

'Here on its wiry stem, in rigid bloom,
Grows the salt lavender that lacks perfume,
Here the dwarf sailows creep, the sepfoll harsh,
And the soft shiny mallow of the marsh,' [Crabbe, The Lover's Journey, 120-28]

we observe that the reign of empty verbiage is over, and that the poets who shall for the future wish to bring concrete ideas before us will do so in sincere and exact language. That position once regained, the revival of imaginative writing is but a question of time and of opportunity"—Gosse, in A Short History of Modern English Literature (1898)

For Jeffrey's criticism of Crabbe's poems, see p. 884. See also Wordsworth's note on Lucy Gray (p. 1102a), and Byron's Letter to Murray, Sept. 15, 1817 (p. 1220a).

154.

THE VILLAGE

"The Village was intended as an antithesis to Goldsmith's idyllic sentimentalism. Crabbe's realism, preceding even Cowper and anticipating Wordsworth, was the first important indication of one characteristic movement in the contemporary school of poetry. His clumsy style and want of sympathy with the new world isolated him as a writer, as he was a recluse in his life. But the force and fidelity of his descriptions of the scenery of his native place and of the characteristics of the rural population give abiding interest to his work. His pathos is genuine and deep, and to some judgments his later works atone for the diminution in tragic interest by their gentleness and simple humor"—Stephen, in Dictionary of National Biography (1887)

100.

THE BOROUGH

"When the reader enters into the poem, he will find the author retired from view, and an imaginary personage brought forward to describe his Borough for him to him it seemed convenient to speak in the first person but the inhabitant of a village, in the center of the kingdom, could not appear in the character of a residing burgess in a large sea-port; and when, with this point, was considered what relations were to be given, what manners delineated, and what situations described, no method appeared to be so convenient as that of borrowing the assistance of an ideal friend. by this means the reader is in some degree kept from view of any particular place, nor will he perhaps be so likely to determine where those persons reside, and what their connections, who are so intimately known to this man of straw.

"From the title of this poem, some persons will, I fear, expect a political satire,—an attack upon corrupt principles in a general view, or upon the customs and manners of some particular place, of these they will find nothing satirized, nothing related. It may be that graver readers would have preferred a more historical account of so considerable a borough—its charter, privileges, trade, public structures, and subjects of this kind, but I have an apology for the omission of these things, in the difficulty of describing them, and in the utter repugnancy which subsists between the studies and objects of topography and poetry. What I thought I could best describe, that I attempted—the sea, and the country in the immediate vicinity, the dwellings, and the inhabitants; some incidents and characters, with an exhibition of morals and manners, offensive perhaps to those of extremely delicate feelings, but sometimes, I hope, neither unamiable nor uninteresting. an election indeed forms a part of one Letter, but the evil there described is one not greatly nor generally deplored, and there are probably many places of this kind where it is not felt.

"From the variety of relations, characters, and descriptions which a borough affords, several were rejected which a reader might reasonably expect to have met with in this case he is entreated to believe that these, if they occurred to the author, were considered by him as beyond his ability, as subjects which he could not treat in a manner satisfactory to himself. Possibly the admission of some will be thought to require more apology than the rejection of others. In such variety, it is to be apprehended, that almost every reader will find something not according with his ideas of propriety, or something repulsive to the tone of his feelings, nor could this be avoided but by the sacrifice of every event, opinion, and even expression, which could be thought liable to produce such effect, and this casting away so largely of our cargo, through fears of danger, though it might help us to clear it, would render our vessel of little worth when she came into port. I may likewise entertain a hope, that this very variety, which gives scope to objection and censure, will also afford a better chance for approval and satisfaction.

"Of these objectionable parts many must be to me unknown, of others some opinion may be formed, and for their admission some plea may be stated.

"In the first Letter is nothing which particularly calls for remark, except possibly the last line—giving a promise to the reader that he should both smile and sigh in the perusal of the following Letters. This may appear vain, and more than an author ought to promise, but let it be considered that the character assumed is that of a friend, who gives an account of objects, persons, and events to his correspondent, and who was therefore at liberty, without any imputation of this kind to suppose in what manner he would be affected by such descriptions."—From Crabbe's Preface

JOHN WILSON CROKER (1780-1857), p. 913

EDITIONS

- Croker Papers, The Correspondence and Diaries of J. W. Croker*, 3 vols., ed. by L. J. Jennings (London, Murray, 1884, New York, Scribner).
Essay on the Early Period of the French Revolution (London, Murray, 1857).
History of the Guillotine (London, Murray, 1853).

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

- Dacey, A. V. The Nation, Feb. 5, 1885 (40 121).
Fortesque, G. K. "The French Revolution in Contemporary Literature," The Quarterly Review, April, 1912 (218 353).
Grant, J. Random Recollections of the House of Commons, 2 vols. (London, Smith, 1837).
Kebbel, T. E. The Fortnightly Review, Nov., 1884 (42 688).
Littell's Living Age, "A Quartet of Quarterly Reviewers," Oct., 1856 (51 240).
Martineau, Harriet. Biographical Sketches (New York, Hurst, 1869).
Nation, The, Feb. 5, 1885 (40 120).
Quarterly Review, The, April, 1909 (210 748).
Sillard, P. A. The Gentleman's Magazine, Aug., 1898 (285 145).
Walpole, S. "The Croker Papers," Essays, Political and Biographical (New York, Dutton, 1908).

CRITICAL NOTES

Croker had the reputation of being a great talker. Hazlitt, in his Pulpit Oratory (Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover, 12, 276) records an incident which gave Croker the nickname of "Talking Potato."—"Some years ago, a periodical paper was published in London, under the title of the Pto-Nto. It was got up under the auspices of a Mr. Fulke (Greville), and several writers of that day, contributed to it, among whom were Mr. Horace Smith, Mr. Dubois, Mr. Prince Hoare, Mr. Cumberland, and others. On some dispute arising between the proprietor and the gentlemen-contributors, on the subject of an advance in the remuneration for articles, Mr. Fulke Greville grew heroic, and said, 'I have got a young fellow just come from Ireland, who will undertake to do the whole, verse and prose, politics and scandal, for two guineas a week, and if you will come and sup with me tomorrow night, you shall see him, and judge whether I am not right in closing with him.' Accordingly, they met the next evening, and the writer of all work was introduced. He began to make a display of his native ignorance and impudence on all subjects immediately, and no one else had occasion to say anything. When he was gone, Mr. Cumberland exclaimed, 'A talking potato, by God.' The talking potato was Mr. Croker, of the Admiralty. Our adventurer shortly, however, returned to his own country, and passing accidentally through a town where they were in want of a ministerial candidate at an Election, the gentleman of modest assurance offered himself, and succeeded. 'They wanted a Jack-pudding,' said the father of the hopeful youth, 'and so they chose my son.'"

The following note by Hazlitt is found in his The New School for Reform (Collected Works, 7, 183). "A certain Talking Potato (who is now one of the props of Church and State), when he first came to this country, used to frighten some respectable old gentlewomen, who invited him to supper, by asking him for a slice of the 'leg of the Savior,' meaning a leg of lamb, or a bit of 'the Holy Ghost pie,' meaning a pigeon pie on the table. Ill-nature and impertinence are the same in all schools."

913. ENDYMION A POETIC ROMANCE

This is the review which Shelley, Byron, and others erroneously thought hastened the death of Keats. See Shelley's Preface to Adonais (p. 1340a) and stanzas 30-37 (p. 735), also Byron's Don Juan, XI, 60 and n. 5 (p. 610), and note (p. 1224b).

ALLAN CUNNINGHAM (1784-1842), p. 475

EDITIONS

- Songs and Poems*, ed. with an Introduction, by P. Cunningham (London, Murray, 1847, 1875).

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

- Littell's Living Age* July, 1845 (6 69); May, 1847 (18 469).

Wilson, J G The Poets and Poetry of Scotland, 2 vols (Glasgow, Blackie, 1876, New York, Harper).

CRITICAL NOTES

475. THE LOVELY LASS OF PRESTON MILL
Preston Mill is a rustic village on Solway Firth, Dumfriesshire, Scotland

476. A WET SHEET AND A FLOWING SEA

Scott classed this poem "as among the best songs going," and regarded Cunningham as "a man of genius, besides, who only requires the fact of knowing when and where to stop to attain the universal praise which ought to follow it"—From Scott's Journal, Nov 14, 1826

THOMAS DE QUINCEY (1785-1859),
p. 1043

EDITIONS

Works, 12 vols (Riverside ed Boston, Houghton, 1877)

Collected Writings, 14 vols, ed by D Masson (Edinburgh, Black, 1889-90, cheaper ed., 1890-97, New York, Macmillan)

Uncollected Writings, 2 vols, ed with a Preface by J Hogg (London Swan, 1890)

Selections, ed with an Introduction, by M H Fulk (Atheneum Press ed Boston, Ginn, 1902)

Selections, ed by S Low (New York Macmillan, 1911)

Literary Criticism, ed with an Introduction, by H. Durbishire (London Browde 1909)

Confessions of An English Opium Eater, The, ed, with de Musset's French Continuation, and with other matter, by R Garnett (London, Paul, 1885)

BIOGRAPHY

Findlay, I R Personal Recollections of De Quincey (Edinburgh Black, 1886)

Hogg, J De Quincey and His Friends (London, Low, 1895)

Japp, A H ('H A Page) Thomas De Quincey His Life and Writings, with Unpublished Correspondence (London, Heinemann, 1877, New York, Scribner)

Japp, A H De Quincey Memorials Being Letters and other Records, here first Published, 2 vols (London, Heinemann 1881)

Martineau, Harriet Biographical Sketches (London, Macmillan 1869)

Masson, D Thomas De Quincey (English Men of Letters Series London, Macmillan, 1881; New York, Harper)

Salt, H S De Quincey (London, Bell, 1904; New York, Macmillan)

CRITICISM

Alden, H M The Atlantic Monthly, Sept, 1863 (12 845).

Bayne, P "Thomas De Quincey and his Works," Essays in Biography and Criticism (Boston, Gould, 1857, New York, Sheldon)

Birrell, A Essays about Men, Women, and Books (London, Stock, 1894, New York, Scribner, 1901)

Dawson, W J The Makers of English Prose (New York and London, Revell, 1906)

Dowden, E "How De Quincey Worked," The Saturday Review, Feb 23, 1895 (79 246).

DuRand, W Y "De Quincey and Carlyle in their Relation to the Germans," Publications of the Modern Language Association, Sept, 1907 (n s 15 521)

Hodgson, S H Outcast Essays (London, Longmans, 1881)

Lathrop, G P "Some Aspects of De Quincey," The Atlantic Monthly, Nov, 1877 (40 569)

Masson, D Wordsworth, Shelley, Keats, and other Essays (London, Macmillan, 1874)

Mathews, W Hours with Men and Books (Chicago, Griggs, 1877, Scott, 1896).

Minto, W A Manual of English Prose Literature (Edinburgh Blackwood, 1886)

Pollitt, C De Quincey's Editorship of the Westminster Gazette (London, Simpkin, 1890).

Quarterly Review, The, Review of "Selections Grave and Gay from the Writings Published and Unpublished by Thomas De Quincey," July, 1861 (110 1)

Rawnsley, H D Literary Associations of the English Lakes, 2 vols (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1894, 1906)

Rickett, A "The Vagabond," Personal Forces in Modern Literature (London, Dent, 1906, New York Dutton)

Saintsbury, G Essays in English Literature, 1780-1860 (London, Percival, 1890, New York, Scribner)

Stephen, L Hours in a Library, 3 vols, (London, Smith, 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1899), 4 vols (1907).

Symonds, A - "A Word on De Quincey," Studies in Prose and Verse (London Dent, 1904)

Walker, H "The Early Magazines of the Nineteenth Century," The English Essay and Essayists (London, Dent, 1915, New York, Dutton)

Winchester, C T A Group of English Essayists (New York, Macmillan, 1910)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Green, J A - Thomas De Quincey a Bibliography based upon the De Quincey Collection in the Moss Side Library Manchester (Manchester, Moss Side Public Library, 1909).

CRITICAL NOTES

"De Quincey himself in descending on the Dream faculty, says, 'Habitually to dream magnificently, a man must have a constitutional determination to reverie' In that sentence he announces the true law of all literature that comes under the order of pure phantasy But in his case, in spite of the strength of the dream-element, we cannot proceed far till we discover that his determination to reverie was but the extreme projection of one phase of a phenomenal nature balancing its opposite. . . . He was skilled in the exercises of the analytic understanding—a logician exacting and precise—else his dreaming had never gained for him the eminence it has gained. Surely it is calculated to strike the most casual reader on a perusal of that first edition of the Confessions, that his power of following up sensational effects and tracing with absolute exactness the most delicately varying shades of experience, and recording them with conscientious precision, were as noticeable as were the dreams to which they were served to give effect. No proper ground has been laid for a liberal and sympathetic appreciation of De Quincey till these points have been clearly apprehended, and assuredly this is one of the cases where, as he himself has well said, 'not to sympathize is not to understand'—A. H. Japp, in Thomas De Quincey, His Life and Writings (1877).

"He represents the reaction from the polish, reserve, and coldness of the eighteenth century to the warmth and glow of the seventeenth century,—the golden period of English prose. His masters are Milton, Jeremy Taylor, Fuller, and Browne, whose eloquence, rich coloring, and elaborate ornamentation he inherits. To these qualities he has added the finish and elegance of the eighteenth century writers, and the freedom, deep feeling, and lofty spiritual tone of our own age. In fineness of texture and in beauty of coloring he is unequalled save by Ruskin, whom he surpasses in form and general pictorial and sound effects. He is sometimes guilty of bad taste or bathos, but when at his best is a supreme master of the 'grand style.' With an imagination as great as Carlyle's, his style is more chastened, rhythmical, and exquisite, though not showing so much industry or moral earnestness. He has a finer rhetorical and critical faculty than Macaulay, and is more stately and vivacious than Lander. De Quincey's unique power lies in his imagination, which is extraordinary. In his best passages there is a poetic loftiness, a phantasmagoric charm, and a spectacular gorgeousness which seizes and holds the mind of the reader with its subtle power. Even when we cannot accept the soundness of his conclusions on philosophical questions, or the accuracy of his statements in the historical and biographical essays, we delight in surrendering ourselves to his wonderful fancy. When he has on his magic robes, few can mount so high"—Wauchope, in his edition of Confessions of an English Opium-Eater (1898).

1043. CONFESSIONS OF AN ENGLISH OPIUM-EATER

"I here present you, courteous reader, with the record of a remarkable period in my life: according to my application of it, I trust that it will prove, not merely an interesting record, but, in a considerable degree, useful and instructive. In that hope it is, that I have drawn it up: and that must be my apology for breaking through that delicate and honorable reserve, which, for the most part, restrains us from the public exposure of our own errors and infirmities. Nothing, indeed, is more revolting to English feelings, than the spectacle of a human being obtruding on our notice his moral ulcers and scars, and tearing away that 'decent drapery,' which time, or indulgence to human frailty, may have drawn over them accordingly, the greater part of our confessions (that is, spontaneous and extra-judicial confessions) proceed from demireps, adventures, or swindlers: and for any such acts of gratuitous self-humiliation from those who can be supposed in sympathy with the decent and self-respecting part of society, we must look to French literature, or to that part of the German which is tainted with the spurious and defective sensibility of the French. All this I feel so forcibly, and so nervously am I alive to reproach of this tendency, that I have for many months hesitated about the propriety of allowing this, or any part of my narrative, to come before the public eye, until after my death, when, for many reasons, the whole will be published: and it is not without an anxious review of the reasons for and against this step that I have, at last, concluded on taking it"—De Quincey, in introductory remarks to the Reader.

The text here followed is that of the first edition of 1821-22.

In the portion omitted from the Preliminary Confessions De Quincey states that he wrote this part as an introduction to the Confessions proper for three reasons:

1. As forestalling and answering the question as to how a reasonable being could become a slave to opium.

2. As furnishing a key to some parts of that tremendous scenery which afterwards peopled his dreams.

3. As creating a previous personal interest in his subject apart from the matter of the confessions.

1045b. 45. A picture of the lovely — "The housekeeper was in the habit of telling me that the lady had lived (meaning, perhaps, had been born) two centuries ago, that date would better agree with the tradition that the portrait was a copy from Vandyke. All that she knew further about the lady was that either to the grammar school, or to that particular college at Oxford with which the school was connected, or else to that particular college at Oxford with which Mr. Lawson personally was connected, or else, fourthly, to Mr. Lawson himself as a private individual, the unknown lady had been a special benefactress. She was also a special benefactress to me, through eighteen months, by means of her sweet Madonna countenance. And in some degree it serves to spiritualise and to hallow this service that of her who unconsciously rendered it. I know neither the name, nor the exact rank or age, nor the place where she lived and died. She was parted from me by perhaps two centuries. I from her by the gulf of eternity"—De Quincey's note in enlarged Confessions (Collected Writings, ed Masson, 3 297) Sir Anthony Vandyke (1599-1641) was a Flemish portrait painter, he lived for some years in England.

1047b. 34-35. A harsh and contemptuous expression—"I was wrong if I said anything in my anger that was disparaging or skeptical as to the bishop's intellectual pretensions; which were not only very sound, but very appropriate to the particular stations which he filled For the Bishop of Bangor (at that time Dr Cleaver) was also the head of Brasenose, Oxford—which college was indebted to him for its leadership at that era in scholarship and discipline In this academic character I learned afterwards that he might be called almost a reformer—a wise, temperate, and successful reformer, and, as a scholar, I saw many years later that he had received the laudatory notice of Porson"—De Quincey, in enlarged Confessions (Collected Writings, ed Masson, 3 323-24) Richard Porson (1759-1808) was a famous Greek scholar and critic

1049a. 11. In the enlarged Confessions, De Quincey inserted an admirable passage, describing the journey to London See Collected Writings, ed Masson, 3 339 348

1049b. 7ff. One cannot be sure of the accuracy of De Quincey's account of the house and of his residence there

1050a. 38. Whether this child—Garnett suggests, in his edition of the Confessions, that Dickens must have had this whole situation in mind when he drew the Marchioness and Sally Brass in Old Curiosity Shop

1050a. 10. Murder committed—"Two men, Holloway and Haggerty were long afterwards convicted, upon very questionable evidence as the perpetrators of this murder The main testimony against them was that of a Newgate turnkey, who had imperfectly overheard a conversation between the two men The current impression was that of great dissatisfaction with the evidence, and this impression was strengthened by the pamphlet of an acute lawyer, exposing the unsoundness and incoherency of the statements relied upon by the court They were executed, however, in the teeth of all opposition And, as it happened that an enormous wreck of life occurred at the execution (not fewer, I believe, than sixty persons having been trampled under foot by the unusual pressure of some brewers' draymen forcing their way with linked arms to the space below the drop), this tragedy was regarded for many years by a section of the London mob as a providential judgment upon the passive metropolis"—De Quincey's note in enlarged Confessions (Collected Writings, ed Masson, 3 370)

1044a. 20-21. The most pleasant place—"I trust that my reader has not been so irritable to the windings of my narrative as to fancy me speaking here of the Brown-

Brunell and Pymont [Brunell's clerk] period Naturally I had no money disposable at that period for the opera I am speaking here of years stretching far beyond those boyish scenes—interludes in my Oxford life, or long after Oxford."—De Quincey's note in enlarged Confessions (Collected Writings, ed Masson, 3 389)

1040b. 20ff. Cf. with the following closing lines of Raleigh's History of the World—"O, eloquent, just, and mighty Death' whom none could advise, thou hast persuaded, what none have dared, thou hast done, and whom all the world flattered, thou only hast cast out of the world and despoiled thou hast drawn together all the far stretched greatness, all the pride, cruelty, and ambition of man, and covered it all over with these two narrow words, Hic jacet"

1067. INTRODUCTION TO THE PAINS OF OPIUM

The portion omitted recounts the changes that took place between 1804 and 1813, at the school where De Quincey attended and in his own life Mention is made of De Quincey's sufferings of 1813, in which his old dreams were revived, and as a result of which he became a "regular and confirmed opium-eater" The selection printed continues the record from 1818

1049a. 16ff. "The cottage and the valley concerned in this description were not imaginary: the valley was the lovely one in those days, of Gramere, and the cottage was occupied for more than twenty years by myself, as immediate successor, in the year 1809, to Wordsworth Looking to the limitation here laid down—ris, in those days—the reader will inquire in what way Time can have affected the beauty of Gramere Do the Westmoreland valleys turn gray-headed? O reader! this is a painful memento for some of us! Thirty years ago, a gang of Vandals (nameless, I thank heaven, to me), for the sake of building a mail coach road that never would be wanted, carried, at a cost of £3000 to the defrauded parish, a horrid causeway of sheer granite masonry for three-quarters of a mile, right through the loveliest succession of secret forest dells and sly recesses of the lake, margined by unrivalled ferns, amongst which was the Omunda regalis This sequestered angle of Gramere is described by Wordsworth, as it unveiled itself on a September morning, in the exquisite poems on the 'Naming of Places.' From this also—ris, this spot of ground, and this magnificent crest (the Omunda)—was suggested that unique line, the finest independent line through all the records of verse,

'Or lady of the lake,

Sole sitting by the shores of old romance'

Rightly therefore did I introduce this limitation The Gramere before and after this outrage were two different vales"—De Quincey's note in enlarged Confessions (Collected Writings, ed Masson, 3 406). The poem referred to begins "A narrow girdle of rough stones and crags,"

- 1071b. 35-36. Reading is an accomplishment of mine.—Some persons admired the soft, clear tone of De Quincey's voice in conversation, but others found much fault with his reading "It seems to me, from the manner in which the Opium-Eater recited a few lines occasionally which he had occasion to quote, that the reading upon which in his Confessions he plagues himself would scarcely appear good to most people. He reads with too inward a voice, he dwells much upon the long vowels (this he does in his conversation, which makes it resemble more a speech delivered in a debating society than the varietious discourse usually held among friends), he ekes out particular syllables has generally much appearance of intensity, and, in short, removes his tone and manner too much from the mode of common language. Hence I could not always catch the words in his quotations, and though one acquainted with the quotation beforehand would relish it the more from having an opportunity afforded of dwelling upon it, and from hearing the most made of those particular parts for the sake of which it is brought forward, yet general hearers would be left far behind, and in a state of wonder at the quoter"—From Woodhouse's Conversations, quoted by Garnett in his edition of the Confessions (1885)

- 1072a 5 An early manuscript of the Confessions contains at this point the following entertaining paragraph "This, then, has been the extent of my reading for upwards of sixteen months. It frets me to enter those rooms of my cottage in which the books stand. In one of them, to which my little boy has access, he has found out a use for some of them. Somebody has given him a bow and arrows—God knows who, certainly not I, for I have not energy or ingenuity to invent a walking-stick—thus equipped for action, he rears up the largest of the fellows that he can lift, places them on a tottering base, and then shoots until he brings down the enemy. He often presses me to join him, and sometimes I consent, and we are both engaged together in these intellectual labors. We build up a pile, having for its base some slender modern metaphysician, ill able (poor man!) to sustain such a weight of philosophy. Upon this we place the Dutch quartet of Descartes¹ and Spinoza;² then a third story of Schoolmen³ in folio—the Master of Sentences,⁴ Suarez,⁵ Picus Mirandula⁶ and the Telemonian bulk of Thomas Aquinas,⁷ and when the whole architecture seems firm and compact, we finish our system of metaphysics by roofing the whole with Duval's enormous Aristotle.⁸ So far there is some pleasure—building up is something, but what is that to destroying? Thus thinks, at least, my little companion, who now, with the wrath of the Pythian Apollo,⁹ assumes his bow and arrows, plants himself in the remotest corner of the room, and prepares his fatal shafts. The bow-string twangs, flights of arrows are in the air, but the Dutch Impregnability of the Bergen-op-Zooms¹⁰ at the base receives the few which reach the mark, and they recoil without mischief done. Again the baffled archer collects his arrows, and again he takes his station. An arrow issues forth and takes effect on a weak side of Thomas. Symptoms of dissolution appear—the cohesion of the system is loosened—the Schoolmen begin to totter, the Stagyrice¹¹ trembles, Philosophy rocks to its centre, and before it can be seen whether time will do anything to heal their wounds, another arrow is planted in the schism of their ontology, the mighty structure heaves—reels—seems in suspense for one moment, and then, with one choral crash—to the frantic joy of the young Sacristan—lies subverted on the floor! Kant!¹² and Aristotle, Nominalists and Realists,¹³ Doctors Seraphic¹⁴ or Irrefragable,¹⁵ what cares he? All are at his feet—the Irrefragable has been confuted by his arrows, the Seraphic has been found mortal and the greatest philosopher and the least differ but according to the brief noise they have made"—Posthumous Works, ed Japp, 1 318-19

¹ The Master of Sentences was Peter Lombard, an Italian theologian of the 12th century, he was so called from his Latin work Four Books of Sentences.

² Suarez (1548-1617) was a noted Spanish Jesuit philosopher and theologian.

³ Picus Mirandula was Pico, Count of Mirandola (1463-94), an Italian humanist and philosopher.

⁴ Thomas Aquinas was an Italian theologian and scholastic philosopher of the 13th century, he was a prolific writer, his works are called "Telemonian" from Telamon a famous legendary Greek hero.

⁵ Duval was probably an editor of the works of Aristotle (4th century B. C.), the famous Greek philosopher.

⁶ Apollo, the god of the sun, was given the epithet Pythian, because he slew the Python, the serpent at Delphi.

⁷ Bergen-op-Zoom was formerly a strongly fortified town in the Netherlands.

⁸ Aristotle, so called from Stagira, his birthplace, a city on the coast of Macedonia.

⁹ Kant (1724-1804) was a noted German philosopher.

¹⁰ The Nominalists were a school of philosophers who held that universal and collective terms have no real existences corresponding to them, the Realists held an opposite view.

¹¹ The Seraphic Doctor was St Bonaventura (1221-74), an Italian scholastic philosopher noted for the religious fervor of his style.

¹² The Irrefragable Doctor was Alexander of Hales, an English scholastic philosopher of the 13th century.

¹ Descartes (1596-1650) was a noted French philosopher, he lived in Holland from 1629 to 1649.

² Spinoza (1632-77) was a noted Dutch philosopher.

³ The Schoolmen were medieval Christian philosophers, who tried to reconcile Christian faith with reason.

1072a. 45x. "For this, as for some other passages, I was justly attacked by an able and liberal critic in The New Edinburgh Review, as for so many absurd irrelevances. In that situation no doubt they were so, and of this, in spite of the haste in which I had written the greater part of the book, I was fully aware. However, as they said no more than what was true, I was glad to take that, or any occasion which I could invent, for offering my public testimony of gratitude to Mr Ricardo. The truth is, I thought that something might occur to intercept any more appropriate mode of conveying my homage to Mr Ricardo's ear, which should else more naturally have been expressed in a direct work on political economy. This fear was at length realized—not in the way I had apprehended, viz., by my own death, but by Mr Ricardo's. And now, therefore, I felt happy that, at whatever price of good taste, I had in some imperfect way made known my sense of his high pretensions—although, unfortunately, I had given him no means of judging whether my applause were of any value. For during the interval between September, 1821, and Mr Ricardo's death in September, 1823, I had found no leisure for completing my work on political economy."—De Quincey, in Dialogues of Three Templars on Political Economy (Collected Writings, ed Masson, 9 39-40). This article first appeared in The London Magazine, March 1824.

1073b. 13-14. Roman centurion over his soldiers.—A reference to the reply of the centurion to Christ, Matthew, 8 9. "For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me; and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth, and to another, Come, and he cometh, and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it."

1074b. 2-3. Relative of mine.—"The heroine of this remarkable case was a girl about nine years old and there can be little doubt that she looked down as far within the crater of death—that awful volcano—as any human being ever can have done that has lived to draw back and report her experience. Not less than ninety years did she survive this memorable escape, and I may describe her as in all respects a woman of remarkable and interesting qualities. She enjoyed throughout her long life as the reader will readily infer, serene and cloudless health, had a masculine understanding, revered truth not less than did the Evangelists, and led a life of salutary devotion, such as might have glorified Isidore or Paul." (The words in italics are Ariosto's.)—I mention these traits as characterizing her in a memorable extent, that the reader may not suppose himself relying upon a dealer in exaggerations, upon a credulous enthusiast, or upon a careless wielder of language. Forty-five years had intervened between the first time and the last time of her telling me this anecdote, and not one iota had shifted its ground amongst the incidents, nor had any the most trivial of the circumstantiations suffered change. The scene of the accident was the least of valleys,—what the Greeks of old would have called an dykos, and we English should properly call a dell. Human tenant it had none even at noonday; it was a solitude, and would oftentimes have been a silent solitude, but for the brawling of a brook—not broad, but occasionally deep—which ran along the base of the little hills. Into this brook, probably into one of its dangerous pools, the child fell and, according to the ordinary chances, she could have had but a slender prospect indeed of any deliverance, for, although a dwelling-house was close by, it was shut out from view by the undulations of the ground. How long the child lay in the water was probably never inquired earnestly until the answer had become irrecoverable for a servant, to whose care the child was then confided, had a natural interest in suppressing the whole case. From the child's own account it should seem that asphyxia must have announced its commencement. A process of struggle and deadly suffocation was passed through half consciously. This process terminated by a sudden blow apparently on or in the brain, after which there was no pain or conflict, but in an instant succeeded a dazzling rush of light; immediately after which came the solemn apocalypse of the entire past life. Meantime, the child's disappearance in the water had happily been witnessed by a farmer who rented some fields in this little solitude, and by a rare accident was riding through them at the moment. Not being very well mounted he was retarded by the hedges and other fences in making his way down to the water, some time was thus lost, but, once at the spot, he leaped in, booted and spurred, and succeeded in delivering one that must have been as nearly counted amongst the populations of the grave as perhaps the laws of the shadowy world can suffer to return."—De Quincey's note in enlarged Confessions (Collected Writings, ed Masson, 3 435). The relative mentioned is said to be De Quincey's mother. The quotation from Ariosto is found in Orlando Furioso, VIII, 45, 8.

1075a. 39-40. Set of plates called his 'Dreams'.—"No plates of this title were ever published by Piranesi."

b. 19-20. Great modern poet.—"What poet? It was Wordsworth; and why did I not formally name him? This throws a light backwards upon the strange history of Wordsworth's reputation. The year in which I wrote and published these Confessions was 1821; and at that time the name of Wordsworth, though beginning to emerge from the dark cloud of scorn and contumely which had hitherto overshadowed it, was yet most imperfectly established. Not until ten years later was his greatness cheerfully and generally acknowledged. I, therefore, as the very earliest (without one exception) of all who came forward, in the beginning of his career, to honor and welcome him, shrank with disgust from making any sentence of mine the occasion for an explosion of vulgar malice against him. But the grandeur of the passage here cited inevitably spoke for itself, and he that would have been most scornful on hearing the name of the poet coupled with this epithet of 'great' could not but find his malice intercepted, and himself cheated into cordial admiration, by the splendor of the verses."—De Quincey's note in enlarged Confessions (Collected Writings, ed. Masson, 3:489).

- 1076a. 5. Objective.—"This word, so nearly unintelligible in 1821, so intensely scholastic, and, consequently, when surrounded by ramillar and vernacular words, so apparently pedantic, yet, on the other hand, so indispensable to accurate thinking, and to wide thinking, has since 1821 become too common to need any apology"—De Quincey's note in enlarged Confessions (Collected Writings, ed. Masson, 3:440).

Cf. the following passage from Ruskin's Modern Painters, Part IV, ch 12, "Of the Pathetic Fallacy," sec. 1 "German dulness and English affectation have of late much multiplied among us the use of two of the most objectionable words that were ever coined by the trouble-omeness of metaphysicians,—namely, Objective and Subjective. No words can be more exquisitely, and in all points, useless; and I merely speak of them that I may, at once and forever, get them out of my way, and out of my reader's."

- 1078a. 57. The original manuscript contained at this point the following passage "This dream at first brought tears to one who had been long familiar only with groans but afterwards it fluctuated and grew unsteady the passions and the scenery changed countenance, and the whole was transposed into another key. Its variations, though interesting, I must omit

"At length I grew afraid to sleep, and I shrunk from it as from the most savage torture. Often I fought with my drowsiness, and kept it aloof by sitting up the whole night and following day. Sometimes I lay down only in the daytime and sought to charm away the phantoms by requesting my family to sit around me and to talk, hoping thus to derive an influence from what affected me externally into my internal world of shadows but, far from this, I infected and stained as it were the whole of my waking experience with feelings derived from sleep. I seemed indeed to live and to converse even when awake with my visionary companions much more than with the realities of life. 'Oh, X, what do you see? dear X, what is it that you see?' was the constant exclamation of M[argaret], by which I was awakened as soon as I had fallen asleep, though to me it seemed as if I had slept for years. My groans had, it seems, wakened her, and, from her account, they had commenced immediately on my falling asleep.

"The following dream, as an impressive one to me, I shall close with it grew up under the influence of that misery which I have described above as resulting from the almost paralytic incapacity to do anything towards completing my intellectual labors, combined with a belief which at the time I reasonably entertained that I should soon be called on to quit forever this world and those for whom I still clung to it"—Quoted by Garnett in his edition of the Confessions, 263. Margaret was De Quincey's wife.

- 1079b. 11. I triumphed.—This was true when the Confessions was first written in 1821; but De Quincey later suffered prostrations under the influence of opium, notably in 1823-24 and in 1841-44.

- 1080a. 20. The Confessions closes with an Appendix, in which De Quincey rather apologizes for conveying the impression that he had wholly renounced the use of opium.

ON THE KNOCKING AT THE GATE IN MACBETH

"The little paper On the Knocking at the Gate in Macbeth is interesting in several ways. It is a classical instance of the peculiar faculty of discovering hidden analogies, of which De Quincey boasts, like Lamb's essay on the tragedies of Shakspeare considered as to their fitness for stage representation, it is an early note of the great burden of rational Shakspeare appreciation that took its rise, in England, in the lectures of Coleridge, and it is a contribution from one who does not rank among the great commentators upon the Elizabethan drama, which no such commentator can afford to neglect. There is, in fact, no part of De Quincey's additions to literature in which he has more clearly redeemed for all time a bit of the unknown."—Turk, in Introduction to Selections from De Quincey (Ath. Press ed.), page 1.

For another example of the same kind of writing see the Postscript to On Murder Considered as One of the Fine Arts (Collected Writings, ed. Masson, 13:70).

1089. AUTOBIOGRAPHIC SKETCHES

The Affliction of Childhood is mainly a reproduction, with alterations, of portions of De Quincey's Suspiria de Profundis articles printed in Blackwood's Magazine in 1845, and of the first Autobiographic Sketch printed in Hogg's Instructor in 1851. In the portion omitted De Quincey tells of the status of the family

1100. SAVANNAH-LA-MAR

Savannah-la-Mar is the name of a small coast town in Jamaica, where De Quincey's brother Richard lost his life during a hunting trip.

1101. THE POETRY OF POPE

The following selection is part of an article printed in The North British Review, Aug., 1848, in the form of a review of W. Roscoe's edition of The Works of Alexander Pope (1847). When reprinted by De Quincey the article was entitled Alexander Pope, but Masson's title (Collected Writings, 11 51) is used here to distinguish this article from another one by De Quincey entitled Alexander Pope, printed in The Encyclopædia Britannica

1103. THE ENGLISH MAIL-COACH

"This little paper, according to my original intention, formed part of the Suspensæ de Profundis, from which, for a momentary purpose, I did not scruple to detach it and to publish it apart, as sufficiently intelligible even when dislocated from its place in a larger whole. To my surprise, however, one or two critics, not carelessly in conversation, but deliberately in print, professed their inability to apprehend the meaning of the whole, or to follow the links of the connection between its several parts. I am myself as little able to understand where the difficulty lies, or to detect any lurking obscurity, as these critics found themselves to unravel my logic. Possibly I may not be an indifferent and neutral judge in such a case. I will therefore sketch a brief abstract of the little paper according to my original design, and then leave the reader to judge how far this design is kept in sight through the actual execution.

"Thirty-seven years ago, or rather more, accident made me, in the dead of night, and of a night memorably solemn, the solitary witness of an appalling scene, which threatened instant death in a shape the most terrific to two young people whom I had no means of assisting, except in so far as I was able to give them a most hurried warning of their danger, but even that not until they stood within the very shadow of the catastrophe, being divided from the most frightful of deaths by scarcely more, if more at all, than seventy seconds.

"Such was the scene, such in its outline, from which the whole of this paper radiates as a natural expansion. This scene is circumstantially narrated in Section the Second, entitled 'The Vision of Sudden Death.'

"But a movement of horror, and of spontaneous recoil from this dreadful scene, naturally carried the whole of that scene, raised and idealised, into my dreams, and very soon into a rolling succession of dreams. The actual scene, as looked down upon from the box of the mail, was transformed into a dream, as tumultuous and changing as a musical fugue. This troubled dream is circumstantially reported in Section the Third, entitled 'Dream-Fugue on the theme of Sudden Death.' What I had beheld from my seat upon the mail,—the scenical strife of action and passion, of anguish and fear, as I had there witnessed them moving in ghostly silence,—this duel between life and death narrowing itself to a point of such exquisite evanescence as the collision neared all these elements of the scene blended, under the law of association, with the previous and permanent features of distinction investing the mail itself, which features at that time lay—1st, in velocity unprecedented, 2dly, in the power and beauty of the horses, 3dly, in the official connection with the government of a great nation; and, 4thly, in the function, almost a consecrated function, of publishing and diffusing through the land the great political events, and especially the great battles, during a conflict of unparalleled grandeur. These honorary distinctions are all described circumstantially in the First or introductory Section ('The Glory of Motion'). The three first were distinctions maintained at all times; but the fourth and grandest belonged exclusively to the war with Napoleon, and this it was which most naturally introduced Waterloo into the dream. Waterloo, I understand, was the particular feature of the 'Dream-Fugue' which my censors were least able to account for. Yet surely Waterloo, which, in common with every other great battle, it had been our special privilege to publish over all the land, most naturally entered the dream under the license of our privilege. If not—if there be anything amiss—let the Dream be responsible. The Dream is a law to itself, and as well quarrel with a rainbow for showing or for not showing, a secondary arch. So far as I know, every element in the shifting movements of the Dream derived itself either primarily from the incidents of the actual scene, or from secondary features associated with the mail. For example, the cathedral aisle derived itself from the mimic combination of features which grouped themselves together at the point of approaching collision—vis, an arrow-like section of the road, six hundred yards long, under the solemn lights described, with lofty trees meeting overhead in arches. The guard's horn, again—a humble instrument in itself—was yet glorified as the organ of publication for so many great national events. And the incident of the Dying Trumpeter, who rises from a marble bas-relief, and carries a marble trumpet to his marble lips for the purpose of warning the female infant, was doubtless secretly suggested by my own imperfect effort to seize the guard's horn, and to blow the warning blast. But the Dream knows best, and the Dream, I say again, is the responsible party."—De Quincey, in Preface to the volume of his Collected Writings (1854) containing The English Mail-Coach. It is printed by Masson as the Author's Postscript (Collected Writings, 13 328-30).

1106a. 28 ff. "This paragraph is a caricature of a story told in Staunton's Account of the Earl of Macartney's Embassy to China in 1793."—Masson's note in Collected Writings, 13 277. The account was published in 1797.

- 1109a. 22. "Tallyho" or "Highflyer."—A tallyho was a kind of four-in-hand pleasure coach, so called from a popular coach named "The Tallyho." A highflyer was a fast stage coach.
- 1121a. 49-50. Lilliputian Lancaster—Lancaster, the county seat of Lancashire, was much smaller than Liverpool or Manchester, both situated in the same county.

JOHN DYER (1701-1758), p. 16

EDITIONS

- Poems*, ed. with a Biographical Introduction, by E. Thomas (Welsh Library ed. London, Unwin, 1903)

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

- Dowden, E. In Ward's The English Poets, Vol. 3 (London, Macmillan, 1880, 1900)
- Johnson, S. The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81); 3 vols., ed. by G. B. Hill (London, Clarendon Press, 1905).

CRITICAL NOTES

To the Poet John Dyer

Bard of the Fleece, whose skillful genius made
That work a living landscape fair and bright,
Nor hallowed less with musical delight
Than those soft scenes through which thy childhood strayed,
Those southern tracts of Cambria, "deep embayed,
With green hills fenced with Ocean's murmur lulled",
Though hasty fame hath many a chaplet culled
For worthless brows, while in the pensile shade
Of cold neglect she leaves thy head ungraced,
Yet pure and powerful minds, hearts meek and still,
A grateful few, shall love thy modest lay,
Long as the shepherd's bleating flock shall stray
O'er naked Snowdon's wide aerial waste,
Long as the thrush shall pipe on Grongar Hill'

—Wordsworth

16.

GRONGAR HILL

"Grongar Hill is the happiest of his productions. It is not indeed very accurately written, but the scenes which it displays are so pleasing, the images which they raise so welcome to the mind, and the reflections of the writer so consonant to the general sense or experience of mankind, that when it is once read, it will be read again"—Johnson, in "Dyer," The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81)

Grongar Hill is a hill in southwestern Wales. With respect to title and subject matter the poem is similar to Sir John Denham's Cooper's Hill (1642).

EBENEZER ELLIOTT (1781-1849), p. 1165

EDITIONS

- Works*, 2 vols., ed. by his son E. Elliott (London, King, 1876)

BIOGRAPHY

- Howitt, W. Home and Haunts of the Most Eminent British Poets, 2 vols. (London, 1847, 1856, Routledge, 1894, New York, Dutton)
- Phillips, G. S. ("J. Seville") Memoirs of Ebenezer Elliott (London, Gilpin, 1850)
- Smiles, S. Brief Biographies (Boston, Ticknor, 1880)
- Watkins, J. Life, Poetry, and Letters of Ebenezer Elliott, the Corn-Law Rhymers (London, Mortimer, 1850)

CRITICISM

- Carlyle, T. "Corn-Law Rhymes," The Edinburgh Review, July, 1832 (55-534), Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, 3 vols. (Boston, Houghton, 1880)
- Fox, W. J. The Westminster Review (30 187)
- Hall, S. C. and Mrs. S. C. "Memories of the Authors of the Age," The Eclectic Magazine, Nov. 1865 (65 573)
- Stoddard, R. H. Under the Evening Lamp (New York, Scribner 1892, London, Gay)
- Wilson, John. "Poetry of Ebenezer Elliott," Blackwood's Magazine, May, 1834, 35 815)

CRITICAL NOTES

From On the Statue of Ebenezer Elliott

Three Elliotts there have been three glorious men
Each in his generation. One¹ was doomed
By Despotism and Prelaty to pine
In the damp dungeon, and to die for Law,
Rackt by slow tortures ere he reacht the grave,
A second² hurl'd his thunderbolt and flame
When Gaul and Spaniard moor'd their pinnaces,
Screaming defiance at Gibraltar's frown,
Until one moment more, and other screams
And other writhings rose above the wave,
From sails ahire and hissing where they fell,
And men half burnt along the buoyant mast
A third³ came calmly on, and askt the rich
To give laborious hunger daily bread,
As they in childhood had been taught to pray
By God's own Son, and sometimes have prayed since
God heard, but they heard not. God sent down
bread,
They took it, kept it all, and cried for more,
Hollowing both hands to catch and clutch the crumbs.
I may not live to hear another voice,

¹ Sir John Elliot (1592-1632), an English patriot who was imprisoned because of his opposition to the government of Charles I. He died in the Tower of London.

² George Augustus Elliot (1717-80), an English general and Governor of Gibraltar, which he defended against the French and Spanish, 1779-83.

³ Ebenezer Elliott.

Elliot, of power to penetrate, as thine,
Dense multitudes, another none may see
Leading the Muses from unthrifty shades
To fields where corn gladdens the heart of man, 40
And where the trumpet with defiant blast
Blows in the face of War, and yields to Peace

—Walter Savage Landor (1853)

"No man could be more happy than Elliott in a green lane, though an indefatigable and successful man of business, he devoutly and devotedly loved Nature. If absolutely rabid when he wrote of the 'taxed aristocracy'—sententious, bitter, sarcastic, loud with his pen in hand and class sympathies and antipathies for his inspiration—all evil thoughts evaporated when communing in the woods and fields with the God by whom the woods and fields were made, among them his spirit was as fresh and gentle as the dew by which they were nourished"—S. C. Hall in Retrospect of a Long Life (1883)

From his bold and vigorous attack upon the Corn Laws, which placed restrictions upon the grain trade, Elliott won the name of "The Corn-Law Rhymist." A volume of his verse, published in 1831 was entitled Corn Law Rhymes. It was inscribed to "all who revere the memory of Jeremy Bentham wise to promote the greatest happiness to the greatest number for the greatest length of time." Bentham was an English utilitarian philosopher (1748-1832)

1105. BATTLE SONG

This is a workman's song which grew out of the labor troubles of the early nineteenth century. It applies possibly to the Peterloo Massacre of Aug. 16, 1819. On that date a large assembly, chiefly of the laboring classes, which met at St. Peter's Field, Manchester, in behalf of reform legislation was charged by the militia and many were killed and wounded.

1106. THE PRESS

The Reform Bill of 1832 which greatly extended the franchise, had been strongly supported by the press. Elliott was engaged in the iron trade in Sheffield from 1821 to 1842.

PRESTON MILLS

Preston is a manufacturing town in Lancashire, England noted for its cotton linen, and iron industries.

WILLIAM GODWIN (1756-1836), p. 213

EDITIONS

In Enquiry Concerning Political Justice, 2 vols (1793-1796, London, Sonnenschein, 1890; New York, Scribner)

Caleb Williams, or Things as They Are, 3 vols. (1794); 1 vol (London, Newnes, n.d.; New York, Scribner, 1904)

History of the Commonwealth of England, 4 vols. (London, Colburn, 1824-28).

BIOGRAPHY

Brailsford, H. N. Shelley, Godwin, and their Circle (Home University Library, New York, Holt, 1913, London, Williams)

Gouig, R. William Godwin, sa vie, ses œuvres principales (Paris, Alcan, 1908)

Paul, C. K. William Godwin, his Friends and Contemporaries, 2 vols (London, Paul, 1876, Boston, Roberts)

Ramus, P. William Godwin der Theoretiker des kommunistischen Anarchismus, Eine biographische Studie mit Anfügen aus seiner Schriften (Leipzig, Dietrich, 1907)

Simon, Helene. William Godwin und Mary Wollstonecraft (München, Beck, 1909)

CRITICISM

De Quincey, T. Literary Reminiscences (1859), Collected Writings, ed. Masson (London, Black, 1880-90, 1896-97), 11, 326.

Dowden, E. "Theorists of Revolution," The French Revolution and English Literature (New York, Scribner, 1897-1909)

Harper, G. M. "Rousseau, Godwin, and Wordsworth," The Atlantic Monthly, May, 1912 (109-639)

Hazlitt, W. Contributions to The Edinburgh Review, April, 1830, The Spirit of the Age (London, 1825), Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure) 10 385-4 200

Rogers, A. K. "Godwin and Political Justice," The International Journal of Ethics, Oct., 1911 (22-50)

Saltzoff, H. William Godwin und die Anfänge des Anarchismus im XVIII Jahrhundert (Berlin, Haering, 1907)

Shelley, P. B. Letters, 2 vols, ed. by B. Ingpen (London, Putnam 1909, 1912, New York, Scribner)

Stephen, L. "Godwin and Shelley" Hours in a Library, 3 vols (London Smith 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1890), 4 vols (1907)

Stephen, L. History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, 2 vols (London, Smith, 1876, 1902, New York, Putnam 1902)

Stephen, L. "William Godwin's Novels," Studies of a Biographer, 4 vols (London, Duckworth, 1898-1902, New York Putnam)

CRITICAL NOTES

"More than any English thinker he [Godwin] resembles in intellectual temperament those French theorists who represented the early revolutionary impulse. His doctrines are developed with a logical precision which shrinks from no consequences, and which placidly ignores all inconvenient facts. The Utopia in which his imagination delights is laid out with geometrical symmetry and simplicity. Godwin believes as firmly as any early Christian in the speedy revelation of a new Jerusalem, four-square and perfect in its plan. Godwin's intellectual genealogy may be traced to three sources. From Swift,¹ Mandeville,² and the Latin historian,³ he had learnt to regard the whole body of ancient institutions as corrupt, from Hume⁴ and Hartley,⁵ of whom he speaks with enthusiasm, he derives the means of assault upon the old theories, from the French writers, such as Rousseau, Helvetius, and Holbach,⁶ he caught, as he tells us, the contagion of revolutionary zeal. The Political Justice is an attempt to frame into a systematic whole the principles gathered from these various sources, and may be regarded as an exposition of the extremest form of revolutionary dogma. Though Godwin's idiosyncrasy is perceptible in some of the conclusions, the book is instructive, as showing, with a clearness paralleled in no other English writing, the true nature of those principles which excited the horror of Burke and the Conservatives.—Leadle Stephen, in History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century (1876)

Godwin's revolutionary zeal fired the enthusiasm of Wordsworth, Coleridge, and especially Shelley. Numerous instances of that influence may be observed in their writings. As a contrast to Godwin's ideas on the French Revolution, see Burke's Reflections on the Revolution in France (p. 1186).

The text here followed is that of the 1790 American edition, a reprint of the second London edition. In editions subsequent to the first edition of the Enquiry (1793), Godwin's radicalism was slightly tempered.

THOMAS GRAY (1716-1771), p. 57

EDITIONS

- Works*, 4 vols., ed. by E. Gosse (London, Macmillan, 1884)
- Poetical Works*, ed. by J. Bradshaw (Aldine ed. London, Bell, 1891, New York, Macmillan)
- English Poems*, ed. by D. C. Tovey (Cambridge University Press, 1898)
- Poems*, with Collins (London, Newnes, 1905, New York, Scribner)
- Selections from the Poetry and Prose*, ed. by W. I. Phelps (Atheneum Press ed. Ginn, Boston, 1894)
- Letters*, 2 vols., ed. by D. C. Tovey (Bohn Library ed. London, Bell, 1900-04, New York, Macmillan)
- Essays and Criticisms*, ed. with an introduction, by C. S. Northrup (Belles Lettres Series, Boston, Heath, 1911)

BIOGRAPHY

- Gosse, E. Gray (English Men of Letters Series, London, Macmillan, 1882, New York, Harper).

¹ Jonathan Swift (1667-1745), a noted English satirist

² Bernard Mandeville (c1670-1733), a Dutch-English writer

³ Tacitus (c55-118), who describes the century preceding his own as degenerate

⁴ David Hume (1711-76), a noted Scottish philosopher and historian

⁵ David Hartley (d. 1757), an English materialistic philosopher

⁶ Rousseau, Helvetius, and Holbach were noted French philosophers of the 18th century.

Johnson, S. The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81); ed. by G. B. Hill, 3 vols. (London, Clarendon Press, 1905).

Norton, C. E. The Poet Gray as a Naturalist (Boston, Goodspeed, 1908).

Rawnsley, H. D. "Gray's Visit to Keswick," Literary Associations of the English Lakes, 2 vols. (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1906)

Tovey, D. C. Gray and his Friends (Cambridge University Press, 1890)

CRITICISM

Arnold, M. In Ward's The English Poets, Vol. 3 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1900), Essays in Criticism, Second Series (London and New York, Macmillan, 1888)

Beers, H. A. "The Miltonic Group," A History of English Romanticism in the Eighteenth Century (New York, Holt, 1898, 1910)

Benson, A. C. Essays (London, Heinemann, 1895, New York, Dutton)

Brooke, S. A. "From Pope to Cowper," Theology in the English Poets (London, King, 1874, New York, Dutton, 1910).

Bulwer, E. (Lord Lytton) Miscellaneous Prose Works, Vol. 1 (New York, Harper, 1898)

Dobson, Austin. "Gray's Library," Eighteenth Century Vignettes, First Series (London, Chatto, 1892)

Hazlitt, W. C. "On Swift, Young, Gray, Collins, etc.," Lectures on the English Poets (London, 1818), Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-04, New York, McClure), 5, 104

Hudson, W. H. Gray and His Poetry (New York, Dodge, 1912)

Jack, A. A. "Gray (Social or Prose Poetry)," Poetry and Prose (London, Constable, 1911)

Kittredge, G. L. "Gray's Knowledge of Old Norse," in Appendix to Introduction to W. L. Phelps's Selections from the Poetry and Prose of Thomas Gray (Boston, Ginn, 1894)

Lowell, J. R. Latest Literary Essays (Collected Writings, Boston, Houghton, 1890-92, Vol. 9)

L'erry, T. S. "Gray, Collins, and Beattie," The Atlantic Monthly, Dec. 1880 (24 810)

Malraux, J. C. "Nature in Collins, Gray, Goldsmith, Cowper, and Burns," On Poetic Interpretations of Nature (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1877, New York, Hurd, 1878, Boston, Houghton, 1885)

Snyder, E. D. "Thomas Gray's Interest in Celtic," Modern Philology, April, 1914 (11 570)

Stephen, L. "Gray and his School," Hours in a Library, 3 vols. (London, Smith, 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1890), 4 vols. (1907).

Walker, H. The English Essay and Essayists (London, Dent, 1915, New York, Dutton)

Warren, T. H. Essays of Poets and Poetry (New York, Dutton, 1909).

Warren, T. H. "Letters of Thomas Gray," The Quarterly Review, April, 1914 (220 390)

Wilson, B. "General Wolfe and Gray's Elegy," The Nineteenth Century, April, 1913 (78 862)

Woodberry, G. E. The Inspiration of Poetry (New York, Macmillan, 1910).

CONCORDANCE

Cook, A. S. A Concordance to the English Poems of Thomas Gray (Boston and New York, Houghton, 1908).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Northrup, C. H. A Bibliography of Thomas Gray (Yale Univ. Press, in preparation).

CRITICAL NOTES

Gray's poetry shows a distinct gain over his contemporaries in the number of poetic forms which he uses. The introduction of new poetic forms and new meters constituted one of the noticeable changes taking place in English poetry.

"Although Gray's biographers and critics have very seldom spoken of it, the most interesting thing in a study of his poetry . . . is his steady progress in the direction of Romanticism. Beginning as a classicist and disciple of Dryden, he ended in thoroughgoing Romanticism. His early poems contain nothing Romantic, his Elegy has something of the Romantic mood, but shows many conventional touches, in the Pindaric Ode the Romantic feeling asserts itself boldly, and he ends in enthusiastic study of Norse and Celtic poetry and mythology. Such a steady growth in the mind of the greatest poet of the time shows not only what he learned from the age, but what he taught it. Gray is a much more important factor in the Romantic Movement than seems to be commonly supposed."—Phelps, in The Beginnings of the English Romantic Movement (1893).

57.

ODE ON THE SPRING

The original title of this poem was Noon-tide, it is based upon Horace's Spring's Litanies (Odes, I, 4).

"His ode On Spring has something poetical, both in the language and the thought, but the language is too luxuriant, and the thoughts have nothing new. There has of late arisen a practice of giving to adjectives derived from substantives the termination of participles, such as the cultured plain, the dainted bank; but I was sorry to see in the lines of a scholar like Gray, the hunted spring. The morality is natural, but too stale, the conclusion is pretty."—Samuel Johnson, in "Gray," The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81).

1. In classic mythology the Hours are represented as accompanying Venus and as bringing the changes of the season. The epithet rosy-bosom'd is borrowed from Milton (Comus, 988).

21. The pseudo-classic habit of personification is distinctly noticeable in this poem and others of Gray.

ODE ON A DISTANT PROSPECT OF ETON COLLEGE

This poem was written shortly after the death of Richard West, Gray's intimate friend. Two other friends of college days, Ashton and Walpole, were estranged from Gray at the time.

"The Prospect of Eton College suggests nothing to Gray which every beholder does not equally think and feel. His supplication to father Thames, to tell him who drives the hoop or tosses the ball, is useless and puerile. Father Thames has no better means of knowing than himself."—Samuel Johnson, in "Gray," The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81).

G. Windsor Castle is on the opposite side of the Thames from Eton College.

58a. 20. In such phrases as this Gray shows the eighteenth century pseudo-classic manner.

79. In a note Gray refers to Dryden's Palamon and Arcite, 2, 582.

And Madness laughing in his ireful mood.

HYMN TO ADVERSITY

This poem was the model of Wordsworth's Ode to Duty (p. 296). It was itself modeled on Horace's Ode to Fortune.

7. The phrase purple tyrants Gray borrowed from Horace (Odes, I, 35, 12). Purple refers to the robes worn by kings.

8. See Milton's Paradise Lost, 2, 703. Strange horror seize thee and pains unfelt before.

59. 45-46. See note above on Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College.

ELEGY WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY CHURCH-YARD

"As you have brought me into a little sort of distress, you must assist me, I believe, to get out of it as well as I can. Yesterday I had the misfortune of receiving a letter from certain gentlemen (as their bookseller expresses it), who have taken the Magazine of Magazines into their hands. They tell me that an ingenious poem, called Reflections in a Country Churchyard, has been communicated to them, which they are printing forthwith, that they are informed that the excellent author of it is I by name, and that they beg not only his indulgence, but the honor of his correspondence, etc. As I am not at all disposed to be either so indulgent, or so correspondent, as they desire, I have but one bad way left to escape the honor they would inflict upon me; and therefore am obliged to desire you would make Doddsley print it immediately (which may be done in less than a week's time) from your copy, but without my name, in what form is most convenient for him, but on his best paper and character; he must correct the press himself, and print it without any interval between the stanzas, because the sense is in some places continued beyond them, and the title must be,—'Elegy, Written in a Country Churchyard.' If he would add a line or two to say it came into his hands by accident, I should like it better.

If you behold the Magasin of Magasins in the light that I do, you will not refuse to give yourself this trouble on my account, which you have taken of your own accord before now. If Dodsley do not do this immediately, he may as well let it alone"—Gray's Letter to Walpole, Feb 11, 1751.

"The Church-Yard abounds with images which find a mirror in every mind, and with sentiments to which every bosom returns an echo. The four stanzas beginning 'Yet even these bones' are to me original. I have never seen the notions in any other place, yet he that reads them here persuades himself that he has always felt them. Had Gray written often thus, it had been vain to blame, and useless to praise him"—Samuel Johnson, in "Gray," The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81).

"Of all short poems—or indeed of all poems whatsoever—in the English language, which has been, for a century and a quarter past, the one most universally, persistently, and incessantly reproduced and quoted from? I suppose, beyond rivalry and almost beyond comparison, The Elegy in a Country Church-yard of Thomas Gray. Such is the glory which has waited upon scant productivity and relative mediocrity—though undoubtedly nobly balanced and admirably grown and finished mediocrity—in the poetic art. The flute has overpowered the organ, the riding-horse has outstripped Pegasus, and the crescent moon has eclipsed the sun"—W. M. Rossetti, in Lives of Famous Poets (1878).

9-16. If a definite scene is in Gray's mind, it is probably that of the church and graveyard at Stoke Poges.

60. 55-56. These lines should be compared with the following from Ambrose Philipps's The Fable of Thule (1748), 35-40:

In forests did the lonely beauty shine
Like woodland flowers, which paint the desert
glades
And waste their sweets in unfrequented shades.

57-60. In an early manuscript version of the poem, the names used in this stanza are Cato, Tully, and Cesar. The changes are significant of Gray's growing Romanticism.

71-72. A reference to the custom, still common in Gray's time, of writing complimentary verses to noted persons to secure their patronage. After these lines, in an early manuscript version, the following stanzas are found:

The thoughtless world to majesty may bow,
Exalt the brave, and glorify success
But more to innocence their safety owe Than power and genius e'er conspired to bless.

And thou, who, mindful of th' unhonored dead,
Dost in these notes their artless tale relate,
By night and lonely contemplation led
To linger in the gloomy walks of Fate,

Hark! how the sacred calm, that broods around,

Bids every fierce tumultuous passion cease,
In still small accents whispering from the ground

A grateful earnest of eternal peace

No more, with reason and thyself at strife,
Give anxious cares and endless wishes room!
But through the cool sequestered vale of life
Pursue the silent tenor of thy doom.

81. A number of gravestones at Stoke Poges contain misspellings.

THE PROGRESS OF POEY

This and the following poem are known as Gray's Minstrel Ode, perhaps the best ever written in the English language. They conform closely to the structure and manner of Minstrel. See note on Collins's Ode on the Poetical Character (p. 1245a). The Progress of Poeiy was announced by Gray in a letter to Walpole (undated, No. 97 in Tovey's ed.) in which he said that he might send very soon to Dodsley, his publisher, "an ode to his own tooth, a high Minstrel upon stilts, which one must be a better scholar than he is to understand a line of, and the very best scholars will understand but a little matter here and there." Gray's expectation was fulfilled. When this poem and The Bard were published, few persons read them with appreciation. In a letter to Mason (undated, No. 148 in Tovey's ed.), Gray says: "I would not have put another note to save the souls of all the owls in London. It is extremely well as it is—nobody understands me, and I am perfectly satisfied. Even The Critical Review (Mr. Franklin, I am told), that is rapt and surprised and shudders at me yet mistakes the Eolian lyre for the harp of Æolus, which, indeed as he observes, is a very bad instrument to dance to. If you hear anything (though it is not very likely, for I know my day is over) you will tell me. Lord Lyttleton¹ and Mr. Shenstone² admire me, but wish I had been a little clearer."

In reply to Richard Hurd's letter of thanks for a present of these two odes, Gray wrote as follows (Aug. 25, 1757):

"I do not know why you should thank me for what you had a right and title to, but attribute it to the excess of your politeness, and the more so, because almost no one else has made me the same compliment. As your acquaintance in the University (you say) do me the honor to admire, it would be ungenerous in me not to give them notice, that they are doing a very unfashionable thing, for all people of condition are agreed not to admire, nor even to understand. One very great man, writing to an acquaintance of his and mine says that he had read them seven or eight times, and that now, when he next sees him, he shall not have above thirty questions to ask. Another (a peer) believes that the last stanza of the second ode relates to King Charles the First and Oliver Cromwell. Even my friends tell me they do not succeed and write me moving topics of consolation on that head. In short, I have heard of nobody but an actor¹ and a doctor of divinity² that profess their esteem for them. Oh yes, a lady of quality (a friend of Mason's), who is a great reader. She knew there was a compliment to Dryden, but never suspected there was anything said about Shakespeare or Milton, till it was explained to her, and wishes that there had been titles prefixed to tell what they were about."

¹ George Lyttleton (1709-73), an English author and politician.

² William Shenstone (1714-63), an English poet. See p. 40.

"[The] Progress of Poetry, in reach, variety, and loftiness of pulse, overrules all other English lyrics like an eagle. In spite of the dullness of contemporary ears, preoccupied with the continuous hum of the popular hurdy-gurdy, it was the prevailing blast of Gray's trumpet that more than anything else called man back to the legitimate standard"—Lowell, in "Pope" My Study Windows (1871).

61. I. 1. "The various sources of poetry, which gives life and lustre to all it touches, are here described. Its quiet majestic progress enriching every subject (otherwise dry and barren) with a pomp of diction and luxuriant harmony of numbers and its more rapid and irresistible course, when swolen and hurried away by the conflict of tumultuous passions"—Gray's note

I 2 "Power of harmony to calm the turbulent sallies of the soul"—Gray's note

62. I 3. "Power of harmony to produce all the graces of motion in the body"—Gray's note

II 1. "To compensate the real and imaginary ills of life, the Muse was given to mankind by the same Providence that sends day by its cheerful presence to dispel the gloom and terrors of the night"—Gray's note

II 2 "Extensive influence of poetic genius over the remotest and most uncivilized nations. Its connection with liberty and the virtues that naturally attend on it. (See the Euse, Norwegian, and Welsh Fragments, the Lapp-land and American songs)"—Gray's note

62. II 3 "Progress of poetry from Greece to Italy, and from Italy to England. Chaucer was not unacquainted with the writings of Dante or of Petrarca. The Earl of Surrey and Sir Tho Wyatt had travelled in Italy, and formed their taste there. Spenser imitated the Italian writers. Milton improved on them but this School expired soon after the Restoration and a new one arose on the French model which has subsisted ever since"—Gray's note

63. THE BARD

"The following ode is founded on a tradition current in Wales, that Edward the First when he completed the conquest of the country, ordered all the bards that fell into his hands to be put to death"—Gray's prefatory Advertisement

"To select a singular event, and swell it to a giant's bulk by fabulous appendages of spec-ties and predictions, has little difficulty for he that forsakes the probable may always find the marvellous. And it has little use, we are affected only as we believe, we are improved only as we find something to be imitated or declined. I do not see that The Bard promotes any truth, moral or political. His stanzas are too long, especially his epodes, the ode is finished before the ear has learned its measures, and consequently before it can receive pleasures from their consonance and recurrence.

In the second stanza the bard is well described, but in the third we have the puerilities of obsolete mythology. When we are told that 'Cadwallo hush'd the stormy main,' and that 'Modred made huge Plinlimmon bow his cloud-topp'd head' attention recalls from the repetition of a tale that, even when it was first heard, was heard with scorn.

These odes are marked by glittering accumulation of ungraceful ornaments; they strike, rather than please, the images are magnified by affectation, the language is labored into harshness. The mind of the writer seems to work with unnatural violence. 'Double, double, toll and trouble.' He has a kind of strutting dignity and is tall by walking on tip-toe. His art and his struggle are too visible and there is too little appearance of ease and nature"—Samuel Johnson, in "Gray," The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81).

"Mr Fox, supposing the bard sung his song but once over, does not wonder if Edward the First did not understand him. This last criticism is rather unhappy, for though it had been sung a hundred times under his window, it was absolutely impossible King Edward should understand him but that is no reason for Mr Fox who lives almost 500 years after him. It is very well, the next thing I print shall be in Welsh—that's all"—Gray, in Letter to Mason (undated. No 148 in Tovey's ed.)

19-20. "The image was taken from a well-known picture of Raphael representing the Supreme Being in the vision of Ezekiel. There are two of these pictures (both believed original), one at Florence the other at Paris"—Gray's note

28. Hoel was a prince and poet of North Wales. See note on The Death of Hoel, p. 1266b. Soft Llewellyn's law—A lay about the gentle Llewellyn, a Welsh prince.

65. ODE ON THE PLEASURE ARISING FROM VICISSITUDE

This poem in its present unfinished form was found after Gray's death in his notebook of the year 1754.

66. THE FATAL SISTERS

"Doddley told me in the spring that the plates from Mr Bentley's designs were worn out, and he wanted to have them copied and reduced to a smaller scale for a new edition. I dissuaded him from so silly an expense, and desired he would put in no ornaments at all. The Long Story was to be totally omitted, as its only use (that of explaining the prints) was gone. but to supply the place of it in bulk, lest my works should be mistaken for the works of a flea, or a pismire, I promised to send him an equal weight of poetry or prose so, since my return hither, I put up about two ounces of stuff, viz The Fatal Sisters, The Descent of Odin (of both which you have copies), a bit of something from the Welch, and certain little notes, partly from justice (to acknowledge the debt, where I had borrowed anything), partly from ill temper, just to tell the gentle reader that Edward I was not Oliver Cromwell, nor Queen Elizabeth the Witch of Endor. This is literally all; and with all this, I shall be but a shrimp of an author"—Gray, in Letter to Walpole, Feb 25, 1768.

¹ David Garrick (1717-79)

² William Warburton (1698-1770)

¹ Macbeth, IV, 1, 20

The Long Story is a poem by Gray, written in a playful mood

In a prefatory notice to The Fatal Sisters, Gray states that the poem is "an ode from the Norse tongue, in the Oracles of Thormodus Torfæus, Hafnæ, 1697, folio, and also in Bartholinus." Professor Kittredge has pointed out that the poem is really a free rendering of a Latin translation which accompanied the Norse text in the editions Gray refers to, and that Gray's knowledge of Old Norse was very slight. See Professor Kittredge's "Gray's Knowledge of Old Norse," printed as an Appendix to the Introduction in the Athenæum Press ed of Gray's Works. The Latin version is printed in the same text. The Norse poem, with a prose translation, may be found also in Corpus Poeticum Boreale, I, 281-83.

"In the eleventh century, Sigurd, earl of the Orkney Islands, went with a fleet of ships and a considerable body of troops into Ireland, to the assistance of Rictygg with the Silken Beard, who was then making war on his father-in-law, Brian, king of Dublin. The earl and all his forces were cut to pieces, and Rictygg was in danger of a total defeat, but the enemy had a greater loss by the death of Brian their king, who fell in the action. On Christmas day (the day of the battle), a native of Caithness in Scotland, of the name of Darrud, saw at a distance a number of persons on horseback riding full speed towards a hill, and seeming to enter into it. Curiosity led him to follow them, till looking through an opening in the rocks, he saw twelve gigantic figures resembling women. They were all employed about a loom, and as they wove, they sung the following dreadful song, which when they had finished, they tore the web into twelve pieces, and (each taking her portion) galloped six to the north, and as many to the south. These were the Valkyrirs, female divinities, Parcs Militares, servants of Odin (or Woden) in the Gothic mythology. Their name signifies Chasers of the slain. They were mounted on swift horses, with drawn swords in their hands; and in the throng of battle selected such as were destined to slaughter, and conducted them to Valhalla, the hall of Odin, or paradise of the brave, where they attended the banquet, and served the departed heroes with horns of mead and ale. Their numbers are not agreed upon, some authors representing them as six, some as four"—Gray's Preface 67.

THE DESCENT OF ODIN

"An ode from the Norse tongue, in Bartholinus, De causis contemnenda mortis, Hafnæ, 1689, quarto"—Gray. The Norse poem is in the Pœtio Edda, a collection of Old Norse poetry made probably in the thirteenth century. Gray's poem is a free rendering of the Latin translation which Bartholin prints with the Norse text.

In this poem, Odin, the supreme deity in Scandinavian mythology, descends to the lower world to learn from an ancient prophetess what danger threatened Balder, his favorite son. Balder had dreamed that his life was in danger, and Frigga, his mother, had made all things swear not to hurt Balder, but she had omitted the mistletoe, thinking it too insignificant to be dangerous.

55-56. Hodder was Balder's blind brother. Through the influence of the evil being Loki, Hodder unconsciously slew Balder with the mistletoe.

63-70. Vale the son of Odin and Rinda, when only one night old slew Hodder.

75. The virgins were probably the Scandinavian Norns, or Sisters of Destiny. See The Fatal Sisters (p. 66) and Gray's Preface, above.

68.

THE TRIUMPH OF OWEN

This and the three following poems are fragments taken from Evans's Specimens of the Ancient Welsh Bards, a collection of Welsh poems with English prose translations, followed by a Dissertation de Bardis, published in 1764. The Triumph of Owen, which is based on a prose version commemorates a battle in which Owen, King of North-Wales, resisted the combined attack of Irish, Danish, and Norman fleets, about 1160.

THE DEATH OF HOEL

This and the two following poems are extracts from the Gododin, a relic of sixth century Welsh poetry, included in Evans's Specimens. (See note on The Triumph of Owen.) Gray used the Latin versions given by Evans in the Dissertation de Bardis. These are printed in the Athenæum Press ed. of Gray's Works. The Death of Hoel is supposed to celebrate a battle between the Strathclyde Britons and the Northumbrian Saxons. Hoel was a prince and poet of North-Wales.

69.

GRAY'S LETTERS

"Everyone knows the letters of Gray, and remembers the lucid simplicity and directness, mingled with the fastidious sentiment of a scholar, of his description of such scenes as the Chartreuse. That is a well-known description, but those in his journal of a 'Tour in the North' have been neglected, and they are especially interesting since they go over much of the country in which Wordsworth dwelt, and of which he wrote 'They are also the first conscious effort—and in this he is a worthy forerunner of Wordsworth—to describe natural scenery with the writer's eye upon the scene described, and to describe it in simple and direct phrase, in distinction to the fine writing that was then practiced. And Gray did this intentionally in the light prose journal he kept, and threw by for a time the refined carefulness and the insistence on human emotion which he thought necessary in poetic description of Nature. In his prose then, though not in his poetry we have Nature loved for her own sake"—Stopford Brooke, in "From Pope to Cowper," Theology in the English Poets (1874).

The persons addressed in the letters printed in the text were Gray's mother and Gray's school and college friends. William Mason was his biographer.

73.

JOURNAL IN THE LAKE

b 21. Employment to the mirror—Gray usually carried with him on his tour a plano-convex mirror, about four inches in diameter, which served the purpose of a camera-obscura.

27. The Doctor—Dr Thomas Wharton, Gray's friend, for whose amusement the Journal was composed.

55-56. The jans of Borrodale—See Wordsworth's Jean-Tree (p 290).

74a. 30-31 Lodore waterfall—See Southey's The Cataract of Lodore (p 410).

b. 27-28. Cf Milton's Samson Agonistes, 86-89.

The sun to me is dark
And silent as the moon,
When she deserts the night,
Hid in her vacant interlunar cave.

35. Helm-crag—This is "that ancient woman seated on Helm-crag" of Wordsworth in To Joanna, 50.

WILLIAM HAMILTON OF BANGOUR (1704-1754), p. 13

EDITIONS

Poems and Songs, ed. with a Life, by James Paterson (London Methuen, 1852).

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

Chalmers, A. "Life of William Hamilton," Chalmers's English Poets, Vol 15 (London, 1810).
Eyre Todd, G. Scottish Poetry of the Eighteenth Century (Glasgow, Hodge, 1896).

Veitch, J. The History and Poetry of the Scottish Border (London, Macmillan, 1877, 1878).
Walker, H. Three Centuries of Scottish Literature, 2 vols (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1893).
Wilson, J G. The Poets and Poetry of Scotland, 2 vols (Glasgow, Blackie, 1876, New York, Harper).

CRITICAL NOTES

"Amid the generally vague verbiage of his [Hamilton's] descriptions, one effort of his genius stands out in vividness of human coloring, in depth and simplicity of feeling, and even to some extent in powerful and characteristic touches of scenery. This is a poem which owes its inspiration to the Yarrow. In fact it was suggested by the older poem of The Dowie Dens. It breathes the soul of the place, and it is so permeated by the spirit of its history and traditions, that when all the other writings of the author have fallen into oblivion, there will still be a nook in memory and a place in men's hearts for The Brags of Yarrow."—Veitch in The History and Poetry of the Scottish Border (1878).

13.

THE BRAGS OF YARROW

Yarrow is a beautiful river in Selkirkshire, Scotland. It is celebrated in many ballads and songs. See Wordsworth's Yarrow Unvisited (p 293), Yarrow Visited (p 308), and Yarrow Revisited (p 312). Hamilton's poem is a dialogue spoken by three persons, designated "A," "B," and "C."

ROBERT STEPHEN HAWKER (1804-1873), p. 1150

EDITIONS

Poetical Works, ed by J G Godwin (London, Paul, 1879).

Poetical Works, ed with a Preface and Bibliography, by Alfred Wallis (London, Lane, 1899).

Cornish Ballads, and other Poems, ed by C E Byles (London and New York, Lane, 1904).

BIOGRAPHY

Baring-Gould, F. Robert Stephen Hawker, Vicar of Morwenstow (London, Paul, 1870, 1886).

Byles, C E. Life and Letters of R S. Hawker (London and New York, Lane, 1905).

Memoirs of the Rev R S. Hawker, ed. by F. G. Lee (London, Chatto, 1876).

CRITICISM

Dal, Th. "A Famous Cornish Character," May 1, 1905 (38 308).

Kelley, B M. "Hawker of Morwenstow." The Catholic World, July, 1916 (103 487).

More, P E. "The Vicar of Morwenstow," Shelburne Essays, Fourth Series (New York and London, Putnam, 1906).

Noble, J A. "Hawker of Morwenstow," The Sonnet in England (London, Mathews, 1893).

- Pillsbury, R. L. "A Morwenstow Pilgrimage," 1153.
The Bookman, Sept., 1904 (20 '86)
Spectator, The, "The Essays of the Rev. R. S.
 Hawker," June 10, 1898 (70 777)

QUEEN GUENNAIVAR'S ROUND

Guennivar is Guinevere, the wife of King Arthur

TO ALFRED TENNYSON

This poem was written to Tennyson on the publication of his Idylls of the King

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Byles, C. E. In Life and Letters of R. S. Hawker (1905)
 Wallis, A. In his edition of Hawker's Poetical Works (1899)

WILLIAM HAZLITT (1778-1830), p. 1007

EDITIONS

Literary Remains of the Late William Hazlitt, with a Notice of his Life by his Son, and Thoughts on his Genius and Writings, by E. L. Bulwer, and T. N. Talfourd, 2 vols (London, Templeman, 1839).

Collected Works, ed. by A. R. Waller and A. Glover, 12 vols and an Index (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McChure)

Works, 4 vols (Everyman's Library ed. New York, Dutton, 1906-10)

Selections, ed., with a Biographical and Critical Introduction, by W. D. Howe (Boston, Glun 1913)

Hazlitt on English Literature, Selections of Critical Essays, ed., with a Critical Introduction by J. Zeitlin (Oxford Univ. Press, 1913)

Dramatic Essays, ed., with an Introduction, by W. Archer and R. W. Lowe (London, Scott, 1894)

BIOGRAPHY

Birrell, A. William Hazlitt (English Men of Letters Series. New York and London, Macmillan 1902)

Boudry, J. Vie de William Hazlitt, l'Essayiste (Paris, Hachette, 1907)

Hazlitt, W. C. Four Generations of a Literary Family (on the Hazlitts in England, Ireland, and America, their Friends and Fortunes, 1725-1896 2 vols (London, Rodway, 1897)

Hazlitt, W. C. Lamb and Hazlitt: Letters and Records (London, Mathews 1896)

Hazlitt, W. C. Memoirs of William Hazlitt, 2 vols (London, Benthley 1867)

CRITICISM

Blackwood's Magazine July 1822 (12 94), "Cockney Contributions," July 1824 (16 67)

"Hazlitt 'Cross questioned,'" Aug., 1818 (3 550), "Jeffrey and Hazlitt," June, 1818 (3 303), "Lectures on English Poetry," Feb., 1818 (2 556), Mar., 1818 (2 679), April, 1818 (3 71), "Table Talk," Aug., 1822 (12 157), "Works of the First Importance," March, 1825 (17 361)

Dana, R. H. "Hazlitt's Lectures on the English Poets," Poems and Prose Writings, 2 vols (New York, 1850, Philadelphia, 1883)

Edinburgh Review, The "Lectures on the Dramatic Literature of the Age of Elizabeth" Nov., 1820 (34 438)

Fyvie, J. Some Literary Eccentrics (New York, Pott, 1906)

Haydon, B. R. Correspondence and Table Talk, 2 vols (London, Chatto, 1876)

CRITICAL NOTES

"The simple legends connected with the wild and singular scenery of my own country appeal to me not undeserving of record. These which I have published were related to me, and that chiefly by the common people, in the course of my solitary rambles in the West. They were 'done into verse,' also, during these my walks and rides"—From Hawker's Preface to Records of the Western Shore (1832)

1150. THE SONG OF THE WESTERN MEN

In 1688, Sir Jonathan Trelawney, a native of Cornwall, was imprisoned in the Tower of London with six other bishops, for resisting James II's Declaration of Indulgence. The refrain in Hawker's poem dates from that time, but the rest is original. It was first published anonymously, and Scott, Macaulay, and Dickens all thought it a genuine ballad.

CLOVELLY

Clovelly is a picturesque village on the north coast of Devonshire, England.

1152. THE SILENT TOWER OF BOTTICLAUX

"The rugged heights that line the sea-shore in the neighborhood of Tintadgel Castle and Church [on the coast of Cornwall] are crested with towers. Among these, that of Botticlaux, or, as it is now written, Boscastle is without bells. The silence of this wild and lonely churchyard on festive or solemn occasions is not a little striking. On enquiry I was told that the bells were once shipped for this church, but that when the vessel was within sight of the tower the blasphemy of her captain was punished in the manner related in the poem. The bells, they told me, still lie in the bay, and announce by strange sounds the approach of a storm"—Hawker's note.

11. Chough—"This wild bird chiefly haunts the coasts of Devon and Cornwall. The common people believe that the soul of King Arthur inhabits one of these birds, and no entreaty or bribe would induce an old Tintadgel quarryman to kill me one"—Hawker's note.

"PATRE VESTRE PARCIT IIIA"

This poem is sometimes entitled A Sonnet of the Sea

- Howe, P. P.: "Hazlitt and liber amorem," The Fortnightly Review, Feb., 1916 (105 300)
- Ireland, A. William Hazlitt, Essayist and Critic, with a Memoir (London, Waine, 1889)
- Irwin, S. T. "Hazlitt and Lamb," The Quarterly Review, Jan., 1900 (204 162).
- Jeffrey, F. "Characters of Shakespeare's Plays," The Edinburgh Review, Aug., 1817 (28 472), Contributions to The Edinburgh Review
- Lucas, E. V. The Life of Charles Lamb, 2 vols (London, Methuen, 1905), 1 vol (1910)
- More, P. E. "The First Complete Edition of Hazlitt," Sherburne Essays, Second Series (New York and London, Putnam, 1905)
- Patmore, P. G. My Friends and Acquaintance, 3 vols (New York Saunders, 1854)
- Patmore, P. G. Rejected Artistic (London, Colburn, 1826)
- Quarterly Review*, The "Characters of Shakespeare's Plays," May, 1818 (18 458), "Sketches of Public Characters," Nov., 1820 (22 158), "Table Talk," Oct., 1822 (26 103), "The Round Table," Oct. 1816 (17 154)
- Rickett, A. "The Vagabond" Personal Forces in Modern Literature (London, Dent, 1906, New York, Dutton)
- Sainsbury, G. A History of Criticism, 3 vols (Edinburgh and London Blackwood, 1901-04, 1906, New York, Dodd), Book 6
- Sainsbury, G. Essays in English Literature, 1780-1860, First Series (London, Percival, 1900, New York, Scribner).
- Sichel, W. William Hazlitt—Romantic and Amoralist," The Fortnightly Review, Jan., 1914 (101 94)
- Stephen, H. Hours in a Library, 3 vols (London, Smith 1574 70 New York and London, Putnam, 1899), 4 vols (1907).
- Stoddard, R. H. Personal Recollections of Lamb, Hazlitt, and others (New York, Scribner 1875, 1903)
- Tourey, B. Friends on the Shelf (Boston Houghton, 1906)
- Walker, H. English Essay and Essayists (London Dent, 1915, New York, Dutton) ch 7.
- Whipple, E. P. "British Critics" Essays and Reviews 2 vols (1849, Boston Osgood, 1878).
- Winchester, C. T. A Group of English Essayists (New York, Macmillan, 1910)
- the hardihood of his paradoxes, he does not appear to have been influenced so much by self-esteem as sensibility. He was naturally shy and despairing of his own powers, and his dogmatism was of that turbulent kind which comes from passion and self-distrust. He had little repose of mind or manner, and in his works almost always appears as if his faculties had been stung and spurred into action"—E. P. Whipple, in Essays and Reviews (1849).
- 'If not the first, he was the most influential of those who bent the essay to this purely literary purpose, and he may be regarded as standing midway between the old essayists and the new. It was a fashion in his own time, and one that has often since been followed, to insist too strongly on Hazlitt's limitations as a critic. Yet, after all has been said, his method was essentially the same as Sainte-Beuve's, and his essays cannot even now be safely neglected by students of the literary developments with which they deal. It is impossible to read them without catching something of the ardor of his own enthusiasm, and it says much for the soundness of his taste and judgment that the great majority of his criticisms emerged undistorted from the glowing crucible of his thought"—J. H. Lobban, in Introduction to English Essayists (1896)
- 'Read a dozen of his essays, with their constant play of allusion, their apt—if over-abundant—quotation, their fleeting glimpses of imagination, now august, now beautiful, now pathetic, but always vivid, their brilliant, half-earnest paradox, their mild tone of melancholy reflection, their flashes of cynical satire, all flowing in a rhythm, unstudied yet varied and musical—and then you understand why many of the best masters of modern prose—Macaulay, Walter Bagot, Robert Louis Stevenson, Augustine Birrell—have given to the style of Hazlitt their praise and the better tribute of imitation 'We are fine fellows,' said Stevenson once, in despairing admiration 'but we can't write like William Hazlitt'"—C. T. Winchester, in A Group of English Essayists of the Early Nineteenth Century (1910)
- The numerous quotations in Hazlitt's writings were quoted largely from memory and are very often inaccurate. Yet many of them were purposely changed by him in order to be more serviceable and applicable. Frequently he uses earlier phrases of his own, as if they were quotations from some other author. A number of the quotations found in his writings have not yet been identified

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Doudy, J. Liste Chronologique des œuvres de William Hazlitt (Paris, Hachette, 1906)
- Ireland, A. List of the Writings of William Hazlitt and Leigh Hunt (London, Smith (1868)

CRITICAL NOTES

"The various critical writings of William Hazlitt are laden with original and striking thoughts, and indicate an intellect strong and intense, but narrowed by prejudice and personal feeling. He was an acute but somewhat bitter observer of life and manners, and satirized rather than described them. Though bold and arrogant in the expression of his opinions, and continually provoking opposition by

1007. CHARACTERS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS

Hazlitt shares with Hunt the distinction of having introduced a type of theatrical criticism which is frank and honest, at the same time that it is keenly appreciative. His criticisms of Shakespeare's plays usually appeared in the papers immediately after the performance of the plays. His criticism of Hamlet, a review of Kean's playing, appeared in The Morning Chronicle, March 14, 1814. The text here given is that of the first edition of the Characters of Shakespear's Plays (1817), which was a reprint, with slight changes, of the earlier reviews.

- 1008b. 14. There is no attempt to force an interest.—Saintsbury regards the criticism expressed in this sentence as one of "the apices of Shakespearian criticism" (History of Criticism, 3 258).

1011. ON FAMILIAR STYLE

"In reading this essay and rereading it, one has the feeling that here are some of the best words ever written on the subject and written by a man who had thought of style and what it means"—Howe, in Selections from William Hazlitt (1913). Cf. Lamb's The Genteel Style of Writing.

b. 9. "Tall, opaque words."—"I hate set dissertations—and above all things in the world, 'tis one of the silliest things in one of them, to darken your hypothesis by placing a number of tall, opake words, one before another, in a right line, betwixt your own and your reader's conception"—Sterne, in The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy, 3, 20, the Author's Preface. In his review of Miss O'Neill's Elwina, in A View of the English Stage (Collected Works, 8 257), Hazlitt uses the phrase as follows: "We should not have made these remarks, but that the writers in the above paper have a greater knack than any others, by putting a parcel of tall opaque words before them, to blind the eyes of their readers, and hoodwink their own understandings."

1014. THE FIGHT

Henley remarks that the summary of the fight is "alone in literature, as also in the annals of the Ring." (Introduction to Collected Works, 1 xxiii). For an account of the fight and the journey home, see P. G. Patmore's My Friends and Acquaintance. Hazlitt's The Indian Jugglers is another good essay on sport, especially the latter part, which contains the famous characterization of John Cavanaugh the lives-player (Collected Works, 6 77).

1022. ON GOING A JOURNEY

With this essay compare Stevenson's Walking Tours (Works, Scribner ed., 9 184).

- 1027b. 43. Out of my country and myself I go—This quotation has not yet been identified

1028. MY FIRST ACQUAINTANCE WITH POETS

"Any sketch of William Hazlitt may fitly begin with an extract from his most familiar essay—the most delightful essay of personal reminiscence in the English language. It is the story of his spiritual birth."—C. T. Winchester, in A Group of English Essayists of the Early Nineteenth Century (1910)

- 1032a. 38. Prefer the unknown to the known—Cf. Hazlitt's remarks in On the Conversation of Authors (Collected Works, 7, 29). "Coleridge withholds his tribute of applause from every person, in whom any mortal but himself can descry the least glimpse of understanding. He would be thought to look farther into a millstone than anybody else. He would have others see with his eyes, and take their opinions from him on trust, in spite of their senses. The more obscure and defective the indications of merit, the greater his sagacity and candor in being the first to point them out. He looks upon what he nicknames a man of genius, but as the breath of his nostrils, and the clay in the potter's hands. If any such inert, unconscious mass, under the fostering care of the modern Prometheus, is kindled into life,—begins to see, speak, and move, so as to attract the notice of other people,—our jealous patroniser of latent worth in that case throws aside, scorns, and hates his own handy-work; and deserts his intellectual offspring from the moment they can go alone and shift for themselves."

- 1034a. 21. Hear the loud stag speak—This quotation has not yet been identified

1036b. 28. Contempt of Gray—See Biographia Literaria, ch 2, note "I felt almost as if I had been newly couched, when, by Mr Wordsworth's conversation, I had been induced to re-examine with impartial strictness Gray's celebrated Elegy. I had long before detected the defects in The Bard; but the Elegy I had considered as proof against all fair attacks, and to this day I can not read either without delight, and a portion of enthusiasm. At all events whatever pleasure I may have lost by the clearer perception of the faults in certain passages, has been more than repaid to me by the additional delight with which I read the remainder."

28-29. Intolerance of Pope—See Biographia Literaria, ch 1 "Among those with whom I conversed, there were, of course, very many who had formed their taste, and learned their notions of poetry, from the writings of Mr Pope and his followers. or to speak more generally, in that school of French poetry, condensed and invigorated by English understanding, which had predominated from the last century. I was not blind to the merits of this school, yet, as from inexperience of the world, and consequent want of sympathy with the general subjects of these poems, they gave me little pleasure, I doubtless undervalued the kind, and with the presumption of youth withheld from its masters the legitimate name of poets. I saw that the excellence of this kind consisted in just and acute observations on men and manners in an artificial state of society, as its matter and substance, and in the logic of wit, conveyed in smooth and strong epigrammatic couplets, as its form; that even when the subject was addressed to fancy, or the intellect, as in The Rape of the Lock, or the Essay on Man, nay, when it was a consecutive narration, as in that astonishing product of matchless talent and ingeniulty, Pope's Translation of the Iliad, still a point was looked for at the end of each second line, and the whole was, as it were, a sortes,¹ or, if I may exchange a logical for a grammatical metaphor, a conjunction disjunctive, of epigrams. Meantime, the matter and diction seemed to me characterised not so much by poetic thoughts, as by thoughts translated into the language of poetry."

1037a. 54. Oh memory! etc.—This quotation has not yet been identified

FELICIA DOROTHEA HEMANS (1793-1835), p. 1160

EDITIONS

- Collected Works*, ed., with a Memoir, by her Sister, 7 vols (London, Blackwood, 1839)
Complete Works, 2 vols ed by her Sister (New York, Appleton, 1809)
Poetical Works, ed., with a Prefatory Notice, by W M Rossetti (London and Edinburgh, Moxon, 1873, New York, Burt)
Poetical Works (Oxford Univ Press, 1914)

BIOGRAPHY

- Chorley, H F Memorials of Mrs Hemans, 2 vols (New York, Saunders, 1830)
 Hughes, Mrs Memoir of the Life and Writings of Mrs Hemans (1839)

CRITICISM

- Bancroft, G "Mrs Hemans's Poems," The North American Review, April, 1827 (24 443)
 Bethune, G W British Female Poets (Philadelphia, Lindsay)
 Hamilton, Catherine J Women Writers their Works and Ways, 2 Series (London, Waid, 1892)
 Jeffrey, F "Records of Women with Other Poems," and "The Forest Sanctuary with Other Poems," The Edinburgh Review, Oct., 1829 (50 82). Contributions to the Edinburgh Review
Quarterly Review, The, "Mrs Hemans's Poems," Oct., 1821 (24 130)
 Walford, L B Twelve English Authorresses (London, Longmans, 1892)

CRITICAL NOTES

"Accomplishment without genius, and amiability without passion, reappear, translated into an atmosphere of lyric exaltation, in the once famous poetry of Mrs Hemans. Of all the English Romantic poets, Mrs Hemans expresses with the richest intensity the more superficial and transient elements of Romanticism. She is at the beck and call of whatever is touched with the pathos of the far away, of the bygone—scenes of reminiscence or farewell, laments of exile and dirges for the dead. Her imagination floats romantically aloof from actuality, but it quite lacks the creative energy of the great Romantics, and her fabrics are neither real substance nor right dreams. Her expression is spontaneously picturesque and spontaneously melodious, and both qualities captivated her public, but she never learned to modulate or to subdue her effects. She paints with few colors, all bright. Her pages are a tissue of blue sky, golden corn, flashing swords and waving banners, the murmur of pines, and the voices of children"—C H Herford, in The Age of Wordsworth (1897)

See Wordsworth's Estimable Effusion upon the Death of James Hogg, 37-40 (p 315)

JAMES HOGG (1772-1835), p. 476

EDITIONS

- Works in Poetry and Prose*, 2 vols., ed., with a Memoir, by J Thomson (London, Blackie, 1865, 1874), 6 vols (Edinburgh, Nimmo, 1878)
Works (Centenary Illustrated ed, 1870)
Poems, selected and edited with an Introduction, by Mrs Garden (Canterbury Poets ed London, Scott, 1880, New York, Simmons)

BIOGRAPHY

- Douglas, G B S James Hogg (Famous Scots Series London Oliphant, 1899)
 Mackenzie, S "Life of the Ettrick Shepherd," in Wilson's Notes Ambrosianae, vol 4 (New York, Widdleton, 1872)

CRITICISM

- Blackwood's Magazine*, "Some Observations on the Poetry of the Agricultural and Pastoral Districts of Scotland," Feb., 1819 (4 521)
 Chambers, W "The Candlemaker's-Row Festival," Memoir of Robert Chambers (Edinburgh, Chambers, 1872)
Dial, The, "The Real Ettrick Shepherd" March 10, 1900 (28 205)
 Hadden, J C "The Ettrick Shepherd," The Gentleman's Magazine, Sept., 1892 (273 283)
 Hall, S C and Mrs S. C. "Memories of Authors of the Age," The Eclectic Magazine, Dec., 1866 (67 606)
 Jeffrey, F "The Queen's Wake," The Edinburgh Review, Nov., 1814 (24 157)
 Lang, A "Mystery of Auld Maitland," Blackwood's Magazine, June, 1910 (187 872)
 Lockhart, J G Memoirs of the Life of Sir Walter Scott, Baronet, 10 vols (Edinburgh, 1839), 3 vols (Boston, Houghton, 1881); Abridged ed. 1 vol (New York, Crowell, 1871, London, Black, 1880)
Memorials of James Hogg, ed by his daughter, Mrs M G Garden, with a Preface by J. Veitch (Paisley, Gardner, 1885, 1908)
 Minto, W In Ward's The English Poets, Vol. 4 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1911).

¹ A sortes is an abridged form of stating a series of syllogisms, arranged in such a way that the predicate of one member becomes the subject of the following member

- Saintsbury, G Essays in English Literature, 1780-1880, First Series (London, Percival, 1890, New York, Scribner)
- Sharp, J C "The Ettrick Shepherd," Sketches in History and Poetry, ed by J Velitch (Edinburgh Douglas, 1857)
- Stoddard, R H Under the Evening Lamp (New York, Scribner, 1892, London, Gay)
- Thomson, J Biographical and Critical Studies (London, Reeves, 1896)
- Velitch, J The History and Poetry of the Scottish Border (London, Macmillan, 1877, 1878).

CRITICAL NOTES

"No Scottish poet has dealt with the power and realm of Fairy more vividly and impressively than the Bard of Ettrick. He caught up several of the floating traditions, which actually localized the fairy doings, and thus, as he haunted the hills and moors where they were said to have taken place, brought the old legend home to his everyday life and feeling. He was thus led to an accurate observation and description of the reputed scenes of the story, and of the haunts of the Fairies. These had only received rare mention in the tradition itself, and little more than this even when they had been put into verse in the older time. But all these spots he knew well; many of them were the daily round of the shepherd and his collic. The legends he had learned thus acquired something of the reality which he felt. Hence Hogg's poems of Fairy are remarkable for the fullness, the richness, and the accuracy of the description of the country—of hill, glen and moor."—John Velitch in The History and Poetry of the Scottish Border (1874)

See Wordsworth's Excursion Lijunon upon the Death of James Hogg (p 315), also Wilson's Noctes Ambrosianae (p 1173)

477

THE SKILARK

See Wordsworth's and Shelley's poems on the same subject (pp 297, 312, and 704)

THE QUEEN'S WAKE

The Queen's Wake consists of a group of fifteen poems supposed to have been sung by Scottish minstrels before Mary, Queen of Scots, at Christmastide, 1561, after her return to her native land. According to the story, she was so struck with the song of an aged minstrel who played to her as she rode from the plea of Leith to Holyrood, and by the reports she heard of the great body of tradition belonging to Scotland, that she straightway announced a poetical competition—the prize to be a beautiful harp. The fifteen songs were the result.

"The Queen's Wake is a garland of fair forest-flowers, bound with a band of rushes from the moor. It is not a poem,—not it; nor was it intended to be so, you might as well call a bright bouquet of flowers a flower, which, by-the-by, we do in Scotland. Some of the ballads are very beautiful, one or two even splendid, most of them spirited; and the worst far better than the best that ever was written by any hand in danger of being a blockhead. Kilmeny alone places our (ay, our) Shepherd among the Undying Ones"—John Wilson, in Christopher North's Recreations: An Hour's Talk about Poetry (1831). Kilmeny is the story, common in Celtic folk-lore and still believed in by the Irish peasantry, of a maiden stolen by the fairies and brought back to earth after seven years, devoid of all human desires.

482.

M'KIMMAN

This and the next poem are stirring national songs reminiscent of border conflicts between Scotland and England (the Saxons) during the 18th century. The persons named in the poems were probably actual participants in the conflicts.

483.

LOCK THE DOOR, PARISTON

See note on M'Kimmman, above. Cf. Scott's Border March (p 469), and Peacock's parody Chorus of Northumbrians (p 1124b).

THE MAID OF THE STR

"This is one of the many songs which Moore caused me to cancel, for nothing that I know of, but because they run counter to his. It is quite natural and reasonable that an author should claim a copyright of a sentiment, but it never struck me that it could be so exclusively his, as that another had not a right to contradict it. This, however, seems to be the case in the London law, for true it is that my songs were cancelled, and the public may now judge on what grounds, by comparing them with Mr Moore's. I have neither forgot nor forgiven it, and I have a great mind to make him cancel Lalla Rookh for stealing it wholly from The Queen's Wake, which is so apparent in the plan, that every London judge will give it in my favor, although he ventured only on the character of one accomplished bard, and I on seventeen. He had better have let my few trivial songs alone."—Hogg's Introduction

THOMAS HOOD (1799-1845), p. 1135

EDITIONS

- Complete Works*, 11 vols (London, Ward and Lock, 1870-73, 1880)
- Poetical Works*, ed by W M Rossetti (London, Ward, 1880).
- Poems*, 2 vols (Miniature Poems ed London, Cassell, 1882-84)
- Poems*, ed by A Ainger, 2 vols (New York, Macmillan, 1897).

Complete Poetical Works, ed by W. Jerrold (Oxford Univ Press, 1906, 1911)

Poems, with Hunt (selections), ed by J H Panting (Canterbury Poets ed London, Scott, 1889)

Prose Works, 3 vols, ed. by E Sargent (New York, Putnam, 1865).

Hood's Magazine and Comic Miscellany, 10 vols London 1844-8)

Whims and Oddities in Prose and Verse, 2 vols (London, Ward and Lock, 1875)

BIOGRAPHY

Elliott, A. Hood in Scotland (London, Simpkin, 1885)

Jerrold, W. Thomas Hood, his Life and Times (New York, Lane, 1909)

CRITICISM

Ashton, J. "The True Story of Eugene Aram," Eighteenth Century Waifs (London, Hurst, 1887)

Dawson W J. "The Humanitarian Movement in Poetry—Thomas Hood and Mrs Browning" The Makers of English Poetry (New York and London, Revell, 1906)

Dobson, A. In Ward's The English Poets, Vol 4 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1900, 1911)

Dudley, T U. Harper's New Monthly Magazine, April, 1891 (82 720)

Eclectic Magazine, The, "Recollections of Thomas Hood" Jan., Feb., 1869 (70 96, 198)

Fraser, J. The Westminster Review, 1871 (95 354)

Giles, H. The Atlantic Monthly, Nov., 1860 (6 513)

Hudson W H. A Quiet Corner in a Library (Chicago, Rand-McNally, 1915)

Littell's Living Age "The Sad Side of the Humorist's Life," Jan., 1862 (72 220). "The Works of Thomas Hood," Jun., 1863 (70 126).

Mason, D. Macmillan's Magazine, Aug., 1860 (2 315)

Memorials of Hood, 2 vols., ed by his daughter, Mrs F Broderip (London, Moxon, 1860, 1869)

More, P E. Sheburne Essays, Seventh Series (New York and London, Putnam, 1910)

Oswald, E. "Thomas Hood und die soziale Tendenzentwicklung seiner Zeit," Wiener Beiträge zur engl Philologie, Vol 19 (Vienna, 1904)

Saintsbury, G. Essays in English Literature, 1780-1860, Second Series (London, Dent, 1895, New York, Scribner)

Shelley, H C. "Thomas Hood's First Centenary" The Fortnightly Review, June, 1899 (71 987).

Stedman, E C. "A Representative Triad—Hood, Arnold, Procter," Scribner's Monthly, Feb., 1874 (7 463).

Stedman, E C. Victorian Poets (Boston, Houghton, 1875, 1888)

Whipple E. P. Essays and Reviews, 2 vols. (1849, Boston, Osgood, 1878).

CRITICAL NOTES

To the Memory of Hood

Another star 'neath Time's horizon dropped,
To gleam o'er unknown lands and seas,
Another heart that beat for freedom stopped,—
What mournful words are these!

O Love Divine, that claspest our tired earth,
And lullest it upon thy heart,
Thou knowest how much a gentle soul is worth
To teach men what thou art!

His was a spirit that to all thy poor
Was kind as slumber after pain
Why ope so soon thy heaven-deep Quiet's door
And call him home again?

Freedom needs all her poets. It is they
Who give her aspirational wings,
And to the wiser law of music sway
Her wild imaginings

Yet thou hast called him, nor art thou unkind,
O Love Divine, for 'tis thy will
That gracious natures leave their love behind
To work for Freedom still

Let laurelled marbles weigh on other tombs,
Let anthems peal for other dead
Rustling the bannered depth of minster-glooms
With their exulting spread

His epitaph shall mock the short-lived stone,
No lichen shall its lines efface,
He needs these few and simple lines alone
To mark his resting place —

"Here lies a Poet Stranger if to thee
His claim to memory be obscure
If thou wouldst learn how truly great was he,
Go ask it of the poor" —

—J R Lowell (1845)

Jealous, I own it, I was once—
That wickedness I here renounce
I tried at wit—it would not do,
At tenderness—that failed me too
Before me on each path there stood
The witty and the tender Hood!

—Walter Savage Landor.

1130.

FAIR INES

"One of the noblest—and, speaking of Fancy, one of the most singularly fanciful of modern poets was Thomas Hood His Fair Ines had always, for me, an inexpressible charm"—Edgar Allan Poe, in The Poetic Principle (1850).

RUTH

This poem is based on the Book of Ruth — (cf Keats's Ode to a Nightingale, 65-70 (p 832).

I REMEMBER, I REMEMBER

The house described in this poem has not been accurately identified. It may be the house at Islington Green where Hood lived during the early days of his childhood

1138. THE DREAM OF EUGENE ARAM, THE MURDERER

"The remarkable name of Eugene Aram [1704-59], belonging to a man of unusual

talents and acquirements, is unhappily associated with a deed of blood as extraordinary in its details as any recorded in our calendar of crime. In the year 1745, being then an Usher and deeply engaged in the study of Chaldee, Hebrew, Arabic, and the Celtic dialects, for the formation of a Lexicon, he abruptly turned over a still darker page in human knowledge, and the brow that learning might have made illustrious was stamped ignominious forever with the brand of Cain. To obtain a trifling property he concerted with an accomplice, and with his own hand effected, the violent death of one Daniel Clarke, a shoemaker of Knaresborough, in York-shire. For fourteen years nearly the secret slept with the victim in the earth of St Robert's Cave, and the manner of its discovery would appear a striking example of the Divine Justice, even amongst those marvels narrated in that curious old volume alluded to in The Fortunes of Nigel, under its quaint title of God's Revenge against Murder.

"The accidental digging up of a skeleton, and the unwary and emphatic declaration of Aram's accomplice that it could not be that of Clarke, betraying a guilty knowledge of the true bones, he was wrought to a confession of their deposit. The learned homicide was seized and arraigned, and a trial of uncommon interest was wound up by a defense as memorable as the tragedy itself for eloquence and ingenuity—too ingenious for innocence, and eloquent enough to do credit even to that long premeditation which the interval between the deed and its discovery had afforded. That this dreary period had not passed without paroxysms of remorse, may be inferred from a fact of affecting interest. The late Admiral Burney was a scholar, at the school at Lynn in Norfolk, where Aram was an Usher, subsequent to his crime. The Admiral stated that Aram was beloved by the boys, and that he used to discourse to them of murder, not occasionally, as I have written elsewhere, but constantly, and in somewhat of the spirit ascribed to him in the poem.

"For the more imaginative part of the version I must refer back to one of those unaccountable visions, which come upon us like frightful monsters thrown up by storms from the great black deeps of slumber. A lifeless body, in love and relationship the nearest and dearest, was imposed upon my back, with an overwhelming sense of obligation—not of filial piety merely, but some awful responsibility equally vague and intense, and involving, as it seemed, inexplicable sin, horrors unutterable, torments intolerable,—to bury my dead, like Abraham, out of my sight.¹ In vain I attempted, again and again, to obey the mysterious mandate—by some dreadful process the burthen was replaced with a more stupendous weight of injunction, and an appalling conviction of the impossibility of its fulfilment. My mental anguish was indescribable,—the mighty agonies of souls tortured on the supernatural racks of sleep are not to be penned—and if in sketching those that belong to blood-guiltiness I have been at all successful, I owe it mainly to the uninvoked inspiration of that terrible dream"—Hood's Preface

1141. THE SONG OF THE SHIRT

This poem was inspired by an incident which recently had drawn attention to the conditions of workers in London. A woman whose husband had been killed in an accident and who was left with two infant children to support, was charged with having pawned articles belonging to her employer. It was brought out at the trial that she had been trying to support herself and family by making trousers at seven shillings a week, what her master called a "good living."

The poem won instant popularity in France and Germany as well as in England. It was printed on cotton handkerchiefs and sung about the streets. It is said to have trebled the circulation of Punch, in which it was first printed. Hood's monument bears the inscription "He sang the Song of the Shirt."

1142. THE BRIDGE OF SIGHs

"The vigor of this poem is no less remarkable than its pathos. The versification, although carrying the fanciful to the very verge of the fantastic, is nevertheless admirably adapted to the wild insanity which is the thesis of the poem."—E. A. Poe, in The Poetic Principle (1850).

Among Hood's papers after his death was found a fragment entitled Bridge of Sighs—Part II. This aimed to tell the story of a mother who threw her illegitimate child into the river and who was sentenced to death for her act.

1143. THE LAY OF THE LABORER

This poem in behalf of the starving unemployed was inspired by an incident that happened in the spring of 1844. A young Huntingdon laborer threatened to burn the property of the local farmers if they would not give him work. He was convicted and sentenced to transportation for life. Haunted by the subject, Hood wrote this poem and set it in a vigorous prose appeal, which he sent to the Home Secretary, Sir James Graham. It had no effect on the minister, but it won a pension for Hood's wife, and popular esteem for himself.

1144. STANFAS

This poem was written on Hood's death-bed, 1845, Jerrold (Thomas Hood: His Life and Times, p. 895) calls it "the swan-song of a suffering man possessed of unconquerable optimism."

¹ When Sarah, Abraham's wife, died in a foreign land, Abraham said to the people: "Give me a possession of a buryingplace with you, that I may bury my dead out of my sight."—Genesis, 23:4.

JAMES HENRY LEIGH HUNT (1784-1859), p. 866

EDITIONS

- Poetical Works*, ed by his son, Thornton Hunt (London, Routledge, 1890).
Portcull Works (Popular Poets ed., London, Moxon, 1883).
Poems, with Hood, selected and edited by J. H. Panning (Canterbury Poets ed., London, Scott, 1889, New York, Simon & Schuster).
Leigh Hunt as Poet and Essayist: the Choicest Passages selected, with Biographical Introduction, by W. C. Kent (London, Warne, 1888).
Essays and Poems, 2 vols., selected and edited by R. B. Johnson (Temple Library ed., London, Dent, 1891).
Essays, ed., with an Introduction, by E. Ollier (London, Chatto, 1889, 1890).
Essays, selected and edited, with an Introduction, by A. Symonds (Camelot ed., London, Scott, 1887, 1903).
Essays, selected and edited by A. Seymour (New York, Dutton, 1904).
Dramatic Essays, ed by W. Archer and R. W. Lowe (London, Scott, 1894).
Autobiography (London, Smith, 1850, 1906), 2 vols., ed by R. Ingpen (London, Constable, 1903, New York, Dutton).
Imagination and Fancy or, Selections from the English Poets, with an Essay in answer to the question, "What is Poetry?" (London, Smith, 1845, 1852, 1891, New York, Scribner).
What is Poetry?, ed. by A. S. Cook (Boston, Ginn, 1893).
Wishing Cap Papers, The (London, Low, 1873; Boston, Lee).

BIOGRAPHY

- Johnson, R. B. Leigh Hunt (London, Sonnenschein, 1890).
 Monkhouse, C. Life of Leigh Hunt (Great Writers Series, London, Scott, 1893).

CRITICISM

- Blackwood's Magazine*. "Follage, or Poems Original and Translated," Oct., 1819 (670); "On the Cockney School of Poetry," Oct., 1817 (288), Nov., 1817 (2104), July, 1818 (3453), Aug., 1818 (3510), Aug., 1825 (18155).
 Cairn, T. Hall. Cobwebs of Criticism (London, Stock, 1882, 1885).
 Clarke, Mary C. The Century Magazine, March, 1882 (23704).
 Conway, M. D. "The Leigh Hunt Memorial" Harper's New Monthly Magazine, Jan., 1870 (40258).
 Dowden, E. In Ward's The English Poets, Vol. 4 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1911).

- Edinburgh Review*, The. "The Story of Rimini," June, 1816 (26470).
 Fields, Mrs. J. T. A Shelf of Old Books (Boston, Osgood, 1894).
 Hazlitt, W. "Mr. T. Moore—Mr. Leigh Hunt," The Spirit of the Age (London, 1825), Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover, (London, Dent, 1902-06; New York, McClure), 4, 380.
 Horne, R. H.: "William Wordsworth and Leigh Hunt," A New Spirit of the Age, 2 vols. (London, Smith, 1844).
 Kent, Armine T. "Leigh Hunt as a Poet," The Fortnightly Review, July, 1881 (86224).
 Macaulay, T. B. The Edinburgh Review, Jan., 1841 (72490). Critical and Historical Essays, 2 vols. (London and New York, Longmans, 1898).
 Miller, Barnette. Leigh Hunt's Relations with Byron, Shelley, and Keats (Columbia Univ. Press, 1910).
 PUNCHARD, C. D. Helps to the Study of Leigh Hunt's Essays (London, Macmillan, 1899).
Quarterly Review, The. "Follage, or Poems Original and Translated," Jan., 1818 (18324), "The Story of Rimini," Jan., 1816 (14473).
 Redding, C. Reminiscences of Eminent Men, 3 vols (London, Saunders, 1867).
 Saintsbury, G. Essays in English Literature, 1780-1860, First Series (London, Percival, 1890, New York, Scribner).
 Trelawny, E. J. Records of Shelley and Byron (London, Moxon, 1858), Records of Shelley, Byron and the Author, 2 vols (London, Pickering, 1878, Frowde, 1906, New York, Dutton, 1905, Oxford Univ. Press, 1906).
 Walker, H. The English Essay and Essayists, ch. 7 (London, Dent, 1915; New York, Dutton).
 Whipple, E. P. "British Critique" and "Leigh Hunt's Poems," Essays and Reviews, 2 vols (Boston, Osgood, 1849, 1878).
 Winchester, C. T. A Group of English Essayists of the Early Nineteenth Century (New York, Macmillan, 1910).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, J. P. In Monkhouse's Life of Hunt (1893).
 Ireland, A. List of the Writings of William Hazlitt and Leigh Hunt (London, Smith, 1868).
 Johnson, R. B. In his edition of Hunt's Essays and Poems (1891).

CRITICAL NOTES

"An essayist, poet, and translator, full (at his best) of grace and charm in a kind quite of his own, he lacked both the stamina and the piercing imaginative vision which make Hazlitt so great. In temperament he was more akin to Lamb, but he equally lacked Lamb's rarer qualities both as a man and as a writer, and his chief function in literature was to further the ease, vivacity, and grace of which, though in a far choicer kind, Lamb was a master in prose, and Chaucer and Ariosto in verse."—C. H. Herford, in The Age of Spenser.

Wordsworth (1897)

THE STORY OF RIMINI

From Letter to Maria Giabonne

You will see Hunt—one of those happy souls
Which are the salt of the earth, and without whom 210
This world would smell like what it is—a tomb.
Who is, what others seem, his room no doubt
Is still adorned with many a east from Shout,
With graceful flowers tastefully placed about,
And coronals of bay from ribbons hung, 215
And brighter wreaths in neat disorder hung,
The gifts of the most loathed among some dozens
Of female friends, sisters-in-law, and cousins
And there is he with his eternal puns,
Which beat the dullest brain for smiles, like 220 duns
Thundering for money at a poet's door,
Alas! it is no use to say, "I'm poor!"
Or off in graver mood when he will look
Things wiser than were ever read in book,
Except in Shakespeare's wisest tenderness.— 225

—Shelley (1820)

Shelley dedicated The Cenci to Hunt in the following words: "MY DEAR FRIEND—I inscribe with your name, from a distant country, and after an absence whose months have seemed years, this the latest of my literary efforts."

"Those writings which I have hitherto published, have been little else than visions which impersonate my own apprehensions of the beautiful and the just. I can also perceive in them the literary defects incidental to youth and impetuosity; they are dreams of what ought to be, or may be. The drama which I now present to you is a sad reality. I lay aside the presumptuous attitude of an instructor, and am content to paint, with such colors as my own heart furnishes, that which has been

"Had I known a person more highly endowed than yourself with all that it becomes a man to possess, I had solicited for this work the ornament of his name. One more gentle, honorable, innocent and brave, one of more exalted toleration for all who do and think evil, and yet himself more free from evil, one who knows better how to receive, and how to confer a benefit, though he must ever confer far more than he can receive, one of simpler, and, in the highest sense of the word, of purer life and manners, I never knew—and I had already been fortunate in friendships when your name was added to the list

"In that patient and irreconcilable enmity with domestic and political tyranny and imposture which the tenor of your life has illustrated, and which, had I health and talents, should illustrate mine, let us, comforting each other in our task, live and die

"All happiness attend you! Your affectionate friend, PERCY B. SHELLEY.

"Rome, May 29, 1810"

See Keats's sonnets Written on the Day that Mr. Leigh Hunt Left Prison (p. 753) and To Leigh Hunt, Esq. (p. 764), also Dickens's genial caricature of Hunt as Harold Skimpole in Bleak House.

"The following story is founded on a passage in Dante, the substance of which is contained in the concluding paragraph of the second [fifth] Canto. For the rest of the incidents, generally speaking, the praise or blame remains with myself. The passage in question—the episode of Paulo and Francesca—has long been admired by the readers of Italian poetry, and is indeed the most cordial and refreshing one in the whole of that singular poem the Inferno, which some call a satire, and some an epic, and which, I confess, has always appeared to me a kind of sublime nightmare. We even lose sight of the place, in which the saturnine poet, according to his summary way of disposing both of friends and enemies, has thought proper to put the sufferers, and see the whole melancholy absurdity of his theology, in spite of itself, falling to nothing before one genuine impulse of the affections.

"The interest of the passage is greatly increased by its being founded on a acknowledged matter of fact. Even the particular circumstance which Dante describes as having hastened the fall of the lovers,—the perusal of Launcelot of the Lake,—is most likely a true anecdote; for he himself, not long after the event, was living at the court of Guido Novella da Polenta, the hero's father; and indeed the very circumstance of his having related it at all, considering its nature, is a warrant of its authenticity . . .

"There are no notes to the present poem. I have done my best, as every writer should, to be true to costume and manners, to time and place, and if the reader understands me as he goes, and feels touched where I am most ambitious he should be, I can be content that he shall miss an occasional nicety or so in other matters, and not be quite sensible of the mighty extent of my information. If the poem reach posterity, curiosity may find commentators enough for it, and the sanction of time give interest to whatever they may trace after me. If the case be otherwise, to write notes is only to show to how little purpose has been one's reading . . .

"For the same reason I suppress a good deal which I had intended to say on the versification of the poem,—or of that part of it, at least, where, in coming upon household matters calculated to touch us nearest, it takes leave, as it were, of a more visible march and accompaniment. I do not hesitate to say, however, that Pope and the French school of versification have known the least on the subject, of any poets perhaps that ever wrote.¹ They have mistaken mere smoothness for harmony; and, in fact, wrote as they did, because their ears were only sensible of a marked and uniform regularity. One of the most successful of Pope's imitators, Dr Johnson, was confessedly insensible to music. In speaking of such men, I allude, of course, only to their style in poetry, and not to their undisputed excellence in other matters. The great masters of modern versification are, Dryden for common narrative, though he wanted sentiment, and his style in some respects was apt to be artificial,—Spenser, who was musical from pure taste,—Milton, who was learnedly so,—Ariosto whose fine ear and animal spirits gave so frank and exquisite a tone to all he said,—Shakespeare, whose versification escapes us, only because he over-informed it with knowledge and sentiment—and, though the name may appear singular to those who have not read him with due attention to the nature of the language then existing,—Chaucer,—to whom it sometimes appears to me that I can trace Dryden himself, though the latter spoke on the subject without much relish, or, in fact, knowledge of it. All these are about as different from Pope as the church organ is from the bell in the steeple, or, to give him a more decorous comparison, the song of the nightingale, from that of the cuckoo.

¹ Launcelot of the Lake was a popular medieval romance.

² Cf. Coleridge's remarks in Biographia Literaria, ch. 1, quoted in the Notes, p. 1270b.

"With the endeavor to recur to a freer spirit of versification, I have joined one of still greater importance,—that of having a fine and idiomatic cast of language. There is a cast of art as well as of nature, though the former is not so unpleasant as the latter, which affects non-affectation. But the proper language of poetry is in fact nothing different from that of real life and depends for its dignity upon the strength and sentiment of what it speaks. It is only adding musical modulation to what a fine understanding might actually utter in the midst of its gifts or enjoyments. The poet therefore should do as Chaucer or Shakespeare did,—not copy what is obsolete or peculiar in either, any more than they copied from their predecessors,—but use as much as possible an actual existing language,—omitting of course mere vulgarisms and fugitive phrases, which are the cant of ordinary discourse, just as tragedy phrases, dead idioms, and exaggerations of simplicity, are of the natural. The artificial style, it is true, has its beauties as some great poets have proved; but I am here speaking of the style that is most beautiful; and these poets, it is to be observed, were not the greatest. Of the style, to which I allude, exquisite specimens, making allowance for what is obsolete, are to be found in The Canterbury Tales of Chaucer, and his Troilus and Criseida, and you have only to open the first books of Pulci¹ and Ariosto² to meet with two charming ones, the interview of Orlando with the Abbott, in the Morgante Maggiore (Canto 1 towards the conclusion), and the flight of Angelica, her meeting with Rinaldo's horse, etc., in the Orlando Furioso. Homer abounds with them, though, by the way, not in the translation, and I need not, of course, warn any reader of taste against trusting Mr. Hoole³ for a proper representation of the delightful Italian. Such versions, more or less, resemble bad engravings, in which all the substances, whether flesh, wood, or cloth, are made of one texture, and that a bad one. With the Greek dramatists I am ashamed to say I am unacquainted, and of the Latin writers, though Horace, for his delightful companionship, is my favorite, Catullus appears to me to have the truest taste for nature. But an Englishman need go no farther than Shakespeare. Take a single speech of Lear's, such for instance as that heart-rending one,

'I am a very foolish fond old man,
Fourscore and upward,' etc.⁴

and you have all that criticism can say, or poetry can do.

"In making these observations, I do not demand the reader to conclude that I have succeeded in my object, whatever may be my own opinion of the matter. All the merit I claim is that of having made an attempt to describe natural things in a language becoming to them, and to do something towards a revival of what appears to me a proper English versification. There are narrative poets now living who have fine eyes for the truth of things, and it remains with them perhaps to perfect what I may suggest. If I have succeeded at all, the lovers of nature have still to judge in what proportion the success may be; but let me take them with me a while, whether in dooks or out of dooks, whether in the room or the green fields—let my verses, in short, come under the perusal of ingenious eyes, and be felt a little by the hearts that look out of them, and I am satisfied."—Hunt, in Preface to The Story of Rimini (1816). The poem was dedicated to Lord Byron.

See Kint's On Leigh Hunt's Poem "The Story of Rimini" (p. 765).

In the portion of the poem omitted, Paulo, the brother of Giovanni, Lord of Rimini, goes to Ravenna to bring back Giovanni's bride, Francesca, the daughter of Duke Guido. A proxy wedding is held, and Paulo and Francesca return to Rimini. From their first meeting Paulo and Francesca had grown to love each other, and as Giovanni was ill-tempered and ungenial the relationship between him and his beautiful bride was not cordial. He often gave vent to his wrath and ill-treated Francesca. At such times, Francesca sought ¹Luigi Pulci (1432-87) was an Italian romantic poet, author of the burlesque epic Il Morgante Maggiore.

²Ludovico Ariosto (1474-1533) was a celebrated Italian romantic poet, author of Orlando Furioso.

³John Hoole (1727-1803) was an English poet now known only as the translator of Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered (1763), Ariosto's Orlando Furioso (1773-83), and other Italian poems.

⁴*King Lear*, IV, 7, 60-61.

solace in the garden described in the text, the place where she and Paulo first confessed their love for each other

867. TO HAMPTHEAD

Hampstead is a borough and parish in north-western London, it was the home of Hunt and the center of a literary circle including Hunt, Keats, Shelley, Haslitt, Lamb, and others

868. TO THE GRASSHOPPER AND THE CRICKET

This sonnet was written in friendly competition with Keats. See his On the Grasshopper and Cricket (p 764)

THE NILE

Hunt, Keats, and Shelley all wrote sonnets on the Nile on the same day, Feb 4, 1818. For Keats's sonnet, see p 767. Shelley's is as follows:

Month after month the gathered rains descend
Drenching yon secret Ethiopian dells,
And from the desert's ice-girt pinnacles
Where Frost and Heat in strange embraces blend
On Atlas, fields of moist snow half depend Girt there with blasts and meteors Tempest dwells
By Nile's aerial urn, with rapid spells
Urging those waters to their mighty end
O'er Egypt's land of Memory floods are level
And they are thine, O Nile—and well thou knowest
That soul-sustaining airs and blasts of evil
And fruits and poisons spring where'er thou flowest
Beware, O Man—for knowledge must to thee,
Like the great flood to Egypt ever be.

MAHMOUD

The subject of this poem is Mahmoud the Gasnevide, a famous Turkish prince, who reigned in one of the eastern provinces of Persia during the first part of the eleventh century. The incident on which this poem is based is related in Gibbon's The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch 57. Gibbon found the story in D'Herbelot's Bibliothèque Orientale (1697).

869. SONG OF FAIRIES ROBBING ORCHARD

This poem is sometimes entitled Fairies Song. It is taken from some Latin verses in Thomas Randolph's drama of Amyntas, or the Impossible Dowry (1638), Act III, sc. 4.

ABOU BEN ADHEM AND THE ANGEL

This poem is based on an incident recorded in D'Herbelot's Bibliothèque Orientale (1697).

870. THE GLOVE AND THE LIONS

This poem is based on an incident quoted from Brantome (d 1614) in St Felix's History of Paris.

BONDEAU

This poem is said to have been inspired by the expression of delight of Mrs Jane Carlyle upon Hunt's announcement that the publishers had accepted her husband's History of Frederick the Great.

873. GETTING UP ON COLD MORNINGS

For the point of view opposite to that expressed in this essay, see Hunt's A Word on Early Rising.

874. ON THE REALITIES OF IMAGINATION

876b. 21. The passage omitted consists of quotations from Milton's L'Allegro and Il Penseroso, illustrating his love of nature.

877a. 55. The passage omitted consists of a quotation from Ben Jonson's To Penshurst, illustrating his method of enlivening description by the use of classical mythology and of manners of the time.

A "NOW"

"The paper that was most liked by Keats, if I remember, was the one on a hot summer's day, entitled A Now. He was with me when I was writing and reading it to him, and contributed one or two of the passages."—Hunt, in Autobiography, ch 16 (1850).

882. PROEM TO SELECTION FROM KEATS'S POETRY

In his volume entitled Imagination and Fancy (1844), Hunt printed as a selection from Keats's poetry The Eve of St Agnes, three pages of extracts from Endymion and Hyperion, the Ode to a Nightingale, and On First Looking into Chapman's Homer. The essay here printed served as an introduction to the selection.

883a. 102. Hunt's enthusiasm for Keats accounts for this extravagant and unsound statement.

884a. 14. Denied it to no one—"Allusion, of course, is not here made to all the critics of the time, but only to such reigning reviewers, as took earliest and most frequent notice of Keats. The Edinburgh Review, though not quick to speak of him, did so before he died, with a fervor of eulogy at least equal to its objections; and I think I may add that its then distinguished editor [Jeffrey], now a revered ornament of the Scottish bench, has since felt his admiration of the young poet increase, instead of diminish."—Hunt's note.

RICHARD HURD (1720-1808), p. 97

EDITIONS

Complete Works, 8 vols (1811)
Moral and Political Dialogues, with Letters on Chivalry and Romance (1765, 1788)
Letters on Chivalry and Romance (1762); ed., with an Introduction, by Edith J. Morley (London, Frowde, 1911).
Moral and Political Dialogues (1759).

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

- Kilvert, F. Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the Right Rev Richard Hurd (1860)
 Saintsbury, G. A History of Criticism, 3 vols. (Edinburgh and London, Blackwood, 1901-04, 1908, New York, Dodd).
 Stephen, L. History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, 2 vols (London, Smith, 1876, 1892, New York, Putnam)

CRITICAL NOTES

"The Lyrical Ballads of 1798 were by no means the first indication of the change which was taking place in prevalent habits of thought and modes of expression. In criticism, men of letters early began, almost in spite of themselves, to reject the gods to whom they still professed allegiance. The citadel of classicism was first assaulted by the friends who claimed to defend it, and the attack was so insidious as to be irresistible. The very men who do most to bring about the Romantic Revival are strangely averse to its spirit of freedom and of individuality. Richard Hurd, the neo-classic upholder of Pope, the defender of Poetical Imitation, is one of the earliest to deviate from the beaten track, and is consequently of more importance than the ordinary neglect of his writings would lead one to suppose."—Edith J. Morley, in Introduction to Hurd's Letters on Chivalry and Romance (1911)

FRANCIS JEFFREY (1773-1850), p. 884

EDITIONS

- Contributions to the Edinburgh Review*, 4 vols (London, Longmans, 1843), 3 vols (1846), 1 vol (1852)
Essays on English Poets and Poetry from The Edinburgh Review (New Universal Library ed. New York, Dutton, 1913)
Literary Criticism, ed. with an Introduction, by D. N. Smith (London, Frowde, 1910)
Selections, ed., with an Introduction, by L. K. Gates (Athenum Press ed. Boston, Ginn, 1894)

BIOGRAPHY

- Cockburn, H. Life of Lord Jeffrey, with a Selection from his Correspondence, 2 vols (London, Black, 1852, 1874)

CRITICISM

- Bagehot, W. "The First Edinburgh Reviewers," The National Review, 1855, Literary Studies, 3 vols (London, Longmans, 1878-79, 1895)
 Gates, L. E. Three Studies in Literature (New York, Macmillan, 1899)
 McCosh, J. The Scottish Philosophy (London, Macmillan, 1874, New York, Carter, 1875)
 Saintsbury, G. "Jeffrey and Sydney Smith," Essays in English Literature, 1780-1860, First Series (London, Percival, 1890, New York, Scribner).

- Tuckerman, H. T.: Essays, Biographical and Critical (Boston, Phillips, 1857)
 Walker, H.: The English Essay and Essayist, ch. 8 (London, Dent 1915, New York, Dutton)
 Whipple, E. P.: "British Critics," Essays and Reviews, 2 vols (Boston, Osgood, 1849, 1878)
 Winchester, C. T. "The New Essay—Jeffrey as a Critic," A Group of English Essayists of the Early Nineteenth Century (New York, Macmillan, 1910).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Smith, D. N. "List of Jeffrey's Articles in The Edinburgh Review," Appendix to Jeffrey's Literary Criticism (1910)

CRITICAL NOTES

"Jeffrey was before all things a literary critic, and, within the limits of his discernment, one of the acutest and liveliest of his time. His point of view was that of refined but positive common-sense, qualified by a rooted distrust of innovation. To the simple and obvious poetry of Rogers, Campbell, Crabbe, he brought a keen if somewhat excessive appreciation, mawkish sentiment and pseudo-medievalism he exposed with signal effect. We cannot now wholly disapprove of the stricture upon Marmion which angered Scott, nor share his effusive penitence for those upon Byron's Hours of Idleness. But he was, unfortunately, as proof against the true Romantics as against the false, and comprehended the mysticism of imaginative poetry in the same anathema with the crude supernaturalism of the 'school of horrors'. The manifesto against the 'Lake school' with which he opened the review is one of the most striking examples in literature of the fatuous efforts of a clever man to interpret a larger world than his own. The naked simplicity of Wordsworth, the tumultuous energy of Coleridge, the irregular metres of Southey were equally offensive to him, and he classed them together, as if innovators formed one brotherhood."—C. H. Herford, in The Age of Wordsworth (1897)

"He is a Whig in taste as in politics, and desires in both spheres the supremacy of a chosen aristocracy. In his essay on Scott's Lady of the Lake he declares the standard of literary excellence to reside in 'the taste of a few . . . persons, eminently qualified, by natural sensibility, and long experience and reflection, to perceive all beauties that really exist, as well as to settle the relative value and importance of all the different sorts of beauty.' Jeffrey regards himself as one of the choicest spirits of this chosen aristocracy, and it is as the exponent of the best current opinion that he speaks on all questions of taste. His business, then, is to dogmatise, to pronounce this right and that wrong, to praise this author and blame that one, but his dogmatism is not the dogmatism of reason, but the dogmatism of taste, he justifies his decisions, not by referring to a code of written laws from which there is no appeal, but by a more or less direct suggestion that he has all the best instructed opinion behind him"—Gates, in Selections from the Essays of Francis Jeffrey (Athenum Press ed., 1894)

See Byron's English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, 438-539 (pp. 492-98)

Speaking in the Preface to Contributions to The Edinburgh Review, Jeffrey says of his connection with The Edinburgh Review: "It will not, I think, be expected or required of me, that I should look back—from any station—upon the part I took in originating and conducting such a work, without some mixture of agreeable feelings. And, while I seek not to decline my full share of the faults and follies to which I have alluded, I trust I may be allowed to take credit, at the same time, for some participation in the merits by which these were, to a certain extent at least, redeemed or atoned for. If I might be permitted farther to state, in what particular department, and generally, on account of what, I should most wish to claim a share of those merits, I should certainly say, that it was by having constantly endeavored to combine ethical precepts with literary criticism, and earnestly sought to impress my readers with a sense, both of the close connection between sound intellectual attainments and the higher elements of duty and enjoyment, and of the just and ultimate subordination of the former to the latter. The praise in short to which I aspire, and to which I am conscious that my efforts were most constantly directed, is, that I have, more uniformly and earnestly than any preceding critic, made the moral tendencies of the works under consideration a leading subject of discussion, and neglected no opportunity, in reviews of poems and novels as well as of graver productions, of elucidating the true constituents of human happiness and virtue, and combating those besetting prejudices and errors of opinion which appear so often to withhold men from the path of their duty—or to array them in foolish and fatal hostility to each other. I cannot, of course, do more, in this place, than intimate this proud claim. But for the proof—or at least the explanation of it.—I think I may venture to refer to the greater part of the papers that follow."

884.

CRABBE'S POEMS

"I have given a larger space to Crabbe in this republication than to any of his contemporary poets, not merely because I think more highly of him than of most of them, but also because I fancy that he has had less justice done him. The nature of his subjects was not such as to attract either imitators or admirers, from among the ambitious or fanciful lovers of poetry, or, consequently to set him at the head of a school, or let him surround himself with the zealots of a sect. And it must also be admitted, that his claims to distinction depend fully as much on his great powers of observation, his skill in touching the deeper sympathies of our nature, and his power of inculcating, by their means, the most impressive lessons of humanity, as on any fine play of fancy, or grace and beauty in his delineations. I have great faith, however, in the intrinsic worth and ultimate success of those more substantial attributes, and have, accordingly, the strongest impression that the citations I have here given from Crabbe will strike more, and sink deeper into the minds of readers to whom they are new (or by whom they may have been partially forgotten), than any I have been able to present from other writers. It probably is idle enough (as well as a little presumptuous) to suppose that a publication like this will afford many opportunities of testing the truth of this prediction. But as the experiment is to be made, there can be no harm in mentioning this as one of its objects.

"It is but candid, however, after all, to add, that my concern for Mr. Crabbe's reputation would scarcely have led me to devote near one hundred pages to the estimate of his poetical merits, had I not set some value on the speculations as to the elements of poetical excellence in general, and its moral bearings and affinities—for the introduction of which this estimate seemed to present an occasion, or apology."—Jeffrey's note in Contributions to the Edinburgh Review

Besides the essay given here, Jeffrey reprinted in his Contributions to The Edinburgh Review essays on Crabbe's The Borough, Tales, and Tales of the Hall, which had originally appeared in The Edinburgh Review April, 1808, April 1810, Nov., 1812, and July, 1819.

Jeffrey never escaped from the narrow and prejudiced view that poetry was something artificial, to be composed with strict adherence to rules and conventions. See Wordsworth's Preface to Lyrical Ballads (p. 322a, 20-27).

885b. 31-38. See Coleridge's Biographia Literaria, 14 (p. 372b, 22-41)

886b. 28-32. This is an inaccurate and unfair characterization of Wordsworth's poem.

887. ALLSON'S ESSAY ON THE NATURE AND PRINCIPLES OF BEAUTY

This review was afterwards expanded and included in The Encyclopædia Britannica as the discussion on Beauty. It was omitted in the ninth and subsequent editions. Allson's Essay, the work of the Reverend Archibald Allson (1757-1839), a clergyman of the English Church, appeared in 1790; the second edition, printed in 1811, gave occasion for Jeffrey's review.

Jeffrey's theory of the nature of beauty should be compared with his principles of literary criticism, especially with his ethical interpretation of literature. See note on Crabbe's Poems, above.

887b. 28-35. Upon receiving a copy of the Essay, Burns wrote Allson as follows (Feb. 14, 1791): "You must by this time have set me down as one of the most ungrateful of men. You did me the honor to present me with a book which does honor to science and the intellectual powers of man, and I have not even so much as acknowledged the receipt of it. The fact is, you yourself are to blame for it. Flattered as I was by your telling me that you wished to have my opinion of the work, the old spiritual enemy of mankind, who knows well that vanity is one of the sins that most easily beset me, put it into my head to ponder over the performance with the look-out of a critic, and to draw up, forsooth, a deep learned digest of strictures on a composition of which, in fact, until I read the book, I did not even know the first principles. I own, Mr., that at first glance several of your propositions startled me as paradoxical. That the martial clangor of a trumpet had something in it vastly more grand, heroic, and sublime, than the twingle-twangle of a jews-harp; that the delicate flexure of a rose-twig, when the half-blown flower is heavy with the tears of the dawn, was infinitely more beautiful and elegant than the upright stub of a burdock, and that from something innate and independent of all associations of ideas,—these I had set down as irrefragable, orthodox truths, until perusing your book shook my faith. In short, sir, except Euclid's Elements of Geometry, which I made a shift to unravel by my father's fireside, in the winter evenings of the first season I held the plough, I never read a book which gave me such a quantum of information, and added so much to my stock of ideas, as your Essays on the Principles of Taste."

892. WORDSWORTH'S THE EXCURSION

"I have spoken in many places rather too bitterly and confidently of the faults of Mr. Wordsworth's poetry, and forgetting that, even on my own view of them, they were but faults of taste, or venial self-partiality, have sometimes visited them, I fear, with an asperity which should be reserved for objects of moral reprobation. If I were now to deal with the whole question of his poetical merits, though my judgment might not be substantially different, I hope I should repress the greater part of these reactions of expression and indeed so strong has been my feeling in this way, that, considering how much I have always loved many of the attributes of his genius, and how entirely I respect his character, it did at first occur to me whether it was quite fitting that, in my old age and his, I should include in this publication any of those critiques which may have formerly given pain or offence, to him or his admirers. But, when I reflected that the mischief, if there really ever was any, was long ago done, and that I still retain, in substance, the opinions which I should now like to have seen more gently expressed, I felt that to omit all notice of them on the present occasion, might be held to import a retraction which I am as far as possible from intending, or even be represented as a very shabby way of backing out of sentiments which should either be man-fully persisted, in, or openly renounced, and abandoned as untenable.

"I finally resolved, therefore, to reprint my review of The Excursion, which contains a pretty full view of my griefs and charges against Mr. Wordsworth, set forth too, I believe, in a more temperate strain than most of my other inculpations,—and of which I think I may now venture to say farther that if the faults are unsparingly noted, the beauties are not penuriously or grudgingly allowed, but commended to the admiration of the reader with at least as much heartiness and good-will.

"But I have also reprinted a short paper on the same author's White Doe of Rylstone,—in which there certainly is no praise, or notice of beauties, to set against the very unqualified censures of which it is wholly made up. I have done this, however, not merely because I adhere to these censures, but chiefly because it seemed necessary to bring me fairly to issue with those who may not concur in them. I can easily understand that many whose admiration of The Excursion, or the Lyrical Ballads, rests substantially on the passages which I too should join in admiring, may view with greater indulgence than I can do, the tedious and flat passages with which they are interspersed, and may consequently think my censure of these works a great deal too harsh and uncharitable. Between such persons and me, therefore, there may be no radical difference of opinion, or contrariety as to principles of judgment. But if there be any who actually admire this White Doe of Rylstone, or Peter Bell the Waggoner, or the Lamentations of Martha Rae, or the Sonnets on the Punishment of Death, there can be no such ambiguity, or means of reconciliation. Now I have been assured not only that there are such persons, but that almost all those who seek to exalt Mr. Wordsworth as the founder of a new school of poetry, consider these as by far his best and most characteristic productions, and would at once reject from their communion anyone who did not acknowledge in them the traces of a high inspiration. Now I wish it to be understood, that when I speak with general intolerance or impatience of the school of Mr. Wordsworth, it is to the school holding these tenets, and applying these tests, that I refer, and I really do not see how I could better explain the grounds of my dissent from their doctrines, than by republishing my remarks on this White Doe."

893b. 3-8. Through his failure to appreciate the influence of solitude upon poets, Jeffrey is led into this unsound statement. See p. 854b, n 1; also Thomson's Preface to Winter, p. 1348a.

894a. 7 ff. Jeffrey never understood Wordsworth's theory of poetry or his doctrine of the immanence of God in nature. What is perfectly sincere and distinctive in Wordsworth's mystical interpretation of nature, Jeffrey regards as merely affectation or madness.

902. WORDSWORTH'S THE WHITE DOE OF BILSTONE

In connection with this review, of the following passage from Wordsworth's prefatory note on the poem.

"Let me here say a few words of this poem in the way of criticism. The subject being taken from the feudal times has led to its being compared to some of Walter Scott's poems that belong to the same age and state of society. The comparison is inconsiderate. Sir Walter pursued the customary and very natural course of conducting an action, presenting various turns of fortune to some outstanding point on which the mind might rest as a termination or catastrophe. The course I attempted to pursue is entirely different. Everything that is attempted by the principal personages in The White Doe falls, so far as its object is external and substantial. So far as it is moral and spiritual it succeeds. The heroine of the poem knows that her duty is not to interfere with the current of events, either to forward or delay them, but

To abide
The shock, and finally secure
O'er pain and grief a triumph pure."

This she does in obedience to her brother's injunction, as most suitable to a mind and character that, under previous trials, had been proved to accord with his. She achieves this not without aid from the communication with the inferior creature, which often leads her thoughts to revolve upon the past with a tender and humanizing influence that exalts rather than depresses her. The anticipated beatification, if I may so say, of her mind, and the apotheosis of the companion of her solitude, are the points at which the poem aims, and constitute its legitimate catastrophe, far too spiritual a one for instant or widely-spread sympathy, but not therefore the less fitted to make a deep and permanent impression upon that class of minds who think and feel more independently, than the many do, of the surfaces of things and interests transitory because belonging more to the outward and social forms of life than to its internal spirit. How insignificant a thing, for example, does personal prowess appear compared with the fortitude of patience and heroic martyrdom, in other words, with struggles for the sake of principle, in preference to victory glorified in for its own sake."

904. CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE

"I have already said so much of Lord Byron with reference to his dramatic productions, that I cannot now afford to republish more than one other paper on the subject of his poetry in general and I select this rather because it refers to a greater variety of these compositions, than because it deals with such as are either absolutely the best, or the most characteristic of his genius. The truth, is, however, that all his writings are characteristic, and lead, pretty much alike, to those views of the dark and the bright parts of his nature, which have led me, I fear (though almost irresistibly) into observations more personal to the character of the author, than should generally be permitted to a mere literary censor"—Jeffrey's note in Contributions to The Edinburgh Review

907b. 13-14. At an earlier date The Edinburgh Review had severely criticized Byron's first work, Hours in Idleness. The article, however, was written by Lord Brougham. See note on English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, p. 1210b

SAMUEL JOHNSON (1709-1784), p. 1180

EDITIONS

Works, 12 vols., ed., with an Essay on Life and Genius, by A. Murphy (London, 1792, 1810).

Works, 16 vols. (Literary Club ed. New York, Lamb, 1903).

Complete Works, 8 vols. (New York, Bigelow, 1912).

Lives of the Poets, 3 vols., ed., with an Introduction by J. W. Hales, by Mrs. A. Napier (Bohn Library ed. London, Bell, 1890, New York, Macmillan)

Lives of the English Poets, ed. by W. E. Henley (London, Methuen, 1896)

The Lives of the Most Eminent English Poets, with Critical Observations on their Works, 3 vols., ed. by G. B. Hill and H. S. Scott (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1905)

Lives of the Poets: the Six Chief Lives, ed., with a Preface, by M. Arnold (London, Macmillan, 1878, 1882, New York, Holt)

Rambler, Adventurer, Idler Essays ed. by S. J. Reid (Camelot ed. London, Scott, 1889).

Select Essays, 2 vols., ed. by G. B. Hill (Temple Library ed. London, Dent, 1889)

Miscellaneous, ed. by G. B. Hill (Oxford Univ. Press, 1897).

Selections, ed. by C. G. Osgood (New York, Holt, 1909).

Johnson on Shakespeare, selected and edited by W. A. Raleigh (Oxford Univ. Press, 1904)

History of Rasselas, The, ed., with an Introduction, by G. B. Hill (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1889).

Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia (Chicago, McClurg, 1913).

Letters, 2 vols., ed. by G. B. Hill (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1892, New York, Harper)

Poems, with Goldsmith, Collins, and Gray, ed. by T. M. Ward (Mugger Library ed. London, Routledge, 1905, New York, Dutton)

Poetical Works, ed. by D. N. Smith (Oxford; in preparation)

BIOGRAPHY

Bailey, J. Dr Johnson and his Circle (Home Univ. Library London, Williams, 1913, New York, Holt)

- Boswell, J. The Life of Samuel Johnson, with Shorter, C. K. Immortal Memories (New York, the Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides, ed. by G. B. Hill, 6 vols. (London, Macmillan, 1887).
- Boswell, J. The Life of Samuel Johnson (Globe ed. London, Macmillan, 1898), 6 vols. (Temple Library ed. London, Dent, 1898), 2 vols. in 1 (Oxford ed.; London, Frowde, 1904).
- Broadley, A. M. Dr. Johnson and Mrs. Thrale (London and New York, Lane, 1910).
- Dobson, A. "Dr Johnson's Haunts and Habitations," Side-Walk Studies (London, Chatto, 1902).
- Grant, F. Life of Samuel Johnson (Great Writers Series London, Scott, 1887).
- Hutton, L. Literary Landmarks of London (London, Unwin, 1888, 1888).
- Scott, W. Lives of the Novelists (London, Dent, n d).
- Stephen, L. Samuel Johnson (English Men of Letters Series London, Macmillan, 1878, New York, Harper).
- Tinker, C. B. Dr Johnson and Fanny Burney (New York, Moffat, 1911).
- Stephen, L. "Dr Johnson's Writings," Hours in a Library, 3 vols (London, Smith, 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1899), 4 vols. (1907).
- Taggart, H. "Dr Johnson as a Literary Critic," The Westminster Review, Sept., 1918 (180 291).
- Trent, W. P.. "Bicentenary of Dr. Johnson," Longfellow and Other Essays (New York, Crowell, 1910).
- Walker, H. The English Essay and Essayists, ch 6 (London, Dent, 1915; New York, Dutton).
- Wheatley, H. B. "Dr Johnson as a Bibliographer," Transactions of the Bibliographical Society, 1907, Vol 8.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, J. P. In Grant's Life of Samuel Johnson (1887).
- Courtney, W. P. Bibliography of Samuel Johnson (Oxford Univ. Press, 1915).

CRITICISM

- Arnold, M. "Johnson's Lives," Essays in Criticism, Third Series (Boston, Ball, 1910).
- Boynton, P. H. "Johnson's London," London in English Literature (Univ of Chicago Press, 1913).
- Carlyle, T. "Boswell's Life of Johnson," Fraser's Magazine, May, 1832 (5 379), Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, 4 vols (Boston, Houghton, 1880).
- Carlyle, T. "The Hero as Man of Letters," On Heroes, Hero Worship, and the Heroic in History (London, Chapman, 1841, 1887, New York, Longmans, 1906).
- Collins, J. C. "Johnson's Lives of the Poets," The Quarterly Review, Jan, 1908 (208 72).
- Dawson, W. J. The Makers of English Prose (New York and London, Revell, 1906).
- Dobson, A. "Johnson's Library," Eighteenth Century Vignettes, Second Series (London, Chatto, 1892).
- Gosse, F. The Fortnightly Review, Dec, 1884 (42 781).
- Hill, G. B. Dr Johnson His Friends and his Critics (London, Smith, 1878).
- Hodell, C. W. "The Great Cham of Literature after Two Centuries," Putnam's Magazine, Oct, 1909 (7 33).
- Macaulay, T. B. "Boswell's Life of Johnson," The Edinburgh Review, Sept, 1831 (54 1); Critical and Historical Essays, 2 vols (London and New York, Longmans, 1898).
- Meynell, A. C. Johnson (Chicago, Browne, 1913).
- Raleigh, Sir W. Samuel Johnson (Leslie Stephen Lecture London, Clarendon Press, 1907).
- Raleigh, Sir W. Johnson on Shakespeare (London, Frowde, 1908).
- Raleigh, Sir W. Six Essays on Johnson (London, Frowde, 1910).

CRITICAL NOTES

PREFACE TO SHAKESPEARE

1180.

Johnson published an edition of Shakspeare's Works in 1765. The selection here printed is from the Preface to that work.

- 1184b. 60. Cato—Voltaire says of this play (Letters on the English, 18, "On Tragedy") "The first English writer who composed a regular tragedy, and infused a spirit of elegance through every part of it, was the illustrious Mr. Addison. His Cato is a masterpiece, both with regard to the diction and to the beauty and harmony of the numbers . . . Mr Addison's Cato appears to me the greatest character that was ever brought upon any stage."

In contrast to Voltaire's extravagant praise of Cato, cf the following criticism from Ward's A History of English Dramatic Literature, 3, 441-42: "When we view this famous tragedy as it now lies dead and cold before us, and examine it, as we needs must, on its own merits, there remains surprisingly little to account for its unprecedented success. Cato is full of effective commonplaces, many of which are to this day current as familiar quotations, but otherwise it would be difficult to find in it any distinguishing feature. Such as Cato was, it helped to make English tragedy pursue more resolutely than before the path into which it had unfortunately entered. . . . The play which Addison had written and which Voltaire eulogised marks no doubt with incontestable definiteness an epoch in the history of English tragedy, but this epoch was one of decay, holding out no prospect of recovery by any signs easily admitting of interpretation."

JOHN KEATS (1795-1821), p. 751

EDITIONS

- Poetical Works and Other Writings*, 4 vols, ed by H B Forman (London, Reeves, 1883, 1889), suppl. vol (1890)
- Complete Works*, 5 vols, ed., with a Memoir, by H. B. Forman (Glasgow, Gowans (1900-01); New York, Crowell)
- Poetical Works*, ed by H B. Forman (London, Reeves, 1889, 1898, Imperial ed. New York, Crowell, 1895)
- Complete Poetical Works and Letters*, ed., with a Biographical Sketch, by H. E. Scudder (Cambridge ed. Houghton, Houghton, 1899)
- Poetical Works* (Globe ed. London and New York, Macmillan, 1902)
- Poetical Works*, ed. by W S. Scott (London, Finch, 1902).
- Poems*, ed by E de Séincourt (New York, Dodd, 1905, 1912)
- Poetical Works*, ed., with an Introduction, by H. B. Forman (Oxford ed. Oxford Univ Press, 1906, 1908)
- Poetical Works*, ed by G Sampson (London, Nimmo, 1906).
- Poems*, 2 vols, ed., with a Preface, by S Colvin (London, Chatto, 1915, New York, Brentano).
- Poetical Works*, ed by F T Palgrave (Golden Treasury ed. London and New York, Macmillan, 1864).
- Poems*, ed by Arlo Bates (Athenaeum Press ed.: Boston, Ginn, 1896)
- Poems*, ed., with an Introduction by R S Bridges (Muses' Library ed. London, Bullen, 1896; New York, Scribner)
- Poems*, selected and edited, with an Introduction, by A Symonds (London, Jack, 1907).
- Letters to Fanny Browne*, ed., with an Introduction, by H B Forman (London, Reeves, 1878, 1890, New York, Scribner).
- Letters*, ed by S Colvin (London and New York, Macmillan, 1891)
- Letters, Papers, and Other Relics*, ed., with Forewords by T. Watts-Dunton, and an Introduction by H B Forman, by G C Williamson (London and New York, Lane, 1914).

BIOGRAPHY

- Clarke, C C "Recollections of John Keats," The Gentleman's Magazine, Feb., 1874 (12 177)
- Clarke, C C and Mary Recollections of Writers (London, Low, 1878).
- Colvin, S. Keats (English Men of Letters Series. London, Macmillan, 1887, New York, Harper).
- Hancock, A E. John Keats, A Literary Biography (London, Constable, 1908; Boston, Houghton).
- Houghton, Lord (R M Milnes) (ed.) Life, Letters, and Literary Remains of John Keats, 2 vols (London, Moxon, 1848, 1867; New Universal Library ed., London, Routledge, 1906, New York, Dutton).

- Hunt, Leigh Autobiography (London, Smith, 1850, 1906), 2 vols, ed by R. Ingpen (London, Constable, 1903, New York, Dutton).
- Russett, W. M.: Life of John Keats, Great Writers Series (London, Scott, 1887)
- West, K. "Keats in Hampstead," The Century Magazine, Oct., 1895 (50 898)
- Wolff, L. John Keats, sa Vie et son Œuvre (Paris, Hachette, 1910).

CRITICISM

- Arnold, M. Essays in Criticism, Second Series (London and New York, Macmillan, 1888)
- Blackwood's Magazine* "On the Cockney School of Poetry" (Endymion), Aug, 1818 (J 519).
- Bradley, A C "The Letters of Keats," Oxford Lectures on Poetry (London, Macmillan, 1909, 1911)
- Bridges, R. John Keats, A Critical Essay (Privately printed, 1895). Reprinted as the Introduction to Muses' Library edition of Keats's Poems (1896)
- Brooke, S A. Studies in Poetry (New York, Putnam, 1907, London, Duckworth)
- Croker, J. W. "Endymion," The Quarterly Review, April, 1818 (10 204)
- Dawson, W J The Makers of English Poetry (New York and London, Ravell, 1906)
- De Vere, A Essays, Chiefly on Poetry (New York, Macmillan, 1887)
- Geest, S. Der Sensualismus bei John Keats (Heidelberg, C Winter, 1908)
- Gosse, E "Keats in 1894," Critical Kit Kats (New York, Dodd, 1896, 1903)
- Graham, W. Last Links With Byron, Shelley, and Keats (London, Smithers, 1899)
- Harrison, F "Lamb and Keats," Tennyson, Ruskin, Mill, and Other Literary Estimates (New York and London, Macmillan, 1900, 1902)
- Hudson, W H Keats and His Poetry (New York, Dodge, 1912)
- Hutton, R H Brief Literary Criticisms, ed by his niece (London, Macmillan, 1906)
- Jeffrey, F "Endymion, Lamia, Isabella, The Eve of St Agnes, and Other Poems," The Edinburgh Review, Aug. 1820 (84 203)
- Long, A Letters on Literature (New York, Longmans, 1889)
- Lowell, J R. Among My Books, Second Series (Boston, Houghton, 1884), Collected Writings (Boston, Houghton, 1890-92)
- Mable, H. W. Essays in Literary Interpretation (New York, Dodd, 1892)
- MacCracken, H "The Source of Keats's Eve of St. Agnes," Modern Philology, Oct., 1907 (5 145).
- Mackall, J W Lectures on Poetry (London, Longmans, 1911).
- Manson, D. Wordsworth, Shelley, Keats, and other Essays (London, Macmillan, 1874, 1881).

Miller, Barnette: Hunt's Relations with Byron, Shelley, and Keats (Columbia Univ. Press, 1910)

More, P E Shelburne Essays, Fourth Series (New York and London, Putnam, 1906)

Olivero, F "Keats and the Minor Poems of Milton," Englische Studien, 1911 (48).

Owen, F M John Keats A Study (London, Paul, 1880)

Payne, W M The Greater English Poets of the Nineteenth Century (New York, Holt, 1907, 1909)

Rickett, A "The Poet Keats and Rossetti," Personal Forces in Modern Literature (London, Dent, 1906, New York, Dutton)

Robertson, J M. "The Art of Keats," New Essays towards a Critical Method (New York, Lane, 1897)

Severn, J "On the Vicissitudes of Keats's Fame," The Atlantic Monthly, April, 1863 (11 401).

Speed, J G "Sojourns of John Keats," The Century Magazine, Sept., 1910 (80 684)

Stedman, E C The Century Magazine, Feb., 1884 (27 599).

Stedman, E C Genius and Other Essays (New York, Moffat, 1911)

Suddard, S J M Keats, Shelley, and Shakespeare Studies (Cambridge Univ Press, 1912, New York, Broadway)

Swinburne, A C Miscellanies (London, Chatto, 1886, 1911, New York, Scribner).

Symons, A The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909, New York, Dutton)

Texte, J "Keats et le néo-hellénisme dans la poésie anglaise," Études de Littérature européenne (Paris, Collin, 1898)

Torrey, B Friends on the Shelf (Boston, Houghton, 1906)

Van Dyke, H "The Influence of Keats," The Century Magazine, Oct., 1895 (50 910).

Watson, W "Keats's Letters," Excursions in Criticism (New York, Macmillan, 1893)

Wolff, L An Essay on Keats's Treatment of the Heroic Rhythm and Blank Verse (Paris, 1909)

Woodberry, G E "On the Promise of Keats," Studies in Letters and Life (Boston, Houghton, 1890).

CONCORDANCE

Broughton, L N A Concordance to the Poems of Keats (Carnegie Institution of Washington; in press, 1916)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Anderson, J P "In Rossetti's Life of John Keats (1887)

Forman, H B In his edition of Keats's Complete Works (1900-01)

Sélincourt, E de and Bradley, A. C: "Short Bibliography of Keats" in Short Bibliographies of Wordsworth, etc. (English Association Leaflet, No. 28, Oxford, 1912).

CRITICAL NOTES

"Every one of Keats's poems was a sacrifice of vitality; a virtue went away from him into every one of them, even yet, as we turn the leaves, they seem to warm and thrill our fingers with the flush of his fine senses, and the flutter of his electrical nerves, and we do not wonder he felt that what he did was to be done swiftly. Keats certainly had more of the penetrative and sympathetic imagination which belongs to the poet, of that imagination which identifies itself with the momentary object of its contemplation, than any man of these later days. It is not merely that he has studied the Elizabethans and caught their turn of thought, but that he really sees things with their sovereign eye, and feels them with their electrified senses. . . . We are apt to talk of the classic renaissance as of a phenomenon long past, nor ever to be renewed, and to think the Greeks and Romans alone had the mighty magic to work such a miracle. To me one of the most interesting aspects of Keats is that in him we have an example of the renaissance going on almost under our own eyes, and that the intellectual ferment was in him kindled by a purely English leaven. He had properly no scholarship any more than Shakespeare had, but like him he assimilated at a touch whatever could serve his purpose. His delicate senses absorbed culture at every pore. Of the self-denial to which he trained himself (unexampled in one so young) the second draft of Hyperion as compared with the first is a conclusive proof. And far indeed is his Lamia from the lavish indiscriminate of Endymion. In his odes he showed a sense of form and proportion which we seek vainly in almost any other English poet, and some of his sonnets (taking all qualities into consideration) are the most perfect in our language. No doubt there is something tropical and of strange overgrowth in his sudden maturity, but it was maturity nevertheless. Happy the young poet who has the saving fault of exuberance, if he have also the shaping faculty that sooner or later will amend it!"—J. R. Lowell, in Among My Books (1876)

"Not since Spenser had there been a purer gift of poetry among English-speaking peoples, not since Milton a line of nobler balance of sound, thought, and cadence. There is no magic of color in written speech that is not mixed in the diction of The Eve of St Agnes,—a vision of beauty, deep, rich, and glowing as one of those dyed windows in which the heart of the Middle Ages still burns. While of the odes, so perfect in form, so ripe with thought, so informed and irradiated by the vision and the insight of the imagination, what remains to be said save that they furnish us with the tests and standards of poetry itself? They mark the complete identification of thought with form, of vision with faculty, of life with art."—H. W. Mable, in Essays in Literary Interpretation (1892-98).

See Shelley's Adonais (p. 730), and Hunt's Proem To Selection from Keats's Poetry (p. 882).

751. IMITATION OF SPENSER

"Probably no English poet who has used the Spenserian stanza, first assimilated so fully the spirit of Spenser, before using the stanza, as did Keats, and to this fact may be partly attributed his effective use of it as an organ for his imagination in its 'lingering, loving, particularizing mood'"—Hiram Corson, in A Primer of English Verse (1892).

752. TO CHATTERTON

Keats was an early and constant admirer of Chatterton. Endymion was dedicated to him.

753. HOW MANY BARDS GILD THE IAPSES OF TIME

This sonnet gained Keats an introduction to the literary circle of which Leigh Hunt was the center.

ON FIRST LOOKING INTO CHAPMAN'S HOMER

After Charles Cowden Clarke and Keats had read over Chapman's translation of Homer together, Keats composed this sonnet, which he presented to Clarke the next morning. George Chapman was an Elizabethan poet and dramatist, his translation of Homer was published in 1598-1616.

As a contrast to Keats's interest in Chapman's translation, cf. Cowper's remarks in a letter to Thomas Park, dated July 15, 1793.

"Within these few days I have received your acceptable present of Chapman's translation of the Iliad. I know not whether the book be a rarity, but a curiosity it certainly is. I have as yet seen but little of it, enough, however, to make me wonder that any man, with so little taste for Homer, or apprehension of his manner, should think it worth while to undertake the laborious task of translating him; the hope of pecuniary advantage may perhaps account for it. His information, I fear, was not much better than his verse, for I have consulted him in one passage of some difficulty, and find him giving a sense of his own, not at all warranted by the words of Homer. Pope sometimes does this, and sometimes omits the difficult part entirely. I can boast of having done neither, though it has cost me infinite pains to exempt myself from the necessity."

Pope's translation of Homer's Iliad and Odyssey appeared in 1715-26; Cowper's, in 1791.

754. I STOOD TIPTON UPON A LITTLE HILL

"When Keats wrote the lines which here follow he was living in the Vale of Health in Hampstead, happy in the association of Hunt and kindred spirits, and trembling with the consciousness of his own poetic power. He had not yet essayed a long flight, as in Endymion; but these lines indeed were written as a prelude to a poem which he was devising, which should narrate the loves of Diana, and it will be seen how, with circling flight, he draws nearer and nearer to his theme, but after all his songs end with a half agitated and passionate speculation over his own poetic birth"—Scudder's note in his edition of Keats's Complete Poetical Works (1899).

755.

SLEEP AND POETRY

This poem was written in Leigh Hunt's library which had been temporarily fitted up as a sleeping room. "It originated in sleeping in a room adorned with busts and pictures, and is a striking specimen of the restlessness of the young poetical appetite, obtaining its food by the very desire of it, and glancing for fit subjects of creation 'from earth to heaven.' Nor do we like it the less for an impatient, and as it may be thought by some, irreverent assault upon the late French school of criticism and monotony, which has held poetry chained long enough to render it somewhat indignant when it has got free"—Hunt, in a review of Keats's first volume of poems, the review was published in The Examiner, July, 1817.

755. 96-98. Cf. these lines with When I Have Fears That I May Cease to Be (p. 765).

700. 162-220. "Both the strength and the weakness of this are typically characteristic of the time and of the man. The passage is likely to remain for posterity the central expression of the spirit of literary emancipation then militant and about to triumph in England. The two great elder captains of revolution, Coleridge and Wordsworth, have both expounded their cause, in prose, with much more maturity of thought and language. . . . But neither has left any enunciation of theory having power to thrill the ear and haunt the memory like the rhymes of this young untrained recruit in the cause of poetic liberty and the return to nature. It is easy, indeed, to pick these verses of Keats to shreds, if we choose to fix a prosaic and rational attention on their faults. . . . But controversy apart, if we have in us a touch of instinct for the poetry of imagination and beauty, as distinct from that of taste and reason, however clearly we may see the weak points of a passage like this, however much we may wish that taste and reason had had more to do with it, yet we cannot but feel that Keats touches truly the root of the matter; we cannot but admire the elastic life and variety of his verse, his fine spontaneous and effective turns of rhetoric, the ring and power of his appeal to the elements, and the glow of his delight in the achievements and promise of the new age"—Sidney Colvin, in Keats (English Men of Letters Series, 1901).

763. ADDRESSED TO BENJAMIN ROBERT HAYDON

Haydon (1786-1840) was an historical painter, a member of the literary circle composed of Hunt, Keats, Shelley, and others. As originally written the thirteenth line of this sonnet was filled out with the words "in the human mart." Haydon suggested omitting them and sending the sonnet to Wordsworth. Keats replied in a note as follows (Nov 20, 1810):

"Your letter has filled me with a proud pleasure, and shall be kept by me as a stimulus to exertion—I begin to fix my eye upon one horizon. My feelings entirely fall in with yours in regard to the ellipsis and I glory in it. The idea of your sending it to Wordsworth put me out of breath—you know with what reverence I would send my well-wishes to him."

STANZAS

This poem is sometimes entitled Happy Insensibility. It is thought to be a set of album verses.

764. ON THE GRASSHOPPER AND CRICKET

This sonnet was written at Hunt's cottage in friendly competition with Hunt. See his On the Grasshopper and the Cricket (p. 868).

ON A PICTURE OF LEANDER

In Greek legend, Leander, of Abydos Asia Minor, swam the Hellespont, nightly, to visit Hero, a priestess of Aphrodite, at Sestos, in ancient Thrace. One night he was drowned, and Hero, in grief, cast herself into the sea.

TO FRICH HUNT, ESQ

This sonnet was the Dedication to the 1817 volume of Keats's poems.

765. ON THE SEA

This sonnet was inserted in a letter to Reynolds, dated April 17, 1817, following this statement: "From want of regular rest I have been rather nervous—and the passage in Lea—'Do you not hear the sea?' has haunted me intensely." The words quoted by Keats are found in Act IV, 6, 4.

LINES

This is possibly the "Song" to which Keats refers in his letter to Bailey, Nov 29, 1817. See p. 862n, 7 ff.

WHEN I HAVE FEARED THAT I MAY CEASE TO BE

This sonnet was sent in a letter to Reynolds, dated Jan 31, 1818. Cf with Sleep and Poetry, 96-98 (p. 759).

766. ON SITTING DOWN TO READ "KING LEAR" ONCE AGAIN

This sonnet was inserted in a letter to Keats's brothers, dated Jan. 23, 1818, after the following statement: "I think a little change has taken place in my intellect lately—I cannot bear to be uninterested or unemployed, I, who for so long a time have been addicted to passiveness. Nothing is sweeter for the purposes of great productions than a very gradual ripening of the intellectual powers. As an instance of this—observe—I sat down yesterday to read King Lear once again—the thing appeared to demand the prologue of a sonnet I wrote it, and began to read—(I know you would like to see it)."

LINES ON THE MERMAID TAVERN

This and the following poem were sent in a letter to Reynolds, dated Feb 3, 1818, in return for two sonnets on Robin Hood which Reynolds had sent Keats. For the letter to Reynolds see p. 862. Both Reynolds and Keats were in full sympathy with the spirit of the Elizabethans. The Mermaid Tavern in London was famous as the resort of Ben Jonson, Beaumont, Fletcher, and other Elizabethan dramatists.

ROBIN HOOD

See note to previous poem. Keats was fond of the legendary medieval hero, Robin Hood, noted as a chivalrous and generous outlaw. Little John and Maid Marian were associates of Robin Hood.

767.

TO THE NILE

Keats, Hunt, and Shelley all wrote sonnets on the Nile on the same day Feb 4 1818. For Hunt's sonnet, see p. 868, for Shelley's, see note on The Nile, p. 1278a.

THE HUMAN SEASONS

This sonnet was sent by Keats in a letter to Bailey dated Mar 13, 1818, after the following statement: "You know my ideas about religion. I do not think myself more in the right than other people, and that nothing in this world is provable. I wish I could enter into all your feelings on the subject, merely for one short 10 minutes, and give you a page or two to your liking. I am sometimes so very skeptical as to think poetry itself a mere Jack o' Lantern to amuse whoever may chance to be struck with its brilliance. As tradesmen say everything is worth what it will fetch so probably every mental pursuit takes its reality and worth from the ardor of the pursuer—being in itself a nothing. Ethereal things may at least be thus real—divided under three heads—things real—things semireal—and nothings. Things real, such as existences of sun, moon, and stars—and passages of Shakspeare—Things semireal, such as love, the clouds, etc., which require a greeting of the spirit to make them wholly exist—and nothings, which are made great and dignified by an ardent pursuit—which, by the by, stamp the Burgundy mark on the bottles of our minds, inasmuch as they are able to 'consecrate what'er they look upon' I have written a sonnet here of a somewhat collateral nature—so don't imagine it an 'apropos des bottles'—"

"Apropos des bottles" means literally "apropos of boots,"—i e., without any reason or motive

The Human Seasons and To Atlas Rock (p. 825) were first published, with the signature J., in Hunt's Literary Pocket Book, 1819. The Blackwood reviewer described the poems as "two feats of Johnny Keats" 767.

ENDYMION

The story of Endymion, the beautiful youth beloved by Diana, the moon goddess, had been in Keats's mind for about a year before he actually began to write it. The spirit of romance and of the classics abode with him constantly and stimulated him to poetic production. In a letter to Reynolds, dated April 17, 1817, he says "I find I cannot exist without poetry—without eternal poetry—half the day will not do—the whole of it—I began with a little, but habit has made me a levathan. I had become all in a tremble from not having written anything of late—the sonnet overleaf did me good. I slept the better last night for it—this morning, however, I am nearly as bad again. Just now I opened Spenser, and the first lines I saw were these—

"The noble heart that harbors virtuous thought,
And is with child of glorious great intent,
Can never rest until it forth have brought Th' eternal brood of glory excellent."

"I shall forthwith begin my Endymion, which I hope I shall have got some way with by the time you come, when we will read our verses in a delightful place I have set my heart upon."

The "sonnet overleaf" was On the Sea (p. 765). The lines quoted by Keats are found in Spenser's The Faerie Queene, I, 5, 1, 1-4.

In a letter to Bailey, dated Oct. 8, 1817, Keats quotes as follows from a letter written to his brother George "in the spring": "As to what you say about my being a poet, I can return no answer but by saying that the high idea I have of poetical fame makes me think I see it towering too high above me. At any rate, I have no right to talk until Endymion is finished—it will be a test, a trial of my powers of imagination, and chiefly of my invention, which is a rare thing indeed—by which I must make 4000 lines of one bare circumstance, and fill them with poetry and when I consider that this is a great task, and that when done it will take me but a dozen paces towards the temple of fame—it makes me say—God forbid that I should be without such a task! I have heard Hunt say, and I may be asked—why endeavor after a long poem? To which I should answer, Do not the lovers of poetry like to have a little region to wander in, where they may pick and choose, and in which the images are so numerous that many are forgotten and found new in a second reading which may be food for a week's stroll in the summer? Do not they like this better than what they can read through before Mrs. Williams comes down stairs? a morning work at most

"Besides, a long poem is a test of invention, which I take to be the Polar star of poetry, as fancy is the sails—and imagination the rudder. Did our great poets ever write short pieces? I mean in the shape of tales—this same invention seems indeed of late years to have been forgotten as a poetical excellence—But enough of this, I put on no laurels till I shall have finished Endymion."

The poem was finished Nov. 26, 1817, and "inscribed, with every feeling of pride and regret and with 'a bowed mind' to the memory of the most English of poets except Shakspeare, Thomas Chatterton."

The poem was published in April, 1818, with the following Preface: "Knowing within myself the manner in which this poem has been produced, it is not without a feeling of regret that I make it public."

"What manner I mean, will be quite clear to the reader, who must soon perceive great inexperience, immaturity, and every error denoting a feverish attempt, rather than a deed accomplished. The two first books, and indeed the two last, I feel sensible are not of such completion as to warrant their passing the press, nor should they if I thought a year's castigation would do them any good—it will not: the foundations are too sandy. It is just that this youngster should die away a sad thought for me, if I had not some hope that while it is dwindling I may be plotting, and fitting myself for verses fit to live.

"This may be speaking too presumptuously, and may deserve a punishment: but no feeling man will be forward to inflict it. He will leave me alone, with the conviction that there is not a fiercer hell than the failure in a great object. This is not written with the least atom of purpose to forestall criticisms of course, but from the desire I have to conciliate men who are competent to look, and who do look with a zealous eye, to the honor of English literature.

"The imagination of a boy is healthy, and the mature imagination of a man is healthy; but there is a space of life between, in which the soul is in a ferment the character undecided, the way of life uncertain, the ambition thick-sighted: thence proceeds mawkishness, and all the thousand bitters which those men

I speak of must necessarily taste in going over the following pages

"I hope I have not in too late a day touched the beautiful mythology of Greece, and dulled its brightness for I wish to try once more, before I bid it farewell"

In the last line Keats has in mind a poem on the fall of Hyperion, the sun god

An earlier preface had been discarded because of objections by Reynolds. Keats's defense of it is contained in the following interesting letter to Reynolds, dated April 9, 1818: "Since you all agree that the thing is bad, it must be so—though I am not aware there is anything like Hunt in it (and if there is, it is my natural way, and I have something in common with Hunt) Look it over again, and examine into the motives, the seeds, from which any one sentence sprung—I have not the slightest feeling of humility towards the public—or to anything in existence,—but the eternal Being the principle of beauty, and the memory of great men When I am writing for myself for the mere sake of the moment's enjoyment, perhaps nature has its course with me—but a preface is written to the public, a thing I cannot help looking upon as an enemy and which I cannot address without feelings of hostility If I write a preface in a supple or subdued style, it will not be in character with me as a public speaker—I would be subdued before my friends, and thank them for subduing me—but among multitudes of men—I have no feel of stooping, I hate the idea of humility to them

"I never wrote one single line of poetry with the least shadow of public thought

"Forgive me for vexing you and making a Trojan horse of such a trifle, both with respect to the matter in question, and myself—but it causes me to tell you—I could not live without the love of my friends—I would jump down Ætna for any great public good—but I hate a mawkish popularity I cannot be subdued before them—My glory would be to daunt and dazzle the thousand jabberers about pictures and books—I see swarms of porcupines with their quills erect 'like lime-twigs set to catch my winged book,' [2 Henry VI, III, 3, 16] and I would fright them away with a torch You will say my preface is not much of a torch It would have been too insulting 'to begin from Jove,' and I could not set a golden head upon a thing of clay If there is any fault in the preface it is not affectation, but an undersong of disrespect to the public—if I write another preface it must be done without a thought of those people—I will think about it If it should not reach you in four or five days tell Tavior to publish it without a preface, and let the dedication simply stand—"Inscribed to the Memory of Thomas Chatterton"

The new preface was sent to Reynolds in a letter dated April 10, 1818, with the following comment. "I am anxious you should find this preface tolerable If there is an affectation in it 'tis natural to me Do let the printer's devil cook it, and let me be as 'the caving air' [Macbeth, III, 4, 23]

"You are too good in this matter—were I in your state, I am certain I should have no thought but of discontent and illness—I might though be taught patience I had an idea of giving no preface, however, don't you think this had better go? O, let it—one should not be too timid—of committing faults"

708. 34-42. Cf Keats's Letter to Hessey, Oct 9, 1818, in which he says "In Endymion I leaped headlong into the sea, and thereby have become better acquainted with the soundings, the quicksands, and the rocks than if I had stayed upon the green shore, and piped a silly pipe, and took tea and comfortable advice I was never afraid of failure, for I would sooner fall than not be among the greatest"

770. 208. The review of Endymion in The Quarterly Review (see p 913) accused Keats of introducing new words into the language Necessments, which Keats borrowed from Spenser's The Faerie Queene (I, 6, 85, 56), is one of the words objected to

232-306. This Hymn to Pan was recited by Keats to Wordsworth when they met at Haydon's house, Dec. 28, 1817

772. 411. This is one of nine unrhyming lines in Endymion. These are probably the result of changes made in revising the poem The other lines are as follows: I 796, II, 143, 362, III, 707, 1016, IV, 510, 758, 799

774. 534. Steed from Araby—This is an anachronism

784. 376 ff. Cf this passage with the account of the garden of Adonis in Spenser's The Faerie Queene, III, 6, 29-50

793. Book III.—Keats is said to have remarked to a friend "It will be easily seen what I think of the present ministers, by the beginning of the third Book" Bates suggests (Athenaeum Press ed) that "the pseudo-political effusion with which the third Book opens is rather a reflection of the opinion of the Leigh Hunt circle than the spontaneous expression of Keats, who at heart was too fully absorbed in literature to feel deeply upon such subjects as these"

809. 244. Arabians dance—This is an anachronism. See Book I, 534 (p 774).

818. ISABELLA OR THE POT OF BASIL

This poem was originally intended to be printed in a projected volume of metrical tales translated by Reynolds and Keats from Boccaccio; but Keats published his poem in 1820 without waiting for Reynolds, who published his in 1821 In the Preface to his volume, Reynolds said "The stories from Boccaccio (The Garden of Florence, and The Lady of Provence) were to have been associated with tales from the same source, intended to have been written by a friend—but illness on his part, and distracting engagements on mine, prevented us from accomplishing our plan at the time, and Death now, to my deep sorrow, has frustrated it forever! He, who is gone, was one of the very kindest friends I possessed, and yet he was not kinder perhaps to me, than to others. His intense mind and powerful feeling would, I truly believe, have done the world some service, had his life been spared—but he was of too sensitive a nature—and thus he was destroyed! One story he completed, and that is to me now the most pathetic poem in existence!"

825. FRAGMENT OF AN ODE TO MAIA

This fragment was written in a letter to Reynolds dated May 3, 1818, after the following statement: "With respect to the affections and poetry you must know by a sympathy my thoughts that way, and I daresay these few lines will be but a ratification. I wrote them on May-day—and intend to finish the ode all in good time."

Arnold quotes this ode in the closing paragraph of his essay on Keats prefixed to the selections in Ward's The English Poets, following this statement regarding Keats's poetic work: "Shakespearian work it is, not imitative, indeed, of Shakespeare, but Shakespearian, because its expression has that rounded perfection and felicity of loveliness of which Shakespeare is the great master. To show such work is to praise it. Let us now end by delighting ourselves with a fragment of it, too broken to find a place among the pieces which follow, but far too beautiful to be lost. It is a fragment of an ode for May-day."

TO AILSA'S ROCK

While journeying through Scotland, Keats wrote his brother as follows (July 10, 1818): "Yesterday we came 27 miles from Stranraer—entered Ayrshire a little beyond Cairn, and had our path through a delightful country. I shall endeavor that you may follow our steps in this walk—it would be uninteresting in a book of travel—it can not be interesting but by my having gone through it. When we left Cairn our road lay half way up the sides of a green mountainous shore, full of clefts of verdure and eternally varying—sometimes up sometimes down, and over little bridges going across green chasms of moss, rock, and trees—winding about everywhere. After two or three miles of this we turned suddenly into a magnificent glen finely wooded in parts—seven miles long—with a mountain stream winding down the midst—full of cottages in the most happy situations—the sides of the hills covered with sheep—the effect of cattle lowing I never had so finely. At the end we had a gradual ascent and got among the tops of the mountains whence in a little time I descended in the sea Ailsa Rock 940 feet high—it was 15 miles distant and seemed close upon us. The effect of Ailsa with the peculiar perspective of the sea in connection with the ground we stood on, and the misty rain then falling gave me a complete idea of a deluge. Ailsa struck me very suddenly—really I was a little alarmed."

See note on The Human Seasons, 1287b.

826.

FANCY

"I know of no other poem which so closely rivals the richness and melody,—and that in this very difficult and rarely attempted meter,—of Milton's Allegro and Penseroso."—Palgrave's note in his edition of Poems of Keats.

ODE

This poem was written on a blank page before Beaumont and Fletcher's tragic comedy, The Fair Maid of the Inn. In his poem Keats refers especially to these Elizabethan dramatists.

827.

ODE ON MELANCHOLY

Early in January, 1819, Keats wrote Haydon as follows: "I have been writing a little now and then lately but nothing to speak of—being discontented and as it were moping. Yet I do not think I shall ever come to the rope or the pistol, for after a day or two's melancholy, although I smoke more and more my own insufficiency—I see by little and little more of what is to be done, and how it is to be done should I ever be able to do it. On my soul there should be some reward for that continual agonia enigmatica."

ODE ON A GRECIAN URN

There is a tradition that the urn which inspired this poem was one still preserved in the garden of Holland House, a noted mansion in Kensington, London.

11-12. Cf. Wordsworth's Personal Talk, 25-26 (p. 301).

828.

ODE ON INDOLENCE

In a letter to George and Georgiana Keats, dated March 19, 1819, Keats wrote as follows: "This morning I am in a sort of temper, indolent and supremely careless—I long after a stanza or two of Thomson's Castle of Indolence—my passions are all asleep, from my having slumbered till nearly eleven, and weakened the animal fibre all over me, to a delightful sensation, about three degrees on this side of faintness. If I had teeth of pearl and the breath of lilies I should call it languor, but as I am I must call it laziness. In this state of effeminacy the fibres of the brain are relaxed in common with the rest of the body, and to such a happy degree that pleasure has no show of enticement and pain no unbearable power. Neither poetry, nor ambition, nor love have any alertness of countenance as they pass by me; they seem rather like figures on a Greek vase—a man and two women whom no one but myself could distinguish in their disguise. This is the only happiness, and is a rare instance of the advantage of the body overpowering the mind."

829.

LA BELLE DAME SANS MERCI

When Hunt printed this poem in The Indicator, May 10, 1820, he stated that Keats was inspired to write it by a poem of the same title written by Alain Chartier which was found in a translation in a volume of Chaucer's works and formerly ascribed to Chaucer.

830.

ANOTHER ON FAME

10. Fame personified is conventionally characterized as jealous, like Potiphar, and as faithless, like Potiphar's wife. The word sister-in-law would seem to identify the characteristics of fame and Potiphar's wife.

ODE TO PSYCHE

This poem was written in a letter to George and Georgiana Keats following this statement: "The following poem—the last I have written—is the first and the only one with which I have taken even moderate pains. I have for the most part dash'd off my lines in a hurry. This I have done leisurely—I think it reads the more richly for it, and will I hope encourage me to write other things in even a more peaceable and healthy spirit. You must recollect that Psyche was not embodied as a goddess before the time of Apuleius the Platonist who lived after the Augustan age, and consequently the Goddess was never worshipped or sacrificed to with any of the ancient fervor—and perhaps never thought of in the old religion—I am more orthodox than to let a heathen Goddess be so neglected—"

831. 50-57. Ruskin quotes these lines to illustrate Keats's power in describing the pine (Modern Painters, Pt VI, ch 9, sec 9, note). He says: "Keats (as is his way) puts nearly all that may be said of the pine into one verse [line 55], though they are only figurative pines of which he is speaking. I have come to that pass of admiration for him now, that I dare not read him, so discontented he makes me with my own work; but others must not leave unread, in considering the influence of trees upon the human soul, that marvellous Ode to Psyche."

ODE TO A NIGHTINGALE

In the Aldine edition of 1876, Lord Houghton prefixes this note to the poem: "In the spring of 1819 a nightingale built her nest next Mr. Bevan's house. Keats took great pleasure in her song, and one morning took his chair from the breakfast table to the grass plot under a plum tree, where he remained between two and three hours. He then reached the house with some scraps of paper in his hand, which he soon put together in the form of this ode."

832. 26. This line may refer to Keats's brother Tom, who died in December, 1818. Shortly after this date, Haydon wrote Miss Mitford, "The death of his brother wounded him deeply, and it appeared to me from the hour he began to droop. He wrote his exquisite Ode to the Nightingale at this time, and as we were one evening walking in the Kilburn meadows he repeated it to me, before he put it to paper, in a low, tremulous undertone which affected me extremely."

52. In love with careful Death.—Cf. Keats's statement in Letter to Bailey, dated June 10, 1818: "I was in hopes some little time back to be able to relieve your dulness by my spirits—to point out things in the world worth your enjoyment—and now I am never alone without rejoicing that there is such a thing as death—without placing my ultimate in the glory of dying for a great human purpose. Perhaps if my affairs were in a different state, I should not have written the above—you shall judge. I have two brothers, one is driven, by the 'burden of society,' to America, the other with an exquisite love of life, is in a lingering state—My love for my brothers, from the early loss of our parents, and even from earlier misfortunes, has grown into an affection 'passing the love of women.' I have been ill-tempered with them—I have vexed them—but the thought of them has always stifled the impression that any woman might otherwise have made upon me. I have a sister too, and may not follow them either to America or to the grave. Life must be under gone, and I certainly derive some consolation from the thought of writing one or two more poems before it ceases."

In a letter to Charles Brown, dated Nov 30, 1820, Keats said, "It runs in my head, we shall all die young."

65-70. See Hood's Ruth (p. 1136).

69-70. These are two of the lines referred to by Kipling in his Wireless: "Remember that in all the millions permitted there are no more than five—five little lines—of which one can say 'These are the magic. These are the vision. The rest is only poetry.'" The other three lines referred to are in Coleridge's Kubla Khan, 14-16 (p. 358).

832.

LAMIA

Keats is said to have written this poem after studying Dryden's versification. It is based upon the old legend of Lamia, a beautiful woman loved by Zeus and turned into a man-eating monster by Hera, later Lamia was regarded as an evil spirit who enticed youths by her beauty and fed upon their flesh and blood. Keats found the germ of the story in the following passage from Burton's The Anatomy of Melancholy (1621). "Philostratus, in his fourth book de Vita Apollonii, hath a memorable instance in this kind, which I may not omit, of one Menippus Lydius, a young man twenty-five years of age, that gelug betwixt Cenchreas and Corinth, met such a phantasm in the habit of a fair gentlewoman, which, taking him by the hand, carried him home to her house, in the suburbs of Corinth, and told him she was a Phœnician by birth, and if he would tarry with her, he should hear her sing and play, and drink such wine as never any drank, and no man should molest him, but she, being fair and lovely, would live and die with him, that was fair and lovely to behold. The young man, a philosopher, otherwise staid and discreet, able to moderate his passions, though not this of love, tarried with her a while to his great content, and at last married her, to whose wedding, amongst other guests, came Apollonius, who, by some probable conjectures, found her out to be a serpent, a lamia, and that all her furniture was, like Tantalus' gold, described by Homer, no substance but mere illusions. When she saw herself descried, she wept, and desired Apollonius to be silent, but he would not be moved, and thereupon she, plate, house, and all that was in it, vanished in an instant many thousands took notice of this fact, for it was done in the midst of Greece" (III, 2, 1, 1).

¹ Probably a reference to the unfortunate second marriage of their mother.

² Samuel, 2 26

This passage appeared as a note to the last line in the first edition of Lamia

'blushing with the blood of queens?' The haunting quality of several of these lines is aptly portrayed by Kipling in his "Wireless," printed in Trafalgar and Discoveries, and in Scribner's Magazine, Aug., 1902 (32 129)

846. 27, 7. Clasp'd like a mussel where suart Paynims pray.—Several interpretations have been given for this line. Hunt interprets it as follows "Where Christian prayer-books must not be seen, and are, therefore, doubly cherished for the danger." Other interpretations suggested are 'Her soul was clasped as tightly in sleep as a prayer-book would be by a Christian in a land of Pagans'—"A prayer-book bearing upon its margin pictures of converted heathen in the act of prayer." Keats originally wrote "shut like a mussel", so clasp'd must mean fastened by clasps. The meaning given on p. 846a, n. 1, seems to fit best.

28, 7. The suggestiveness of this line has frequently been called worthy of Shakspeare.

30. "It is, apparently, as a poetical contrast to the fasting which was generally accepted as the method by which a maiden was to prepare herself for the vision, that the gorgeous supper-picture of st. xxx was introduced. Keats, who was Leigh Hunt's guest at the time this volume appeared, read aloud the passage to Hunt, with manifest pleasure in his work the sole instance I can recall where the poet—modest in proportion to his greatness—yielded even to so innocent an impulse of vanity."—Palgrave, in his edition of Keats's Poetical Works (1884).

848. 40, 9. Carpets.—The use of carpets in the poem is an anachronism.

842.

THE EVE OF ST. AGNES

St Agnes was a Roman virgin who suffered martyrdom about the year 300. Formerly, in the Catholic church, upon St Agnes Day, January 21, while the Agnus Dei (Lamb of God) was chanted, two lambs were sacrificed and their wool was afterwards woven by nuns. The poem is based on the superstition that it was possible for a girl, on the eve of St Agnes, to obtain knowledge of her future husband; as she lay on her back, with her hands under her head, he was supposed to appear before her in a dream, to salute her with a kiss, and to feast with her.

H. N. MacCracken suggests (Modern Philology, 5, 1-8, Oct 1907) that "for most of the numerous and essential details of the charming episode of Porphyro and Madeline, Keats is indebted to the Filocolo of Boccaccio."

845. 23-25. Keats devoted especial care to the composition of these three stanzas, as is shown by the manuscript changes. Hunt says of stanza 24, in his comment on the poem published in Imagination and Fancy (1844) "Could all the pomp and graces of aristocracy, with Titian's and Raphael's aid to boot, go beyond the rich religion of this picture, with its 'twilight saints,' and its 'scutcheons

THE EVE OF ST. MARK

This poem was written in a letter to George and Georgiana Keats, dated Sept. 20, 1819, following this statement "The great beauty of poetry is that it makes everything in every place interesting. The palatine Venice and the abbottine Winchester are equally interesting. Some time since I began a poem called The Eve of St Mark, quite in the spirit of town quietude. I think I will give you the sensation of walking about an old country town in a coolish evening. I know not whether I shall ever finish it, I will give it as far as I have gone."

Regarding the superstition on which the poem is based, Dante Gabriel Rossetti wrote Forman as follows "Keats's unfinished poem on that subject is perhaps, with La Belle Dame sans Merit, the chastest and choicest example of his maturing manner, and shows astonishingly real mediævalism for one not bred as an artist. I copy an extract [from The Unseen World (Masters, 1853), p. 72] which I have no doubt embodies the superstition in accordance with which Keats meant to develop his poem. It is much akin to the belief connected with the Eve of St. Agnes. 'It was believed that if a person, on St Mark's Eve, placed himself near the church-porch when twilight was thickening, he would behold the apparition of those persons in the parish who were to be seized with any severe disease that year, go into the church. If they remained there it signified their death, if they came out again it portended their recovery, and the longer or shorter the time they remained in the building, the severer or less dangerous their illness. Infants, under age to walk, rolled in'—Quoted from Forman's edition of Keats's Poetical Works.

849.

HYPERION

In a letter to George and Georgiana Keats, dated Dec 25, 1818, Keats announced that his next poem would be on the fall of Hyperion, the sun-god. On Sept 22, 1819, he wrote Reynolds: "I have given up Hyperion—there were too many Miltonic inversions in it—Miltonic verse cannot be written but in an artful, or, rather, artist's humor. I wish to give myself up to other sensations. English ought to be kept up. It may be interesting to you to pick out some lines from Hyperion, and put a mark X to the false beauty proceeding from art, and one || to the true voice of feeling. Upon my soul 'twas imagination—I cannot make the distinction—Every now and then there is a Miltonic intonation—But I cannot make the division properly."

Keats's friend, Woodhouse, in his annotated copy of Endymion, says of Hyperion: "The structure of the verse, as well as the subject, are colossal. It has an air of calm grandeur about it which is indicative of true power—I know of no poem with which in this respect it can be compared—It is that in poetry, which the Elgin and Egyptian marbles are in sculpture"—Quoted from Forman's edition of Keats's Poetical Works.

At the close of his extracts from the manuscript of the poem, Woodhouse says: "The above lines, separated from the rest, give but a faint idea of the sustained grandeur and quiet power which characterize the poem; but they are sufficient to lead us to regret that such an attempt should have been abandoned. The poem if completed, would have treated of the dethronement of Hyperion, the former God of the Sun, by Apollo,—and incidentally of those of Oceanus by Neptune, of Saturn by Jupiter etc., and of the war of the Giants for Saturn's re-establishment—with other events of which we have but very dark hints in the mythological poets of Greece and Rome. In fact the incidents would have been pure creations of the poet's brain. How he is qualified for such a task may be seen in a trifling degree by the few mythological glimpses afforded in Endymion."—Quoted from Forman's edition of Keats's Poetical Works.

860.

TO AUTUMN

Autumn always had a peculiar attraction for Keats. On Sept 22, 1819, he wrote Reynolds: "How beautiful the season is now—How fine the air. A temperate sharpness about it. Really, without joking, chaste weather—Dian skies—I never liked stubble-fields so much as now—Aye better than the chill green of the spring. Somehow, a stubble-field looks warm—in the same way that some pictures look warm. This struck me so much in my Sunday's walk that I composed upon it." He refers to the ode To Autumn.

861. BRIGHT STAR, WOULD I WERE STEADFAST
AS THOU ART

This sonnet was composed on the Dorsetshire coast just as Keats was sailing for Italy in the autumn before his death. "The bright beauty of the day and the scene revived the poet's drooping heart, and the inspiration remained on him for some time even after his return to the ship. It was then that he composed that sonnet of solemn tenderness, Bright Star, Would I Were Steadfast as Thou Art, and wrote it out in a copy of Shakespeare's poems he had given to Severn a few days before. I know of nothing written afterwards."—Lord Houghton, in Life, Letters, and Literary Remains of John Keats (1848).

KEATS'S LETTERS

In the Preface to his edition of Keats's Letters, Colvin says that Keats "is one of those poets whose genius makes itself felt in pre-writing almost as decisively as in verse, and at their best these letters are among the most beautiful in our language." The Letters here printed were addressed to the following: (1) Benjamin Bailey (1794-1852), undergraduate of Magdalen Hall, Oxford, afterwards Archdeacon of Colombo, (2) John Hamilton Reynolds (1796-1852), poet, critic, and lawyer, (3) John Taylor (1781-1864), publisher, of the firm of Taylor and Hessey, and proprietor and editor of The London Magazine; (4) James Augustus Hessey, publisher, of the firm of Taylor and Hessey, (5) George and Georgiana Keats, Keats's brother and his brother's wife, (6) Percy Bysshe Shelley (1792-1822), the poet.

TO BENJAMIN BAILEY

b. 2. Unsold—Colvin, in his edition of Keats's Letters, suggests that this is probably an error for unsaid. As the first part of the word is italicized, it may, however, be simply a play on the phrase "the said letter."

863.

TO JOHN TAYLOR

b. 39-40. "O for a Muse of Fire to ascend."—Henry V, Prologue 1

364.

TO JAMES AUGUSTUS HESSEY

a. 2. The first letter, which appeared in The Morning Chronicle, Oct. 8, 1818, was written by John Scott. It is as follows: "Sir, Although I am aware that literary squabbles are of too uninteresting and interminable a nature for your Journal, yet there are occasions when acts of malice and gross injustice towards an author may be properly brought before the public through such a medium—Allow me, then, without further preface, to refer you to an article in the last number of The Quarterly Review, professing to be a critique on The Poems of John Keats. Of John Keats I know nothing, from his Preface I collect that he is very young—no doubt a heinous sin; and I have been informed that he has incurred the additional guilt of an acquaintance with Mr Leigh Hunt. That this latter gentleman and the editor of The Quarterly Review have long been at war, must be known to every one in the least acquainted with the literary gossip of the day. Mr L. Hunt, it appears, has thought highly of the poetical talents of Mr Keats, hence Mr K. is doomed to feel the merciless tomahawk of the Reviewers, termed Quarterly, I presume from the modus operandi. From a perusal of the criticism, I was led to the work itself. I would, Sir, that your limits would permit a few extracts from this poem. I dare appeal to the taste and judgment of your readers, that beauties of the highest order may be found in almost every page—that there are also many, very many passages indicating haste and carelessness, I will not deny, I will go further, and assert that a real friend of the author would have dissuaded him from an immediate publication.

"Had the genius of Lord Byron sunk under the discouraging sneers of an Edinburgh Review the nineteenth century would scarcely yet have been termed the Augustan era of poetry. Let Mr. Keats too persevere—he has talents of [no] common stamp, this is the hastily written tribute of a stranger, who ventures to predict that Mr K. is capable of producing a poem that shall challenge the admiration of every reader of true taste and feeling, nay if he will give up his acquaintance with Mr Leigh Hunt, and apostatize in his friendships, his principles, and his politics (if he have any), he may even command the approbation of The Quarterly Review.

"I have not heard to whom public opinion has assigned this exquisite morceau of critical acumen. If the Translator of Juvenal be its author, I would refer him to the manly and pathetic narrative prefixed to that translation, to the touching history of genius oppressed by and struggling with innumerable difficulties, yet finally triumphing under patronage and encouragement. If the Biographer of Kirke White have done Mr Keats this cruel wrong, let him remember his own just and feeling expostulation with The Monthly Re- viewer, who 'sat down to blast the hopes of a boy, who had confessed to him all his hopes and all his difficulties.' If the 'Admiralty Scribe' (for he too is a Reviewer) be the critic, let him compare The Battle of Talavera with Endymion.

I am, Sir, Your obedient servant,

J S."

The "Translator of Juvenal" was William Gifford, editor of The Quarterly Review, the "Biographer of Kirke White" was Southey, the "Author of The Battle of Talavera" was John Wilson Croker, Secretary of the Admiralty, the actual author of the article in question (see p 913).

The second letter which appeared Oct. 8, is as follows. The author has not been identified. "Sir,—The spirited and feeling remonstrance of your correspondent J S against the cruelty and injustice of The Quarterly Review, has most ably anticipated the few remarks which I had intended to address to you on the subject. But your well known liberality in giving admission to everything calculated to do justice to oppressed and injured merit, induces me to trespass further on your valuable columns, by a few extracts from Mr Keats's [sic] poem. As the Reviewer professes to have read only the first book I have confined my quotations to that part of the poem, and I leave your readers to judge whether the critic who could pass over such beauties as these lines contain, and condemn the whole poem as 'consisting of the most incongruous ideas in the most uncouth language' is very implicitly to be relied on.

I am, Sir, Your obedient servant,

Temple, Oct. 8rd, 1818.

R B"

JOHN KEBLE (1792-1866), p. 1133

EDITIONS

The Christian Year, Lyra Innocentium, and Other Poems (Oxford ed Oxford Univ. Press, 1914).

Christian Year, The (London, Parker, 1873).

Christian Year, The (Canterbury Poets ed London, Scott, 1890).

Christian Year, The (World's Classics ed. Oxford Univ. Press, 1914).

Lyra Innocentium (London, Parker, 1878; ed by W Lock (New York, Gorham).

Lectures on Poetry, 1832-1841, 2 vols., translated by E K Francis (Oxford Univ Press, 1912).

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

Coleridge, J T Memoir of John Keble, 2 vols (Oxford, Parker, 1860, 1874).

Lock, W John Keble (London, Methuen, 1893, 1895).

Shallop, J. C Studies in Poetry and Philosophy (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1872, 1886, Boston, Houghton, 1880).

Shelley, H. C. "Keble's Hunsley," Untrodden English Ways (London, Slegle, 1910, Boston, Little).

Wood, E. F. L. John Keble (London, Mowbray, 1909; Milwaukee, Young Churchman Co., 1910).

CRITICAL NOTES

"There can be no doubt that Keble had, in even an eminent degree, some of the higher qualities which make the true poet. His fancy was lively and fertile in images full of beauty. His observation of outward nature, such as it may be seen in the rich lowlands of England was accurate, and his feeling for the quiet and tender beauty of grove and stream, and field and English wild flowers was exquisitely quick and true. His sympathy with all that is pure and sweet in home affections, with the joys and sorrows of family life, with the ways and the feelings of children, was almost unequalled. He had learnt, too, from Cowper and Wordsworth in England, and from the early poets of ancient Greece, whom he loved so well, to express his thought by preference directly and truthfully avoiding artificial 'poetic diction'."—E. T. Vaughan in "The Life of Keble" The Contemporary Review (1860)

1133. THE CHRISTIAN YEAR

This was a collection of poems characterized by Keble as "thoughts in verse for the Sundays and Holydays throughout the year."

CHARLES LAMB (1775-1834), p. 915

EDITIONS

Complete Works in Prose and Verse, ed by R. H. Shepherd (London, Chatto, 1874, 1901).

Life, Letters, and Writings, 6 vols., ed by P. Fitzgerald (London, Moxon, 1875, Dent, 1892; Philadelphia, Lippincott)

Works, 6 vols., ed by A. Ainger (London, Macmillan, 1884-85)

Life and Works, 12 vols., ed., with Introductions, by A. Ainger (New York, Armstrong, 1899-1900)

Works, 12 vols., ed., with a Biographical and Critical Essay, by W. Macdonald (London, Dent, 1903; New York, Dutton)

Works of Charles and Mary Lamb, 7 vols., ed by P. V. Lucas (New York, Putnam, 1903-05, London, Methuen), 6 vols. (New York, 1913)

Works in Prose and Verse of Charles and Mary Lamb, 2 vols., ed by T. Hutchinson (Oxford Univ. Press, 1908)

Essays of Elia, 2 vols., ed by A. Birrell (Temple Library ed. London, Dent, 1888)

Letters, 2 vols., ed., with an Introduction, by A. Ainger (London, Macmillan, 1888)

Letters, 5 vols., ed., with an Introduction, by H. H. Harper (Boston, Bibliophilic Society, 1906).

BIOGRAPHY

Ainger, A.: Charles Lamb (English Men of Letters Series, London, Macmillan, 1882, New York, Harper).

De Quincey, T. The North British Review, Nov., 1848, Collected Writings, ed. Masson (London, Black, 1880-90, 1896-97), 5, 215.

Fitzgerald, P. Charles Lamb, His Friends, His Hobbies, and His Books (1805)

Gilchrist, Mrs. Anne. Life of Mary Lamb (Eminent Women Series, London, Allen, 1883, 1890)

Hazlitt, W. C. The Lambs their Lives, their Friends, and their Correspondence, etc (London, E. Mathews, 1896)

Lucas, E. V. The Life of Charles Lamb, 2 vols. (London, Methuen, 1905), 1 vol. (1907, 1910, New York, Putnam)

Martin, B. E. In the Footprints of Charles Lamb (New York, Scribner, 1890)

Procter, B. W. ("Barry Cornwall") Charles Lamb A Memoir (London, Moxon, 1866, 1869; Boston, Roberts)

CRITICISM

Ainger, A. "The Letters of Charles Lamb"—"How I Tamed Charles Lamb in Hertfordshire," Lectures and Essays, 2 vols. (London and New York, Macmillan, 1905)

Bensusan, M. L. Charles Lamb (New York, Dodge, 1912)

Birrell, A. Other Days, Second Series (London, Stock, 1885, 1888; New York, Scribner)

Birrell, A. "Lamb's Letters," Rea Judicata (London, Stock, 1892; New York, Scribner).

Boynton, P. H. "The London of Lamb and Byron," London in English Literature (Univ. of Chicago Press, 1913).

Collyer, R. "The True Story of Charles and Mary Lamb," Char. Gist (Boston, Am. Unitarian Assn., 1913)

Dawson, W. J. The Makers of English Prose (New York and London, Revell, 1906)

De Quincey, T. "Recollections of Charles Lamb," Tait's Magazine, April and June, 1838, Collected Writings, ed. Masson (London, Black, 1880-90, 1896-97), 3, 85

Dobell, B. Sidelights on Charles Lamb (London, Dobell, 1903, New York, Scribner)

Harrison, F. "Lamb and Keats, Tennyson, Ruskin, Mill, and Other Literary Estimates" (New York and London, Macmillan, 1900, 1902)

Hazlitt, W. "Of Persons One Would Wish to Have Seen," The New Monthly Magazine, Jan., 1826, Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure), 12, 28

Hunt, Leigh. Autobiography (London, Smith, 1850, 1906), 2 vols., ed by R. Ingpen (London, Constable, 1903, New York, Dutton)

Hutton, L. Literary Landmarks of London (London, Unwin, 1885, 1888).

Lucas, E. V. Charles Lamb and the Lloyds (London, Smith, 1898)

Moore, P. F. Shelburne Essays, First and Fourth Series (New York and London, Putnam, 1906)

Pater, W. Appreciations (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1895).

- Patmore, P. G. My Friends and Acquaintance, 3 vols. (New York, Saunders, 1854)
- Paul, H. Stray Leaves (London, Lane, 1900)
- Rawnsley, H. D. Literary Associations of the English Lakes, 2 vols. (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1894, 1906)
- Robinson, H. C. Diary, Reminiscences, and Correspondence, 3 vols., ed. by T. Sadler (London, Macmillan, 1899), 2 vols. (1872, Boston, Fields, 1869, 1874)
- Sandford, Mrs. H. Thomas Poole and His Friends, 2 vols. (London, Macmillan, 1888)
- Stoddard, R. H. Recollections, Personal and Literary, ed. by R. Hitchcock (New York, Barnes, 1903)
- Swinburne, A. C. "Charles Lamb and George Wither," Miscellanies (London, Chatto, 1886, 1911)
- Walker, H. The English Essay and Essayists, Chaps. 7, 9 (London, Dent, 1915, New York, Dutton)
- Winchester, C. T. A Group of English Essayists of the Early Nineteenth Century (New York, Macmillan, 1910)
- Woodberry, G. E. Makers of Literature (New York, Macmillan, 1901)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hutchinson, T. In his edition of the Works in Prose and Verse of Charles and Mary Lamb (1908)
- Ireland, A. List of the Works of Charles Lamb (London, Smith, 1868)
- Livingston, L. S. Biography of the first Editions in Book Form of the Writings of Charles and Mary Lamb, Published prior to Charles Lamb's Death in 1834 (New York, Dodd, 1903).
- North, E. D. In Martin's In the Footprints of Charles Lamb (1890)
- Thomson, J. C. Biography of the Writings of Charles and Mary Lamb (Hull, Tutin, 1908).

CRITICAL NOTES

Written after the Death of Charles Lamb

To a good man of most dear memory
This stone is sacred Here he lies apart
From the great city where he first drew breath,
Was reared and taught, and humbly earned his bread,
To the strict labors of the merchant's desk 5
By duty chained. Not seldom did those tasks
Tease, and the thought of time so spent depress
His spirit, but the recompense was high,
Firm independence, Bounty's rightful sire,
Affections, warm as sunshine, free as air, 10
And when the precious hours of leisure came,
Knowledge and wisdom, gained from converse
sweet
With books, or while he ranged the crowded streets
With a keen eye, and overflowing heart
So genius triumphed over seeming wrong, 15
And poured out truth in words by thoughtful love
Inspired—works potent over smiles and tears
And as round mountain-tops the lightning plays,
Thus innocently sported, breaking forth
As from a cloud of some grave sympathy, 20
Humor and wild instinctive wit, and all
The vivid flashes of his spoken words
From the most gentle creature nursed in fields
Had been derived the name he bore—a name,
Wherever Christian altars have been raised, 25

Hallowed to meekness and to innocence,
And if in him meekness at times gave way,
Provoked out of herself by troubles strange,
Many and strange, that hung about his life,
Still, at the centre of his being, lodged 30
A soul by resignation sanctified
And if too often, self-reproached, he felt
That innocence belongs not to our kind,
A power that never ceased to abide in him,
Charity, 'mid the multitude of sins, 35
That she can cover, left not his exposed
To an unforgiving judgment from just heaven
O, he was good, if e'er a good man lived'

—Wordsworth (1835)

Lines on the Death of Charles Lamb

Once, and once only have I seen thy face
Eliu' once only has thy tripping tongue
Run o'er my breast, yet never has been left
Impression on it stronger or more sweet
Cordial old man! what youth was in thy years,
What wisdom in thy levity, what truth
In every utterance of that purest soul!
Few are the spirits of the glorified
I'd spring to earlier at the gate of heaven

—Landon (1846)

"There was L—— himself the most delightful, the most provoking, the most witty and sensible of men. He always made the best pun, and the best remark in the course of the evening. His serious conversation, like his serious writing, is his best. No one ever stammered out such fine, piquant, deep, eloquent things, in half a dozen half-sentences as he does. His jests scald like tears, and he probes a question with a play upon words. There was no fuss or cant about him:
nor were his sweets or his hours ever diluted with one particle of affectation."—William Hazlitt, in
"On the Conversation of Authors," The Plain Speaker (1826)

"Charles Lamb's nosegay of verse may be held by the small hand of a maiden, and there is not in it one flaunting, gallant flower. It is, however, fragrant with the charities of home like blossoms gathered in some old cottage croft."—Edward Dowden, in Ward's The English Poets, Vol. 4
(1880)

See Landon's To the Sister of Eliu (p. 970) and Hazlitt's On Familiar Style (p. 1012b, 31ff.)

916. IF FROM MY LIPS SOME ANGRY ACCENTS FELL

This sonnet was addressed to Lamb's sister Mary

THE OLD FAMILIAR FACES

This is the best known of Lamb's poems.
It was probably inspired by his sister Mary's being taken to an asylum as the result of a second attack of insanity in January, 1798.
Other incidents referred to in the poem account equally well for its composition. The text here given is that of the first edition.
Subsequent editions omitted the first four lines, perhaps the most strikingly effective in the poem

917. THE THREE GRAVES

This poem was written during the time of the spy system, a protective movement inau-gured by Lord Sidmouth (1757-1844), the Home Secretary, in 1817, as the result of several riots and conspiracies and general dissatisfaction in the country George Edwards, named in the last line of the poem, was a government spy who revealed the Cato Street Conspiracy, a plot to murder the ministers in 1820 Castles and Oliver were other contemporary spies. William Bedloe (1650-80), and Titus Oates (1649-1705), mentioned in the second line, were lying informers on whose testimony and forged documents a number of persons were executed as conspirators in an alleged plot of the Roman Catholics in 1678 to murder Charles II and gain control of the government

The title of the poem was borrowed from Coleridge's The Three Graves. This poem of Lamb's and the next, were highly praised by De Quincey for what he called their "almost demoniac force" See p. 1084a, 35-40

THE GIPSY'S MALISON

This poem was first printed in Blackwood's Magazine, Jan., 1829, after it had been declined by The Gem, of which Hood was then editor. Upon its publication Lamb wrote B. W. Procter as follows (Jan. 22, 1829) "Did you see a sonnet of mine in Blackwood's last? Curious construction! Elaborata facilitas! And now I'll tell 'Twas written for The Gem, but the editors declined it, on the plea that it would shock all mothers; so they published The Widow instead. I am born out of time. I have no conjecture about what the present world calls delicacy. I thought Rosamund Gray was a pretty modest thing. Heysey assures me that the world would not bear it. I have lived to grow into an indecent character. When my sonnet was rejected, I exclaimed, 'Damn the age; I will write for Antiquity!'"

The Widow is a parody of Lamb written by Hood. Rosamund Gray is a brief story by Lamb written in 1798. Heysey was one of the publishers of The London Magazine.

ON AN INFANT DYING AS SOON AS BORN

Lucas (Works of Charles and Mary Lamb) regards this as "in some ways, Lamb's most remarkable poem."

918. SHE IS GOING

The subject of this poem has not been identified.

LETTER TO WORDSWORTH

919b. 42-43. I have passed all my days in London—Lamb's fondness for the city is admirably expressed in the following poem by William Watson (1893)

At the Grave of Charles Lamb in Edmonton¹

Not here, O teeming City, was it meet
Thy lover, thy most faithful, should repose,
But where the multitudinous life-tide flows
Whose ocean-murmur was to him more sweet
Than melody of birds at morn, or bleat
Of flocks in spring-time, there should Earth enclose

His earth, amid thy thronging joys and woes,
There, 'neath the music of thy million feet
In love of thee this lover knew no peer
Thine eastern or thy western fane had made
Fit habitation for his noble shade
Mother of mightier, nurse of none more dear,
Not here, in rustic exile, O not here,
Thy Ella like an alien should be laid 921.

THOMAS HEYWOOD

a. 23. The English Traveller—Heywood's Preface to this play, published in 1633, is as follows "If, reader, thou hast of this play been an auditor, there is less apology to be used by intreating thy patience. This tragi-comedy (being one reserved amongst 220 in which I had either an entire hand or at the least a main finger) coming accidentally to the press, and I having intelligence thereof, thought it not fit that it should pass as filius populi a bastard without a father to acknowledge it. true it is that my plays are not exposed to the world in volumes, to bear the titles of works (as others) one reason is, that many of them by shifting and change of companies have been negligently lost. Others of them are still retained in the hands of some actors, who think it against their peculiar profit to have them come in print, and a third that it never was any great ambition in me to be in this kind voluminously read. All that I have further to say at this time is only this censure I entreat as favorably as it is exposed to thy view freely

Ever

Studios of thy Pleasure and Profit,
Th. Heywood "

By "others," Heywood probably means Ben Jonson who had recently published his "Works" 923.

THE TRAGEDIES OF SHAKESPEARE

b. 46. Orc rondo—The phrase is quoted from Horace's Art Poetica, 323

923a. 55. Contemptible machinery—One method of producing rain was to tear up rejected manuscripts and drop the pieces upon the stage from above 927.

THE SOUTH SEA HOUSE

Most of Lamb's essays were contributed to The London Magazine under the pseudonym of "Ella," the name of an obscure Italian clerk whom he had known at the South-Sea House, the headquarters of the South-Sea Company, incorporated in 1710 to monopolize the trade with Spanish South America. Lamb held an insubordinate position with this company, probably from Sept., 1791 to Feb., 1792. His brother John was with the company when Lamb entered its employ

¹ From Selected Poems of William Watson, copyright 1902 by the John Lane Company.

b. 48-49. Living accounts.—puzzle me—"Here Elia begins his 'matter-of-fic' career. Lamb was at this time in the Accountants' Office of the India House, living among figures all day"—Lucas in his edition of The Works of Charles and Mary Lamb (1903)

928b. 9. Picture still hangs—This picture, if it ever existed, has been lost

930b. 45-47. These names are borrowed from Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew, Induction, sc 2, 93-98, in which one of the servants says to Christopher Sly

Why, sir, you know no house nor no such maid

Nor no such men as you have reckon'd up
As Stephen Sly, and old John Naps of Greece,
And Peter Turph, and Henry Pimpernell,
And twenty more such names and men as these

Which never were, nor no man ever saw

931. CHRIST'S HOSPITAL FIVE AND THIRTY YEARS AGO

This essay combines Lamb's experiences at school with those of Coleridge. Both boys entered Christ's Hospital, the famous charity school, on July 17, 1782, Coleridge was nearly ten years old, Lamb was seven and a half. From the opening of the essay to the paragraph beginning "I was a poor hypochondriacal lad" (p. 933b, 41), Lamb writes under the character of Coleridge with that paragraph he assumes his own character

937. THE TWO RACES OF MEN

Lucas suggests, in his edition of The Works of Charles and Mary Lamb, that the germ of this essay is probably found in the following passage from a letter to Wordsworth, dated April 9, 1816: "Thanks for the books you have given me and for all the books you mean to give me. I will bind up the Poetical Sonnets and Ode according to your suggestion. I have not bound the poems yet. I wait till people have done borrowing them. I think I shall get a chain and chain them to my shelves Morr Bodleiano, and people may come and read them at chain's length. For of these who borrow, some read slow, some mean to read but don't read, and some neither read nor meant to read, but borrow to leave you an opinion of their sagacity. I must do my money-borrowing friends the justice to say that there is nothing of this caprice or wantonness of alienation in them. When they borrow my money, they never fail to make use of it."

Morr Bodleiano—Until the middle of the eighteenth century it was the custom in the Bodleian Library to have some books fastened with chains 939b. 10f. Lamb's Letters contain several references to Coleridge's habit of borrowing books.

See especially the letters to Coleridge dated June 7, 1809, and Autumn, 1820 (Lucas's ed., pp. 400 and 544)

13. Bloomsbury.—A noted district in London, Lamb never lived there.

15-16. Reformed posture.—These figures, which once guarded the entrance, had been removed to the rear of the hall

940a. 1. Widow's volume.—John Bunce was originally published in two volumes, only one of which remained on Lamb's shelf

38-40. The authorship of these lines is credited to Lamb

MRS BATTLE'S OPINIONS ON WHIST

Hunt republished this essay in The London Journal after the following statement: "Here followeth, gentle reader, the immortal record of Mrs Battle and her whist, a game which the author, as thou wilt see, wished that he could play forever, and, accordingly, in the deathless pages of his wit, forever will he play it"

Critics have identified Mrs Battle with Mary Field, Lamb's grandmother, and with Sarah Burney, the wife of Lamb's friend James Burney, and the center of a prominent whist club. If any identification is necessary, the latter suits well

944. MACKERY END, IN HERTFORDSHIRE

Mackery End was the name of a farm in Hertfordshire. Lamb had visited there once before, about 1780

b. 11-12. Prothinkers.—The following among Lamb's friends might be included in this description: Godwin Hazlitt, Hunt, Thomas Holcroft, and John Thelwall

945a. 1. In this fashion.—Of the following statement by Ruskin in his "Of Queen's Gardens," Sesame and Lilies, II: "Without, however, venturing here on any attempt at decision how much novel reading should be allowed, let us at least clearly assert this, that whether novels, or poetry or history be read, they should be chosen, not for their freedom from evil, but for their possession of good. The chance and scattered evil that may here and there haunt, or hide itself in, a powerful book, never does any harm to a noble girl, but the emptiness of an author oppresses her, and his amiable folly degrades her. And if she can have access to a good library of old and classical books, there need be no choosing at all. Keep the modern magazine and novel out of your girl's way, turn her loose into the old library every wet day, and let her alone. She will find what is good for her, you cannot, for there is just this difference between the making of a girl's character and a boy's—you may chisel a boy into shape, as you would a rock, or hammer him into it, if he be of a better kind, as you would a piece of bronze. But you cannot hammer a girl into anything. She grows as a flower does,—she will wither without sun; she will decay in her sheath, as a narcissus will if you do not give her air enough, she may fall, and defile her head in dust, if you leave her without help at some moments of her life, but you cannot fetter her; she must take her own fair form and way, if she take any, and in mind as in body, must have always

'Till household motions light and free
And steps of virgin liberty'

Let her loose in the library, I say, as you do a fawn in the field. It knows the bad weeds twenty times better than you, and the good ones too, and will eat some bitter and prickly ones, good for it, which you had not the slightest thought would have been so."

The lines quoted by Ruskin are from Wordsworth's She Was a Phantom of Delight, 13-14 (p. 205)

046.

DREAM-CHILDREN

This reverie is an exquisite piece of prose as anything Lamb ever wrote, it is one of the choicest bits of prose writing in English literature. The essay was inspired by the death of Lamb's brother John, which occurred on Oct. 26, 1821. Writing to Wordsworth March 20, 1822, Lamb said: "We are pretty well save colds and rheumatics, and a certain deadness to everything, which I think may date from poor John's loss, and another accident or two at the same time that has made me almost bury myself at Dalston, where yet I see more faces than I could wish. Deaths over-set one and put one out long after the recent grief. Two or three have died within this last two twelvemths, and so many pairs of me have been numbered. One sees a picture, reads an anecdote, statts a casual fancy, and thinks to tell of it to this person in preference to every other—the person is gone whom it would have peculiarly suited. It won't do for another. Every departure destroys a class of sympathies. There's Capt Burney gone!—what fun has whist now? what matters it what you lead, if you can no longer fancy him looking over you? One never hears anything, but the image of the particular person occurs with whom alone almost you would care to share the intelligence. Thus one distributes oneself about—and now for so many parts of me I have lost the market. Common natures do not suffice me. Good people as they are called, won't serve. I want individuals. I am made up of queer points and I want so many answering needles. The going away of friends does not make the remainder more precious. It takes so much from them as there was a common link. I grow ominously tired of official confinement. Thirty years have I served the Philistines, and my neck is not subdued to the yoke. You don't know how wearisome it is to breathe the air of four pent walls without relief day after day, all the golden hours of the day between 10 and 4 without ease or interposition.

O for a few years between the grave and the desk! they are the same, save that at the latter you are outside the machine. I sit like Philomel all day (but not singing) with my breast against this thorn of a desk, with the only hope that some pulmonary affliction may relieve me."

Alfred Ainger, in Charles Lamb (English Men of Letters Series), writes of the death of Lamb's brother as follows:

"The death of this brother, wholly unsympathetic as he was with Charles, served to bring home to him his loneliness. He was left in the world with but one near relation [his sister Mary], and that one too often removed from him for months at a time by the saddest of afflictions. No wonder if he became keenly aware of his solitude. No wonder if his thoughts turned to what might have been, and he looked back to those boyish days when he wandered in the glades of Blake-ware with Alice by his side. . . . For no reason that is apparent, while he retains his grandmother's real name, he places the house in Norfolk, but all the details that follow are drawn from Blake-ware. Inexpres- sibly touching, when we have once learned to penetrate the thin disguise in which he clothes them, are the hoarded memoirs, the tender regrets, which Lamb, writing by his 'lonely hearth,' thus ventures to commit to the uncertain sympathies of the great public. More touching still is the almost super-human sweetness with which he deals with the character of his lately lost brother. . . . And there is something of the magic of genius, unless, indeed, it was a burst of uncontrollable anguish, in the revelation with which his dream ends."

048.

A DISSERTATION UPON ROAST PIG

In a letter written to his friend Bernard Barton, March 11, 1823, Lamb says that the idea of the discovery of roasting pigs was borrowed from his friend Manning. The fact that Manning had spent some years in China may account for the fantastic scenery of the story. The central idea of the essay, however, has been found in The Turkish Spy, an Italian work by Giovanni Paolo Marana (1684), and elsewhere. Lamb writes of the subject of the essay in a letter to Coleridge dated March 9, 1822. Influenced by this essay, several persons sent pigs to Lamb.

051.

OLD CHINA

This essay was one of Wordsworth's favorites. It completes the sympathetic portrait of Mary Lamb begun in Mackery End, in Hertfordshire.

054.

POOR RELATIONS

This essay is noted for Lamb's marvelous command of words.

957. SANITY OF TRUE GENIUS

This essay was originally published as one of the Popular Fallacies under the title That Great Wit is Allied to Madness. The subject is a common one among essayists and scientists. See Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel, 1, 163-164.

Great wits are sure to madness near allied,
And thin partitions do their bounds divide

Cf. the essay with Lamb's On the Tragedies of Shakespeare (p. 923)

959. THE DEATH OF COLERIDGE

These reflections were written by Lamb in an album of Mr Keymer, a London bookseller, at the suggestion of Lamb's friend John Forster. Lamb never fully recovered from the death of Coleridge.

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR
(1775-1864), p. 959

EDITIONS

- Works*, 8 vols., ed., with a Life, by J. Forster (London, Chapman, 1874-76)
Works, 10 vols., ed. by C. G. Crump (London, Dent, 1891-93)
Selections, ed., with a Preface, by S. Colvin (Golden Treasury ed. London and New York, Macmillan, 1882, 1895)
Selections, ed. by W. B. S. Clymer (Athenaeum Press, ed. Boston, Ginn, 1898)
Poems, selections, ed. by E. Radford (Canterbury Poets ed. London, Scott, 1887)
Imaginary Conversations, 5 vols. (Boston, Roberts, 1883)
Imaginary Conversations, selections, 3 vols., ed. by H. Ellis (Camelot ed. London, Scott, 1889)
Selections from the Imaginary Conversations (prose only), ed. by A. G. Newcomer (New York, Holt, 1899)
Imaginary Conversations, selections, ed. by J. P. Mahaffy (London Blackie, 1909)
Imaginary Conversations, selections, ed. by F. A. Cavenagh (Oxford Univ. Press, 1914)
Pentameron, The, and Other Imaginary Conversations, ed., with a Preface, by H. Ellis (Camelot ed. London, Scott, 1889)
Letters and Other Unpublished Writings, ed. by S. Wheeler (London, Bentley, 1897)
Letters, Private and Public, ed. by S. Wheeler, (London, Duckworth, 1899).

BIOGRAPHY

- Colvin, S. Landor (English Men of Letters Series, London, Macmillan, 1878, New York, Harper).
 Field, Kate. "Last Days of Landor," The Atlantic Monthly, April, May, June, 1886 (17 385, 540, 684).

- Forster, J. Walter Savage Landor, 2 vols. (London, Chapman, 1869), abridged as Vol. 1 of Forster's edition of Landor's Works (1874)
 Robinson, H. C. Diary, Reminiscences, and Correspondence, 3 vols., ed. by T. Sadler (London, Macmillan, 1869), 2 vols. (1872, Boston, Fields, 1869, 1874)
 Whiting, L. The Florence of Landor (Boston, Little, 1905, 1912)

CRITICISM

- Blackwood's Magazine*, "Imaginary Conversations," April, 1824 (15 457), March and April, 1837 (41 289, 493), "Last Fruit off an Old Tree," Jan., 1854 (75 74)
 Boynton, H. W. "The Poetry of Landor," The Atlantic Monthly, July, 1902 (90 126).
 Bradley, W. The Early Poems of Walter Savage Landor. A Study of his Development and Debt to Milton. (London, Bradbury, 1914)
 Dawson, W. J. The Makers of English Prose (New York and London, Revell, 1906)
 De Quincey, T. "Notes on Walter Savage Landor," Tait's Magazine, Jan. and Feb., 1847, Collected Writings, ed. Mackon (London, Black, 1889-90, 1890-97), 11, 304
 De Vere, A. "Landor's Poetry," Essays, Chiefly on Poetry, 2 vols. (New York, Macmillan, 1887)
 Dowden, E. Studies in Literature (London, Paul, 1878)
Edinburgh Review, The "Imaginary Conversations," March, 1824 (80-67), "The Hellenists" April, 1850 (91 408)
 Emerson, R. W. Natural History of Intellect (1893) The Complete Works, 12 vols. (Centenary ed. Boston, Houghton, 1904)
 Evans, E. W. Walter Savage Landor A Critical Study (New York, Putnam, 1892)
 Fyvie, J. Some Literary Eccentrics (New York, Pott, 1906).
 Henley, W. E. Views and Reviews (Chicago, Scribner, 1890)
 Hewlett, H. G. The Contemporary Review, Aug., 1871 (18 109)
 Horne, R. H. A New Spirit of the Age, 2 vols. (1844), ed. by W. Jerrold (London, Frowde, 1907)
 Lowell, J. R. "Some Letters of Landor" Latest Literary Essays. Collected Writings, 10 vols. (Boston, Houghton, 1890-92, London Macmillan)
North American Review, The "Forster's Life and Works of Landor" Jan., 1877 (124 132)
 Payne, W. M. The Greater English Poets of the Nineteenth Century (New York, Holt, 1907, 1909).
 Saintsbury, G. Essays in English Literature, 1780-1880 Second Series (London, Dent, 1895; New York, Scribner)
 Scudder, H. E. "Landor as a Classic," Mens and Letters (Boston, Houghton, 1887).
 Stedman, R. C. "Introduction to Cameos," Genius and Other Essays (New York, Moffat, 1911).

- Stedman, E. C. Victorian Poets (Boston, Houghton, 1875, 1884).
- Stephen, L. "Landor's Imaginary Conversations," Hours in a Library, 3 vols (London, Smith, 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1897), 4 vols (1907).
- Swinburne A. C. Miscellanies (London, Chatto, 1886, 1911, New York, Scribner)
- Symons, A. "The Poetry of Landor," The Atlantic Monthly, June, 1906 (97 808). The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909, New York, Dutton)
- Tatham, E. H. R. "Unpublished Letters of W. S. Landor," The Fortnightly Review, Feb., 1910 (93 861).
- Woodberry, G. E. Studies in Letters and Life (Boston, Houghton, 1890), Makers of Literature (New York, Macmillan, 1901)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Wheeler, S. In his edition of Landor's Letters and other Unpublished Writings (1897)

CRITICAL NOTES

In Memory of Walter Savage Landor

Back to the flower-town side by side,
The bright months bring.
New-born, the bridegroom and the bride,
Freedom and spring

The sweet land laughs from sea to sea,
Filled full of sun
All things come back to her, being free,—
All things but one

In many a tender wheaton plot
Flowers that were dead
Live, and old suns revive, but not
That holier head

By this white wandering waste of sea
Far north, I hear
One face shall never turn to me
As once this year

Shall never smile and turn and rest
On mine as these,
Nor one most sacred hand be pressed
Upon my hair.

I came as one whose thoughts half linger,
Half run before.
The youngest to the oldest singer
That England bore

I found him whom I shall not find
Till all grief end,
In holiest age our mightiest mind,
Father and friend

But thou, if anything endure,
If hope there be,
O spirit that man's life left pure,
Man's death set free,

Not with disdain of days that were
Look earthward now
Let dreams revive the reverend hair,
The imperial brow,

Come back in sleep, for in the life
Where thou art not
We find none like thee Time and strife
And the world's lot

Move thee no more, but love at least
And reverent heart
May move thee, royal and released,
Soul, as thou art.

And thou, his Florence, to thy trust
Receive and keep,
Keep safe his dedicated dust,
His sacred sleep.

No shall thy lovers, come from far,
Mix with thy name
As morning-star with evening-star
His faultless fame

—A. C. Swinburne (1886)

"Few men have ever impressed their peers so much, or the general public so little, as Walter Savage Landor. Of all celebrated authors, he has hitherto been one of the least popular. Nevertheless he is among the most striking figures in the history of English literature, striking alike by his character and his powers. The place occupied by Landor among English men of letter is a place apart. He wrote on many subjects and in many forms, and was strong both in imagination and criticism. He was equally master of Latin and English, and equally at home in prose and verse. He cannot properly be associated with any given school, or, indeed, with any given epoch of our literature, as epochs are usually counted, but stands alone, alike by the character of his mind and by the tenor and circumstances of his life. Everything he says must be his own. On the other hand, it is no part of Landor's originality to provoke attention, as many even of illustrious writers have done, by emphasis or singularity of style. Arbitrary and vehement beyond other men in many of his thoughts, in their utterance he is always sober and decorous. He delivers himself of whatever is in his mind with an air, to borrow an expression of his own, 'majestically sedate'."—Sidney Colvin, in Landor (English Men of Letters Series, 1881)

"I claim no place in the world of letters, I am alone, and will be alone, as long as I live and after"—Landor, in a letter to Lord Brougham on the neglect of Southey, printed in The Last Frost of an Old Tree (1853)

950.

GEHIR

This poem was suggested to Landor by an Arabian tale, The History of Charoba, Queen of Egypt, which he found in Clara Reeve's The Progress of Romance (1785), lent him by his friend Rose Aylmer. Gebir is a prince of Spain who makes war upon Charoba in fulfillment of a vow to avenge hereditary wrongs. Charoba is aided by her nurse, the sorceress Dalcia. Although the first meeting of Gebir and Charoba changes their enmity to love, the story ends tragically as a result of Dalcia's misunderstanding of the true situation. Landor first attempted the poem in Latin and in English, but finally decided to write it in English. Later he translated it into Latin. It was republished in 1859 as one of the Hellenics (See p. 975a, n. 2).

"Gebir was published in 1798, the year of the Lyric Ballads, and in its individual way it marks an epoch almost as distinctly. No blank verse of comparable caliber had appeared since the death of Milton, and, though the form was at times actually reminiscent both of Milton and of the Latin structure of some of the portions as they were originally composed, it has a quality which still remains entirely its own. Cold, sensitive, splendid, so precise, so restrained, keeping step with such a stately music, scarcely any verse in English has a more individual harmony, more equable, more refreshingly calm to the ear"—Symonds, in The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (1909)

In the selections printed here, Landon's spelling has been somewhat modernized, such forms as toucht, fast, and lookt being changed to touch'd, fas'd, look'd. On Landon's spelling see his Imaginary Conversations, "Archdeacon Hare and Walter Landon," and De Quincey's Orthographic Mutineers (Collected Writings, ed. Masson, 11, 437)

960. 90 ff. The passage upon which the incident of the wrestling match is based is as follows: "Now the chief shepherd was a beautiful person, and of a goodly stature and aspect. One day when he had committed his flocks to the other shepherds, and wandered far away from them, he saw a fair young lady rising out of the sea, who walked towards him and saluted him graciously—He returned her salutation, and she began to converse with him—'Young man,' said she, 'will you wrestle with me for a wager that I shall lay against you?'—'What will you lay, fair lady,' said the shepherd, 'and what can I stake against you?'—'If you give me a fall,' said the lady, 'I will be yours, and at your disposal,—and if I give you a fall you shall give me a beast out of your flock'—'I am content,' said the shepherd,—so he went towards her, and she met him, and wrestled with him, and presently gave him a fall. She then took a beast out of the flock, and carried it away with her into the sea.

"She came every evening afterwards, and did the same, until the shepherd was desperately in love with her—So the flock was diminished, and the shepherd was pining away with love and grief

"One day King Gebirus, passing by the shepherd, found him sitting very pensive by his flocks, so he came near and spoke to him—'What misfortune hath befallen thee, shepherd? why art thou so altered and dejected? thy flock also diminishes, and gives less milk every day?'—Upon this the shepherd took courage, and told the king all that had befallen him by the lady of the sea."

961. 159. "W. Wordsworth borrowed this shell, and filled it to overflowing for the refreshment of the wayfarers in his Excursion. The Lord of a Manor may wink at small encroachments on the common, but the steward must note them in his book"—Landon's note, ed. of 1859

963. ROSE ATLMER

The subject of this little elegy, the daughter of Henry, Baron Aylmer, was Landon's friend and companion during his early years in Wales (1795-98). He was indebted to her for the book which gave him his hint for Gebir. The poem was written after hearing the news of her death in India in 1800. Colvin says of this poem (Landon, English Men of Letters Series) "Just, natural, simple, severely and at the same time hauntingly melodious, however baldly or stokally they may strike the ear attuned to more high pitched lamentations, these are the lines which made afterwards so deep an impression upon Charles Lamb. Tipsey or sober, it is reported of that impressionable spirit a few years before his death, he would always be repeating Rose Aylmer"

LYRICS, TO IANTHE

A number of lyrics referring to Ianthé, written and published at various times, are here grouped together in the order suggested by Colvin in the Golden Treasury edition of Selections from Landon. It is probable that a number of Landon's other lyrics also were addressed to Ianthé. Colvin says of these poems (Landon, English Men of Letters Series) "From these years, about 1802-1806, dates the chief part of Landon's verses written to or about Ianthé. Whether in the form of praise, of complaint, or of appeal, these verses are for the most part general in their terms, and do not enable us definitely to retrace the course of an attachment on which Landon never ceased to look back as the strongest of his life, and for the object of which he continued until her death to entertain the most chivalrous and tender friendship. Landon's verses in this class, although not in the first rank of love poetry, nevertheless express much contained passion in their grave concise way, and seldom fail to include within the polished shell of verse, a solid and appropriate kernel, however minute, of thought"

964. PAST RUIN'D ILION HELEN LIVES

Helen was the wife of Menelaus, King of Sparta. Paris carried her off to Troy (Ilion), and by so doing caused the Trojan War. After the fall of Troy, Helen returned to Menelaus.

965. A FIESOLAN IDYL

This poem admirably phrases Landon's passion for flowers. In a letter to H. Crabb Robinson, Landon writes "I like white flowers better than any others, they resemble fair women. Lily, tuberose, orange, and the truly English syringa are my heart's delight. I do not mean to say that they supplant the rose and violet in my affections, for these are our first loves, before we grew too fond of considering and too fond of displaying our acquaintance with others of sounding titles."—H. C. Robinson's Diary (1869), 2, 518.

This poem should be compared with Tennyson's The Gardener's Daughter, printed some ten years later.

006. THE CITATION AND EXAMINATION OF
WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE

This is one of Landor's longer prose works, which aims to reproduce Shakspeare's trial for deer-stealing. The humorous account is supposed to be written by the magistrate's clerk. The work contains several lyrics, the best of which are those printed here. The Maid's Lament is found in Shakspeare's pocket by the examiners and read in court. Upon a Secret Briar was recited by Shakspeare after he had heard some lines on dog roses.

007. PERICLES AND ASPASIA

This is a long prose work by Landor composed in the form of imaginary letters written by Pericles, the famous Athenian statesman and orator (5th cent. B. C.), and his mistress Aspasia, and some of their friends. Some of the letters are in verse; others contain verses. For the letters written in prose, see p. 993. Edmund Clarence Stedman says of this work (Victorian Poets): "As an exhibition of intellectual beauty [it] may be termed the masterpiece of Landor's whole career. Critics are not wanting who maintain Pericles and Aspasia to be the purest creation of sustained art in English prose. [It] is clear as noonday, a book for thinkers—but a book for lovers also, and should be as immortal as the currents which flow between young hearts."

CORINNA TO TANAGRA

This poem is found in Letter 44, Aspasia to Cleone, following this statement: "To compensate the disappointment you complained of I will now transcribe for you an ode of Corinna to her native town, being quite sure it is not in your collection. Let me first inform you that the exterior of the best houses in Tanagra is painted with historical scenes, adventures of gods, allegories, and other things, and under the walls of the city flows the Thermodon. Thus it is requisite to tell you of so small and so distant a place."

I WILL NOT LOVE

This poem is found in Letter 52, Aspasia to Cleone. It purports to be an autograph from the library of Pericles. It follows this statement: "Men may be negligent in their hand writing, for men may be in a hurry about the business of life, but I never knew either a sensible woman or an estimable one whose writing was disorderly. Well, the verses are prettier than my reflection, and equally true."

THE DEATH OF ARTEMIDORA

This poem is found in Letter 85, Cleone to Aspasia, following this statement: "We are losing, day by day, one friend or other. Artemidora of Ephesus was betrothed to Elpenor, and their nuptials, it was believed, were at hand. How gladly would Artemidora have survived Elpenor. I pitied her almost as much as if she had. I must ever love true lovers on the eve of separation. These indeed were little known to me until a short time before. We became friends when our fates had made us relatives. On these occasions there are always many verses, but not always so true in feeling and in fact as those which I shall now transcribe for you."

The text here given is that of the first edition. The poem was later included in The Hellenica with the last three lines dropped and a few other slight changes.

009. LIFE PASSES NOT AS SOME MEN SAY

This poem is found in Letter 91, Aspasia to Cleone, following this statement: "Nothing is pleasanter to me than exploring in a library. What a delight in being a discoverer! Among a loose accumulation of poetry, the greater part excessively bad, the verses I am about to transcribe are perhaps the least so." Ardiaia, of line 7, is the person whom the poet addresses.

LITTLE AGAN

This poem is found in Letter 113, Cleone to Aspasia, following this statement: "In case of necessity, everything is ready for my departure to the sources of the Meander. I will prove to you that I am not hurried nor frightened. I have leisure to write out what perhaps may be the last verses written in Miletus, unless we are relieved."

WE MIND NOT HOW THY SUN IN THE MID-SKY

This poem is found in Letter 119, Cleone to Aspasia, following this statement: "Worse verses, it may be, than any of those which you lately sent to me affect me more. There is no giddiness in looking down the precipices of youth. It is the rapidity and heat of its course that brings the giddiness. When we are near its termination a chilly thrill comes over us, whether we look before or behind. Yet there is something like enchantment in the very sound of the word youth, and the calmest heart at every season of life, beats in double time to it. Never expect a compensation for what you send me, whether prose or poetry, but expect a pleasure, because it has given me one. Now here are the worse verses for the better, the Milesian for the Attic."

SAPPHO TO HESPERUS

This poem is found in Letter 150, Cleone to Aspasia, where it is quoted as the authentic work of Sappho, the famous Greek lyric poetess of the 7th century B. C. Hesperus is the evening star.

DIRCE

This poem is found in Letter 280, Aspasia to Cleone. Aspasia states that it was sent to her by Pericles to prove that his Athenians could sport with Charon. Dirce, the wife of Lycus, King of Thebes, was murdered by Amphion and Zethus because of her ill treatment of their mother Antiope. Charon was the ferryman who transported the souls of the dead over the River Styx in the lower world.

ON SEEING A HAIR OF LUCRETIA BORGIA

Lucretia Borgia (1480-1519) was an Italian woman, noted for her rare beauty and ability, her patronage of learning and the arts, and notorious for her wickedness.

969.

TO JOSEPH ABLETT

The subject of this poem was a Welsh gentleman of considerable means who admired and befriended Landor. Among other things he advanced the money for the purchase of Landor's home near Fiesole, Italy. The poem was written after the two friends had made a tour from Ablett's home to the lakes, and after Landor had returned to Italy.

970.

TO THE SISTER OF ELIA

This poem was sent in a letter to H. Crabb Robinson, following this statement: "The death of Charles Lamb has grieved me very bitterly. Never did I see a human being with whom I was more inclined to sympathize. There is something in the recollection that you took me with you to see him which affects me greatly more than writing or speaking of him could do with any other. When I first heard of the loss that all his friends, and many that never were his friends, sustained in him, no thought took possession of my mind except the anguish of his sister. That very night before I closed my eyes I composed this."

971. ON HIS OWN AGAMEMNON AND IPHIGENIA

This poem is written as a criticism of Landor's earlier poem The Shades of Agamemnon and Iphigenia, included in Letter 225 of Pericles and Aspasia. Agamemnon was the leader of the Greek expedition against Troy. Iphigenia was his daughter. When the Greek fleet was becalmed at Aulis, a seaport on the east coast of Greece, through the anger of Artemis, the seer of Colchis declared that the death of Iphigenia was the only means of appeasing the goddess. At the time of the sacrifice Artemis carried Iphigenia away in a cloud to Tauris, and made her a priestess. See Landor's Iphigenia and Agamemnon (p. 976).

1. From eve to morn.—Cf. Milton's Paradise Lost, 1, 742-43. "From morn to noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve."

975.

ON THE HELLENICS

This poem was prefixed to the second edition of Landor's The Hellenics (1847).

THRASYMEDES AND EUNOE

Thrasymedes eloped with Eunoe, the daughter of Pisistratus, tyrant of Athens, 6th century B. C. In this poem Eunoe's brother Hipplias overhauls the fleeing pair and brings them back to Athens.

976.

IPHIGENIA AND AGAMEMNON

See note on On His Own Agamemnon and Iphigenia, above.

977.

THE HAMADRYAD

A hamadryad was a nymph who was born and who died at the same time with the tree (usually an oak) of which she was the spirit (áma, with + δρῦς, tree). The legend traces back to the fifth century B. C.

982.

ON HIS SEVENTY-FIFTH BIRTHDAY

"How definite is the picture of the old man bending with outstretched hands over the dying embers, with what dignity is the emotion repressed. We feel the modern spirit if we contrast this with Browning's Prospice, with its cry of exulting struggle, or with Tennyson's Crossing the Bar, with its music, its twilight tones, its mystery of the sea"—Reed, in English Lyrical Poetry (1912).

984.

THESEUS AND HIPPOLYTA

Hippolyta, daughter of Ares and Otrera, was Queen of the Amazons, a tribe of warlike women reputed to live in Asia Minor. Theseus, the son of Aegeus, King of Athens, was the national hero of Attica, Greece. In his exploit against the Amazons, he carried off their queen.

985.

IMAGINARY CONVERSATIONS

This work consists of a number of prose dialogues or conversations between illustrious personages chiefly of the past. In "Archdeacon Hare and Walter Landor," Landor says: "Poetry was always my amusement, prose my study and business. I have published five volumes of Imaginary Conversations cut the worst of them through the middle, and there will remain in this decimal fraction quite enough to satisfy my appetite for fame. I shall dine late; but the dining-room will be well lighted, the guests few and select."

TIBERIUS AND VIPERANIA

Viperania was the daughter of Agrippa, a Roman general and consul of the 1st century B C. Tiberius, her husband, was the son of Tiberius Nero and Livia (later the wife of Augustus Caesar) and heir to the throne. Upon the birth of a son (Drusus) to Viperania, Tiberius was compelled to divorce his wife and marry Julia, the daughter of Augustus, in order that the crown might be held by inheritance. Landon here represents an unexpected meeting between Tiberius and Viperania.

987. MARCELLUS AND HANNIBAL

Hannibal, the famous general of Carthage, overcame Marcellus, the Roman general, in southern Italy, in 208 B C. In this scene, Marcellus lies before his conqueror mortally wounded.

989. METELLUS AND MARIUS

In this conversation, the Roman centurion Caius Marius, at the request of the tribune Cneilius Metellus, enters Numantia, a city in Spain besieged by the Romans in 132 B C, and reports what he has seen.

991. LEOFRIC AND GODIVA

This conversation is based on the legend that Leofric, Earl of Mercia (11th century), consented to relieve the people of a burdensome tax on condition that his wife Godiva should ride through the streets of Coventry naked at noon-day. She fulfilled the condition, covered only by her luxuriant hair. The festival of Godiva is still celebrated in Coventry.

993. PERICLES AND ANPASIA

See note on Pericles and Anpasia, p. 1303a.

996. THE PENTAMERON

The Pentameron (πέντα, five + μέρος, part) is a series of five interviews held on successive days between Giovanni Boccaccio and Francesco Petrarca, famous Italian writers of the 14th century. In the selection given here, Boccaccio relates how his former love Fiametta, daughter of the King of Naples, appeared to him in a dream.

"In The Pentameron Landon is again at his very best. All his study of the great Italian writers of the 14th century, and all his recent observations of Tuscan scenery and Tuscan character are turned to skilful and harmonious account. Landon loved and understood Boccaccio through and through, and if he over-estimated that prolific and amiable genius in comparison with other and greater men, it was an error which for the present purpose was almost an advantage. Nothing can be pleasanter than the intercourse of the two friendly poets as Landon had imagined it, nothing more classically idyllic than the incidental episodes."—Colvin, in Landon (English Men of Letters Series, 1878).

JAMES MACPHERSON (1738-1796), p. 86

EDITIONS

Poems of Ossian, translated by James Macpherson (Boston, Phillips, 1852).

Works of Ossian, translated by James Macpherson, ed. by W. Sharp (Edinburgh, Geddes, 1896).

Poems of Ossian, Translated by James Macpherson, ed. with an Introduction, Historical and Critical, by G. Eyre-Todd (Canterbury Poets ed. London, Scott, 1888).

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

Nutt, A. Ossian and the Ossianic Literature (Popular Studies in Mythology, Romance, and Folk-Lore, Series 3. London, Nutt, 1899).

Saunders, (T.) R. The Life and Letters of James Macpherson (London, Sonnenschein, 1894, New York, Macmillan).

Sharp, J. C. "The Poetry of the Scottish Highlands—Ossian." Aspects of Poetry (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1881, Boston, Houghton, 1882).

Smart, J. S. James Macpherson An Epitaph in Literature (London, Nutt, 1905).

Tombo, R., Jr. Ossian in Germany (Columbia Univ. Press, 1901).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nutt, A. In his Ossian and Ossianic Literature (1899).

Lowndes, W. T. In The Bibliographer's Manual, Part 6, ed. by H. G. Bohn 10 parts (Bohn's Library ed. London Bohn 1857-64).

CRITICAL NOTES

The following selections are from the so-called Ossianic Poems, which Macpherson said were translations from an ancient Gaelic bard, Ossian, son of Fingal. A considerable controversy was waged as to the truth of Macpherson's statement, it is now generally agreed that the publications, though probably based upon genuine Gaelic remains, were largely the work of Macpherson himself. For Gray's interest in these productions, see his letters to Walpole, Stonehewer, Wharton, and Mason (pp. 71-72). In reply to a saucy letter from Macpherson in regard to the controversy, Samuel Johnson wrote Macpherson as follows (1775):

"I received your foolish and impudent letter. Any violence offered me I shall do my best to repel, and what I cannot do for myself the law shall do for me. I hope I shall never be deterred from detecting what I think a cheat, by the menaces of a ruffian."

"What would you have me retract? I thought your book an imposture; I think it an imposture still. For this opinion I have given my reasons to the public, which I here dare you to refute."

Your rage I defy Your abilities, since your Homer,¹ are not so formidable, and what I hear of your morals, inclines me to pay regard not to what you shall say, but to what you shall prove. You may print this if you will."

For a clear account of the whole matter, see J. S. Smart's James Macpherson (1905)

"Homer has been superseded in my heart by the divine Ossian Through what world does this angelic bard carry me! With him I wander over barren wastes and frightful wilds, surrounded by whirlwinds and hurricanes, trace by the feeble light of the moon the shades of our noble ancestors, hear from the mountainous heights, intermingled with the roaring of waves and cataracts, their plaintive tones stealing from cavernous recesses, while the pensive monody of some love-stricken maiden, who heaves her departing sighs over the moss-clad grave of the warrior by whom she was adored, makes up the inarticulate concert"—Goethe, in The Sorrows of Werther, Letter 68 (1774).

86.

CARTHON

Macpherson's Argument of this poem is as follows "This poem is complete and the subject of it, as of most of Ossian's compositions, tragical In the time of Comhal the son of Trathal, and father of the celebrated Fingal, Clessámmor the son of Thaddu and brother of Morna, Fingal's mother, was driven by a storm into the River Clyde, on the banks of which stood Balclutha, a town belonging to the Britons between the walls He was hospitably received by Reutháimir, the principal man in the place, who gave him Moína his only daughter in marriage Reuda, the son of Cormo, a Briton who was in love with Moína, came to Reutháimir's house, and behaved haughtily towards Clessámmor A quarrel ensued, in which Reuda was killed, the Britons, who attended him, pressed so hard on Clessámmor, that he was obliged to throw himself into the Clyde, and swim to his ship He hoisted sail, and the wind being favorable, bore him out to sea He often endeavored to return, and carry off his beloved Moína by night, but the wind continuing contrary, he was forced to desist

"Moína, who had been left with child by her husband, brought forth a son, and died soon after—Reutháimir named the child Carthon, i e, the murmur of waves, from the storm which carried off Clessámmor his father, who was supposed to have been cast away When Carthon was three years old, Comhal the father of Fingal, in one of his expeditions against the Britons, took and burnt Balclutha Reutháimir was killed in the attack, and Carthon was carried safe away by his nurse, who fled further into the country of the Britons Carthon, coming to man's estate, was resolved to revenge the fall of Balclutha on Comhal's posterity. He set sail, from the Clyde, and falling on the coast of Morven, defeated two of Fingal's heroes, who came to oppose his progress He was, at last, unwittingly killed by his father Clessámmor, in a single combat. This story is the foundation of the present poem, which opens on the night preceding the death of Carthon, so that what passed before is introduced by way of episode. The poem is addressed to Malvína the daughter of Toscar"—

90b. 18-19. The incident of the father-and-son combat is the basis of Arnold's Sohrab and Rustum For a discussion of this theme in literature, see Potter's Sohrab and Rustum (Grimm Library Series, 1902)

91.

OLINA MORUL

Macpherson's Argument to this poem is as follows "After an address to Malvína, the daughter of Toscar, Ossian proceeds to relate his own expedition to Fuirfed, an island of Scandinavia Mal-orchol, king of Fuirfed, being hard pressed in war, by Ton-thormod, chief of Sar-dronlo (who had demanded, in vain, the daughter of Mal-orchol in marriage), Fingal sent Ossian to his aid Ossian, on the day after his arrival, came to battle with Ton-thormod, and took him prisoner Mal-orchol offers his daughter Olna-morul to Ossian, but he, discovering her passion for Ton-thormod, generously surrenders her to her lover, and brings about a reconciliation between the two kings"

91b. 5. "Con cathlin, mild beam of the west"—What star was so called of old is not easily ascertained Some now distinguish the pole-star by that name"—Macpherson

92.

FINGAL

Macpherson's Argument to Book 1 of Fingal is as follows "Cuthullin (general of the Irish tribes, in the minority of Cormac, King of Ireland) sitting alone beneath a tree, at the gate of Tura, a castle of Ulster (the other chiefs having gone on a hunting party to Cromla, a neighboring hill), is informed of the landing of Swaran, King of Lochlin, by Moran, the son of Fithil, one of his scouts He convenes the chiefs, a council is held, and disputes run high about giving battle to the enemy Connal, the petty king of Togorma, and an intimate friend of Cuthullin, was for retreating, till Fingal, King of those Caledonians who inhabited the north-west coast of Scotland, whose aid had been previously solicited, should arrive, but Calmar, the son of Matha, lord of Lara, a country in Connaught, was for engaging the enemy immediately Cuthullin, of himself willing to fight, went into the opinion of Calmar Marching towards the enemy, he misad three of his bravest heroes, Fergus, Duchomar, and Cathba. Fergus arriving, tells Cuthullin of the death of the two other chiefs, which introduces the affecting episode of Morna, the daughter of Cormac. The army of Cuthullin is described at a distance by Swaran, who sent the son of Arno to observe the motions of the enemy, while he himself ranged his forces in order of battle. The son of Arno returning to Swaran, describes to him Cuthullin's chariot, and the terrible appearance of that hero. The armies engage, but night coming on, leaves the victory undecided. Cuthullin, according to the hospitality of the times, sends to Swaran a formal invitation to a feast, by his bard Carril, the son of Kinfena. Swaran refuses to come. Carril relates to Cuthullin the story of Grudar and Braccollis. A party, by Connal's advice, is sent to observe the enemy which closes the action of the first day."

¹ Macpherson published a prose translation of Homer's Iliad in 1773.

93b. 13. Lochlin—"The Gaelic name of Scandinnavia in general"—Macpherson.

16. Inistore—"The Orkney Islands."—Macpherson.

50. Four Stones—"This passage alludes to the manner of burial among the ancient Scots. They opened a grave six or eight feet deep, the bottom was lined with fine clay, and on this they laid the body of the deceased, and, if a warrior his sword and the heads of twelve arrows by his side. Above they laid another stratum of clay, in which they placed the horn of a deer, the symbol of hunting. The whole was covered with a fine mould, and four stones were placed on end to mark the extent of the grave. These are the four stones alluded to here."—Macpherson.

95b. 53. "The Isle of sky not improperly called the 'isle of mist,' as its high hills, which catch the clouds from the Western Ocean, occasion almost continual rains."—Macpherson.

96b. 42. "The Coma here mentioned is that small river that runs through Glenco in Argyleshire. One of the hills which environ that romantic valley is still called Scornafena, or the hill of Fingal's people."—Macpherson.

97a. 3. "Lubar, a river in Ulster. Labhar, loud, noisy"—Macpherson.

DAVID MALLET (1705-1765), p. 15

EDITIONS

Works, 3 vols. (London, Millar, 1759)

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

Johnson, S. The Lives of the English Poets (London, 1779-81), 3 vols., ed. by G. B. Hill (London, Clarendon Press, 1905).

CRITICAL NOTES

15. WILLIAM AND MARGARET

This was one of the most popular ballads of the eighteenth century. Mallet was not the author of it, but he was thought to be until 1878. For a discussion of the matter, see Phelps, The Beginnings of the English Romantic Movement (1893), Appendix II.

"William and Margaret is simply Fair Margaret and Sweet William rewritten in what used to be called an elegant style."—Child, in English and Scottish Popular Ballads (1882-98), II, 1, 200.

THOMAS MOORE (1779-1852), p. 424

EDITIONS

Poetical Works, ed. by W. M. Rossetti (Popular Poets ed. London, Moxon, 1872, 1880).

Complete Poetical Works, ed., with a Biographical Sketch, by N. H. Dole (New York, Crowell, 1895).

Poetical Works (Home Library ed. New York, Burt, 1900).

Poetical Works, ed. by A. D. Godley (Oxford ed. Oxford Univ. Press, 1910).

Poems, selected by C. L. Falkner (Golden Treasury ed. London and New York, Macmillan, 1903).

Irish Melodies and Songs, ed., with an Introduction, by S. Gwynn (Muses' Library ed. London, Routledge, 1908, New York, Dutton).

Lalla Rookh (Home Library ed. New York, Burt, 1900).

Lalla Rookh (Handy Volume Classics ed. New York, Crowell, 1912).

Poem and Verse, ed., with an Introduction by R. H. Shepherd (New York, Scribner, 1878).

BIOGRAPHY

Gwynn, S. Thomas Moore (English Men of Letters Series. New York and London, Macmillan, 1905).

Symington, A. J. Thomas Moore, His Life and Works (London, Black, 1880).

CRITICISM

Blackwood's Magazine. "Irish Melodies," Jan., 1822 (11 62), "Lalla Rookh," June, 1817 (1 279, 503), "The Fudge Family in Paris," May, 1818 (3 129), "The Loves of the Angels," Jan., 1823 (13 63).

Edinburgh Review, The "Translation of Anacreon," July, 1803 (2 462).

Gunning, J. P. Moore Poet and Patriot (Dublin, Gill, 1900).

Harlitt, W. "Mr. T. Moore—Mr. Leigh Hunt," The Spirit of the Age (London, 1825), "Of the Jealousy and the Spleen of Party," The Plain Speaker (London, 1826), "On the Living Poet," Lectures on the English Poets (London, 1818). Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure, 4, 353, 5, 151, 7, 365).

Jeffrey, F. "Lalla Rookh," The Edinburgh Review, Nov., 1817 (29 1): Contributions to the Edinburgh Review (1853).

Quarterly Review, The "Irish Melodies," June, 1812, and Oct., 1822 (7 374, 28 188).

Saintsbury, G. Essays in English Literature, 425.
1780-1800, First Series (London, Percival, 1890;
New York, Scribner)

Thomas, A. B. "Moore en France," Contribution à l'histoire de la fortune de ses œuvres dans la littérature française, 1819-90 (Paris, Champion, 1911).

A CANADIAN BOAT SONG

"I wrote these words to an air which our boatmen sung to us frequently. The wind was so unfavorable that they were obliged to row all the way, and we were five days in descending the river from Kingston to Montreal, exposed to an intense sun during the day, and at night forced to take shelter from the dews in any miserable hut upon the banks that would receive us. But the magnificent scenery of the St. Lawrence repays all such difficulties.

"Our voyageurs had good voices, and sung perfectly in tune together. The original words of the air, to which I adapted these stanzas, appeared to be a long, incoherent story, of which I could understand but little, from the barbarous pronunciation of the Canadians.

"I ventured to harmonize this air, and have published it. Without that charm which association gives to every little memorial of scenes or feelings that are past, the melody may, perhaps, be thought common and trifling, but I remember when we have entered, at sunset, upon one of those beautiful lakes, into which the St. Lawrence so grandly and unexpectedly opens, I have heard this simple air with a pleasure which the finest compositions of the first masters have never given me, and now there is not a note of it which does not recall to my memory the dip of our oars in the St. Lawrence, the flight of our boat down the Rapids, and all those new and fanciful impressions to which my heart was alive during the whole of this very interesting voyage."—Moore's note

CRITICAL NOTES

From For the Moore Centennial Celebration, May 28, 1879

Enchanter of Erin, whose magic has bound us, Thy wand for one moment we fondly would claim,

Entranced while it summons the phantoms around us

That blush into life at the sound of thy name

The tell-tales of memory wake from their slumbers'

I hear the old song with its tender refrain,—
What passion lies hid in those honey-voiced numbers'

What perfume of youth in each exquisite strain'

The land where the staff of Saint Patrick was planted,

Where the shamrocks grow green from the cliffs to the shore,

The land of fair maidens and heroes undaunted,
Shall wreath her bright harp with the garlands of Moore'

—Oliver Wendell Holmes (1879)

"It has been the fashion of late days to deny Moore imagination, while granting him fancy—a distinction originating with Coleridge—than whom no man more fully comprehended the great powers of Moore. The fact is, that the fancy of this poet so far predominates over all his other faculties, and over the fancy of all other men, as to have induced, very naturally, the idea that he is fanciful only. But never was there a greater mistake. Never was a grosser wrong done the fame of a true poet."—Poe, in The Poetic Principle (1850)

See Byron's English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, 283-94 (p. 489).

424. THE LAKE OF THE DISMAL SWAMP

This and the following poem, A Canadian Boat Song, are part of a collection of poems relating to America, first published in 1808 in the volume entitled Odes and Epistles.

"The Great Dismal Swamp is ten or twelve miles distant from Norfolk, and the Lake in the middle of it (about seven miles long) is called Drummond's Pond."—Moore's note

Moore prefixed to the poem the following account

"They tell of a young man, who lost his mind upon the death of a girl he loved, and who, suddenly disappearing from his friends, was never afterwards heard of. As he had frequently said, in his ravings, that the girl was not dead, but gone to the Dismal Swamp, it is supposed he had wandered into that dreary wilderness, and had died of hunger, or been lost in some of its dreadful morasses."—Anon."

IRISH MELODIES

"In one only of his writings Moore attained a positive perfection of style. Those homely and sentimental lyrics which have endeared themselves to thousands of hearts under the name of the Irish Melodies form a part and parcel of our literature the extinction of which would leave a sad blank behind it. When they were first produced, in slender instalments spread over a period of more than twenty-five years, they seemed universally brilliant and fascinating to the ears on whom their fresh tunes and dulcet numbers fell in a most amiable union. Here for once, it seemed, music and sweet poetry agreed in complete harmony, the one not brighter or more dainty than the other. Exposed to the wear and tear of sixty years, all the jewels in the casket do not now, any longer, look equally brilliant. Some have wholly faded, others have become weak or crude in coloring, while a few, perhaps one eighth of the whole, are as glowing and exquisite as ever, and shine like real stones in a heap of false jewelry. It is upon these fifteen or sixteen songs, amatory, patriotic, and jocose, that Moore's fame mainly rests, but though the support has become slender, it is lifted beyond all further fear of disintegration"—E. W. Gosse, in Ward's The English Poets, Vol 4 (1880)

OH, BREATHE NOT HIS NAME'

This poem refers to Robert Emmet, the famous Irish revolutionist executed in 1803 because of his part in stirring up a rebellion in Dublin. He was a leader of The United Irishmen, a prominent revolutionary society. Emmet was affianced to Sarah Curran, commemorated in the following poem by Moore.

She Is Far From the Land

She is far from the land where her young 429.
 hero sleeps,
 And lovers are round her, sighing
 But coldly she turns from their gaze, and weeps,
 For her heart in his grave is lying

 She sings the wild song of her dear native plains,
 Every note which he lov'd awaking,— Ah! little they think who delight in her
 strains,
 How the heart of the Minstrel is breaking

 He had liv'd for his love, for his country he died,
 They were all that to life had entwin'd
 him,
 Nor soon shall the tears of his country be dried,
 Nor long will his love stay behind him

 Oh! make her a grave where the sunbeams rest
 When they promise a glorious morrow,
 They'll shine o'er her sleep, like a smile from the West,
 From her own lov'd island of sorrow.

WHEN HE WHO ADORES THEE

This poem is an appeal to Ireland to remember Robert Emmet. See note on Oh, Breathe not his Name, above.

426. THE HARP THAT ONCE THROUGH TARA'S
 HAILS

Tara, near Dublin, was famous in early history as a residence of Irish kings.

428. NATIONAL AIRS

"It is Cicero, I believe, who says, 'natura ad modum ducimur' [by nature we are led to melody], and the abundance of wild, indigenous airs, which almost every country, except England, possesses, sufficiently proves the truth of his assertion. The lovers of this simple, but interesting kind of music, are here presented with the first number of a collection, which, I trust, their contributions will enable us to continue. A pretty air without words resembles one of those half creatures of Plato, which are described as wandering in search of the remainder of themselves through the world. To supply this other half, by uniting with congenial words the many fugitive melodies which have hitherto had none,—or only such as are unintelligible to the generality of their hearers,—is the object and ambition of the present work. Neither is it our intention to confine ourselves to what are strictly called National Melodies, but, wherever we meet with any wandering and beautiful air, to which poetry has not yet assigned a worthy home, we shall venture to claim it as an estrays swan, and enrich our humble Hippocrene with its song."—Moore's prefatory Advertisement. Hippocrene was a fountain in Greece supposed to give poetic inspiration.

LALLA ROOKH

This is a series of four Oriental tales connected with a slight prose narrative showing how the poems were recited for the entertainment of Lalla Rookh, a beautiful Indian princess, on her journey from Delhi, India, to her betrothed, the Prince of Bucharia, in the Vale of Cashmere, a district north of India. The name Lalla Rookh means tulip cheek. The "Light of the Haram" is the Sultana Nourmahal.

"It is still possible to read Lalla Rookh with pleasure, and even with a sort of indulgent enthusiasm . . . Underneath the smooth and faded surface lie much tenderness and pathos in the story of the Peri, much genuine patriotism in the fate of the Fire-Worshippers, much tropical sweetness in the adventures of the Light of the Haram"—E. W. Gosse, in Ward's The English Poets, Vol 4 (1880).

430. FABLES FOR THE HOLY ALLIANCE

This is a collection of eight satires on the league formed by the rulers of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, after the downfall of Napoleon in 1815. The league was formed for the purpose of opposing all changes in existing dynasties.

20. A congress of European powers held at Laybach, Austria, in 1821, decided to use arms in repressing revolutions in Piedmont and Verona, in northern Italy. A congress of the monarchs of Russia, Austria, and Prussia was held at Troppau, Austria, in 1820, to consider the revolution at Naples, and to make plans for preserving the Holy Alliance. The congress of European powers held at Verona in 1822 was occasioned by recent disturbances in Spain and southeastern Europe.

WILLIAM MOTHERWELL (1797-1835),
 p. 1162

EDITIONS

Minstrelsy, Ancient and Modern, ed by W. Motherwell (Glasgow, 1827, Paisley, Gardner, 1873).
Poetical Works, ed., with a Memoir, by J. M'Conechy (Paisley, Gardner, 1881).

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

- Minto, W. In Ward's The English Poets, Vol. 4 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1911)
- Stoddard, R. H. Under the Evening Lamp (New York, Scribner, 1892, London, Gay)
- Wilson, J. "Motherwell's Poems," Blackwood's Magazine, April, 1833 (33 608)

CRITICAL NOTES

Motherwell was an antiquarian who was interested in the ballads and folk-lore of Scotland and Scandinavia, and nearly all of his poems are of a ballad character. His martial pieces are noted for their stirring life and action, and his love poems for their tenderness and simplicity.

1163. JEANIE MORRISON

"Motherwell's reputation in his own country as a poet was made by the plaintive song of Jeanie Morrison, a sweet and touching reminiscence of pleasant days spent with a school playfellow and child sweetheart. This and another song in the Scotch dialect, My Heid is Like to Break, in which a betrayed damsel harrows up the feelings of her seducer with pitiless pathos, may be said to be the only two lyrics of his that have taken any hold of fame. They prove him to have been a man of keen sensibility, he was also a man of vigorous intellect and large culture, more of a student and a scholar than any contemporary Scotch lyricist"—Minto, in Ward's The English Poets, Vol. 4 (1880)

1164. MY HEID IS LIKE TO BEND, WILLIE

See note on preceding poem.

CHRISTOPHER NORTH (See WILSON)

THOMAS PARNELL (1679-1718), p. 3

EDITIONS

- Poetical Works*, ed., with a Memoir, by G. A. Aitken (Aldine ed. London, Bell, 1846, 1894, New York, Macmillan)
- Poetical Works*, with Churchill and Tickell (British Poets ed. Boston, Houghton, 1854)

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

- Goldsmith, O. Life of Dr. Parnell (1770), ed. by J. W. M. Gibbs in Goldsmith's Works, 5 vols. (Bohn Library ed. London, Bohn, 1884-86)
- Johnson, S. The Lives of the English Poets 1779-81), 8 vols., ed. by G. B. Hill (London, Clarendon Press, 1905)

CRITICAL NOTES

"We do not know how it is with others, but we never think of Parnell's Hermit without tranquillizing and grateful feelings. Parnell was a true poet of a minor order, he saw nature for himself, though he wrote a book style; and this, and one or two other poems of his, such as the eclogue on Health and the Fairy Tale, have inclined us to believe that there is something in the very name of 'Parnell' peculiarly gentle and agreeable"—Leigh Hunt, in A Book for a Corner (1849).

3.

A FAIRY TALE

This poem is meant to be written "in the ancient English style," but the vocabulary is characterized only by a timid and occasional pseudo-archaism, and the spirit of the whole piece is largely false, yet the poem does contain faint echoes of medievalism. For a crisp version of the incident of the hump, see The Legend of Knockgraston, printed in Yeats's Fairy and Folk Tales of the Irish Peasantry (1886)

5. 183-92. These lines illustrate the moralizing tag habit of the eighteenth century

A NIGHT-PIECE ON DEATH

This poem is an important forerunner of the so-called graveyard literature, which culminates in Gray's Elgy. In phrasing, Parnell is a slave to his time, but he gives an individual turn to the choice of subject. Goldsmith says in his Life of Parnell (1770) that "the Night-Piece on Death, with very little amendment, might be made to surpass all those night-pieces and churchyard scenes that have since appeared"—See note on Blair's The Grave, p. 1205b

THOMAS LOVE PEACOCK (1785-1866), p. 998

EDITIONS

- Works*, 3 vols., ed., with a Preface by Lord Houghton, by H. Cole (London, Bentley, 1875, 1888).
- Collected Prose Works*, 10 vols., ed. by R. Garnett (London, Dent, 1891)
- Poems*, ed., with a Biographical Preface, by R. B. Johnson (Museum Library ed. London, Routledge, 1906, New York, Dutton)
- Novels*, 2 vols. (New Universal Library ed. London, Routledge, 1905, New York, Dutton).
- Letters to Edward Hookham and Percy B. Shelley*, ed. by R. Garnett (London, 1910)
- Plays*, ed. by A. B. Young (London, Nutt, 1910).

BIOGRAPHY

- Helm, W. H. Thomas Love Peacock (Chicago, Browne, 1913)
- Van Doren, C. Life of Thomas Love Peacock (London, Dent, 1911, New York, Dutton)

CRITICISM

- Freeman, A. M. Thomas Love Peacock, A Critical Survey (London, Secker, 1911, New York, Kennerley, 1913)
- Garnett, R. Essays of an Ex-Librarian (London, Heinemann, 1901).

Little's Living Age. "The Complete Satirist," Nov. 14, 1914 (288-440).

Paul, H. "The Novels of Peacock," Stray Leaves (London and New York, Lane, 1906).

Maintenance, G. Essays in English Literature, 1780-1880, First Series (London Percival, 1880, New York, Scribner)

Smith, G. B. Poets and Novelists (London, Smith, 1876)

Stoddard, R. H. Under the Evening Lamp (New York, Scribner, 1892; London, Gay)

CRITICAL NOTES

From Letter to Maria Gishorne

And there
Is English Peacock with his mountain Fair,
Turned into a Flamingo,—that shy bird
That gleams 't the Indian air—have you not heard
When a man marries, dies, or turns Hindoo,
His best friends hear no more of him?—but you
Will see him and will like him too, I hope,
With the milk-white Snowdonian Antelope
Matched with this cameleopard—his fine wit 240
Makes such a wound the knife is lost in it,
A strain too learned for a shallow age
Too wise for selfish bigots let his page
Which charms the chosen spirits of the time,
Fold itself up for the sciencier clime 245
Of years to come, and find its recompense
In that just expectation

—Shelley (1820)

The "Snowdonian Antelope" is Peacock's wife, a Welsh girl, who lived near Mt. Snowdon in Wales. The marriage took place on March 20, 1820

"His learned wit, his satire upon the vulgarity of progress, are more continuously present in his prose than in his verse, but the novels are filled with cheerful scraps of rhyming, wine-songs, love songs, songs of mockery, and nonsense jingles, some of which are no more than the scholar's idle diversions but others of a singular excellence. They are like no other verse, they are startling, grotesque, full of hearty extravagance at times thrilling with unexpected beauty"—Symonds, in The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (1909)

998.

HAIL TO THE HEADLONG

This song is found in Chapter 13 of Headlong Hall. It is sung as a toast "To the immortal memory of Headlong Ap-Bhalder, and to the health of his noble descendant and worthy representative," Squire Headlong, master of Headlong Hall.

SEAMEN THREE! WHAT MEN BE YE?

This song is sometimes entitled The Men of Gotham. It is found in a drinking scene in Chapter 11 of Nightmare Abbey

FOR THE SLENDER BIRCH AND THE SAPLING OAK

This poem is recited in Chapter 2 of Maid Marian, to illustrate the impossibility of a certain young lady's being other than a lover of the birds and the forests.

999. THOUGH I BE NOW A GRAY, GRAY FRIAR

This song is sung by a bibulous Friar in Chapter 4 of Maid Marian

OH! BOLD ROBIN HOOD IS A FORBSTER GOOD

This song is found in Chapter 11 of Maid Marian. It is sung at the end of the day's festivities in Sherwood Forest, the haunt of Robin Hood and his followers.

YE WOODS, THAT OFT AT SUNTHY NOON

This song is found in Chapter 18 of Maid Marian. It is sung by the Friar as he bids farewell to the forest

1000. THE CIRCLING OF THE MEAD HORNS

This song is found in Chapter 2 of The Misfortunes of Elphin. It is the chorus which greets Elphin, the hero of the story, as he approaches the castle of Seitheny, one of the "immortal drunkards of the Isle of Britain"

THE WAR SONG OF DINAS VAWR

This song is found in Chapter 11 of The Misfortunes of Elphin. The castle of Dinas Vawr, a petty Welsh king of the days of King Arthur, had been seized by King Melvas from east of the Severn. The song is preceded by the following comment: "The hall of Melvas was full of magnanimous heroes, who were celebrating their own exploits in sundry choruses especially that which follows, which is here put upon record as being the quintessence of all the war-songs that ever were written, and the sum and substance of all the appetencies, tendencies, and consequences of military glory" 1001.

IN THE DAYS OF OLD

This song is found in Chapter 18 of Crotchet Castle. It is sung by a Lady Clarinda during an interval at a dancing-party

LOVE AND AGE 1

This song is found in Chapter 15 of Gryll Grange. It is sung by one of a company of young people. It was probably inspired by Peacock's memory of a young woman to whom he was engaged in 1807, but who married another. She died in 1808. Peacock's Newark Abbey was written in her memory.

THOMAS PERCY (1729-1811), p. 110

EDITIONS

Reliques of Ancient English Poetry (1765) 2 vols., ed. by C. C. Clarke (London, Cassell, 1877); 3 vols., ed. by H. B. Wheatley (London, Sonnenschein, 1876-77, 1891, New York, Macmillan, 1910)

Folio MS, 4 vols., ed. with a Life by J. Pickford, by J. W. Hales, F. J. Furnival, and F. J. Child (London, Trübner, 1867-68).

Northern Antiquities, 2 vols, translated from the French of P H Mallet (1770, Edinburgh, 1809, London, Bohn, 1844).

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

Gaussen, A C C. Percy, Prelate and Poet, with a Preface by Sir G Douglas (1908)

OTHER BALLAD COLLECTIONS

Child, F J. The English and Scottish Popular Ballads, 5 vols (Boston and New York, Houghton, 1882-98).

Gummere, F B. Old English Ballads (Athenæum Press ed Boston, Ginn, 1894, 1904).

Hazlitt, W. C. Remains of the Early Popular Poetry of England, 4 vols. (London, 1804-66).

Laing, D. Select Remains of the Ancient Popular Poetry of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1822), 2 vols (London, Reeves, 1895)

Motherwell, W. Minstrelsy, Ancient and Modern (Glasgow, 1827, Paisley, Gardner, 1878)

Ramsay, A. The Tea-Table Miscellany, 3 vols (Edinburgh, 1724-27), 4 vols. in 1 (London, 1750).

Ritson, Joseph. Ancient English Metrical Romances, 3 vols (London, 1802), Ancient Songs and Ballads (London, 1790, London, Reeves, 1877) Robin Hood, 2 vols (London, 1795, 1832)

Sargent, Helen Child, and Kittredge, G L. English and Scottish Popular Ballads, with an Introduction by G L Kittredge (Cambridge ed Boston, Houghton, 1904)

Scott, Sir Walter. The Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, 3 vols (Edinburgh, 1802-03), 4 vols., ed by T F Henderson (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1902), 1 vol., with an Introduction by A Noyes (Edinburgh Melrose, 1904, New York, Stokes, 1913)

CRITICAL NOTES

110. RELIQUES OF ANCIENT ENGLISH POETRY

The interest in old popular ballads is recognised as one of the important aspects of Romanticism, and selections from Percy's Reliques are included in this volume as representative of that phase of the movement. The Reliques is the most noted collection of ballads, songs, and other pieces of earlier poets, that was published in the eighteenth century. The materials were drawn from various sources, edited and discussed, expanded and compressed, as Percy pleased. The collection won an immediate popularity, and its influence upon subsequent writers of the Romantic period, notably Scott and Wordsworth, is hard to be estimated. The text followed is that given by Percy.

"I remember well the spot where I read these volumes for the first time. It was beneath a huge platanus tree, in the ruins of what had been intended for an old-fashioned arbor in the garden I have mentioned. The summer-day sped onward so fast that notwithstanding the sharp appetite of thirteen, I forgot the hour of dinner, was sought for with anxiety, and was still found entranced in my intellectual banquet. To read and to remember was in this instance the same thing, and henceforth I overwhelmed my school-fellows, and all who would hearken to me, with tragical recitations from the ballads of Bishop Percy. The first time, too, I could scrape a few shillings together, which were not common occurrences with me, I bought unto myself a copy of these beloved volumes, nor do I believe I ever read a book half so frequently, or with half the enthusiasm"—Scott, in Autobiography, printed as Chapter 1 of Lockhart's Memoirs of the Life of Sir Walter Scott, Bart (1837-39).

"I have already stated how Germany is indebted to this latter work, and for our own country, its poetry has been absolutely redeemed by it. I do not think there is a writer in verse of the present day who would not be proud to acknowledge his obligations to the Reliques. I know that it is so with my friends, and for myself, I am happy in this occasion to make a public avowal of my own"—Wordsworth, in Essay, Supplementary to the Preface (1815).

ROBIN HOOD AND GUY OF GISBORNE

Robin Hood, the famous legendary English outlaw, is the subject of numerous songs and ballads. His chief resort was in Sherwood Forest, in Nottinghamshire. Of his followers, the most noted are Little John, Friar Tuck, and Maid Marian.

The scene of this ballad is in the vicinity of Gisborne, a town near the western border of Yorkshire.

112. THE ANCIENT BALLAD OF CHEVY CHASE

This ballad is known also as The Hunting of the Cheviot. The scene of the action is the chase, or hunting ground, of Cheviot, a range of hills in Northumberlandshire, England, and Roxburghshire, Scotland.

The persons mentioned in the ballad belong to English and Scottish history of the 14th and 15th centuries.

"I never heard the old song of Percy and Douglas that I found not my heart moved more than with a trumpet, and yet it is sung but by some blind crowder with no rougher voice than rude style, which being so appared in the dust and cobwebs of that uncivil age, what would it work, trimmed in the gorgeous eloquence of Pindar?"—Milday, in The Defense of Poetry (1595). See also Addison's praise of the ballad in Spectator, Nos. 70 and 74.

ALEXANDER POPE (1688-1744), p. 1175

EDITIONS

- Works*, 16 vols., ed., with an Introduction, by W. Elwin and W. J. Courthope (London, Murray, 1871-89).
- Poetical Works*, 3 vols., ed. by A. Dyce (Aldine ed. London, Bell, 1860, New York, Macmillan, 1891)
- Poetical Works*, ed., with an Introductory Memoir, by A. W. Ward (Globe ed. London and New York, Macmillan, 1869, 1896, 1907)
- Complete Poems*, ed. by H. W. Boynton, includes translation of Homer (Cambridge ed. Boston, Houghton, 1903)
- Selections*, ed. by K. Deighton (Edinburgh, Bell, 1893, New York, Macmillan)
- Selections*, ed. by E. B. Reed (New York Holt, 1901)

BIOGRAPHY

- Johnson, S. The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81); 3 vols., ed. by G. B. Hill (London, Clarendon Press, 1905).
- Paston, G. Mr. Pope, His Life and Trials, 2 vols. (New York, Putnam, 1900)
- Reed, M. Later Affairs of Literary Men (New York, Putnam, 1907)
- Spence, J. Anecdotes, Observations, and Characters, of Books and Men, Collected from the Conversation of Mr. Pope and Other Eminent Persons of his Time (1820, Cammell ed. London, Scott 1886)
- Stephen, L. Alexander Pope (English Men of Letters Series, London, Macmillan, 1880, New York, Harper)

CRITICISM

- Birell, A. Obiter Dicta, Second Series (London, Stock, 1885, 1888, New York Scribner)
- Chesterton, G. K. "Pope and the Art of Satire," The Tatler Types (London, Humphreys, 1902, 1910). Varied Types (New York, Dodd, 1903, 1909)
- Conington, J. "The Poetry of Pope," Oxford Essays, 4 vols. (London, Parker, 1855-58). Miscellaneous Works, 2 vols. (London, Longmans, 1872)
- De Quincey, T. "Alexander Pope," The Encyclopedia Britannica, 7th ed., "The Poetry of Pope," The North British Review, Aug., 1848; "Lord Carleton on Pope," Tait's Magazine, April-July, 1851. Collected Writings, ed. Masson (London, Black, 1889-90, 1896-97), 4, 237, 11, 51, 98
- Elton, O. The Augustan Ages (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1899, New York, Scribner)
- Grimth, R. H. "Notes on the Dunciad," Modern Philology, Oct., 1912 (10 179)
- Hazlitt, W. "Dryden and Pope," Lectures on the English Poets (London, 1818), "Pope, Lord Byron, and Mr. Bowler," The London Magazine, June, 1821. Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06; New York, McClure), 5, 68; 11, 486.

- Lang, A. Letters to Dead Authors (London, Longmans, 1886, 1892, New York, Scribner, 1893).
- Lowell, J. R. My Study Windows (Boston, Osgood, 1871, Houghton, 1890-92)
- McLean, Mary L. "The Riming System of Alexander Pope," Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, 1891 (6 184)
- Montégut Emile. Heure de Lecture d'un Critique, Revue des Deux Mondes (Paris, Hachette, 1891).
- Sainte Beuve, C. A. "Qu'est ce qu'un Classique?" Causeries du Lundi, Vol. 3 (Paris, Garnier, 1857)
- Stephen, L. "Pope as a Moralist," Hours in a Library, 3 vols. (London, Smith, 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1899), 4 vols. (1907)
- Swinburne, A. C. "A Century of English Poetry," Miscellaneous (London, Chatto, 1886, 1911, New York, Scribner)
- Thackeray, F. S. "Is the Present Neglect of Pope Merited?" The Nineteenth Century, Oct., 1913 (74 805)
- Thackeray, W. M. Lectures on the English Humorists of the Eighteenth Century (1853), London, Smith, 1875, 1888, New York, Holt, 1900).
- Tupper, J. W. "A Study of Pope's Imitations of Horace," Publications of the Modern Language Association, June, 1900 (n. s. 8 181)

CONCORDANCE

- Abbott, E. A Concordance to the Works of Alexander Pope (London, Chapman, 1875, New York, Appleton)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Thomas, W. J. "Bibliography of the Literature Connected with Pope and His Quarrels," Notes and Queries, Series 5, Vol. 12

CRITICAL NOTES

- See selection from Warton's Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope, p. 85; Johnson's Pope, p. 1185; Coleridge's comment on Pope, p. 1270b; and Hunt's Preface to Rimini, p. 1276b.

1175.

WINDSOR FOREST

Windsor Forest is near the town of Windsor, in Berkshire, the seat of the famous royal residence Windsor Castle, founded by William the Conqueror 1176.

AN ESSAY ON CRITICISM

In this Essay, Pope presents in concise form the accepted rules of poetic composition as they had been formulated in the works of the ancients and of Italian, French, and English critics of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Cf. especially Horace's Ars Poetica, Vida's De Arte Poetica, and Boileau's L'Art Poétique, all of which are founded on Aristotle's Poetics

The importance of Pope's poem lies in the skill with which these rules are presented.

1178. AN ESSAY ON MAN

This is a treatise in four Epistles on the moral order of the universe. For much of the thought Pope was indebted to Henry St John, Lord Bolingbroke, a contemporary politician and philosopher, to whom the poem is addressed. The poem should be compared with Bolingbroke's Fragments, 48-63. Bolingbroke belonged to the school of Deistic philosophers, who discredited revelation, and endeavored to construct a religion solely by the light of reason.

Pope's reasons for treating his subject in verse rather than in prose are thus set forth in his Preface: "If I could flatter myself that this essay has any merit, it is in steering betwixt the extremes of doctrines seemingly opposite, in passing over terms utterly unintelligible, and in forming a temperate yet not inconsistent, and a short yet not imperfect, system of ethics. This I might have done in prose, but I chose verse, and even rhyme, for two reasons. The one will appear obvious, that principles, maxims, or precepts so written both strike the reader more strongly at first, and are more easily retained by him afterwards. The other may seem odd, but is true. I found I could express them more shortly this way than in prose itself, and nothing is more certain than that much of the force as well as grace of arguments or instructions depends on their conciseness."

1180. 237-46. The biological idea expressed in these lines is false, evolution, however, predicated just such a chain, but with a difference.

WINTHROP MACKWORTH PRAED (1802-1839), p. 1145

EDITIONS

- Poems*, 2 vols., ed., with a Memoir, by D. Coleridge (London, Moxon, 1864; New York, Wilder, 1865; London, Ward and Lock, 1889).
- Political and Occasional Poems*, ed., with an Introduction, by G. Young (London, Ward and Lock, 1889).
- Selections*, ed. by G. Young (London, Moxon, 1866).
- Poems*, selected, with an Introductory Notice by F. Cooper (Canterbury Poets ed. London, Scott, 1888).
- Poems*, selection, ed., with an Introduction, by F. Greenslet (Boston, Houghton, 1909).
- Selected Poems*, ed., with an Introduction, by A. D. Godley (London, Frowde, 1909).
- Essays*, ed., with an Introduction by H. Morley, by G. Young (London, Routledge, 1887).

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

- Dennett, J. R. The Nation, July 13, 1865 (1.52).
- Hewlett, H. G. "Poets of Society," The Contemporary Review, July, 1872 (20.238).
- Kranpa, M. "W. M. Praed, sein Leben und seine Werke," Weinert Beiträge, 1910 (32).

Saintsbury, G. Essays in English Literature, 1780-1860, First Series (London, Percival, 1890; New York, Scribner).

Smith, G. B. "English Fugitive Poets," Poets and Novellists (London, Smith, 1876).

Whitmore, W. H. "Praed and His Poems," The North American Review, Oct., 1859 (89.536).

CRITICAL NOTES

Praed is best known as a writer of social satire and vers de société, and among writers of such verse he has never been equalled. Austin Dobson says of him (Miles's The Poets and the Poetry of the Century (1889)) "In case of wit and humor, in spontaneity and unflagging vivacity of rhythm, in sparkle of banter and felicity of rhyme, no imitator, whom we can recall, has ever come within measurable distance of Winthrop Mackworth Praed."

1145. SPIRITS, THAT WALK AND WAIL TONIGHT

This song is found in Canto 1 of The Troubadour. It is sung by the troubadour in response to a request for a song of witchery.

OH FLY WITH ME 'TIS PASSION'S HOUR

This song is found in Canto 2 of The Troubadour. It is sung by the troubadour beneath his sweetheart's window in a convent.

1146. OUR BALL

This is one of two "letters" written from Teignmouth, a fashionable watering place in Devonshire, England. The places mentioned in the poem belong to the vicinity.

1149. STANZAS

1150. 14. Move to abolish the sun and moon—Cobbett was a member of the House of Commons who was known for his virulent attacks upon all sorts of institutions and measures. James Sayers (1748-1823), the caricaturist, thus characterizes him:

Mr Cobbett ask'd leave to bring in very soon
A Bill to abolish the Sun and the Moon.
The Honorable Member proceeded to state
Some arguments, used in a former debate,
On the subject of sinecures, taxes, vexations,
The Army and Navy, and old Corporations—
The Heavenly Bodies, like those upon Earth, Had, he said, been corrupt from the day of their birth.

With reckless profusion expending their light,
One after another, by day and by night
And what class enjoy'd it?—The upper alone—
Upon such they had always exclusively shone.

These abuses must cease—they had lasted too long—
Was there anything right? was not everything wrong?

The Crown was too costly,—the Church was a curse,—
Old Parliament's bad, Reform'd Parliament's worse,—

All revenues ill-manag'd,—all wants ill-provided,— Equality,—Liberty,—Justice, divided —Quoted from Melville's The Life and Letters of William Cobbett (1918).

BRYAN WALLER PROCTER
(1787-1874), p. 1168

EDITIONS

- English Songs and Lyrics* (1844, London, Bell, 1870).
An Autobiographical Fragment and Biographical Notes, ed by C. Patmore (London, Bell, 1877)

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

- Becker, F "B. W. Procter," Wiener Beiträge, 1911 (37).
Fields, J T "Barry Cornwall and Some of his Friends," Yesterdays with Authors (Boston, Houghton, 1871, 1880).
Hewlett, H G The Nineteenth Century, Oct, 1878 (4 648).
Patmore, P. G My Friends and Acquaintance, 3 vols (New York, Saunders, 1854)
Simcox, G A The Fortnightly Review, May, 1877 (27 708)
Stedman, E C "A Representative Triad, Hood, Arnold, Procter" Scribner's Monthly, Feb, 1874 (7 468)
Stedman, E C Victorian Poets (Boston, Houghton, 1875, 1884)
Symons, A The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909, New York, Dutton).
Whipple E P "English Poets of the Nineteenth Century," Essays and Reviews, 2 vols (Boston, Osgood, 1840, 1878).
Whipple, E. P.: Recollections of Eminent Men (Boston, Houghton, 1886)

CRITICAL NOTES

"There never was a poet more honest in the expression of his nature His songs are the reflections of all moods of his mind, and he cares not if the sentiment of one contradicts that of another In grief, or love, or fear, or despair, at the festive board, or the bed of sickness, wherever and whenever the spirit of song comes to him, it takes the color of the emotion which animates or saddens the moment He is a large-hearted and most lovable man, and his poetry is admired because it is the expression of his character"—E P. Whipple, in Essays and Reviews (1845)

1168. 24. I was born on the open sea—Procter was born at Leeds, a large inland city in the western part of Yorkshaire

25-30. Cf with Glendower's account of his birth in 1 Henry IV, III, 1, 18-16

At my nativity
The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes,
Of burning cressets, and at my birth
The frame and huge foundation of the earth
Shak'd like a coward

ALLAN RAMSAY (1686-1758), p. 7

EDITIONS

- Poetical Works*, 2 vols., ed, with a Memoir, by C Mackay (London, Virtue, 1870)
Works, 2 vols, with a Life, (Paisley, Gardner, 1877).

Poems, selections, ed., with a Biographical Introduction, by J. L. Robertson (Canterbury Poets ed. London, Scott, 1887).

The Evergreen, 2 vols, ed by A. Ramsay (Edinburgh, 1724)

The Gentle Shepherd (London, Black, 1875)

The Gentle Shepherd (London, Simpkin, 1891)

The Tea-Table Miscellany, ed by A Ramsay, 3 vols (Edinburgh, 1724-27); 4 vols in 1 (London, 1750)

BIOGRAPHY

- Smeaton, O. Allan Ramsay (Famous Scots Series Edinburgh, Oliphant, 1896)

CRITICISM

- Eyre-Todd, G Scottish Poetry of the Eighteenth Century, 2 vols (Glasgow, Hodge, 1896).
Masson, D Edinburgh Sketches and Memories (London, Black, 1892, New York, Macmillan)
Minto, W In Ward's The English Poets, Vol 3 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1909).
Shairp, J C "Return to Nature Begun by Allan Ramsay and Thomson," On Poetic Interpretation of Nature (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1877, New York, Hurd, 1878, Boston, Houghton, 1885)
Walker, H Three Centuries of Scottish Literature, 2 vols (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1893, New York, Macmillan)
Wilson, J G The Poets and Poetry of Scotland, 2 vols (Glasgow, Blackie, 1876, New York, Harper)

CRITICAL NOTES

MY PEGGY

7.

This poem was first published as part of Patie and Peggy, later made the first scene of Act I of The Gentle Shepherd

9.

THE GENTLE SHEPHERD

"I spoke of Allan Ramsay's Gentle Shepherd, in the Scottish dialect, as the best pastoral that had ever been written, not only abounding with beautiful rural imagery, and just and pleasing sentiments, but being a real picture of the manners, and I offered to teach Dr Johnson to understand it 'No sir,' said he; 'I won't learn it You shall retain your superiority by my not knowing it'"—Boswell, in The Life of Samuel Johnson (1778)

Patie and Peggy are conventional names in Scottish pastoral poetry

11.

THE EVERGREEN

This was "a collection of Scots poems, wrote by the ingenious before 1600" It was compiled to arouse interest in old English poetry It contained popular songs and ballads, new as well as old

SAMUEL ROGERS (1763-1855), p. 207

EDITIONS

Poetical Works, ed., with a Memoir, by E. Bell (Aldine ed. London, Bell, 1856, 1892; New York, Macmillan)

Poems (London, Routledge, 1890)

Reminiscences and Table-Talk, collected by G. H. Powell (London, Johnson, 1903)

BIOGRAPHY

Clayden, F. W. Rogers and his Contemporaries, 2 vols. (London, Smith, 1889)

Roberts, R. E. Samuel Rogers and his Circle (London, Methuen, 1910, New York, Dutton)

CRITICISM

Edinburgh Review, The "Poems," Oct., 1813 (22-32)

Hayward, A. The Edinburgh Review, July, 1856 (104-88), Biographical and Critical Essays, 2 vols. (London, Longmans, 1858)

Jeffrey, F. "Human Life," The Edinburgh Review, March, 1819 (31-325)

Patmore, P. G. My Friends and Acquaintance, 3 vols. (New York, Saunders, 1854)

Quarterly Review, The "Poems," March, 1813 (9-207)

Symonds, A. The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909, New York, Dutton)

CRITICAL NOTES

"Rogers's title to a place among the representatives of the most brilliant age—the drama apart—of English poetry cannot now be challenged, but his rank is lower than that of any of his contemporaries, and his position is due in great measure to two fortunate accidents—the establishment of his reputation before the advent, or at least the recognition, of more potent spirits, and the intimate association of his name with that of greater men. He has, however, one peculiar distinction, that of exemplifying beyond almost any other poet what a moderate poetical endowment can effect when prompted by ardent ambition and guided by refined taste. Among the countless examples of splendid gifts marred or wasted, it is pleasing to find one of mediocrity elevated to something like distinction by fastidious care and severe toil. It must also be allowed that his inspiration was genuine as far as it went, and that it emanated from a store of sweetness and tenderness actually existing in the poet's nature."—R. Garnett, in the Dictionary of National Biography (1897)

207. THE PLEASURES OF MEMORY

"The Pleasures of Memory is an excellent specimen of what Wordsworth calls 'the accomplishment of verse' and it was well worthy to attract attention and admiration at the time when it appeared, for at that time poetry, with few exceptions, was to be distinguished from prose by versification and little else. The Pleasures of Memory is an essay in verse, not wanting in tender sentiment and just reflection, expressed, graceful no doubt, but with a formal and elaborate grace, and in studiously pointed and carefully poised diction such as the heroic couplet had been trained to assume since the days of Pope"—Sir Henry Taylor in Ward's The English Poets, Vol. 4 (1880).

With regard to title and subject, cf. this poem with Akenaide's The Pleasures of the Imagination (p. 44), Warton's The Pleasures of Melancholy (p. 75), and Campbell's The Pleasures of Hope (p. 417)

209. WRITTEN IN THE HIGHLANDS OF SCOTLAND

24. Another flood—Loch Long, a narrow bay west of the county of Dumfries, Scotland

AN INSCRIPTION IN THE CRIMEA

210. 9. To see his face no more—"There is a beautiful story, delivered down to us from antiquity, which will here perhaps occur to the reader

"Icarus, when he gave Penelope in marriage to Ulysses, endeavored to persuade him to dwell in Lacedaemon, and, when all he urged was to no purpose, he entreated his daughter to remain with him. When Ulysses set out with his bride for Ithaca, the old man followed the chariot, till, overcome by his importunity, Ulysses consented that it should be left to Penelope to decide whether she would proceed with him or return with her father. It is related, says Pausanias, that she made no reply, but that she covered herself with her veil, and that Icarus, perceiving at once by it that she inclined to Ulysses, suffered her to depart with him.

"A statue was afterwards placed by her father as a memorial in that part of the road where she had covered herself with her veil. It was still standing there in the days of Pausanias, and was called the statue of Modesty"—Rogers's note

THE BOY OF EGREMOND

"In the twelfth century William Fitz-Duncan laid waste the valleys of Craven with fire and sword, and was afterwards established there by his uncle, David, King of Scotland. He was the last of the race, his son, commonly called the Boy of Egremont, dying before him in the manner here related, when a Priory was removed from Embsay to Bolton, that it might be as near as possible to the place where the accident happened. That place is still known by the name of the Strid, and the mother's answer, as given in the first stanza, is to this day, often repeated in Wharfedale."—Rogers's note

The places mentioned above are in the western part of Yorkshire, England 211.

THE GONDOLA

212. 30. Lay of love—"La Blondina in Gondolletta."—Rogers's note

41. Grass-grown.—"When a despot lays his hand on a free city, how soon must he make the discovery of the rustic who bought Punch of the puppet-show man, and complained that he would not speak!"—Rogers's note

50-52. "For this thought I am indebted to some unpublished travels by the author of Vathek."—Rogers's note.

67. Tancred and Erminia.—"Goldoni, describing his excursion with the Passalacqua, has left us a lively picture of this class of men 'We were no sooner in the middle of that great lagoon which encircles the city than our discreet gondoller drew the curtain behind us, and let us float at the will of the waves. At length night came on, and we could not tell where we were. "What is the hour?" said I to the gondoller—"I cannot guess, sir, but, if I am not mistaken, it is the lover's hour"—"Let us go home," I replied, and he turned the prow homeward, singing, as he rowed, the twenty-ninth strophe of the sixteenth canto of the Jerusalem Delivered.'" Carlo Goldoni (1707-93) was a noted Italian dramatist

90. Bianca.—"Bianca Capello. It had been shut, if we may believe the novelist Malespini, by a baker's boy, as he passed by at daybreak, and in her despair she fled with her lover to Florence where he fell by assassination. Her beauty, and her love adventure as here related, her marriage afterwards with the grand duke, and that fatal banquet at which they were both poisoned by the cardinal, his brother, have rendered her history a romance"—Rogers's note. Bianca Capello was a noted Italian adventuress of the 16th century. She eloped with Buonaventuri in 1563, and married Francesco, grand duke of Tuscany, in 1578.

§

SIR WALTER SCOTT (1771-1832), p. 433

EDITIONS

Poetical Works, with a Biographical and Critical Memoir, by F. T. Palgrave (Globe ed. London and New York, Macmillan, 1886, 1907)

Poetical Works, with a Critical Memoir by W. M. Rossetti (London, Moxon, 1870)

Poetical Works, 2 vols., ed. with a Prefatory Notice, Biographical and Critical, by W. Sharp (London, Scott, 1885-86)

Poetical Works, 2 vols., ed. by W. Minto (London, Black, 1887-88, 1891-92)

Poetical Works, ed. by W. J. Rolfe (Boston, Houghton, 1888)

Poems, 5 vols., ed. by J. Dennis (Aldine ed. London, Bell, 1892, New York, Macmillan)

Poetical Works, 4 vols., with the Author's Introductions and Notes, and the Annotations of J. G. Lockhart (Edinburgh, Oliphant, 1898, Philadelphia, Lippincott, 1900)

Complete Poetical Works, ed., with a Biographical Sketch, by H. E. Scudder (Cambridge ed. Boston, Houghton, 1900)

Complete Poetical Works, 6 vols., ed., with Introductions, by A. Lang (Boston, Estes, 1902); 1 vol. (London, Nimmo, 1905)

Poetical Works, ed. by J. L. Robertson (Oxford Univ. Press, 1904, 1913)

Waverley Novels, 12 vols. (Abbotsford ed. Edinburgh, Black, 1842-47)

Waverley Novels, 25 vols. (Centenary ed. Edinburgh, Black, 1870-71)

Waverley Novels, 25 vols. (Oxford Univ. Press, 1912)

Miscellaneous Prose Works, 30 vols. (Edinburgh, Cadell, 1834-71, Black, 1870-82)

Journal, 1825-32, 2 vols., ed. by D. Douglas (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1890, New York, Harper, 1890, 1900)

Familiar Letters, 2 vols., ed. by D. Douglas (Edinburgh, Simpkin, 1893, Boston, Houghton, 1894)

Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, 4 vols., ed. by T. F. Henderson (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1902), 1 vol., with an Introduction by A. Noyes (Edinburgh, Melrose, 1908, New York, Stokes, 1913)

BIOGRAPHY

Crockett, W. S. Footsteps of Scott (New York, Jacobs, 1908, Boston, Phillips, 1914)

Crockett, W. S. The Scott Country (Edinburgh, Black, 1902, 1911, New York, Macmillan)

Findlay, J. P. Sir Walter Scott, the Great Unknown (London, Nimmo, 1911)

Gillman, G. Life of Sir Walter Scott (Edinburgh, Hamilton, 1870, 1871)

Hudson, W. H. Sir Walter Scott (London, Sands, 1901)

Hutton, R. H. Sir Walter Scott (English Men of Letters Series. London, Macmillan, 1878, 1896, New York, Harper)

Irving, W. Abbotsford and Newstead Abbey (Bohn's Library ed. London, Bell, 1850)

Lang, A. Sir Walter Scott (Literary Lives Series. London, Hodder, 1906, New York, Scribner)

Lockhart, J. G. Memoirs of the Life of Sir Walter Scott, Baronet, 10 vols. (Edinburgh, 1839), 3 vols. (Boston, Houghton, 1881). Abridged ed., 1 vol. (New York, Crowell, 1871, London, Black, 1880, Boston, Houghton, 1901)

MacCunn, F. A. Sir Walter Scott's Friends (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1909, New York, Lane, 1910).

Napier, G. G. Homes and Haunts of Scott (London, Macmillan, 1907)

Norgate, G. Le G. Life of Sir Walter Scott (London, Methuen, 1906)

Olcott, C. S. The Country of Sir Walter Scott (London, Cassell, 1913, Boston, Houghton)

Olcott, C. S. "The Courtship of Sir Walter Scott," The Bookman, Jan., 1912 (34 488)

Olcott, C. S. "The Making of Sir Walter," The Outlook, July 27, 1912 (101 703)

- Saintsbury, G Sir Walter Scott (Famous Scots Series, Edinburgh and London, Oliphant, 1897, New York, Scribner)
- Scott, C. G. and A Letters of Sir Walter Scott's Family to their Governess (London, Richards, 1906)
- Scott, Sir W Journal, and Letters.
- Skene, J Memories of Sir Walter Scott, ed by B. Thomson (London, Murray, 1909)
- Stephen, L "The Story of Scott's Ruin," Studies of a Biographer, 3 vols (London, Duckworth, 1898-1902, New York, Putnam)
- Yonge, C D Life of Sir Walter Scott (Great Writers Series, London, Scott, 1888)
- Hasslitt, W The Spirit of the Age (London, 1825), Collected Works, ed Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure), 4, 241
- Hugo, V Littérature et Philosophie (Paris, 1884).
- Hutton, R H Brief Literary Criticisms (London, Macmillan, 1906).
- Jack, A A Essays on the Novel as Illustrated by Scott and Miss Austen (London, Macmillan, 1897)
- Jeffrey, F Criticisms in The Edinburgh Review "Marmion," April, 1808 (12 1), "The Lady of the Lake," Aug, 1810 (16 203), "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," April, 1805 (6 1), "The Lord of the Isles," Feb, 1815 (24 273), "The Vision of Don Roderick," Aug, 1811 (18 379)

CRITICISM

- Ainger, A. Lectures and Essays, 2 vols. (New York and London, Macmillan, 1905)
- Bagehot, W "The Waverley Novel," The National Review, April, 1854, Literary Studies, 3 vols., ed by R. H. Hutton (London and New York, Longmans, 1878-79, 1895).
- Ball, Margaret Sir Walter Scott as a Critic of Literature (Columbia Univ Press, 1907)
- Beers, H A A History of English Romanticism in the Nineteenth Century (New York, Holt, 1901, 1910)
- Blackwood's Magazine, "Sir Walter Scott, His Friends and Critics," Feb, 1910 (187 187)
- Brandes, G "Historical Naturalism," Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature, Vol. 4 (London, Heinemann, 1905, New York, Macmillan, 1906)
- Brooke, S A Studies in Poetry (New York, Putnam, 1907, London, Duckworth)
- Canning, A S G Sir Walter Scott Studied in Eight Novels (London, Unwin, 1910, New York, Wessels)
- Canning, A S G History in Scott's Novels (London, Unwin, 1905, 1907)
- Carlyle, T The London and Westminster Review (1838), Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, 4 vols (Boston, Houghton, 1880)
- Chesterton, G K "The Position of Sir Walter Scott," Twelve Types (London, Humphreys, 1902, 1910), Varied Types (New York, Doubt, 1903, 1909)
- Crockett, W S The Scott Originals (Edinburgh, Foulis, 1911; New York, Scribner)
- Dawson, W J The Makers of English Poetry (New York and London, Revell, 1906)
- Dawson, W J "The Waverley Novels" and "Scott's Greatness," The Makers of English Fiction (New York and London, Revell, 1905)
- Elliot, Col F Trustworthiness of the Border Ballads (London, Blackwood, 1906)
- Elliot, Col F Further Essays on the Border Ballads (Edinburgh, A. Elliot, 1910)
- Fyfe, W. G Edinburgh under Sir Walter Scott (Edinburgh, Constable, 1906; New York, Dutton)
- Gates, L E Studies and Appreciations (New York, Macmillan, 1900)
- Hay, J "Address at the Unveiling of the Bust of Scott in Westminster Abbey 1897," Addresses (New York, Century, 1906)
- Lang, A Essays in Little (London, Henry, 1891, New York, Scribner)
- Lang, A Letters to Dead Authors (London, Longmans, 1880, 1892, New York, Scribner, 1894)
- Lang, A and J Highways and Byways in the Borders (London, Macmillan, 1913)
- Lang, A Sir Walter Scott and the Border Minstrelsy (London and New York, Longmans, 1910)
- Mable, H W "The Land of Scott," Backgrounds of Literature (New York, Outlook, 1903)
- Mason, D British Novelists and their Styles (London, Macmillan, 1859)
- Morgan, A E Scott and his Poetry (London, Harrap, 1913)
- Omond, T S The Romantic Triumph (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1900, New York, Scribner, 1900, 1909)
- Parr, G "Walter Scott and Joanna Baillie," The Edinburgh Review Oct., 1912, and Jan, 1913 (210 355, 217 170)
- Quarterly Review, The "Rokeby," Dec., 1812 (8 485), "The Lady of the Lake," May, 1810 (3 492), "The Lord of the Isles," July, 1815 (18 289), "The Vision of Don Roderick," Oct., 1811 (6 221)
- Ramsay, H D Literary Associations of the English Lakes, 2 vols (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1894, 1906)
- Rosel, L K Die literarischen und persönlichen Beziehungen Sir Walter Scotts zu Goethe (Leipzig, 1902)
- Ruskin, J Fora Clavigera, Letters 31 34, 92 (1873, 1888, New York, Crowell, 1909)
- Ruskin, J "Of Modern Landscapes," Modern Painters, Part 4, ch 16 (London, Smith, 1856, New York, Crowell, 1909)
- Saintsbury, G "The Historical Novel," Essays in English Literature, 1790-1860, Second Series (London, Dent, 1895, New York, Scribner)
- Seecombe, T "Scott Waverley," The Contemporary Review, July, 1914 (106 26)
- Shairp, J C "The Homeric Spirit in Walter Scott," Aspects of Poetry (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1881, Boston, Houghton)
- Smith, Goldwin In Ward's The English Poets, Vol 4 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1911).

- Stephen, L. "Some Words About Sir Walter Scott," Hours in a Library, 3 vols (London, Smith, 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1899), 4 vols. (1907).
- Stevenson, E. L. "A Gossip on Romance," Memoirs and Portraits (London, Chatto, 1887)
- Swinburne, A. C. "The Journal of Sir Walter Scott," Studies in Prose and Poetry (London, Chatto, 1897)
- Symons, A. "Was Sir Walter Scott a Poet?" The Atlantic Monthly, Nov., 1904 (94 604). The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909, New York, Dutton)
- Vaughan, C. E. The Romantic Revolt (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1900, New York, Scribner, 1907)
- Veitch, J. The History and Poetry of the Scottish Border, 2 vols (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1878)
- Verrall, A. W. Collected Literary Essays (Cambridge, Univ Press, 1913)
- Watt, L. M. Scottish Life and Poetry (London, Nisbet, 1912)
- Williams, A. M. "Scott as a Man of Letters," Englische Studien, 1907 (37)
- Woodberry, G. E. "The Prince of Prose Romancers," Great Writers (New York, McClure, 1907, Macmillan 1912)
- Wyndham, G. Sir Walter Scott (London, Macmillan, 1908)
- Young, C. A. The Waverley Novels (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1907)

KEY, DICTIONARY, AND SYNOPSES

- Grey, H. Key to the Waverley Novels (London, Griffith, 1884, Long 1908, Sonnenschein, 1899, New York, Bowman, 1910)
- Husband, M. F. A. Dictionary of Characters in the Waverley Novels (London, Routledge, 1910, New York, Dutton)
- McSpadden, J. W. Waverley Synopses (New York, Crowell, 1909, 1914)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, J. P. In Yonge's Life of Sir Walter Scott (1888)
- Ball, Margaret. In Sir Walter Scott as a Critic of Literature (Columbia Univ Press, 1907)

CRITICAL NOTES

"The perennial charm of the Waverley Novels resides very largely in their healthfulness. They take us entirely out of ourselves, and absorb us in the world of incident and action. If they are not always great as works of art, they are always great in that health of mind and soul which is elemental in all true living. Men cannot be too grateful for a mass of writing so genuine in tone, so free from morbid tendencies, so true to the fundamental ethics of living."—H. W. Mahle, in My Study Fire, Second Series (1896)

What Mahle says of the novels, applies to Scott's work as a whole

"Scott's is almost the only poetry in the English language that not only runs in the head of average men, but beats the head in which it runs by the mere force of its hurried frankness of style. . . . No poet ever equalled Scott in the description of wild and simple feelings"—R. H. Hutton, in Sir Walter Scott (English Men of Letters Series, 1879)

See Wordsworth's Larrow Revisited (p. 312), and On the Departure of Sir Walter Scott from Abbotsford, for Naples (p. 314), also Byron's English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, 153-84 (pp. 487-88) 433.

WILLIAM AND HELEN

Scott's first publication was a translation or imitation of two German ballads written by G. A. Bürger (1748-94), a noted German poet. One of these was Lenore (1774), the basis of Scott's William and Helen. Scott gives in a note the following account of how he became acquainted with Lenore: "A lady of high rank in the literary world read this romantic tale, as translated by Mr. Taylor, in the house of the celebrated Professor Dugald Stewart, of Edinburgh. The author was not present, nor indeed in Edinburgh at the time, but a gentleman who had the pleasure of hearing the ballad, afterwards told him the story, and repeated the remarkable chorus—

"Tramp, tramp, across the land they speede,
Mplash, splash, across the sea,
Hurrah, the dead can ride apace!
Dost fear to ride with me?"

"In attempting a translation, then intended only to circulate among friends, the present author did not hesitate to make use of this impressive stanza, for which freedom he has since obtained the forgiveness of the ingenious gentleman to whom it properly belongs."

The lady referred to was Mrs. Anna Letitia Barbauld (1748-1825). Mr. Taylor was William Taylor of Norwich (1765-1886)

436.

THE VIOLET

This is usually regarded as one of the most beautiful and delicate of Scott's poems. It refers to his love, never directly expressed, for Williamina Stuart. The poem was written immediately after it became evident that his hopes were in vain. Miss Stuart, who married Sir William Forbes, died in 1810. Seventeen years later Scott wrote in his Journal (Nov. 7 and 10, 1827), after a visit to Miss Stuart's aged mother: "I went to make another visit, and fairly softened myself like an old fool, with recalling old stories till I was fit for nothing but shedding tears and repeating verses for the whole night. This is sad work. The very grave gives up its dead, and time rolls back thirty years to add to my perplexities. I don't care. I begin to grow over-hardened and, like a stag turning at bay, my naturally good temper grows fierce and dangerous. Yet what a romance to tell, and told I fear it will one day be. And then my three years of dreaming and my two years of wakening will be chronicled doubtless. But the dead will feel no pain . . . At twelve o'clock I went to poor lady J. S. to talk over old stories. I am not clear that it is right or healthful indulgence to be ripping up old sorrows, but it seems to give her deep-seated sorrow words, and that is a mental blood-letting. To me these things are now matter of calm and solemn recollection, never to be forgotten, yet scarce to be remembered with pain."

For a full account of the story, see Lockhart's Life of Scott, ch. 8, and Miss F. M. F. Skene's "Sir Walter Scott's First Love," The Century Magazine, July, 1899 (58 368).

GLENFINLAS

This ballad was first published in Monk Lewis's Tales of Wonder. The following account of the ballad was there given by Scott in a preface: "The simple tradition upon which this ballad is founded runs thus: While two Highland hunters were passing the night in a solitary bothy (a hut built for the purpose of hunting) and making merry over their venison and whisky, one of them expressed a wish that they had pretty ladies to complete their party. The words were scarcely uttered, when two beautiful young women, habited in green, entered the hut, dancing and singing. One of the hunters was seduced by the siren who attached herself particularly to him, to leave the hut. The other remained, and, suspicious of the fair seducers, continued to play upon a trumpet, or Jew's harp, some strain, consecrated to the Virgin Mary. Day at length came, and the temptress vanished. Searching in the forest, he found the bones of his unfortunate friend, who had been torn to pieces and devoured by the fiend into whose toils he had fallen. The place was from thence called the Glen of the Green Women."

'Glenfinlas is a tract of forest-ground, lying in the Highlands of Perthshire, not far from Callender in Menteith. It was formerly a royal forest, and now belongs to the Earl of Moray. This country, as well as the adjacent district of Balquidder, was, in times of yore, chiefly inhabited by the Macgregors. To the west of the Forest of Glenfinlas lies Loch Katrine, and its romantic avenue, called the Troshachs. Benledi, Benmore, and Benvoirlich, are mountains in the same district, and at no great distance from Glenfinlas. The River Teith passes Callender and the Castle of Doune, and joins the Forth near Stirling. The Pass of Lenny is immediately above Callender, and is the principal access to the Highlands from that town. Glenartney is a forest, near Benvoirlich. The whole forms a sublime tract of Alpine scenery."

Border. Scott gives the following historical basis for the ballad:

"The ruins of Cadyow, or Cadsow Castle, the ancient baronial residence of the family of Hamilton, are situated upon the precipitous banks of the River Ewan, about two miles above its junction with the Clyde. It was dismantled, in the conclusion of the Civil Wars, during the reign of the unfortunate Mary, to whose cause the house of Hamilton devoted themselves with a generous zeal, which occasioned their temporary obscurity, and, very nearly, their total ruin. The situation of the ruins, embosomed in wood, darkened by ivy and creeping shrubs, and overhanging the brawling torrent, is romantic in the highest degree. In the immediate vicinity of Cadyow is a grove of immense oaks, the remains of the Caledonian Forest, which anciently extended through the south of Scotland, from the eastern to the Atlantic Ocean. Some of these trees measure twenty-five feet and upwards in circumference, and the state of decay in which they now appear shows that they have witnessed the rites of the Druids. The whole scenery is included in the magnificent and extensive park of the Duke of Hamilton."

"In detailing the death of the Regent Murray, which is made the subject of the ballad, it would be injustice to my reader to use other words than those of Dr Robertson, whose account of that memorable event forms a beautiful piece of historical painting."

"Hamilton of Bothwellhaugh was the person who committed this barbarous action. He had been condemned to death soon after the battle of Langside, as we have already related, and owed his life to the Regent's clemency. But part of his estate had been bestowed upon one of the Regent's favorites, who seized his house, and turned out his wife, naked, in a cold night, into the open fields, where, before next morning, she became furiously mad. This injury made a deeper impression on him than the benefit he had received, and from that moment he vowed to be revenged of the Regent. Party rage strengthened and inflamed his private resentment. His kinsmen, the Hamiltons, applauded the enterprise. The maxims of that age justified the most desperate course he could take to obtain vengeance. He followed the Regent for some time, and watched for an opportunity to strike the blow. He resolved at last to wait till his enemy should arrive at Linlithgow, through which he was to pass in his way from Stirling to Edinburgh. He took his stand in a wooden gallery, which had a window towards the street, spread a feather-bed on the floor to hinder the noise of his feet from being heard, hung up a black cloth behind him, that his shadow might not be observed from without, and, after all this preparation, calmly expected the Regent's approach, who had lodged, during the night, in a house not far distant. Some indistinct information of the danger which threatened him had been conveyed to the Regent, and he paid so much regard to it, that he resolved to return by the same gate through which he had entered, and to fetch a compass round the town. But, as the crowd about the gate was great, and he himself unacquainted with fear, he proceeded directly along the street, and the throng of people obliging him to move very slowly, gave the assassin time to take so true an aim, that he shot him, with a single bullet, through the lower part of his belly, and killed the horse of a gentleman who rode on his other side. His followers instantly endeavored to break into the house whence the blow had come; but they found the door strongly barricaded, and, before it could be forced open, Hamilton had mounted a fleet horse, which stood ready for him at a back passage, and was got far beyond their reach. The Regent died the same night [Jan 23, 1569] of his wound."—History of Scotland, Book v

This ballad was included in the third volume of Scott's The Minstrelsy of the Scottish

440. 45. The Chief—"The head of the family of Hamilton, at this period, was James, Earl of Arran, Duke of Châtellerauld in France, and first peer of the Scottish realm. In 1569 he was appointed by Queen Mary her lieutenant-general in Scotland"—Scott's note

441. 141. Dark Minton—"He was concerned in the murder of David Rizzio, and at least privy to that of Darnley"—Scott's note. Rizzio (d 1566) was secretary to Mary Queen of Scots. Lord Darnley (d 1567) was Mary's second husband

THE MINSTRELSY OF THE SCOTTISH BORDER

This was a collection of ballads and songs which Scott gathered together with help of friends, and published in three volumes, 1802-03. It contained, besides genuine ballads, a number of pieces which were the work, in part or entirely, of Scott

KINMONT WILLIE

"This ballad is preserved by tradition in the West Borders, but much mangled by reciters, so that some conjectural emendations have been absolutely necessary to render it intelligible"—Scott's note. It is believed that most of this ballad is the work of Scott. If that is so, the ballad is perhaps the one example of a completely successful imitation of the genuine ballads. The ballad which may have furnished the basis for Kinmont Willie is Jock o' the Side. See Child's English and Scottish Popular Ballads, 8, 475

The ballad is based upon a Border incident of 1596. Kinmont Willie, or William Armstrong, of Kinmouth, near the southern border of Scotland, was captured for freebooting by the English and shut up in Carlisle Castle, under the wardenship of Lord Scroop and his deputy Sakeld. Failing to secure the release of Armstrong, Sir Walter Scott of Branksholm, Lord of Buccleugh, led a troop of horsemen to the Castle, surprised the watchmen, set the prisoner free, and escaped across the River Eden

444

LORD RANDAL

This is a genuine ballad, versions of which are widely distributed throughout Europe. See the account of it in Child's The English and Scottish Popular Ballads, 1, 151 ff.

THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL

In the Preface to the first edition, Scott states that the poem was intended "to illustrate the customs and manners which anciently prevailed on the Borders of Scotland and England. The inhabitants living in a state partly pastoral and partly warlike, and combining habits of constant depredation with the influence of a rude spirit of chivalry, were often engaged in scenes highly susceptible of poetical ornament. As the description of scenery and manners was more the object of the author than a combined and regular narrative, the plan of the ancient metrical romance was adopted, which allows greater latitude, in this respect than would be consistent with the dignity of a regular poem.

For these reasons, the poem was put into the mouth of an ancient minstrel, the last of the race, who, as he is supposed to have survived the Revolution, might have caught somewhat of the refinement of modern poetry, without losing the simplicity of his original model. The date of the tale itself is about the middle of the sixteenth century, when most of the persons actually flourished."

The poem is written in honor of Lady Dalkeith (afterwards Duchess of Buccleugh), of Branksome Hall on the River Teviot in Roxburghshire. She suggested to Scott that he write a ballad on the legend of the goblin page, Gilpin Horner, and this poem was the result. It is sung by the minstrel in the presence of the Duchess and her ladies

See Byron's English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, 150-64 (p 487)

445.

HAROLD

This song is sometimes entitled The Lay of Rosabelle. The poem is supposed to be sung, after the espousal of Margaret of Buccleuch to Lord Cranstoun, by Harold, the minstrel of the house of St. Clair. It tells of the death of Rosabelle as she was returning from Ravenshoeuch Castle to Roslin, the family seat of the St. Clairs, in Edinburghshire, Scotland 446.

THE MAID OF NEIDPATH

The following explanatory note is prefixed to this poem in the Cambridge edition of Scott's Poetical Works:—"There is a tradition in Tweeddale," says Scott, "that, when Neidpath Castle, near Peebles, was inhabited by the Earls of March, a mutual passion subsisted between a daughter of that noble family and a son of the Laird of Tushielaw, in Ettrick Forest. As the alliance was thought unsuitable by her parents, the young man went abroad. During his absence the lady fell into a consumption, and at length, as the only means of saving her life, her father consented that her lover should be recalled. On the day when he was expected to pass through Peebles, on the road to Tushielaw, the young lady, though much exhausted, caused herself to be carried to the balcony of a house in Peebles belonging to the family, that she might see him as he rode past. Her anxiety and eagerness gave such force to her organs that she is said to have distinguished the horse's footsteps at an incredible distance. But Tushielaw, unprepared for the change in her appearance, and not expecting to see her in that place, rode on without recognising her, or even slackening his pace. The lady was unable to support the shock, and, after a short struggle, died in the arms of her attendants. Published in 1806, in Haydn's Collection of Scottish Airs.

HUNTING SONG

This song is found in Scott's continuation of Strutt's Queenhoo-Hall printed in the Appendix to the General Preface to Waverley. The song is sung by three minstrels preparatory to a hunting expedition.

WHERE SHALL THE LOVER REST

This song is found in Canto 3 of Marmion, lines 148-53. It is sung by the youth Fitz-Eustace, in response to a request from Marmion, "To speed the lingering night away." It is thus introduced:

A mellow voice Fitz-Eustace had,
The air he chose was wild and sad,
Such have I heard in Scottish land,
Rise from the busy harvest band
When falls before the mountaineer
On Lowland plains the ripened ear:
Now one shrill voice the notes prolong,
Now a wild chorus swells the song
Oft have I listened and stood still
As it came softened up the hill,
And deemed it the lament of men
Who languished for their native glen,
And thought how sad would be such sound
On Susquehanna's swampy ground,
Kentucky's wood-encumbered brake,
Or wild Ontario's boundless lake,
Where heart-sick exiles in the strain
Recalled fair Scotland's hills again.

447.

LOCHINVAR

This familiar ballad is found in Canto 5 of Marmion, lines 313-60. It is sung by Lady Heron, who has come to the court of King James of Scotland to make peace between him and her husband, who was held prisoner because of alleged connection with the death of Sir Robert Kerr, Warden of the Middle Marches. James's defeat at Flodden is by some historians imputed to his infatuation for Lady Heron.

The ballad is based on the ballad Katharine Jaffray, first published by Scott, under the title of The Laird of Lamington, in The Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, 1802. The names in the ballad are traditional.

448.

THE LADY OF THE LAKE

"The scene of the following poem is laid chiefly in the vicinity of Loch Katrine, in the Western Highlands of Perthshire. The time of action includes six days, and the transactions of each day occupy a canto"—Scott's prefatory Argument.

Scott gives the following account of the poem in the Introduction prefixed to the edition of 1830: "After the success of Marmion, I felt inclined to exclaim with Ulysses in the Odyssey—

Οὗτος μὲν δὴ θεῶτος δάατος ἐκτελέεσθαι
Νῦν αὖτε σκορὸν ἄλλον.—Odys. XXII, 5.

'One venturous game my hand has won to-day—
Another, gallants, yet remains to play.'

"The ancient manners, the habits, and customs of the aboriginal race by whom the Highlands of Scotland were inhabited, had always appeared to me peculiarly adapted to poetry. The change in their manners, too, had taken place almost within my own time, or at least I had learned many particulars concerning the ancient state of the Highlands from the old men of the last generation. I had always thought the old Scottish Gael highly adapted for poetical composition. The feuds, and political discussions, which, half a century earlier, would have rendered the richer and wealthier part of the kingdom indisposed to countenance a poem, the scene of which was laid in the Highlands, were now sunk in the generous compassion which the English, more than any other nation, feel for the misfortunes of an honorable foe. The poems of Ossian had, by their popularity, sufficiently shown, that if writings on Highland subjects were qualified to interest the reader, mere national prejudices were, in the present day, very unlikely to interfere with their success.

"I had also read a great deal, seen much, and heard more, of that romantic country, where I was in the habit of spending some time every autumn, and the scenery of Loch Katrine was connected with the recollection of many a dear friend and merry expedition of former days. This poem, the action of which lay among scenes so beautiful, and so deeply imprinted on my recollection, was a labor of love; and it was no less so to recall the manners and incidents introduced. The frequent custom of James IV., and particularly of James V., to walk through their kingdom in disguise, afforded me the hint of an incident, which never fails to be interesting, if managed with the slightest address or dexterity."

453. 585. Though all unask'd his birth and name—"The Highlanders, who carried hospitality to a punctilious excess, are said to have considered it as churlish, to ask a stranger his name or lineage, before he had taken refreshment. Feuds were so frequent among them, that a contrary rule would in many cases have produced the discovery of some circumstance which might have excluded the guest from the benefit of the assistance he stood in need of"—Scott's note

455. BOAT SONG

This song (lines 899-938 of Canto 2) is sung by a group of boatmen as they bring their chieftain to shore

456. CORONACH

This song (lines 370-93 of Canto 3) is sung by a group of village maids and matrons as a lament over Duncan, their dead leader

CANTO VI

Summary of Cantos II-V. Shortly after the departure of James Fitz James the next morning Roderick Dhu, one of the proudest of Highland chieftains, returns with his clansmen from a foray on the Lowlands. At the same time, Douglas, who has been sheltered by his nephew, Roderick, from the King's hatred, returns from hunting, bringing with him young Malcolm Graeme, Ellen's lover. That night Roderick suggests that Douglas give him Ellen to wed, and that they join forces against the King. Douglas, knowing Ellen's love for Malcolm, refuses to join Roderick against the King. Malcolm leaves, hoping to secure protection for Douglas.

All the next day, Roderick's messenger rides through the Highlands, rousing the men to arms. The day following, James Fitz James again discovers Ellen, this time in hiding with old Allan, and he proposes to carry her to the court as his wife. Upon her refusal, he gives her a ring, which he says will secure for her any boon that she may ask from the King. On the fifth day, James meets with Roderick in single combat and overcomes him. A little later, Douglas, who has been performing feats of strength at the court, arouses the anger of the King and is thrown into prison.

460. BATTLE OF BEAL' AN DUINE

"A skirmish actually took place at a pass thus called in the Trossachs, and closed with the remarkable incident mentioned in the text. It was greatly posterior in date to the reign of James V"—Scott's note "Beal' an Duine" means "The pass of the man."

384-91. Cf the following lines from the Anglo-Saxon poem The Fight at Finnsburg, describing the approach of an armed troop: "This is not day that dawns from the east, nor here flies the dragon, nor here burns the gables of this hall, but hither come bearing a hostile band its bright battle gear, fowls sing, the gray-coated one [the wolf] howls, the war-wood resounds, shield answers shaft."

464. BRIGNALL BANKS

This song is found in Canto 8 of Robbery, lines 394-453. It is sung in a scene of revel by a youth, Edmund of Winston.

"as the aptest mate
For jovial song and merry feat."

The song is sung after Edmund dreams of early scenes and incidents in his own life. Brignall was the name of an estate along the Greta River, in Yorkshire. Edmund sings also the next song, Allen a Dale, lines 718-47 of the same Canto.

465. ALLEN-A-DALE

The subject of this song was a legendary outlaw minstrel, a companion of Robin Hood in Sherwood Forest.

HIE AWAY, HIE AWAY

This song is found in Chapter 12 of Waverley. It is sung by Davie, a simple-minded youth, to his two large deer greyhounds.

TWIST YE, TWINE YE

This song is found in Chapter 4 of Guy Mannering. It is sung by Meg Merrilies, a gypsy, as she spins the charm of the new born son and heir of her master. The next song, Wasted, Weary, Wherefore Stay, found in Chapter 27, is sung also by Meg Merrilies as a sort of spell or prayer to speed the passage of a dying smuggler.

466. LINES ON THE LIFTING OF THE BANNER OF
THE HOUSE OF BUCCLEUCH

The football match described in this poem took place on Dec. 4, 1815 on the plain of Carterhaugh, near the junction of the Eddrick and Yarrow rivers in Selkirkshire, Scotland. The game was arranged by Scott's friend, the Duke of Buccleuch, between the men of the Vale of Yarrow and the Burghers of Selkirk. The names mentioned in the poem are those of the players and partisans of the two teams. For a full account of the event see Lockhart's Life of Scott, 4, 271 (ch. 36).

14. A stripling's weak hand—This was Scott's eldest son Walter.

467. JOCK OF HAZELDEAN

The first stanza of this poem is old. See Child's English and Scottish Popular Ballads, 5, 159 E.

PIBROCH OF DONUIL DHU

"This is a very ancient pibroch belonging to Clan MacDonald, and supposed to refer to the expedition of Donald Balloch, who, in 1481, launched from the Isles with a considerable force, invaded Lochaber, and at Inverlochy defeated and put to flight the Earls of Mar and Caithness, though at the head of an army superior to his own"—Scott's note

WHY SITT'ST THOU BY THAT RUIN'D HALL?

This song is sometimes entitled Time. It is found in Chapter 10 of The Antiquary Lovel, one of the chief characters in the story, hears it early in the morning as it is sung by a woman in a turret opposite his window

466. AND WHAT THOUGH WINTER WILL PINCH
SEVERN

This song is sometimes entitled Cavalier Song. It is found in Chapter 19 of Old Mortality, where it is sung by a Major Bellenden to his sister after he had been refused a request by Colonel Clahame.

CLARION

This poem stands as the motto to Chapter 34 of Old Mortality. It is one of a number of mottoes, ascribed by Scott to anonymous writers, but really written by himself

"It may be worth noting that it was in correcting the proof-sheets of The Antiquary that Scott first took to equipping his characters with mottoes of his own fabrication. On one occasion he happened to ask John Ballantyne, who was sitting by him, to hunt for a particular passage in Beaumont and Fletcher. John did as he was bidden, but did not succeed in discovering the lines 'Hang it Johnnie' cried Scott 'I believe I can make a motto sooner than you will find one'. He did so accordingly, and from that hour, whenever memory failed to suggest an appropriate epigraph, he had recourse to the inexhaustible mines of 'old play' or 'old ballad' to which we owe some of the most exquisite verse that ever flowed from his pen"—Lockhart, in Life of Scott, ch 27.

THE DREARY CHANGE

"It was while struggling with such languor, on one lovely evening of this autumn [1817], that he composed the following beautiful verses. They mark the very spot of their birth,—namely, the then naked height overhanging the northern side of the Cauldshields Loch, from which Melrose Abbey to the eastward, and the hills of Ettrick and Yarrow to the west, are now visible over a wide range of rich woodland,—all the work of the poet's hand."—Lockhart, in Life of Scott, ch 39

FAREWELL TO THE LAND

This poem stands as the motto to Chapter 30 of Rob Roy. See note on Clarion, above.

PROUD MAISON

This song is found in Chapter 40 of The Heart of Midlothian. It is sung by the insane Madge Wildfire on her death-bed

THE BAREFOOTED FRIAR

This song is found in Chapter 17 of Ivanhoe. It is sung by the friar of Copmanhurst to entertain his guest, the Black Knight 469.

REBECCA'S HYMN

This hymn is found in Chapter 39 of Ivanhoe. It follows this statement "It was in the twilight of the day when her trial, if it could be called such, had taken place, that a low knock was heard at the door of Rebecca's prison-chamber. It disturbed not the inmate, who was then engaged in the evening prayer recommended by her religion, and which concluded with a hymn we have ventured thus to translate into English"

The original of Rebecca was an American Jewess named Rebecca Gratz. The story of her fruitless love for a Christian was told to Scott by Washington Irving at Abbotsford in 1817. See Van Rensselaer's "The Original of Rebecca in Ivanhoe," The Century Magazine, Sept., 1882 (24 679)

BORDER MARCH

This song is found in Chapter 25 of The Monastery. It is sung by a follower of Baron Avenel as he sits over his meal with a small company of Border-riders.

The following interesting parody is by Thomas Love Peacock. It is one of his so-called Paper Money Lyrics.

Thomas of Northumbrian

On the Prohibition of Scotch One-Pound Notes in England
1825 1837

March, march, Make-rags of Borrowdale,¹
Whether ye promise to bearer or order,
March, march, Take-rag and Bawbee tail,²
All the Scotch fimsies must over the Border
Vainly you snarl anent
New Act of Parliament,
Bidding you vanish from dairy and "lauder",³
Lugs, you have had your day,
Down tail and slink away,
You'll pick no more bones on this side of the Border
Hence to the hills where your fathers stole cattle,

¹ "Not the Cumberland Borrowdale but the genuine ancient name of that district of Scotland, whatever it be called now, from which was issued the first promise to pay, that was made with the express purpose of being broken"—Peacock's note

² "Scottie for Tag-rag and Bob-tail," a highly respectable old firm. A paper kite with a bawbee at its tail is perhaps a better emblem of the safe currency of Northumbria than Mr Canning's mountain of paper irrigated by a rivulet of gold"—Peacock's note. George Canning (1770-1827) was a noted English statesman, Secretary of Foreign Affairs, 1822-27, and Premier, 1827.

³ "larder"

Hence to the glens where they skulked from the law,
Hence to the moors where they vanished from battle,

Crying "De'll tak the hindmost," and
"Charlie's awa'."
Metal is clanking here,
Off with your banking gear,
Off, ere you're paid "to Old Harry or order",
England shall many a day
Wish you'd been far away,
Long ere your kite-wings flew over the Border.

March, march, Ettrick and Teviotdale, Pay-day's the word, lads, and gold is the law,

March, march, Eskdale and Liddesdale,
Tagdale, and Ragdale, and Robdale, and a';
Persons or purse, they say,
Purse you have none to pay,
Your persons who'll deal with, except the Recorder?

Yet, to retrieve your freaks,
You can just leave your breeks,
You'll want them no more when you're over the Border.

High on a pole in the vernal sun's baskings,
When April has summoned you raghips away,

We'll hoist up a pair of your best galligaskins,
Entwined with young thistles to usher in
May

Types of Scotch "capital,"
They shall o'er-top-it-all,
Stripped off from bearer and brushed into order,

Then if you tarry, rogues,
Nettles you'll get for brogues,
And to the Rogue's March be drummed o'er
the Border

470. THE SONG OF THE REIM-KENNAIR

This song is found in Chapter 6 of The Pirate. It is sung by the witch Norna, and is thus introduced: "Having looked on the sky for some time in a fixed attitude and with the most profound silence, Norna at once, yet with a slow and elevated gesture, extended her staff of black oak toward that part of the heavens from which the blast came hardest, and in the midst of its fury chanted a Norwegian invocation, still preserved in the Island of Ulst, under the name of The Song of the Reim-kennar, though some call it The Song of the Trampet. The following is a free translation, it being impossible to render literally many of the elliptical and metaphorical terms of expression peculiar to the ancient Northern poetry."

471. COUNTY GUY

This poem is found in Chapter 4 of Quentin Durward. It is thus introduced: "The maid of the little turret, of the veil, and of the lute, sung exactly such an air as we are accustomed to suppose flowed from the lips of the high-born dames of chivalry, when knights and troubadours listened and languished. The words had neither so much sense, wit, or fancy, as to withdraw the attention from the music, nor the music so much of art, as to drown all feeling of the words. The one seemed fitted to the other, breeches, trousers and if the song had been recited without the notes, or the air played without the words, neither would have been worth noting. It is, therefore, scarcely fair to put upon record lines intended not to be said or read, but only to be sung. But such scraps of old poetry had always had a sort of fascination for us, and as the tune is lost forever—unless Bishop happens to find the notes, or some lark teaches Stephens to warble the air—we will risk our credit, and the taste of the Lady of the Lute, by preserving the verses, simple and even rude as they are."

Bishop and Stephens were contemporary English musicians and composers

WHAT BRAVE CHIEF

This song is found in Chapter 11 of The Talisman. It is sung by a minstrel as a compliment to Leopold, Archduke of Austria, to glorify him as equal to Richard the Lion-Hearted of England. Both were leaders in the Crusades.

ROBIN HOOD

This song is found in Act II, sc. 1, of Scott's drama The Doom of Devergoil. It is sung by Blackthorn, a forest ranger, in love with Kathleen, who has just skipped away from him.

BONNY DUNDEE

This and the following song, When Friends are Met, are found in Act II, sc. 2, of The Doom of Devergoil. Bonny Dundee is sung by Leonard, a forest ranger, in recounting an incident in which Oswald of Devergoil, a Scottish baron, had a part thirty years before.

Bonny Dundee was John Graham of Claverhouse (1649-89), Viscount Dundee, a staunch Scottish supporter of Charles II and James II of England. His strict enforcement of the laws against the Scottish Covenanters won him the title "Bloody Claverhouse." After the flight of James into France, Claverhouse supported his cause against William III, going so far as to defy the Convention or Scotch Parliament, which had accepted William. Failing in his attempt to persuade the Duke of Gordon to hold Edinburgh Castle, on Castle Rock, for King James, he raised an army which met and defeated the government forces at the Battle of Killcrankie, in 1689. He died of a wound the night of the victory.

473. WHEN FRIENDS ARE MET

This was sung as a duet by Leonard and Flora, Oswald's daughter, after Bonny Dundee was finished.

GLEE FOR KING CHARLES

This song is found in Chapter 20 of Woodstock. It is sung by a merry group, just before they separate for the night, in honor of Charles I, King of England (1625-49).

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY (1792-1822),

p. 627

EDITIONS

- Works*, 5 vols, ed. with a Memoir by Leigh Hunt, by R. H. Shepherd (London, Chatto, 1871-75).
- Complete Works*, 8 vols., ed. by H. B. Forman (London, Reeves, 1876-80, 1882, New York, Scribner).
- Complete Works*, 8 vols, ed by N H Dole (Laurel ed. London and Boston, 1904-06).
- Poetical Works*, 3 vols., ed. by R. H. Shepherd (London, Chatto, 1888).
- Poetical Works*, ed by E. Dowden (Globe ed. London and New York, Macmillan, 1890, 1907).
- Complete Poetical Works*, 4 vols., ed., with a Memoir, by G E. Woodberry (Centenary ed.: Boston, Houghton, 1892; London, Paul, 1898).
- Poetical Works*, 5 vols, ed., with a Memoir, by H. B. Forman (Aldine ed London, Bell, 1892, New York, Macmillan).
- Complete Poetical Works*, ed with a Memoir, by G E. Woodberry (Cambridge ed Boston, Houghton, 1901).
- Complete Poetical Works*, ed. by T Hutchinson (Oxford Univ. Press, 1904, 1907).
- Poems*, 4 vols., ed. by C. D. Locock (London, Methuen, 1900-09).
- Poems*, 2 vols, ed., with an Introduction by A. Clutton-Brock, by C. D. Locock (London, Methuen, 1911).
- Prose Works*, 2 vols, ed by R. H. Shepherd (London, Chatto, 1888, 1912).
- Select Poems*, ed., with an Introduction, by W J Alexander (Athenæum Press ed. Boston, Ginn, 1898).
- Poems*, selected, ed., with an Introduction, by A. Meynell (Red Letter ed. Glasgow, Blackie, 1903).
- Poems*, selected by J. C. Collins (Edinburgh, Jack, 1907).
- Select Poems*, ed., with an Introduction, by G E. Woodberry (Belles Lettres ed. Boston, Heath, 1908).
- Essays and Letters*, ed., with an Introduction, by E Rhys (Camelot Classics ed London, Scott, 1886).
- Letters*, 2 vols, ed by R. Ingpen (London, Pitman, 1909, 1912, New York, Scribner, 1909; Macmillan, 1915).
- Select Letters*, ed., with an Introduction, by R. Garnett (London, Paul, 1882).
- Literary and Philosophical Criticism*, ed. by J. Shawcross (London, Frowde, 1909).
- Note Books*, 3 vols, ed by H B Forman (St Louis, privately printed for W K Bixby, 1911).
- Prose in the Bodleian MSS.*, ed. by A. H. Kossul (London, Frowde, 1910).
- A Defense of Poetry*, ed., with an Introduction, by A. S Cook (Athenæum Press ed Boston, Ginn, 1890).
- An Apology for Poetry*, with Browning's Essay on Shelley, ed. by L Winstanley (Belles Lettres ed.: Boston, Heath, 1911).

BIOGRAPHY

- Angell, H R.: Shelley and His Friends in Italy (London, Methuen, 1911; New York, Brentano).
- Clutton-Brock, A.: Shelley, the Man and the Poet (New York, Putnam, 1909; London, Methuen).
- Dowden, E: The Life of P. B. Shelley, 2 vols (London, Paul, 1886, 1896; New York, Scribner).
- Godwin, W.: The Elopement of Shelley and Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin, ed by H B Forman (St. Louis, Privately printed for W K Bixby, 1912).
- Gribble, F.: The Romantic Life of Shelley, and the Sequel (New York, Putnam, 1911).
- Hogg, T J: The Life of Percy Bysshe Shelley, 2 vols. (London, Moxon, 1858); 1 vol., with an Introduction, by E Dowden (London, Routledge, 1906, New York, Dutton).
- Hogg, T J: Shelley at Oxford, with an Introduction by R. A. Streatfeild (London, Methuen, 1904).
- Hunt, Leigh: Autobiography (London, Smith, 1850, 1906), 2 vols, ed. by R Ingpen (London, Constable, 1903, New York, Dutton).
- Marshall, Mrs J: Life and Letters of Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, 2 vols (London, Bentley, 1889).
- Medwin, T.: Life of Shelley, 2 vols. (1847), ed by H B Forman (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1913).
- Paul, C K.: William Godwin, His Friends and Contemporaries, 2 vols. (London, Paul, 1876).
- Peacock, T L: Memoirs of Shelley, with Shelley's Letters to Peacock (London, Bentley, 1875, Frowde, 1909, New York, Oxford Univ Press).
- Reed, M: Love Affairs of Literary Men (New York, Putnam, 1907).
- Salt, H S: P. B. Shelley, Poet and Pioneer a Biographical Study (London, Reeves, 1906).
- Sharp, William: Life of Shelley (Great Writers' Series London, Scott, 1887, New York, Scribner).
- Shelley Memorials*, ed. by Lady Shelley (London King, 1859).
- Smith, G B: Shelley A Critical Biography (Edinburgh, Hamilton, 1877).
- Symonds, J A: Shelley (English Men of Letters Series London, Macmillan, 1878, 1887, New York, Harper).
- Trelawny, E J: Recollections of the Last Days of Shelley and Byron (London, Moxon, 1858), Records of Shelley, Byron, and the Author (London, Pickering, 1878; Frowde, 1906, New York, Dutton, 1905, Oxford Univ Press, 1906).

CRITICISM

- Arnold, M: Essays in Criticism, Second Series (London and New York, Macmillan, 1888).
- Bagshot, W: The National Review, Oct, 1856; Literary Studies, 3 vols, ed by R H. Hutton (London and New York, Longmans, 1878-79, 1895).

- Bates, E. S. A Study of Shelley's Drama, The Cenci (New York, Macmillan, 1908).
- Blackwood's Magazine, "Adonais," Dec., 1821 (10 696); "Alastor," Nov., 1819 (6 148); "Prometheus Unbound," Sept., 1820 (7 079); "Rosalind and Helen," June, 1819 (5 268); "The Revolt of Islam," Jan., 1819 (4 475).
- Bradley, A. C. "Shelley's View of Poetry," Oxford Lectures on Poetry (London, Macmillan, 1909, 1911).
- Brailsford, H. N. Shelley, Godwin, and Their Circle (London, Williams, 1913, New York, Holt).
- Brandes, G. Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature, Vol 4 (London, Heinemann, 1905, New York, Macmillan, 1906).
- Brooke, S. A. "Epilepsichidion," "Inaugural Address to the Shelley Society," "The Lyric of Shelley," Studies in Poetry (London, Duckworth, 1907, New York, Putnam).
- Browning, R. "An Essay on Shelley" (1852), Shelley Society Papers (London, 1888); Printed in the Appendix to the Cambridge edition of Browning's Complete Poetical Works (Boston, Houghton, 1895).
- Buck, P. M. "The Empire of Beauty, Shelley," Social Forces in Modern Literature (Boston, Ginn, 1918).
- De Vere, A. Essays, Chiefly on Poetry (New York, Macmillan, 1887).
- Dawson, W. J. Quest and Vision (London, Hodder, 1892, New York, Hunt).
- Dawson, W. J. The Makers of English Poetry (New York and London, Revell, 1906).
- Dowden, E. "Last Words on Shelley," "Shelley's Philosophical View of Reform," Transcripts and Studies (London, Paul, 1888, 1910).
- Dowden, E. "Renewed Revolutionary Advance," The French Revolution and English Literature (New York, Scribner, 1897, 1908).
- Edinburgh Review, The, "Posthumous Poems," July, 1824 (40 494).
- Edmunds, E. W. Shelley and His Poetry (New York Dodge, 1912).
- Edgar, P. A Study of Shelley (Toronto, Briggs, 1899).
- Forster, J. Great Teachers (London, Redway, 1898).
- Gardner, E. G. "Mysticism of Shelley," The Catholic World, Nov., 1908 (88 145).
- Garnett, R. "Shelley and Lord Beaconsfield," "Shelley's Views on Art," Essays of an Ex-Librarian (London, Heinemann, 1901).
- Gosse, E. Questions at Issue (Chicago, Appleton, 1893).
- Graham, W. Last Links With Byron, Shelley, and Keats (London, Smithers, 1898).
- Hancock, A. E. The French Revolution and the English Poets (New York, Holt, 1899).
- Hutton, R. H. "Shelley and His Poetry," Literary Essays (London, Strahan, 1871, Macmillan, 1888, 1908).
- Hutton, R. H. "Shelley as Prophet," Brief Literary Criticisms (London and New York, Macmillan, 1906).
- Ingpen, R. Shelley in England (Boston, Houghton, 1916).
- Jack, A. A. Shelley. An Essay (Edinburgh, Constable, 1904).
- Jeaffreson, J. C. The Real Shelley, 2 vols. (London, Hurst, 1885).
- Johnson, C. F. Three Americans and Three Englishmen (New York, Whittaker, 1886).
- Lang, A. Letters to Dead Authors (London, Longmans, 1886, 1892, New York, Scribner, 1893).
- Mabson, D. Wordsworth, Shelley, Keats, and Other Essays (London and New York, Macmillan, 1874).
- More, P. E. Shelburne Essays, Seventh Series (New York and London, Putnam, 1910).
- Myers, F. W. H. In Ward's The English Poets, Vol 4 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1911).
- Nicholson, A. P. "Shelley contra Mundum," The Nineteenth Century, May, 1908 (63 794).
- Payne, W. M. The Greater English Poets of the Nineteenth Century (New York, Holt, 1907, 1909).
- Quarterly Review*, The, "Prometheus Unbound," Oct., 1821 (26 168), "The Revolt of Islam," April, 1819 (21 460).
- Robertson, J. M. New Essays Towards a Critical Method (London, Lane, 1897).
- Salt, H. S. A Shelley Primer (London, Reeves, 1887).
- Schmitt, H. "Shelley als Romantiker," Englische Studien, 1911 (44).
- Shallip, J. C. "Shelley as a Lyric Poet," Aspects of Poetry (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1881, Boston, Houghton).
- Shelley Society Papers* (London, 1886—).
- Silcer, T. R. P. B. Shelley An Appreciation (New York, Everett, 1903).
- Stawell, Miss M. "On Shelley's The Triumph of Life," Essays and Studies by Members of the English Association, Vol 5 (Oxford, 1914).
- Stephen, L. "Godwin and Shelley," Hours in a Library, 3 vols. (London, Smith, 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1899), 4 vols (1907).
- Suddard, S. J. M. Keats, Shelley, and Shakespeare Studies (Cambridge Univ. Press, 1912, New York, Broadway Publishing Co.).
- Swinburne, A. C. "Notes on the Text of Shelley," Essays and Studies (London, Chatto, 1875).
- Symons, A. The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909, New York, Dutton).
- Thompson, F. Works, 3 vols. (New York, Scribner, 1909, 1913).
- Thomson, James. Biographical and Critical Studies (London, Reeves, 1896).
- Todhunter, J. A Study of Shelley (London, Paul, 1880).
- Trent, W. P. "Apropos of Shelley," The Authority of Criticism and Other Essays (New York, Scribner, 1899).
- Winstanley, L. "Platonism in Shelley," Essays and Studies by Members of the English Association, Vol. 4 (Oxford, 1913).

- Winstanley, L. "Shelley as Nature Poet," Englische Studien, 1904 (34)
- Woodberry, G. E. Studies in Letters and Life (Boston, Houghton, 1890), Makers of Literature (Macmillan, 1901).
- Woodberry, G. E. The Torch (New York, McClure, 1905, Macmillan, 1912)
- Woods, M. L. "Shelley at Tan-yr-allt," The Nineteenth Century, Nov., 1911 (70 890)
- Yeats, W. B. "The Philosophy of Shelley's Poetry," Ideas of Good and Evil (London, Bullen, 1908, New York, Macmillan)
- Young, A. B. "Shelley and Peacock," Modern Language Review, 1907 (2)
- Young, A. B. "Shelley and M. G. Lewis," Modern Language Review, 1906 (1)

CONCORDANCE

- Ellis, F. S. A Critical Concordance to the Poetical Works of Shelley (London, Quaritch, 1892)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, J. P. In Sharp's Life of Shelley (1887)
- Bradley, A. C. "Short Bibliography of Shelley," Short Bibliographies of Wordsworth, etc (English Association Leaflet, No 23, Oxford, 1912)
- Ellis, F. S. An Alphabetical Table of Contents to Shelley's Poetical Works (London, Shelley Society Publication, Series 4, No 6, 1888)
- Forman, H. B. The Shelley Library, an Essay in Bibliography (London, Reeves, 1886).

CRITICAL NOTES

Shelley's Centenary
4th August, 1892

Within a narrow span of time,
Three princes of the realm of rhyme,
At height of youth or manhood's prime
From earth took wing,
To join the fellowship sublime
Who, dead, yet sing

5

He, first, his earliest wreath who wove
Of laurel grown in Latman grove,
Conquered by pain and hapless love
Found calmer home,
Roofed by the heaven that glows above
Eternal Rome

10

A fierier soul, its own fierce prey
And cumbered with more mortal clay,
At Missolonghi flamed away,
And left the air
Reverberating to this day
Its loud despair.

15

Alike remote from Byron's scorn
And Keats's magic as of morn
Bursting forever newly-born
On forest old,
To wake a hoary world forlorn
With touch of gold,

20

Shelley, the cloud-begot, who grew
Nourished on air and sun and dew,
Into that Essence whence he drew
His life and lyre
Was fittingly resolved anew
Through wave and fire.

25

30

'Twas like his rapid soul! 'Twas meet
That he, who brooked not Time's slow feet,
With passage thus abrupt and fleet
Should hurry hence,
Eager the Great Perhaps to greet
With Why? and Whence?

35

Impatient of the world's fixed way,
He ne'er could suffer God's delay,
But all the future in a day
Would build divine,
And the whole past in ruins lay,
An emptied shrine.

40

Vain vision! but the glow, the fire,
The passion of benign desire,
The glorious yearning lift him higher
Than many a soul
That mounts a million paces higher
Its meaner goal

45

And power is his, if naught besides,
In that thin ether where he rides,
Above the roar of human tides
To ascend afar,
Lost in a storm of light that hides
His dizzy car.

50

Below, the unheasting world rolls on,
And here and there are victories won,
Some dragon slain, some justice done,
While, through the skies,
A meteor rushing on the sun,
He flares and dies.

55

60

But, as he cleaves yon ether clear
Notes from the unattempted sphere
He scatters to the enchanted ear
Of earth's dim throng,
Whose dissonance doth more endear
The showering song

65

In other shapes than he forecast
The world is moulded: his fierce blast,—
His wild assault upon the Past,—
These things are vain,
Revolt is transient what must last
Is that pure stain,

70

Which seems the wandering voices blent
Of every virgin element —
A sound from ocean caverns sent,—
An airy call
From the pavilioned firmament
O'erdoming all

75

And in this world of worldlings, where Souls rust in apathy, and ne'er
A great emotion shakes the air,
And life flags tame,
And rare is noble impulse rare
The impassioned aim,

80

'Tis no mean fortune to have heard
A singer who, if errors blurred
His sight, had yet a spirit stirred
By vast desire,
And ardent fledging the swift word
With plumes of fire

85

90

A creature of impetuous breath
Our torpor deadlier than death
He knew not, whatso'er he saith
Flashes with life
He spurreth men, he quickeneth
To splendid strife.

95

And in his gusts of song he brings
Wild odors shaken from strange wings,
And unfamiliar whisperings
From far lips blown,
While all the rapturous heart of things
Throbs through his own,—

100

His own that from the burning pyre
One who had loved his wind-swept lyre
Out of the sharp teeth of the fire
Unmolted drew,
Beside the sea that in her ire
Smote him and slew

105

—William Watson

¹ From Selected Poems of William Watson, copyright 1902 by the John Lane Company

The second stanza refers to Keats and his poem on Endymion, the shepherd on Mount Latmian. Keats died and was buried in Rome, in 1821. The third stanza refers to Byron, who died at Missolonghi, Greece, in 1824, while fighting for the independence of the Greeks. Line 80 and the last stanza of the poem refer to the death of Shelley by drowning, in 1822, and to the cremation of his body. While the body was burning, Shelley's unconsumed heart was snatched from the flames by Shelley's faithful friend and admirer, E. J. Trevelyan.

From Pauline

Sun-treader—life and light be thine forever! 151
Thou art gone from us—years go by and spring
Gladdens, and the young earth is beautiful,
Let thy songs come not—other bards arise,
But none like thee,—they stand—thy majesty, 155
Like mighty works which tell some Spirit there
Hath sat regardless of neglect and scorn,
Fill, its long task completed, it hath risen
And left us, never to return and all 160
Rush in to peer and praise when all in vain
The air seems bright with thy past presence yet,
But thou art still for me, as thou hast been
When I have stood with thee, as on a throne
With all thy dim creations gathered round 165
Like mountains—and I felt of mould like them,
And with them creatures of my own were mixed,
Like things half-lived, catching and giving life
But thou art still for me, who have adored,
Thou' single, panting but to hear thy name, 170
Which I believed a spell to me alone
Scarce deeming thou wast as a star to men

—Robert Browning (1832)

"The poetic ecstasy took him constantly upwards, and, the higher he got, the more thoroughly did his thoughts and words become one exquisite and intense unit. With elevation of meaning, and splendor and beauty of perception, he combined the most searching, the most inimitable loveliness of verse-music, and he stands at this day, and perhaps will always remain, the poet who, by instinct of verbal selection and charm of sound, comes nearest to expressing the half inexpressible—the secret thing of beauty, the intolerable light of the arcane."—W. M. Rossetti, in Lives of Famous Poets (1878).

Shelley has been immortalized in the character of Skatthrop, in Thomas Love Peacock's Nightmare Abbey.

627.

QUEEN MAB

This is a philosophical poem in which Shelley expresses his radical opinion about the society and orthodox Christianity of his day. In a note on the poem Mrs. Shelley says of Shelley: "He was animated to greater zeal by compassion for his fellow-creatures. His sympathy was excited by the misery with which the world is burning. He witnessed the sufferings of the poor, and was aware of the evils of ignorance. He desired to induce every rich man to despoil himself of superfluity, and to create a brotherhood of property and service, and was ready to be the first to lay down the advantages of his birth. He was of too uncompromising a disposition to join any party. He did not in his youth look forward to gradual improvement, nay, in those days of intolerance, now almost forgotten, it seemed as easy to look forward to the sort of millennium of freedom and brotherhood which he thought the proper state of mankind as to the present reign of moderation and improvement. Ill-health made him believe that his race would soon be run, that a year or two was all he had of life. He desired that these years should be useful and illustrious. He saw, in a fervent call on his fellow-creatures to share alike the blessings of the creation, to love and serve each other, the noblest work that life and time permitted him. In this spirit he composed Queen Mab."

Shelley himself was not blind to the crudeness of the poem. In a letter to the Editor of The Examiner, dated June 22, 1821, he said: "A poem entitled Queen Mab was written by me at the age of eighteen, I dare say in a sufficiently intemperate spirit—but even then was not intended for publication, and a few copies only were struck off, to be distributed among my personal friends. I have not seen this production for several years. I doubt not but that it is perfectly worthless in point of literary composition, and that, in all that concerns moral and political speculation, as well as in the subtler discriminations of metaphysical and religious doctrine, it is still more crude and immature."

In the poem, Ianthe, the central figure, falls asleep and dreams that she is transported to the court of Queen Mab, conceived by Shelley as the ruler over men's thoughts. After showing Ianthe the visions of the past, present, and future, Queen Mab instructs her regarding the true doctrine of God and man. In connection with this poem, (cf the selections from Godwin's An Enquiry Concerning Political Justice (pp. 213 ff.)

628 93-94. And statesmen boast of wealth!—
"There is no real wealth but the labor of man. Were the mountains of gold and the valleys of silver, the world would not be one grain of corn the richer, no one comfort would be added to the human race. In consequence of our consideration for the precious metals, one man is enabled to heap to himself luxuries at the expense of the necessities of his neighbor, a system admirably fitted to produce all the varieties of disease and crime, which never fail to characterize the two extremes of opulence and penury. A speculator takes pride to himself as the promoter of his country's prosperity, who employs a number of hands in the manufacture of articles avowedly destitute of use, or subservient only to the unhallowed cravings of luxury and ostentation. The poor are set to labor,—for what? Not the food for which they famish, not the blankets for want of which their babes are frozen by the cold of their miserable hovels, not those comforts of civilisation without which civilized man is far more miserable than the meanest savage, oppressed as he is by all its insidious evils, within the daily and taunting prospect of its innumerable benefits assiduously exhibited before him.—no, for the pride of power, for the miserable isolation of pride, for the false pleasures of the hundredth part of society. No greater evidence is afforded of the wide extended and radical mistakes of civilized man than this fact: those arts which are essential to his very being are held in the greatest contempt, employments are lucrative in an inverse ratio to their usefulness: the Jeweler, the toyman, the actor gains fame and wealth by the exercise of his useless and ridiculous art, whilst the cultivator of the earth, he without whom society must cease to subsist, struggles through contempt and penury, and perishes by that famine which but for his unceasing exertions would annihilate the rest of mankind"—Shelley's note

633. 166-166. Cf with this passage, Cowper's The Task, II, 1-47 (p. 147), and The Negro's Complaint (p. 148); also Southey's Sonnet Concerning the Slave Trade (p. 400)

211-12. "I hold that the depravity of the physical and moral nature of man originated in his unnatural habits of life. The origin of man, like that of the universe of which he is a part, is enveloped in impenetrable mystery. His generations either had a beginning, or they had not. The weight of evidence in favor of each of these suppositions seems tolerably equal, and it is perfectly unimportant to the present argument which is assumed. The language spoken, however, by the mythology of nearly all religions seems to prove that at some distant period man forsook the path of nature, and sacrificed the purity and happiness of his being to unnatural appetites. The date of this event seems to have also been that of some great change in the climates of the earth, with which it has an obvious correspondence. The allegory of Adam and Eve eating of the tree of evil, and entailing upon their posterity the wrath of God and the loss of everlasting life, admits of no other explanation than the disease and crime that have flowed from unnatural diet"—Shelley's note

Shelley then gives a long discussion of the necessity and the value of a vegetable diet. See Shelley's Alastor, 98-106 (p. 638)

634.

TO WORDSWORTH

Wordsworth was at one time an enthusiastic supporter of the French Revolution, but its excesses and failures led him finally to become a conservative. This poem indicates the contemporary feeling of the ardent radicals toward his change of politics. See Browning's The Lost Leader, which also was suggested by Wordsworth's action.

635.

ALASTOR

"The poem entitled Alastor may be considered as allegorical of one of the most interesting situations of the human mind. It represents a youth of uncorrupted feelings and adventurous genius led forth by an imagination inflamed and purified through familiarity with all that is excellent and majestic, to the contemplation of the universe. He drinks deep of the fountains of knowledge, and is still insatiate. The magnificence and beauty of the external world sinks profoundly into the frame of his conceptions, and affords to their modifications a variety not to be exhausted. So long as it is possible for his desires to point towards objects thus infinite and unmeasured, he is joyous, and tranquil, and self-possessed. But the period arrives when these objects cease to suffice. His mind is at length suddenly awakened and thirsts for intercourse with an intelligence similar to itself. He images to himself the being whom he loves. Con- versant with speculations of the sublimest and most perfect natures, the vision in which he embodies his own imaginations unites all of wonderful, or wise, or beautiful, which the poet, the philosopher, or the lover could depict. The intellectual faculties, the imagination, the functions of sense, have their respective requisitions on the sympathy of corresponding powers in other human beings. The poet is represented as uniting these requisitions, and attaching them to a single image. He seeks in vain for a prototype of his conception. Blasted by his disappointment, he descends to an untimely grave.

"The picture is not barren of instruction to actual men. The poet's self-centred seclusion was avenged by the furies of an irresistible passion pursuing him to speedy ruin. But that power which strikes the luminaries of the world with sudden darkness and extinction, by awakening them to too exquisite a perception of its influences, dooms to a slow and poisonous decay those meaner spirits that dare to abjure its dominion. Their destiny is more abject and inglorious as their delinquency is more contemptible and pernicious. They who, deluded by no generous error, instigated by no sacred thirst of doubtful knowledge, duped by no illustrious superstition, loving nothing on this earth, and cherishing no hopes beyond, yet keep aloof from sympathies with their kind, rejoicing neither in human joy nor mourning with human grief, these, and such as they, have their apportioned curse. They languish, because none feel with them their common nature. They are morally dead. They are neither friends, nor lovers, nor fathers, nor citizens of the world, nor benefactors of their country. Among those who attempt to exist without human sympathy, the pure and tender-hearted perish through the intensity and passion of their search after its communities, when the vacancy of their spirit suddenly makes itself felt. All else, selfish, blind, and torpid, are those unforeseeing multitudes who constitute, together with their own, the lasting misery and loneliness of the world. Those who love not their fellow-beings live unfruitful lives, and prepare for their old age a miserable grave.

"The good die first,
And those whose hearts are dry as summer dust,
Burn to the socket!"

—Shelley's Preface

The lines of verse quoted by Shelley are from Wordsworth's The Excursion, § 500-02 (p. 275). With respect to style and love of nature, Alastor should be compared with Wordsworth's Lines Composed a Few Miles Above Tintern Abbey (p. 238).

Alastor was written on Shelley's return from a trip up the Thames. Mrs. Shelley says in her note on the poem: "He spent his days under the oak-shades of Windsor Great Park, and the magnificent woodland was a fitting study to inspire the various descriptions of forest-scenery we find in the poem."

"None of Shelley's poems is more characteristic than this. The solemn spirit that reigns throughout, the worship of the majesty of nature, the broodings of a poet's heart in solitude—the mingling of the exulting joy which the various aspects of the visible universe inspires with the sad and struggling pangs which human passion imparts—give a touching interest to the whole. The death which he had often contemplated during the last months as certain and near he here represented in such colors as had, in his lonely musings, soothed his soul to peace. The verification sustains the solemn spirit which breathes throughout. It is peculiarly melodious. The poem ought rather to be considered didactic than narrative. It was the outpouring of his own emotions, embodied in the purest form he could conceive, painted in the ideal hues which his brilliant imagination inspired, and softened by the recent anticipation of death."

636. 101. Bloodless food—Shelley himself favored a vegetable diet. See Queen Mab, 211-12 (p. 633) and note, p. 1330a.

644. HINT TO INTELLECTUAL BEAUTY

Mrs. Shelley states in a note that this poem was conceived during Shelley's voyage around Lake Geneva, in Switzerland, with Lord Byron. Shelley's idea of the Eternal Beauty is borrowed from Plato's The Symposium, 211-12. Cf. the following passage as translated by Shelley (Præse Works, ed. Forman, Vol. 3, 210-222): "He who has been disciplined to this point in love, by contemplating beautiful objects gradually, and in their order, now arriving at the end of all that concerns love, on a sudden be-holds a beauty wonderful in its nature. . . . It is eternal, unproduced, indestructible, neither subject to increase nor decay; not, like other things, partly beautiful and partly deformed; not at one time beautiful and at another time not; not beautiful in relation to one thing and deformed in relation to another, not here beautiful and there deformed; not beautiful in the estimation of one person and deformed in that of another, nor can this supreme beauty be figured to the imagination, like a beautiful face or beautiful hands or any portion of the body, nor like any discourse nor any science. Nor does it subsist in any other that lives or is, either in earth, or in heaven, or in any other place, but it is eternally uniform and consistent, and monoëdic with itself. All other things are beautiful through a participation of it, with this one condition, that, although they are subject to production and decay, it never becomes more or less, or endures any change. When any one, ascending from the correct system of love, begins to contemplate this supreme beauty, he already touches the consummation of his labor. For such as discipline themselves upon this system, or are conducted by another beginning to ascend through these transitory objects which are beautiful, toward that which is beauty itself, proceeding as on steps from the love of one form to that of two, and from that of two, to that of all forms which are beautiful, and from beautiful forms to beautiful habits and institutions, and from institutions to beautiful doctrines; until, from the meditation of many doctrines, they arrive at that which is nothing else than the doctrine of supreme beauty itself, in the knowledge and contemplation of which at length they repose. Such a life as this . . . spent in the contemplation of the beautiful, is the life for men to live, which if you chance ever to experience you will esteem far beyond gold and rich garments and even those lovely persons whom you and many others now gaze on with astonishment, and are prepared neither to eat nor drink so that you may behold and live forever with these objects of your love! What then shall we imagine to be the aspect of the supreme beauty itself, simple, pure, uncontaminated with the intermixture of human flesh and colors, and all other idle and unreal shapes attendant on mortality, the divine, the original, the supreme, the monoëdic beautiful itself? What must be the life of him who dwells with and gazes on that which it becomes us all to seek? Think you not that to him alone is accorded the prerogative of bringing forth, not images and shadows of virtue, for he is in contact not with a shadow but with reality, with virtue itself, in the production and nourishment of which he becomes dear to the gods, and, if such a privilege is conceded to any human being, himself immortal."

646. MONT BLANC

Mrs Shelley states that this poem was inspired by a view of Mont Blanc (the highest peak of the Alps) and its surrounding peaks and valleys as Shelley lingered on the Bridge of Arve on his way through the Valley of Chamouni. Shelley says, "It was composed under the immediate impression of the deep and powerful feelings excited by the objects which it attempts to describe, and, as an undisciplined overflowing of the soul, rests its claim to approbation on an attempt to imitate the untamable wildness and inaccessible solemnity from which those feelings sprang"—Quoted in Mrs Shelley's note.

Cf Coleridge's Hymn before Sunrise in the Vale of Chamouni (p. 362)

648. DEDICATION TO THE REVOLT OF ISLAM

The Revolt of Islam is a social-political poem embodying opinions similar to those expressed by Shelley in Queen Mab. See note on Queen Mab, p. 1329.

650. OZYMANDIAS

Ozymandias is an Egyptian statue reputed, according to the Greek historian Diodorus of Sicily (1st century B. C.), to be the largest in Egypt. It bore the following inscription: "I am Ozymandias, king of kings, if any one wishes to know what I am and where I lie, let him surpass me in some of my exploits." See Diodorus's Bibliotheca Historica (Lipsiae, 1853), I, 47.

651. ON A FADED VIOLET

This poem was sent in a letter to Miss Sophia Stacey, dated March 7, 1820, with the following comment: "I promised you what I cannot perform a song on singing—there are only two subjects remaining. I have a few old stanzas on one which, though simple and rude, look as if they were dictated by the heart—And so—if you tell no one where they are, you are welcome to them. Pardon these dull verses from one who is dull—but who is not the less, ever yours, P. B. S."

LINES WRITTEN AMONG THE EUGANEAN HILLS

Shelley states in the Preface that this poem "was written after a day's excursion among those lovely mountains which surround what was once the retreat, and where is now the sepulchre, of Petrarch. If any one is inclined to condemn the insertion of the introductory lines, which image forth the sudden relief of a state of deep despondency by the radiant visions disclosed by the sudden burst of an Italian sunrise in autumn, on the highest peak of those delightful mountains, I can only offer as my excuse, that they were not erased at the request of a dear friend, with whom added years of intercourse only add to my apprehension of its value, and who would have had more right than any one to complain, that she has not been able to extinguish in me the very power of delineating sadness."

The Euganean Hills are a chain of volcanic hills in northeastern Italy, not far from Padua, where Petrarca (1304-74), the great Italian poet, once lived.

654. STANZAS WRITTEN IN DEJECTION, NEAR NAPLES

"At this time, Shelley suffered greatly in health. He put himself under the care of a medical man, who promised great things, and made him endure severe bodily pain, without any good results. Constant and poignant physical suffering exhausted him, and though he preserved the appearance of cheerfulness, and often greatly enjoyed our wanderings in the caverns of Naples, and our excursions on its sunny sea, yet many hours were passed when his thoughts, shadowed by illness, became gloomy,—and then he escaped to solitude, and in verses, which he hid from fear of wounding me, poured forth morbid but too natural bursts of discontent and sadness. One looks back with unspeakable regret and gnawing remorse to such periods; fancying that, had one been more alive to the nature of his feelings, and more attentive to soothe them, such would not have existed. And yet, enjoying as he appeared to do every sight or influence of earth or sky, it was difficult to imagine that any melancholy he showed was aught but the effect of the constant pain to which he was a martyr.

"We lived in utter solitude. And such is often not the nurse of cheerfulness; for then, at least with those who have been exposed to adversity, the mind broods over its sorrows too intently, while the society of the enlightened, the witty, and the wise, enables us to forget ourselves by making us the sharers of the thoughts of others, which is a portion of the philosophy of happiness. Shelley never liked society in numbers,—it harassed and wearied him; but neither did he like loneliness, and usually, when alone, sheltered himself against memory and reflection in a book. But, with one or two whom he loved, he gave way to wild and joyous spirits, or in more serious conversation expounded his opinions with vivacity and eloquence."—Mrs. Shelley's note.

655. LINES WRITTEN DURING THE CASTLEREAGH ADMINISTRATION

Robert Stewart (1769-1822), Viscount Castlereagh, and Earl of Londonderry (1796), had been Secretary for Ireland and Secretary of War before he was appointed Foreign Secretary in 1812. At the time of the Irish rebellion in 1798, he was charged with encouraging inhuman punishments of the rebels; and during his whole administration he was noted for his contempt for all persons who did not belong to the aristocracy. In 1822 he committed suicide in a fit of insanity.

THE MASK OF ANARCHY

"Though Shelley's first eager desire to excite his countrymen to resist openly the oppressions existent during 'the good old times' had faded with early youth, still his warmest sympathies were for the people. He was a republican, and loved a democracy. He looked on all human beings as inheriting an equal right to possess the dearest privileges of our nature, the necessities of life when fairly earned by labor, and intellectual instruction. His hatred of any despotism that looked upon the people as not to be consulted, or protected from want and ignorance, was intense. He was residing near Leghorn, at Villa Valsovano, writing The Cenci, when the news of the Manchester Massacre reached us. It aroused in him violent emotions of indignation and compassion. The great truth that the many, if accordant and resolute, could control the few, as was shown some years after, made him long to teach his injured countrymen how to resist. Inspired by these feelings, he wrote The Mask of Anarchy, which he sent to his friend Leigh Hunt, to be inserted in The Examiner, of which he was then the Editor.

"I did not insert it," Leigh Hunt writes in his valuable and interesting preface to this poem, when he printed it in 1832, 'because I thought that the public at large had not become sufficiently discerning to do justice to the sincerity and kind heartedness of the spirit that walked in this flaming robe of verse.' Days of outrage have passed away, and with them the exasperation that would cause such an appeal to the many to be injurious. Without being aware of them, they at one time acted on his suggestions, and gained the day. But they rose when human life was respected by the Minister in power such was not the case during the Administration which excited Shelley's abhorrence.

"The poem was written for the people, and is therefore in a more popular tone than usual portions strike as abrupt and unpolished, but many stanzas are all his own. I heard him repeat, and admired, those beginning

'My Father Time is old and gray,' before I knew to what poem they were to belong. But the most touching passage is that which describes the blessed effects of liberty. It might make a patriot of any man whose heart was not wholly closed against his humbler fellow-creatures."—Mrs. Shelley's note

The mask described in the poem is simply a procession with masks and disguises

659.

SONG TO THE MEN OF ENGLAND

This and the following poem, England in 1819, were inspired by Shelley's interest in the Manchester Massacre. See The Mask of Anarchy and note, above.

ENGLAND IN 1819

See note on preceding poem

660.

ODE TO THE WEST WIND

"This poem was conceived and chiefly written in a wood that skirts the Arno, near Florence, and on a day when that tempestuous wind, whose temperature is at once mild and animating, was collecting the vapors which pour down the autumnal rains. They began, as I foresaw, at sunset with a violent tempest of hail and rain, attended by that magnificent thunder and lightning peculiar to the Alpine regions."—Shelley's note

O. Sister of the Spring—The south wind

38-42. "The phenomenon alluded to at the conclusion of the third stanza is well known to naturalists. The vegetation at the bottom of the sea, of rivers, and of lakes, sympathizes with that of the land in the change of seasons, and is consequently influenced by the winds which announce it."—Shelley's note 662.

PROMETHEUS UNBOUND

"Prometheus Unbound best combines the various elements of Shelley's genius in their most complete expression, and unites harmoniously his lyrically creative power of imagination and his 'passion for reforming the world.' It is the fruit of an outburst of poetic energy under the double stimulus of his enthusiastic Greek studies, begun under Peacock's influence, and of his delight in the beauty of Italy, whither he had removed for health and rest. It marks his full mastery of his powers. It is, not less than Queen Mab and The Revolt of Islam, a poem of the moral perfection of man, and, not less than Alastor and Epipsychidion, a poem of spiritual idealism. He was himself in love with it 'a poem of a higher character than anything I have yet attempted and perhaps less an imitation of anything that has gone before it,' he writes to Ollier, and again, 'a poem in my best style, whatever that may amount to, . . . the most perfect of my productions,' and 'the best thing I ever wrote.'—Woodberry, in prefatory note to the poem, in his edition of Shelley's Complete Poetical Works (Cambridge ed., 1901)

Shelley's Preface

"The Greek tragic writers, in selecting as their subject any portion of their national history or mythology, employed in their treatment of it a certain arbitrary discretion. They by no means conceived themselves bound to adhere to the common interpretation or to imitate in story as in title their rivals and predecessors. Such a system would have amounted to a resignation of those claims to a preference over their competitors which incited the composition. The Agamemnonian story was exhibited on the Athenian theatre with as many variations as dramas.

"I have presumed to employ a similar license. The Prometheus Unbound of Æschylus supposed the reconciliation of Jupiter with his victim as the price of the disclosure of the danger threatened to his empire by the consummation of his marriage with Thetis. Thetis, according to this view of the subject, was given in marriage to Peleus, and Prometheus, by the permission of Jupiter, delivered from his captivity by Hercules. Had I framed my story on this model, I should have done no more than have attempted to restore the lost drama of Æschylus, an ambition which, if my preference to this mode of treating the subject had incited me to cherish, the recollection of the high comparison such an attempt would challenge might well abate. But, in truth, I was averse from a catastrophe so feeble as that of reconciling the champion with the oppressor of mankind. The moral interest of the fable, which is so powerfully sustained by the sufferings and endurance of Prometheus, would be annihilated if we could conceive of him as unswaying his high language and quailing before his successful and perfidious adversary. The only imaginary being resembling in any degree Prometheus, is Satan, and Prometheus is, in my judgment, a more poetical character than Satan, because, in addition to courage, and majesty, and firm and patient opposition to omnipotent force, he is susceptible of being described as exempt from the taints of ambition, envy, revenge, and a desire for personal aggrandisement, which, in the hero of Paradise Lost, interfere with the interest. The character of Satan engenders in the mind a pernicious casuistry which leads us to weigh his faults with his wrongs, and to excuse the former because the latter exceed all measure. In the minds of those who consider that magnificent fiction with a religious feeling it engenders something worse. But Prometheus is, as it were, the type of the highest perfection of moral and intellectual nature, impelled by the purest and the truest motives to the best and noblest ends.

"This poem was chiefly written upon the mountainous ruins of the Baths of Caracalla, among the flowery glades, and thickets of odoriferous blossoming trees, which are extended in ever winding labyrinths upon its immense platforms and dizzy arches suspended in the air. The bright blue sky of Rome, and the effect of the vigorous awakening spring in that divinest climate, and the new life with which it drenches the spirits even to intoxication, were the inspiration of this drama.

"The imagery which I have employed will be found, in many instances, to have been drawn from the operations of the human mind, or from those external actions by which they are expressed. This is unusual in modern poetry, although Dante and Shakespeare are full of instances of the same kind. Dante indeed more than any other poet, and with greater success. But the Greek poets, as writers to whom no resource of awakening the sympathy of their contemporaries was unknown, were in the habitual use of this power, and it is the study of their works (since a higher merit would probably be denied, me) to which I am willing that my readers should impute this singularity.

"One word is due in candor to the degree in which the study of contemporary writings may have tinged my composition, for such has been a topic of censure with regard to poems far more popular, and indeed more deservedly popular, than mine. It is impossible that any one who inhabits the same age with such writers as those who stand in the foremost ranks of our own, can conscientiously assure himself that his language and tone of thought may not have been modified by the study of the productions of those extraordinary intellects. It is true that, not the spirit of their genius, but the forms in which it has manifested itself, are due less to the peculiarities of their own minds than to the peculiarity of the moral and intellectual condition of the minds among which they have been produced. Thus a number of writers possess the form, whilst they want the spirit of those whom, it is alleged, they imitate, because the former is the endowment of the age in which they live, and the latter must be the uncommunicated lightning of their own mind.

"The peculiar style of intense and comprehensive imagery which distinguishes the modern literature of England, has not been, as a general power, the product of the imitation of any particular writer. The mass of capabilities remains at every period materially the same; the circumstances which awaken it to action perpetually change. If England were divided into forty republics, each equal in population and extent to Athens, there is no reason to suppose but that, under institutions not more perfect than those of Athens, each would produce philosophers and poets equal to those who (if we except Shakespeare) have never been surpassed. We owe the great writers of the golden age of our literature to that fervid awakening of the public mind which shook to dust the oldest and most oppressive form of the Christian religion. We owe Milton to the progress and development of the same spirit. the sacred Milton was, let it ever be remembered, a republican, and a bold inquirer into morals and religion. The great writers of our own age are, we have reason to suppose, the companions and forerunners of some unimagined change in our social condition or the opinions which cement it. The cloud of mind is discharging its collected lightning, and the equilibrium between institutions and opinions is now restoring, or is about to be restored.

"As to imitation, poetry is a mimetic art. It creates, but it creates by combination and representation. Poetical abstractions are beautiful and new, not because the portions of which they are composed had no previous existence in the mind of man or in nature, but because the whole produced by their combination has some intelligible and beautiful analogy with those sources of emotion and thought, and with the contemporary condition of them. one great poet is a masterpiece of nature which another not only ought to study but must study. He might as wisely and as easily determine that his mind should no longer be the mirror of all that is lovely in the visible universe, as exclude from his contemplation the beautiful which exists in the writings of a great contemporary. The pretence of doing it would be a presumption in any but the greatest, the effect, even in him, would be strained, unnatural, and ineffectual. A poet is the combined product of such internal powers as modify the nature of others, and of such external influences as excite and sustain these powers, he is not one, but both. Every man's mind is, in this respect, modified by all the objects of nature and art, by every word and every suggestion which he ever admitted to act upon his consciousness. it is the mirror upon which all forms are reflected, and in which they compose one form. Poets, not otherwise than philosophers, painters, sculptors, and musicians, are, in one sense, the creators, and, in another, the creations, of their age. From this subjection the loftiest do not escape. There is a similarity between Homer and Hesiod, between Æschylus and Euripides, between Virgil and Horace, between Dante and Petrarch, between Shakespeare and Fletcher, between Dryden and Pope, each has a generic resemblance under which their specific distinctions are arranged. If this similarity be the result of imitation, I am willing to confess that I have imitated.

"Let this opportunity be conceded to me of acknowledging that I have, what a Scotch philosopher characteristically terms, 'a passion for reforming the world' what passion incited him to write and publish his book, he omits to explain. For my part I had rather be damned with Plato and Lord Bacon, than go to Heaven with Paley and Malthus.¹ But it is a mistake to suppose that I dedicate my poetical compositions solely to the direct enforcement of reform, or that I consider them in any degree as containing a reasoned system on the theory of human life. Didactic poetry is my abhorrence, nothing can be equally well expressed in prose that is not tedious and supererogatory in verse. My purpose has hitherto been simply to familiarize the highly refined imagination of the more select classes of poetical readers with beautiful idealisms of moral excellence, aware that until the mind can love, and admire, and trust, and hope, and endure, reasoned principles of moral conduct are seeds cast upon the highway of life which the unconscious passenger tramples into dust, although they would bear the harvest of his happiness. Should I live to accomplish what I purpose, that is, produce a systematical history of what appear to me to be the genuine elements of human society, let not the advocates of injustice and superstition flatter themselves that I should take Æschylus rather than Plato as my model.

"The having spoken of myself with unaffected freedom will need little apology with the candid, and let the uncandid consider that they injure me less than their own hearts and minds by misrepresentation. Whatever talents a person may possess to amuse and instruct others, be they ever so inconsiderable, he is yet bound to exert them. If his attempt be ineffectual, let the punishment of an unaccomplished purpose have been sufficient, let none trouble themselves to heap the dust of oblivion upon his efforts, the pile they raise will betray his grave which might otherwise have been unknown."

From Mrs Shelley's Note

"The first aspect of Italy enchanted Shelley, it seemed a garden of delight placed beneath a clearer and brighter heaven than any he had lived under before. He wrote long descriptive letters during the first year of his residence in Italy, which, as compositions, are the most beautiful in the world and show how truly he appreciated and studied the wonders of nature and art in that divine land.

"The poetical spirit within him speedily revived with all the power and with more than all the beauty of his first attempts. He meditated three subjects as the groundwork for lyrical dramas. One was the story of Tasso.

¹ William Paley (1743-1805) was an English orthodox theologian and philosopher, who preached the necessity of religion on the basis of logic. T. R. Malthus (1766-1834) was an English political economist, who advanced the idea that vice and crime are necessary checks upon population. Essentially, Shelley says that he would rather be damned with the heretical reformers than go to heaven with the orthodox.

of this a slight fragment of a song of Tasso remains. The other was one founded on the Book of Job, which he never abandoned in idea, but of which no trace remains among his papers. The third was the Prometheus Unbound. The Greek tragedians were now his most familiar companions in his wanderings, and the sublime majesty of Æschylus filled him with wonder and delight. The father of Greek tragedy does not possess the pathos of Sophocles, nor the variety and tenderness of Euripides: the interest on which he founds his dramas is often elevated above human vicissitudes into the mighty passions and throes of gods and demi-gods: such fascinated the abstract imagination of Shelley.

“At first he completed the drama in three acts. It was not till several months after, when at Florence, that he conceived that a fourth act, a sort of hymn of rejoicing in the fulfilment of the prophecies with regard to Prometheus, ought to be added to complete the composition.

“The prominent feature of Shelley’s theory of the destiny of the human species was that evil is not inherent in the system of the creation, but an accident that might be expelled. This also forms a portion of Christianity. God made earth and man perfect, till he, by his fall,

‘Brought death into the world and all our woe.’ [Paradise Lost, 1, 3].

Shelley believed that mankind had only to will that there should be no evil, and there would be none. It is not my part in these notes to notice the arguments that have been urged against this opinion, but to mention the fact that he entertained it, and was indeed attached to it with fervent enthusiasm. That man could be so perfectionized as to be able to expel evil from his own nature, and from the greater part of the creation, was the cardinal point of his system. And the subject he loved best to dwell on was the image of One warring with the Evil Principle, oppressed not only by it, but by all—even the good, who were deluded into considering evil a necessary portion of humanity, a victim full of fortitude and hope and the spirit of triumph emanating from a reliance in the ultimate omnipotence of Good. Such he had depicted in his last poem [The Revolt of Islam] when he made Laon the enemy and the victim of tyrants. He now took a more idealized image of the same subject. He followed certain classical authorities in figuring Saturn as the good principle, Jupiter the usurping evil one, and Prometheus as the regenerator, who, unable to bring mankind back to primitive innocence, used knowledge as a weapon to defeat evil, by leading mankind, beyond the state wherein they are sinless through ignorance, to that in which they are virtuous through wisdom. Jupiter punished the temerity of the Titan by chaining him to a rock of Caucasus, and causing a vulture to devour his still-renewed heart. There was a prophecy afloat in heaven portending the fall of Jove, the secret of averting which was known only to Prometheus; and the god offered freedom from torture on condition of its being communicated to him. According to the mythological story, this referred to the offspring of Thetis, who was destined to be greater than his father. Prometheus at last bought pardon for his crime of enriching mankind with his gifts, by revealing the prophecy. Hercules killed the vulture, and set him free; and Thetis was married to Peleus, the father of Achilles.

“Shelley adapted the catastrophe of this story to his peculiar views. The son greater than his father, born of the nuptials of Jupiter and Thetis, was to dethrone Evil, and bring back a happier reign than that of Saturn. Prometheus defies the power of his enemy, and endures centuries of torture; till the hour arrives when Jove, blind to the real event, but darkly guessing that some great good to himself will flow, espouses Thetis. At the moment, the Primal Power of the world drives him from his usurped throne, and Strength, in the person of Hercules, liberates Humanity, typified in Prometheus, from the tortures generated by evil done or suffered. Asia, one of the Oceanides, is the wife of Prometheus—she was, according to other mythological interpretations, the same as Venus and Nature. When the benefactor of mankind is liberated, Nature resumes the beauty of her prime, and is united to her husband, the emblem of the human race, in perfect and happy union. In the Fourth Act, the poet gives further scope to his imagination, and idealizes the forms of creation—such as we know them, instead of such as they appeared to the Greeks. Maternal Earth, the mighty parent, is superseded by the Split of the Earth, the guide of our planet through the realms of sky; while his fair and weaker companion and attendant, the Spirit of the Moon, receives bliss from the annihilation of Evil in the superior sphere.

“Shelley develops, more particularly in the lyrics of this drama, his abstruse and imaginative theories with regard to the Creation. It requires a mind as subtle and penetrating as his own to understand the mystic meanings scattered throughout the poem. They elude the ordinary reader by their abstraction and delicacy of distinction, but they are far from vague. It was his design to write prose metaphysical essays on the nature of man, which would have served to explain much of what is obscure in his poetry; a few scattered fragments of observations and remarks alone remain. He considered these philosophical views of mind and nature to be instinct with the intensest spirit of poetry.

"More popular poets clothe the ideal with familiar and sensible imagery. Shelley loved to idealise the real—to gift the mechanism of the material universe with a soul and a voice, and to bestow such also on the most delicate and abstract emotions and thoughts of the mind. . . .

"Through the whole poem there reigns a sort of calm and holy spirit of love, it soothes the tortured, and is hope to the expectant, till the prophecy is fulfilled, and love, untainted by any evil, becomes the law of the world. . . .

"The charm of the Roman climate helped to clothe his thoughts in greater beauty than they had ever worn before. And, as he wandered among the ruins made one with nature in their decay, or gazed on the Praxitelean shapes that throng the Vatican, the Capitol, and the palaces of Rome, his soul imbibed forms of loveliness which became a portion of itself. There are many passages in the Prometheus which show the intense delight he received from such studies, and give back the impression with a beauty of poetical description peculiarly his own."

For the general form of the drama, including the choruses, for the situation and scenery of Act I, and for a few scattered phrases and passages, Shelley is indebted to Æschylus. There are echoes also from Milton, Shakspeare, and Goethe.

The characters in Prometheus Unbound are impersonations of abstract qualities—those which were the occasion of suffering and evil in society and those which through the power of the spirit of democracy were to usher in the Golden Age. Prometheus represents humanity in general. Jupiter represents evil and unrighteous power, he stands for civil and religious institutions, all of which interfere with progress. Thetis, the wife of Jupiter, is arrogance, display, and false ideal. Demogorgon, the child of Jupiter and Thetis, is necessity, fate, wisdom; the force that provides over the destinies of the universe. Asia is the spirit of ideal beauty and divine love. Panthea, the spirit of faith, love, the spirit of hope. Hercules is strength. The Furies are the various causes of pain and suffering among men. The Spirits sent by the Earth to comfort Prometheus are embodiments of the happiness which comes from good impulses and good actions. The scenery also is allegorical. In the intricacies of the symbolism of the drama, however, one should not lose sight of its lyric greatness. Shelley called it a lyrical drama, and as such it deals with thought and emotion rather than with action.

Shelley's approach to the world-problem as expressed in this drama should be compared with Byron's as expressed in Manfred (pp. 549 ff.).

670. 540-66; 590-631. These lines contain a vision of the crucifixion of Christ and of the development of Christianity. Lines 567-77, 648-54 contain a vision of the French Revolution. These events, good in themselves, are thought of as resulting in evil.

671. 672-751. These spirits of consolation suggest that evil is merely the occasion for greater good.

672. 737-51. This lyric has been regarded as the most complete expression of poetic idealism.

673. Scene II.—The forest scenery represents the ordinary experiences of human life, as concerns physical senses, emotions, and intellectual impulses.

674. Scene III.—The mountain scenery represents elevated heights of thought.

682. 72-81. Cf. Shelley's fragment entitled To One Singing, written in 1817:

My spirit like a charmed bark doth swim
Upon the liquid waves of thy sweet singing,
Far, far away into the regions dim

Of rapture—as a boat with swift sails winging

Its way adown some many-winding river,
Speeds through dark forests o'er the waters
Swinging

684. Scene II.—Ocean and Apollo have no allegorical significance, they are simply classical figures.

690. Act IV—This is simply a concluding chorus of rejoicing over the fulfillment of the prophecies in the other acts.

699.

THE SENSITIVE PLANT

"This is primarily a descriptive poem. The poet, with evident delight and exquisite power, produces his picture of the garden and its mistress, and enters into and sympathizes with the imagined life of the flowers. Secondly, this concrete picture is symbolic of other things. The Sensitive Plant, with its isolation, its intensity, its yearnings, is Shelley himself. The lady of the garden is the mystical Spirit of Beauty 'whose smile kindles the universe.' The change which comes over the garden and the Sensitive Plant at the approach of winter typifies the evil and ugly side of things,—death and the other ill which quench the joy of life. The Conclusion (as the close of Adonais) suggests that this change is transitory or unreal, that the Spirit of Beauty abides, and that the soul of man does not altogether pass away at death, but is united to the one spirit which is eternal"—W. J. Alexander, in Select Poems of Shelley (Athens Press ed., 1898).

703. Conclusion.—(Cf. these stanzas with Adonais, 39 (p. 735) and with the quotation from Plato's Phædo, p. 1370b.

THE CLOUD

"There are others, such as the Ode to the Skylark and The Cloud, which in the opinion of many critics bear a purer poetical stamp than any other of his productions. They were written as his mind prompted, listening to the caroling of the bird, aloft in the azure sky of Italy, or marking the cloud as it sped across the heavens, while he floated in his boat on the Thames"—Mrs. Shelley, in Preface to Shelley's Poetical Works (1839).

704.

TO A SKYLARK

"It was on a beautiful summer evening, while wandering among the lanes, whose myrtle hedges were the bowers of the butterflies, that we heard the caroling of the skylark, which inspired one of the most beautiful of his poems"—Mrs. Shelley's note

See note on preceding poem

Cf. this poem with Wordsworth's poems on the same subject, pp. 297 and 312, and with Hogg's poem, p. 477.

706.

ARETHUSA

This poem was written to be inserted in Proserpine, a drama by Shelley's friend, Edward Williams. Arethusa was a fountain in the island of Orygia, near Syracuse, in Sicily. Alpheus is a river in the Peloponnesus which in part of its course flows underground. According to the legend, the wood nymph Arethusa, pursued by her lover Alpheus, the river god, was changed by Diana into a stream which ran under the sea and rose again as the fountain of Arethusa.

707.

HYMN OF APOLLO

This and the next poem, Hymn of Pan, were written to be inserted in Midas, a projected drama by Shelley's friend, Edward Williams. Apollo and Pan were represented as contending before Tmolus, the mountain-god, for a prize in music. Apollo was the sun-god.

HYMN TO PAN

See note on preceding poem. Pan was the god of flocks and shepherds. He invented the shepherd's flute which he made out of a reed.

710.

THE WITCH OF ATLAS

In her notes, Mrs. Shelley says of this poem and its author: "This poem is peculiarly characteristic of his taste—wildly fanciful, full of brilliant imagery, and discarding human interest and passion, to revel in the fantastic ideas that his imagination suggested."

"The surpassing excellence of The Genci had made me greatly desire that Shelley should increase his popularity, by adopting subjects that would more suit the popular taste than a poem conceived in the abstract and dreamy spirit of The Witch of Atlas. It was not only that I wished him to acquire popularity as redounding to his fame, but I believed that he would obtain a greater mastery over his own powers, and greater happiness in his mind, if public applause crowned his endeavors. The few stanzas that precede the poem were addressed to me on my representing these ideas to him. Even now I believe that I was in the right. Shelley did not expect sympathy and approbation from the public; but the want of it took away a portion of the ardor that ought to have sustained him while writing. He was thrown on his own resources and on the inspiration of his own soul, and wrote because his mind overflowed, without the hope of being appreciated. I had not the most distant wish that he should truckle in opinion, or submit his lofty aspirations for the human race to the low ambition and pride of the many, but I felt sure that if his poems were more addressed to the common feelings of men, his proper rank among the writers of the day would be acknowledged; and that popularity as a poet would enable his countrymen to do justice to his character and virtues, which, in those days, it was the mode to attack with the most flagitious calumnies and insulting abuse. That he felt these things deeply cannot be doubted, though he armed himself with the consciousness of acting from a lofty and heroic sense of right. The truth burst from his heart sometimes in solitude, and he would write a few unfinished verses that showed that he felt the sting.

"I believed that all this morbid feeling would vanish, if the chord of sympathy between him and his countrymen were touched. But my persuasions were vain, the mind could not be bent from its natural inclination. Shelley shrunk instinctively from portraying human passion, with its mixture of good and evil, of disappointment and disquiet. Such opened again the wounds of his own heart, and he loved to shelter himself rather in the airiest flights of fancy, forgetting love and hate and regret and lost hope, in such imaginations as borrowed their hues from sunrise or sunset, from the yellow moonshine or paly twilight, from the aspect of the far ocean or the shadows of the woods, which celebrated the singing of the winds among the pines, the flow of a murmuring stream, and the thousand harmonious sounds which nature creates in her solitudes. These are the materials which form The Witch of Atlas, it is a brilliant congregation of ideas, such as his senses gathered, and his fancy colored, during his rambles in the sunny land he so much loved."

Atlas is the name of a mountain system in northwestern Africa.

720.

EPIPSYCHIDION

The meaning of the title of this poem, according to Stopford Brooke (Publications of the Shelley Society, 1887), is "this soul out of my soul" (1. 238). Forman (Complete Poetical Works) sees no meaning in it beyond "a little poem about the soul." The "noble and unfortunate lady" who inspired the poem was Teresa Emilia Viviani, the beautiful and sentimental daughter of an Italian nobleman of Pisa. She had been placed by her family in the neighboring Convent of St. Anna, where Shelley met her in 1820, became interested in her, and idealized her as the embodiment of perfect love and beauty of which he was ever in search. Dowden says of her (Life of Shelley, 2, 378) "Emilia, beautiful, spiritual, sorrowing, became for him a type and symbol of all that is most radiant and divine in nature, all that is most remote and unattainable, yet ever to be pursued—the ideal of beauty, truth, and love. She was at once a breathing and living woman, young, lovely, ardent, afflicted, and the avatar of the Ideal." Shelley's interest in her, however, soon declined into that of mere sympathy.

In a letter to his friend Gisborne, dated Oct. 22, 1821, Shelley says of the poem: "The Epipsychidion is a mystery; as to real flesh and blood, you know that I do not deal in those articles, you might as well go to a gin-shop for a leg of mutton, as expect anything human or earthly from me." On June 18, 1822, he again wrote Gisborne: "The Epipsychidion I cannot look at, the person whom it celebrates was a cloud instead of a Juno, and poor Ixion¹ starts from the centaur that was the offspring of his own embrace. If you are curious, however, to hear what I am and have been, it will tell you something thereof. It is an idealized history of my life and feelings. I think one is always in love with something or other, the error, and I confess it is not easy for spirits caged in flesh and blood to avoid it, consists in seeking in a mortal image the likeness of what is, perhaps, eternal."

The poem represents the pursuit of an ideal, the nature of which may be gained from Shelley's prose fragment On Love, as follows:

"Thou demandest what is love? It is that powerful attraction towards all that we conceive, or fear or hope beyond ourselves, when we find within our own thoughts the charm of an insufficient void, and seek to awaken in all things that are, a community with what we experience within ourselves. If we reason, we would be understood, if we imagine, we would that the airy children of our brain were born anew within another's; if we feel, we would that another's nerves should vibrate to our own, that the beams of their eyes should kindle at once and mix and melt into our own, that lips of motionless ice should not reply to lips quivering and burning with the heart's best blood. This is love. This is the bond and the sanction which connects not only man with man, but with everything which exists. We are born into the world, and there is something within us which, from the instant that we live, more and more thirsts after its likeness. It is probably in correspondence with this law that the infant drains milk from the bosom of its mother, this propensity develops itself with the development of our nature. We dimly see within our intellectual nature a miniature as it were of our entire self, yet deprived of all that we condemn or despise, the ideal prototype of everything excellent or lovely that we are capable of conceiving as belonging to the nature of man. Not only the portrait of our external being, but an assemblage of the minutest particles of which our nature is composed, a mirror whose surface reflects only the forms of purity and brightness, a soul within our soul that describes a circle around its proper paradise, which pain, and sorrow, and evil dare not overleap. To this we eagerly refer all sensations, thirsting that they should resemble or correspond with it. The discovery of its anti-type, the meeting with an understanding capable of clearly estimating our own, an imagination which should enter into and seize upon the subtle and delicate peculiarities which we have delighted to cherish and unfold in secret, with a frame whose nerves, like the chords of two exquisite lyres, strung to the accompaniment of one delightful voice, vibrate with the vibrations of our own, and of a combination of all these in such proportion as the type within demands, this is the invisible and unattainable point to which love tends, and to attain which, it urges forth the powers of man to arrest the faintest shadow of that without the possession of which there is no rest nor respite to the heart over which it rules. Hence in solitude, or in that deserted state when we are surrounded by human beings, and yet they sympathize not with us, we love the flowers, the grass, and the waters and the sky. In the motion of the very leaves of spring in the blue air, there is then found a secret correspondence with our heart. There is eloquence in the tongueless wind, and a melody in the flowing brooks and the rustling of the reeds beside them, which by their inconceivable relation to something within the soul, awaken the spirits to a dance of breathless rapture, and bring tears of mysterious tenderness to the eyes, like the enthusiasm of patriotic success, or the voice of one beloved singing to you alone. Sterne says that if he were in a desert he would love some cypress. So soon as this want or power is dead, man becomes the living sepulchre of himself, and what yet survives is the mere husk of what once he was."

The poem was first published anonymously in an Advertisement by Shelley describing the imaginary author.

723. 236. Cf. the prose fragment On Love, quoted above.

256-66. No satisfactory identification of the person here described has been made, nor is any needed The passage describes sensual love.

¹ See Glossary.

271. One was true.—This is thought to refer to Harriet, Shelley's first wife.

277. One stood on my path.—This refers to Mary, Shelley's second wife.

724. 308-20. The reality of the incidents referred to here has not been determined

725. 368. The Comet, who is to be made the Evening Star, has not been satisfactorily identified.

729.

EMILIA VIVIANI

Shelley sent this poem to Emilia Viviani in return for a bouquet which he received from her. See note on Epipsychidion, above.

730.

ADONIS

The title of this poem is evidently derived from Adonis, the name of the beautiful youth who was loved by Venus and who was killed by a wild boar. Shelley's belief that Keats was killed by "savage criticism on his Endymion" makes the analogy clear.

Shelley and Keats first met at the house of their friend Leigh Hunt, in 1817, and in 1820 Shelley invited Keats to be his guest at Pisa, Italy; but Keats did not accept the invitation, and they never became intimate. Keats died in Rome on February 23, 1821, and soon afterwards Shelley wrote the poem, to which he later added the following Preface.

"It is my intention to subjoin to the London edition of this poem a criticism upon the claims of its lamented object to be classed among the writers of the highest genius who have adorned our age. My known repugnance to the narrow principles of taste on which several of his earlier compositions were modeled prove at least that I am an impartial judge. I consider the fragment of Hyperion as second to nothing that was ever produced by a writer of the same years.

"John Keats died at Rome of a consumption, in his twenty-fourth year, on the [23rd] of [Feb.], 1821; and was buried in the romantic and lonely cemetery of the Protestants in that city, under the pyramid which is the tomb of Cestius, and the massy walls and towers, now mouldering and desolate, which formed the circuit of ancient Rome. The cemetery is an open space among the ruins, covered in winter with violets and daisies. It might make one in love with death, to think that one should be buried in so sweet a place.

"The genius of the lamented person to whose memory I have dedicated these unworthy verses was not less delicate and fragile than it was beautiful; and where cankerworms abound, what wonder if its young flower was blighted in the bud? The savage criticism on his Endymion, which appeared in The Quarterly Review,¹ produced the most violent effect on his susceptible mind, the agitation thus originated ended in the rupture of a blood-vessel in the lungs, a rapid consumption ensued, and the succeeding acknowledgments from more candid critics of the true greatness of his powers were ineffectual to heal the wound thus wantonly inflicted.

"It may be well said that these wretched men know not what they do. They scatter their insults and their slanders without heed as to whether the poisoned shaft lights on a heart made callous by many blows or one like Keats's composed of more penetrable stuff.² One of their associates is, to my knowledge, a most base and unprincipled calumniator. As to Endymion, was it a poem, whatever might be its defects, to be treated contemptuously by those who had celebrated, with various degrees of complacency and panegyric, Paris, and Woman, and a Syrian Tale, and Mrs. Lefanu, and Mr. Barrett, and Mr. Howard Payne, and a long list of the illustrious obscure? Are these the men who in their venal good nature presumed to draw a parallel between the Rev. Mr. Milman and Lord Byron? What gnat did they strain at here, after having swallowed all those camels? Against what woman taken in adultery dared the foremost of these literary prostitutes to cast his opprobrious stone? 'Miserable man! you, one of the meanest, have wantonly defaced one of the noblest specimens of the workmanship of God. Nor shall it be your excuse, that, murderer as you are, you have spoken daggers, but used none.'³

"The circumstances of the closing scene of poor Keats's life were not made known to me until the Elgy was ready for the press. I am given to understand that the wound which his sensitive spirit had received from the criticism of Endymion was exacerbated by the bitter sense of unrequited benefits; the poor fellow seems to have been hooted from the stage of life, no less by those on whom he had wasted the promise of his genius, than those on whom he had lavished his fortune and his care. He was accompanied to Rome, and attended in his last illness by Mr. Severn, a young artist of the highest promise, who, I have been informed, almost risked his own life, and sacrificed every prospect to unwearied attendance upon his dying friend. Had I known these circumstances before the completion of my poem, I should have been ¹ The criticism of Endymion referred to was written by J. W. Croker and published in The Quarterly Review, April, 1818 (see p. 613). Shelley thought it was written by H. H. Milman (1791-1868), an English clergyman. It was not responsible for the death of Keats. See Colvin's Life of Keats, ch. 6, and Rossetti's Life of Keats, ch. 5.

² See Hamlet, III, 4, 35-36.

³ And let me wring your heart; for so I shall, If it be made of penetrable stuff."

⁴ See Matthew, 23, 24.

⁵ See John 8, 3-7.

⁶ Hamlet III, 2, 414. Before going to meet his mother Hamlet says, "I will speak daggers to her but use none."

tempted to add my feeble tribute of applause to the more solid recompense which the virtuous man finds in the recollection of his own motives. Mr. Severn can dispense with a reward from 'such stuff as dreams are made of.' His conduct is a golden augury of the success of his future career—may the unextinguished spirit of his illustrious friend animate the creations of his pencil, and plead against Oblivion for his name!"

Adonais is based upon two Greek pastoral elegies of the 3rd cent. B. C.—Bion's Lament for Adonis and Moschus's Epitaph on Bion. Milton's Lycidas also was probably in Shelley's mind, and a number of ideas expressed in the poem go back to Plato. Cf. Adonais with the following fragments of Shelley's translation of the two Greek poems referred to.

Fragment of the Elegy on the Death of Adonis

I mourn Adonis dead—loveliest Adonis—
Dead, dead Adonis—and the Loves lament
Sleep no more, Venus, wrapped in purple wool—
Wake violet-stoled queen, and weave the crown
Of Death—'tis Misery calls,—for he is dead

The lovely one lies wounded in the mountains,
His white thigh struck with the white tooth,
he scarce
Yet breathes, and Venus hangs in agony there.
The dark blood wanders o'er his snowy limbs,
His eyes beneath their lids are lustreless
The rose has fled from his wan lips, and there
That kiss is dead, which Venus gathers yet.

A deep, deep wound Adonis * * *
A deeper Venus bears upon her heart
See, his beloved dogs are gathering round—
The Oread nymphs are weeping—Aphrodite
With hair unbound is wandering through the woods,
'Wildered, ungirt, unsandalled—the thorns pierce
Her hastening feet and drink her sacred blood
Bitterly screaming out, she is driven on Through the long vale; and her Assyrian boy,
Her love, her husband, calls—the purple
blood
From his struck thigh stains her white navel now,
Her bosom, and her neck before like snow

Alas for Cytherea—the Loves mourn—
The lovely, the beloved is gone!—and now
Her sacred beauty vanishes away.
For Venus whilst Adonis lived was fair—
Alas! her loveliness is dead with him
The oaks and mountains cry, Al! al!
Adonis!
The springs their waters change to tears and weep—
The flowers are withered up with grief * * *

Al! al! Adonis is dead
Echo resounds Adonis dead
Who will weep not thy dreadful woe, O
Venus?
Soon as she saw and knew the mortal wound
Of her Adonis—saw the life-blood flow
From his fair thigh, now wasting,—wailing loud
She clasped him, and cried "Stay, Adonis"
Stay, dearest one, * * *
and mix my lips with thine—

Wake yet a while, Adonis—oh, but once,
That I may kiss thee now for the last time—
But for as long as one short kiss may live—
Oh, let thy breath flow from thy dying soul
Even to my mouth and heart, that I may suck
Thee * * *

Fragment of the Elegy on the Death of Bion

Ye Dorian woods and waves, lament aloud,— Augment your tide, O streams, with fruitless tears,
For the beloved Bion is no more
Let every tender herb and plant and flower,
From each deflected bud and drooping bloom,
Shed dew of liquid sorrow, and with breath
Of melancholy sweetness on the wind
Diffuse its languid love, let roses blush,
Anemones grow paler for the loss
Their dells have known, and thou, O hyacinth,
Utter thy legend now—yet more, dumb flower,
Than "Ah! alas!"—thine is no common grief—
Bion the sweetest singer is no more

731. 10-11. Cf. Bion's Lament for Adonis (Lang's trans.) "He reclines, the delicate Adonis, in his raiment of purple, and around him the Loves are weeping, and groaning aloud, clipping their locks for Adonis. And one upon his shafts, another on his bow is treading, and one hath loosed the sandal of Adonis, and another hath broken his own feathered quiver, and one in a golden vessel bears water, and another laves the wound, and another from behind him with his wings is fanning Adonis."

14-17. Cf. Moschus's Elegy on Bion (Lang's trans.) "Ye flowers, now in sad clusters breathe yourselves away. Now reddened, ye roses, in your sorrow, and now wax red, ye wind-flowers, now, thou hyacinth, whisper the letters on thee graven, and add a deeper ai ai to thy petals, he is dead, the beautiful singer. . . Ye nightingales, that lament among the thick leaves of the trees, tell ye to the Sicilian waters of Arethusa the tidings that Bion the herdsman is dead. . . And Ekho in the rocks laments that thou art silent, and no more she mimics thy voice. And in sorrow for thy fall the trees cast down their fruit, and all the flowers have faded."

735. 39. Cf. the closing stanzas of The Renattive Plant (p. 703). See also Plato's Phaedo, 67-69.

736. 46, 0. Cf. Plato's epigram on Aster, thus translated by Shelley under the title of To Stilla and applied to Keats.

Thou wert the morning star among the living,
Ere thy fair light had fled,—
Now, having died, thou art as Hesperus, giving
New splendor to the dead.

737.

HELLAS

Hellas is a lyrical drama inspired by the Greek war for independence from the Turks, fought in 1821. Shelley looked upon this manifestation of a free spirit as a prophecy of the dawning Golden Age of love and freedom. Life May Change, But It May Fly

Not occupies lines 34-45 of the drama, Worlds on Worlds are Rolling Ever, lines 197-238; Darkness has Dawned in the East, lines 1028-59, The World's Great Age Begins Anew is the closing chorus, lines 1090-1101

738b. 8. The Evening land.—A reference to America.

739. THE WORLD'S GREAT AGE BEGINS ANEW

At the end of the "great age" of the ancients, the sun, moon, and planets were to return to their original positions, and the history of the world would repeat itself, the Golden Age would return and be followed by ages of degradation and evil. Cf this chorus with Byron's The Isles of Greece (p 596).

THE EVENING

The Ponte al Mare is the seaward bridge of Pisa

740. REMEMBRANCE

This song was sent by Shelley with the following letter to his friend, Mrs. Williams "Dear Jane,—If this melancholy old song suits any of your tunes, or any that humor of the moment may dictate, you are welcome to it. Do not say it is mine to any one, even if you think so, indeed, it is from the torn leaf of a book out of date. How are you today, and how is Williams? Tell him that I dreamed of nothing but walling and fishing up coral. Your ever affectionate P. B. S."

TO EDWARD WILLIAMS

This poem was inspired by Mary Shelley's jealousy of Jane Williams, the wife of Edward Williams, both intimate friends of the Shelleys. The following letter from Shelley to Williams (Jan 26, 1822) refers to the poem "My dear Williams. Looking over the portfolio in which my friend used to keep his verses, and in which those I sent you the other day were found, I have lit upon these, which, as they are too dismal for me to keep, I send you. If any of the stanzas should please you, you may read them to Jane, but to no one else. And yet, on second thoughts, I had rather you would not. Yours ever affectionately, P. B. S."

742. WITH A GUITAR TO JANE

Woodberry gives the following note on the poem (Cambridge ed of Shelley's Partial Works) "The suggestion for the poem is found by Dr Garnett in the fact that 'the front portion of the guitar is made of Swiss pine.' He continues 'It is now clear how the poem took shape in Shelley's mind. The actual thought of the imprisonment of the Spirit of Music in the material of the instrument suggested Ariel's penance in the cloven pine, the identification of himself with Ariel and of Jane Williams with Miranda was the easiest of feats to his brilliant imagination; and hence an allegory of unequalled grace and charm, which could never have existed if the instrument had not been partly made of pine wood. The back, it should be added, is of mahogany, the finger board of ebony, and minor portions, chiefly ornamental, of some wood not identified. It was made by Ferdinando Bottari of Pisa in 1816. Having been religiously preserved since Shelley's death, it is in as perfect condition as when made. The strings, it is said, are better than those that are produced now.

"This guitar is also in a measure the subject of another of Shelley's most beautiful lyrics, The Keen Stars Were Twinkling. In a letter dated June 18, 1822, speaking of his cruises 'in the evening wind under the summer moon,' he adds, 'Jane brings her guitar.' There is probably no other relic of a great poet so intimately associated with the arts of poetry and music, or ever will be, unless Milton's organ should turn up at a broker's or some excavating explorer should bring to light the lyre of Sappho."

TO JANE

This poem was sent in a letter to Mrs. Jane Williams. See note on preceding poem.

743.

CHARLES THE FIRST

This is an unfinished tragedy on the subject of Charles I, King of England, who was beheaded in 1649. The song given here is found in scene 5, ll 6-17. It is sung by the court fool.

A DEFENSE OF POETRY

In a letter to Peacock, dated March 21, 1821, Shelley states that this essay was written "as an antidote" to Peacock's Four Ages of Poetry. "You will see," he says, "that I have taken a more general view of poetry than you have."

743b. 22-27. Cf this sentence with Plato's The Symposium, 205 (Shelley's trans). "Poetry, which is a general name signifying every cause whereby anything proceeds from that which is not into that which is, so that the exercise of every inventive art is poetry, and all such artists poets. Yet they are not called poets, but distinguished by other names; and one portion or species of poetry, that which has relation to music and rhythm, is divided from all others, and known by the name belonging to all."

740b. 31ff. Cf this passage with Wordsworth's Preface (p 322a, 28ff) and with Aristotle's Poetics (Butcher's translation), 9, 1-3: "It is, moreover, evident from what has been said that it is not the function of the poet to relate what has happened, but what may happen,—what is possible according to the law of probability or necessity. The poet and the historian differ not by writing in verse or in prose. The work of Herodotus might be put into verse, and it would be still a species of history, with metre no less than without it. The true difference is that one relates what has happened, the other what may happen. Poetry, therefore, is a more philosophical and a higher thing than history, for poetry tends to express the universal, history the particular."

748a. 46. The passage omitted contains a historical review of European poetry and a discussion of the superiority of poetry to science and political philosophy.

749a. 32-33. Cf. with Plato's Ion 533-34 (Shelley's trans.): "For the authors of those great poems which we admire do not attain to excellence through the rules of any art, but they utter their beautiful melodies of verse in a state of inspiration, and, as it were, possessed by a spirit not their own. Thus the composers of lyrical poetry create those admired songs of theirs in a state of divine insanity, like the Corybantes, who lose all control over their reason in the enthusiasm of the sacred dance, and during this supernatural possession are excited to the rhythm and harmony which they communicate to men. . . . For a poet is indeed a thing ethereally light, winged, and sacred, nor can he compose anything worth calling poetry until he becomes inspired and, as it were mad, or whilst any reason remains in him. For whilst a man retains any portion of the thing called reason, he is utterly incompetent to produce poetry, or to vaticinate. Thus, those who declaim various and beautiful poetry upon any subject, as for instance upon Homer, are not enabled to do so by art or study, but every rhapsodist or poet, whether dithyrambic, encomiastic, choral, epic or fambic, is excellent in proportion to the extent of his participation in the divine influence and the degree in which the Muse itself has descended on him. In other respects, poets may be sufficiently ignorant and incapable. For they do not compose according to any art which they have acquired, but from the impulse of the divinity within them, for did they know any rules of criticism, according to which they could compose beautiful verses upon one subject, they would be able to exert the same faculty with respect to all or any other. The God seems purposely to have deprived all poets, prophets, and soothsayers of every particle of reason and understanding, the better to adapt them to their employment as his ministers and interpreters; and that we, their auditors, may acknowledge that those who write so beautifully are possessed, and address us inspired by the God. A presumption in favor of this opinion may be drawn from the circumstance of Tynichus the Chalcidian having composed no other poem worth mentioning except the famous poem which is in everybody's mouth,—perhaps the most beautiful of all lyrical compositions, and which he himself calls a gift of the Muses. I think you will agree with me that examples of this sort are exhibited by the God himself to prove that those beautiful poems are not human nor from man, but divine and from the Gods, and that poets are only the inspired interpreters of the Gods, each excellent in proportion to the degree of his inspiration. This example of the most beautiful of lyrics having been produced by a poet in other respects the worst seems to have been afforded as a divine evidence of the truth of this opinion."

WILLIAM SHENSTONE (1714-1763), p. 40

EDITIONS

- Poetical Works*, ed., with a Critical Dissertation, by G. Gilfillan (London, Nisbet, 1854)
Poetical Works, ed. by C. C. Clarke (London, Cassell, 1880)

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

- Howitt, W. Homes and Haunts of the Most Eminent British Poets, 2 vols. (London and New York, Routledge, 1846)
Johnson, S. The Lives of the English Poets 1779-81, 3 vols., ed. by G. B. Hill (London, Clarendon Press, 1905)
Saintsbury, G. In Ward's The English Poets, Vol. 3 (London and New York, Macmillan, 1880, 1909)

CRITICAL NOTES

40.

THE SCHOOLMISTRESS

One of the unmistakable signs of Romanticism was the reawakened interest in English literature of the past, especially in ballads, Spenser, and Milton. Although Spenser and Milton were never completely forgotten, it was not until late in the eighteenth century that their influence became a real quickening force in English poetry, by the time of Keats. English poets had caught the spirit of these masters, and had reproduced it successfully.

The early eighteenth century poets did not take Spenser very seriously. They copied his language, his meter, and his stanza, all of which they used in comic verses, parodies, and mild satires. Of the numerous Spenserian imitations which appeared between 1735 and 1775, Shenstone's The Schoolmistress and Thomson's The Castle of Indolence are the best. Neither poem was written in any serious vein, although both were admired for their own sake.

"The inimitable Schoolmistress of Shenstone is one of the felicities of genius, but the purpose of this poem has been entirely

¹ Tynichus is unknown except for this reference in Plato misconceived. The Schoolmistress of Shenstone has been admired for its simplicity and tenderness, not for its exquisitely ludicrous turn. This discovery I owe to the good fortune of possessing the original edition of The Schoolmistress, which the author printed under his own directions, and to his own fancy. To this piece of LUDICROUS ROMANCE, as he calls it, 'lest it should be mistaken,' he added a LUDICROUS INDEX, 'purely to show fools that I am in jest.' But 'the fool,' his subsequent editor, who I regret to say, was Robert Doddsley, thought proper to suppress this amusing 'ludicrous index,' and the consequence is, as the poet foresaw, that his aim has been 'mistaken.'—Dyce, in Curiosities of Literature (1791-1823)

CRITICISM

- Blackwood's Magazine*, "Life and Correspondence," March and April, 1851 (69 349, 385)
 Dawson, W. J. The Makers of English Poetry (New York and London, Revell, 1906).
 Dennis, J. Studies in English Literature (London, Stanford, 1876)
 Dowden, E. "Early Revolutionary Group and Antagonists," The French Revolution and English Literature (New York, Scribner, 1897, 1908).
Edinburgh Review, The "A Vision of Judgment," July, 1821 (35 422), "Madoc," Oct., 1805 (7 1), "Roderick," June, 1815 (25 1), "Thalaba," Oct., 1802 (1 68); "The Curse of Kehama," Feb., 1811 (17 429); "Wat Tyler," March, 1817 (28 151).
 Hazlitt, W. The Spirit of the Age (London, 1825), Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure), 4, 202.
 Lockhart, J. G.: Memoirs of the Life of Sir Walter Scott, Baronet, 10 vols (Edinburgh, 1839), 3 vols (Boston, Houghton, 1881); abridged ed., 1 vol. (New York, Crowell, 1871, London, Black, 1880, Boston, Houghton, 1901).
 Macaulay, T. B.: "Southey's Colloquies on Society," The Edinburgh Review, Jan., 1830, Critical and Historical Essays (London and New York, Longmans, 1898)
Quarterly Review, The, "Roderick," April, 1815 (13 83); "The Curse of Kehama," Feb., 1811 (5 40).
 Rawnley, H. D. Literary Associations of the English Lakes, 2 vols (Glasgow, MacLachlan, 1894, 1906).
 Robinson, H. C.: Diary, Reminiscences, and Correspondence, 3 vols., ed. by T. Sadler (London, Macmillan, 1869), 2 vols (1872, Boston, Fields, 1899, 1874)
 Saintsbury, G. Essays in English Literature, 1780-1860, Second Series (London, Dent, 1895, New York, Scribner).
 Stephen, L. "Southey's Letters," Studies of a Biographer, 4 vols (London, Duckworth, 1898-1902, New York, Putnam).
 Symonds, A. The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1900, New York, Putnam)

ROBERT SOUTHEY (1774-1843), p. 400

EDITIONS

- Poetical Works*, collected by himself, 10 vols (London, Longmans, 1837-38)
Poetical Works, with a Memoir by H. T. Tuckerman, 10 vols (Boston, Little, 1860), 10 vols in 5 (British Poets ed. Boston, Houghton, 1860).
Poems, ed. by M. H. Fitzgerald (Oxford Univ Press, 1909).
Selections from the Poems, ed. by S. R. Thompson (Canterbury Poets ed. London, Scott, 1888)
Poems, selections, ed. by E. Dowden (Golden Treasury ed. London, Macmillan, 1895)
Ballads and Other Poems, ed. by C. J. Battersby (London, Blackie, 1899)
Correspondence with Caroline Bowles, ed. by E. Dowden (London and New York, Longmans, 1881).
Letters, ed., with a Preface, by J. Dennis (New York, Macmillan, 1881)
Letters, selected and edited, with an Introduction, by M. H. Fitzgerald (World's Classics ed. Oxford Univ Press, 1912).
Select Prose, ed., with an Introduction, by J. Zeitlin (New York, Macmillan, 1916)
The Life of Nelson, ed., with an Introduction, by H. B. Butler (London, Frowde, 1911)

BIOGRAPHY

- Cottle, J. S. Reminiscences of S. T. Coleridge and Robert Southey (London, Houlston, 1847)
 De Quincey, T. "The Lake Poets," Tait's Magazine, July and August, 1839, Collected Writings, ed. Masson (London, Black, 1889-90, 1896-97), 2, 303, 335
 Dowden, E. Southey (English Men of Letters Series. London, Macmillan, 1876; New York, Harper).
 Southey, C. C. Life and Correspondence of Robert Southey, ed. in 6 vols (London, Longmans, 1849-50).

CRITICAL NOTES

"Poetical criticism, whether of his own writings or of those of others, was one of Southey's weakest points. But while egregiously deceived as to the absolute worth of his epic, he obeyed a happy instinct in selecting epic as his principal field in poetry. The gifts which he possessed—ornate description, stately diction, invention on a large scale—required an ample canvas for their display. Although the concise humor and simplicity of his lines on The Battle of Blenheim ensure it a place among the best known short poems in the language, there are not half a dozen of his lyrical pieces, some of his racy ballads excepted, that have any claim to poetic distinction.

tion."—Garnett, in Dictionary of National Biography (1898).

See Byron's English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, 189-234 (p. 488), Don Juan, Dedication (p. 377), The Vision of Judgment (p. 613), and note, p. 1226b.

Southey is caricatured in Mr Sackbut in Thomas Love Peacock's Nightmare Abbey

400. THE BATTLE OF BLENHEIM

In the Battle of Blenheim, fought at Blenheim, Bavaria, 1704, British and German allies under the Duke of Marlborough and the Austrian Prince Eugene inflicted a severe defeat upon the French and Bavarians.

401. THE OLD MAN'S COMFORTS

This poem is chiefly notable as the original of Lewis Carroll's brilliant parody in Alice's Adventures in Wonderland. Carroll's poem is as follows

"'You are old, Father William,' the young man said,
'And your hair has become very white
And yet you incessantly stand on your head—
Do you think, at your age, it is right?'

"'In my youth,' Father William replied to his son,
'I feared it would injure the brain,
But now that I'm perfectly sure I have none,
Why, I do it again and again'

"'You are old,' said the youth, 'as I mentioned before,
And have grown most uncommonly fat,
Yet you turned a back somersault in at the door—
Pray, what is the reason of that?'

"'In my youth,' said the sage, as he shook his grey locks,
'I kept all my limbs very supple
By the use of this ointment—one shilling the box—
Allow me to sell you a couple'

"'You are old,' said the youth, 'and your jaws are too weak
For anything tougher than suet,
Yet you finished the goose, with the bones and the beak
Pray, how did you manage to do it?'

"'In my youth,' said his father, 'I took to the law,
And argued each case with my wife,
And the muscular strength, which it gave to my jaw,
Has lasted the rest of my life'

"'You are old,' said the youth, 'one would hardly suppose
That your eye was as steady as ever,
Yet you balanced an eel on the end of your nose—
What made you so awfully clever?'

"'I have answered three questions, and that is enough,'
Said his father, 'don't give yourself airs'
Do you think I can listen all day to such stuff?
Be off, or I'll kick you downstairs''"

GOD'S JUDGMENT ON A WICKED BISHOP

"'Here followeth the History of Hatto, Archbishop of Mentz

"'It hapned in the year 914, that there was an exceeding great famine in Germany, at what time Otho, surnamed the Great, was Emperor, and one Hatto, once Abbot of Fulda, was Archbishop of Mentz, of the Bishops after Crescens and Crescentius the two and thirtieth, of the Archbishops after St Bonifacius the thirteenth. This Hatto, in the time of this great famine afore-mentioned, when he saw the poor people of the country exceedingly oppressed with famine, assembled a great company of them together into a barne, and, like a most accursed and merciless cattife, burnt up those poor innocent souls, that were so far from doubting any such matter, that they rather hoped to receive some comfort and relief at his hands. The reason that moved the prelat to commit that execrable impiety was, because he thought the famine would the sooner cease, if those unprofitable beggars that consumed more bread than they were worthy to eat, were dispatched out of the world. For he said that those poor folks were like to mice, that were good for nothing but to devour corne. But God Almighty, the just avenger of the poor folks' quarrel, did not long suffer this heinous tyranny, this most detestable fact, unpunished. For he mustered up an army of mice against the Archbishop, and sent them to persecute him as his furious Alastors,¹ so that they afflicted him both day and night, and would not suffer him to take his rest in any place. Whereupon the Prelate, thinking that he should be secure from the injury of mice if he were in a certain tower, that standeth in the Rhine near to the towne betook himself unto the said tower as to a safe refuge and sanctuary from his enemies, and locked himself in. But the innumerable troupes of mice chased him continually very eagerly, and swumme unto him upon the top of the water to execute the just judgment of God, and so at last he was most miserably devoured by those sillie creatures, who pursued him with such bitter hostility, that it is recorded they scraped and knawed out his very name from the walls and tapistry wherein it was written, after they had so cruelly devoured his body. Wherefore the tower wherein he was eaten up by the mice is shewn to this day, for a perpetual monument to all succeeding ages of the barbarous and inhuman tyranny of this impious Prelate, being situate in a little green island in the midst of the Rhine near to the towne of Bingen, and is commonly called in the German tongue the MOWSE-TURN.'—Coryat's Crudities, pp. 571, 572.

"Other authors who record this tale say that the Bishop was eaten by rats"—Southey's introductory note

¹ avenging spirits

403. THE CURSE OF KEHAMA

"In the religion of the Hindoos, which of all false religions is the most monstrous in its fables, and the most fatal in its effects, there is one remarkable peculiarity. Prayers, penances, and sacrifices are supposed to possess an inherent and actual value, in no degree depending upon the disposition or motive of the person who performs them. They are drafts upon Heaven, for which the Gods cannot refuse payment. The worst men, bent upon the worst designs, have in this manner obtained power which has made them formidable to the Supreme Deities themselves, and rendered an Avatar, or Incarnation of Veeshnoo the Preserver, necessary. This belief is the foundation of the following poem. The story is original, but, in all its parts, consistent with the superstition upon which it is built, and however startling the fictions may appear, they might almost be called credible when compared with the genuine tales of Hindoo mythology."—From Southey's Preface.

The poem takes its name from the following curse which Kehama, an Indian rajah, or king, pronounces upon the murderer of his son Arvalan

"I charm thy life
From the weapons of strife,
From stone and from wood,
From fire and from flood,
From the serpent's tooth,
And the beasts of blood
From Sickness I charm thee,
And Time shall not harm thee,
But Earth which is mine,
Its fruits shall deny thee,
And Water shall hear me,
And know thee and fly thee,
And the Winds shall not touch thee
When they pass by thee,
And the Dews shall not wet thee,
When they fall nigh thee
And thou shalt seek Death
To release thee, in vain,
Thou shalt live in thy pain
While Kehama shall reign,
With a fire in thy heart,
And a fire in thy brain,
And Sleep shall obey me,
And visit thee never,
And the Curse shall be on thee
For ever and ever"

—Section 2, ll 144-69

The funeral of Arvalan is celebrated in Section 1

405. THE MARCH TO MOSCOW

In this poem Southey treats satirically Napoleon's famous march to Moscow in 1812, and his unfortunate retreat after the burning of the city. The names used in the poem are said to indicate real persons. For a similar use of Russian names, cf. the following stanzas from Byron's Don Juan (7, 14-17)

The Russians now were ready to attack,
But oh, ye goddesses of War and Glory!
How shall I spell the name of each Cossack
Who were immortal, could one tell their story?

Alas! what to their memory can lack?

Achilles' self was not more grim and gory
Than thousands of this new and polished nation,
Whose names want nothing but—pronunciation

Still I'll record a few, if but to increase
Our euphony, there was Mtrongenoff, and Strokonoff,
Meknop, Serge Lwow, Arseniew of modern Greece,
And Tschitshakoff, and Roguenoff, and Chokenoff
And others of twelve consonants apiece,
And more might be found if I could poke enough
Into gazettes, but Fame (capricious strumpet),
It seems, has got an ear as well as trumpet,

And cannot tune those discords of narration,
Which may be names at Moscow, into rhyme,
Yet there were several worth commemoration,

As e'er was virgin of a nuptial chime,
Soft words too, fitted for the peroration
Of Londonderry! dawning against time
Ending in "ischkin, "ouskin, "ifskchy,"
"ouski,"
Of whom we can insert but Roussamowski

Scherematooff and Chrematooff, Koklophiti,
Koclobski Kourakin, and Mouskin Pou-kin,
All proper men of weapons, as e'er we offed high
Against a foe, or ran a sabre through skin

The poem, which Southey wrote to amuse his children, should be read as complementary to the Ode Written During the Negotiations with Buonaparte (p 406). At an early date, Southey was an ardent supporter of the French Revolution, but its excesses and failures led him finally to become a Tory.

406. ODE WRITTEN DURING THE NEGOTIATIONS WITH BUONAPARTE

Dowden characterizes this ode as "perhaps the loftiest chant of political invective, inspired by moral indignation, which our literature possesses." Southey stood erect in the presence of power which he believed to be immoral, defied it and execrated it. That he did not perceive how, in driving the ploughshare of Revolution across Europe of the old régime Napoleon was terribly accomplishing an inevitable and a beneficent work, may have been an error, but it was an error to which no blame attaches, and in his fierce indictment he states, with ample support of facts, one entire side of the case. The ode is indeed more than a poem; it is a historical document expressing the passion which filled many of the highest minds in England, and which at a later date was the justification of Saint Helena."—In Introduction to Poems by Robert Southey (Golden Treasury ed.).

¹ Robert Stewart (1769-1822), Viscount Castlereagh and Earl of Londonderry, a British statesman. See note on Lines Written during the Castlereagh Administration, p 1832b

408. MY DAYS AMONG THE DEAD ARE PAST

This poem is sometimes entitled The Scholar and In a Library. According to Cuthbert Southey (Life and Correspondence of Robert Southey, 1849), Wordsworth once remarked that these lines possessed a peculiar interest as a most true and touching representation of Southey's character. Southey's library contained nearly 14,000 volumes. His son Cuthbert says (work cited) "On some authors, such as the old divines, he 'fed,' as he expressed it, slowly and carefully, dwelling on the page, and taking in its contents deeply and deliberately, like an epicure with his wine, 'searching the subtle flavor' . . . For a considerable time after he had ceased to compose, he took pleasure in reading, and the habit continued after the power of comprehension was gone. His dearly prized books, indeed, were a pleasure to him almost to the end, and he would walk slowly round his library, looking at them and taking them down mechanically."

409. A VISION OF JUDGMENT

This is the poem which inspired Byron's more famous The Vision of Judgment (See p. 613 and note p. 1226b.) Southey's poem was written as a tribute to the memory of George III, who died in 1820. In two respects Southey stirred the wrath of the critics: he gave unstinted praise to George III as sovereign and man, and he wrote the poem in dactylic hexameter measure. The incidents of the poem appear to the author in a trance. In the portion of the poem omitted before the selection given here, George III is summoned before the Judgment throne where testimony is heard from his accusers and his abolvers. The Spirit of Washington has just stated that George III

"didst act with upright heart, as befitting a sovereign
True to his sacred trust, to his crown, his kingdom, and people"

410. THE (ATA)RACT OF LODORÉ

Lodore is a famous cascade in the Derwent River, Cumberlandshire, England. See Gray's description of it in his Journal in the Lakes, Oct. 3, 1769 (p. 74a, 16-16).

The origin of this poem is thus given in a letter by Southey to his brother Thomas, dated Oct. 18, 1800: "I hope . . . you will approve of a description of the water at Lodore, made originally for Edith, and greatly admired by Herbert. In my mind it surpasses any that the tourists have yet printed. Thus it runs—'Tell the people how the water comes down at Lodore? Why it comes thundering, and floundering, and thumping, and bumping, and bumping, and jumping, and hissing, and whizzing, and dripping, and skipping, and grumbling, and rumbling, and tumbling, and falling, and bawling, and dashing, and clashing, and splashing, and pouring, and roaring, and whirling, and curling, and leaping, and creeping, and sounding, and bounding, and clattering, and chattering, with a dreadful uproar,—and that way the water comes down at Lodore!'"

411. THE LIFE OF NELSON

Southey's The Life of Nelson was written to furnish young seamen with a simple narrative of the exploits of England's greatest naval hero. It is usually regarded not only as the best of Southey's works, but as the best biography of its day, and as a model of directness and simplicity.

JAMES THOMSON (1700-1748), p. 18

EDITIONS

- Poetical Works*, 2 vols., ed. by B. Dobell (London, Reeves, 1885)
Poetical Works, 2 vols., ed. by D. C. Tovey (Aldine ed. London, Bell, 1897; New York, Macmillan)
Complete Poetical Works, ed. by J. L. Robertson (Oxford Univ. Press, 1908)
The Seasons, The Castle of Indolence, and Other Poems, 2 vols., ed. with a Critical Study by E. Gosse, by H. D. Roberts (Muses' Library ed. London, Routledge, 1906; New York, Dutton)

BIOGRAPHY

- Bayne, W. James Thomson (Famous Scots Series, Edinburgh, Oliphant, 1898)
 Johnson, S. The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81), 3 vols., ed. by G. B. Hill (London, Clarendon Press, 1905)
 Macaulay, G. C. James Thomson (English Men of Letters Series, London and New York, Macmillan, 1908).
 Morel, Léon. James Thomson sa vie et ses œuvres (Paris, Hachette, 1895)

CRITICISM

- Cory, H. E. "Spenser, Thomson, and Romanticism," Publications of the Modern Language Association, March, 1911 (n. s. 19: 51)
 Douglas, G. B. S. Scottish Poetry (New York, Macmillan, 1911)
 Hazlitt, W. Lectures on the English Poets (London, 1818), Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06; New York, McClure), 5, 85
 Shairp, J. C. "Return to Nature Begun by Allan Ramsay and Thomson," On Poetic Interpretation of Nature (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1877; New York, Hurd, 1878; Boston, Houghton, 1885)

CRITICAL NOTES

"Thomson was blessed with a strong and copious fancy, he hath enriched poetry with a variety of new and original images, which he painted from nature itself and from his own actual observations:

his descriptions have therefore a distinctness and truth, which are utterly wanting to those of poets who have only copied from each other and have never looked abroad on the objects themselves. Thomson was accustomed to wander away into the country for days and for weeks, attentive to 'each rural sight, each rural sound,' while many a poet who has dwelt for years in the Strand has attempted to describe fields and rivers and generally succeeded accordingly. Hence that nauseous repetition of the same circumstances, hence that disgusting impropriety of introducing what may be called a set of hereditary images, without proper regard to the age or climate or occasion in which they were formerly used. Though the diction of The Seasons is sometimes harsh and inharmonious, and sometimes turgid and obscure, and though in many instances the numbers are not sufficiently diversified by different pauses, yet is this poem on the whole, from the numberless strokes of nature in which it abounds, one of the most captivating and amusing in our language, and which, as its beauties are not of a transitory kind, as depending on particular customs and manners, will ever be perused with delight"—Joseph Warton, in his Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope (1756).

18.

THE SEASONS

"The Seasons shows that as far as intrinsic worth is concerned the poems are marked with a strange mingling of merits and defects, but that considered in their historical place in the development of the poetry of nature their importance and striking originality can hardly be overstated. Though Thomson talked the language of his day, his thought was a new one. He taught clearly, though without emphasis, the power of nature to quiet the passions and elevate the mind of man, and he intimated a deeper thought of divine immanence in the phenomena of nature. But his great service to the men of his day was that he shut up their books, led them out of their parks, and taught them to look on nature with enthusiasm."—Myra Reynolds, in The Treatment of Nature in English Poetry between Pope and Wordsworth (1896).

The parts of this poem were first published separately in the order—Winter, Summer, Spring, Autumn. They were afterwards arranged in logical order. The poem is reminiscent of Milton and Spenser. That Thomson was consciously at variance with the prevailing school of early 18th century poetry may be seen from the following extract from his Preface to the second edition of Winter (1726). "Nothing can have a better influence towards the revival of poetry than the choosing of great and serious subjects, such as at once amuse the fancy, enlighten the head, and warm the heart. These give a weight and dignity to the poem; nor is the pleasure—I should say rapture—both the writer and the reader feels unwarranted by reason or followed by repentant disgust. To be able to write on a dry, barren theme is looked upon by some as the sign of a happy, fruitful genius—fruitful indeed! like one of the pendant gardens in Cheapside, watered every morning by the hand of the Alderman himself. And what are we commonly entertained with on these occasions save forced unaffecting fancies, little glittering prettinesses, mixed turns of wit and expression, which are as widely different from native poetry as buffoonery is from the perfection of human thinking? A genius fired with the charms of truth and nature is tuned to a sublimer pitch, and scorns to associate with such subjects . . .

"I know no subject more elevating, more amusing, more ready to awake the poetical enthusiasm, the philosophical reflection, and the moral sentiment, than the works of nature. Where can we meet with such variety, such beauty, such magnificence? All that enlarges and transports the soul! What more inspiring than a calm, wide survey of them? In every dress nature is greatly charming—whether she puts on the crimson robes of the morning, the strong effulgence of noon, the sober suit of the evening, or the deep shades of blackness and tempest! How gay looks the spring! how glorious the summer! how pleasing the autumn! and how venerable the winter!—But there is no thinking of these things without breaking out into poetry, which is, by-the-by, a plain and undeniable argument of their superior excellence.

"For this reason the best, both ancient, and modern, poets have been passionately fond of retirement, and solitude. The wild romantic country was their delight. And they seem never to have been more happy, than when, lost in unfrequented fields, far from the little busy world, they were at leisure, to meditate, and sing the works of nature."

19a. Note. For an account of the conditions in jails and prisons in the early 18th century, see Lecky's A History of England in the Eighteenth Century (New York, Appleton, 1887), 6, 255ff.

22. 1004-29. With these lines of the following lyric from Tennyson's The Princess, 4, 21-40.

Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean,
Tears from the depth of some divine despair
Rise in the heart, and gather to the eyes,
In looking on the happy autumn-fields,
And thinking of the days that are no more.

Fresh as the first beam glittering on a sail,
That brings our friends up from the underworld,
Sad as the last which reddens over one
That sinks with all we love below the verge;
So sad, so fresh, the days that are no more.

Ah, sad and strange as in dark summer dawns
The earliest pipe of half-awaken'd birds
To dying ears, when unto dying eyes
The casement slowly grows a glimmering square;
So sad, so strange, the days that are no more

Dear as remember'd kisses after death
And sweet as those by hopeless fancy feign'd
On lips that are for others, deep as love,
Deep as first love, and wild with all regret;
O Death in Life, the days that are no more.

24.

THE CASTLE OF INDOLENCE

"This poem being writ in the manner of Spenser, the obsolete words, and a simplicity of diction in some of the lines which borders on the ludicrous, were necessary to make the imitation more perfect. And the style of that admirable poet, as well as the measure in which he wrote, are as it were appropriated by custom to all allegorical poems writ in our language—just as in French the style of Marot, who lived under Francis I, has been used in tales and familiar epistles by the politest writers of the age of Louis XIV"—Thomson's prefatory Advertisement.

"The last piece that he lived to publish was The Castle of Indolence, which was many years under his hand but was at last finished with great accuracy. The first canto opens a scene of lazy luxury that fills the imagination"—Samuel Johnson, in "Thomson," The Lives of the English Poets (1770-81).

"It is an exquisite masterpiece, with not a grain of perishable matter in it. Completely free from all of Thomson's usual faults and less pleasing peculiarities, it is fresh, terse, and natural, perfectly melodious, and has a charming humor rarely displayed by the author in his other pieces"—F J Child, in Advertisement to Poetical Works of James Thomson (1863).

See note on Shenstone's The Schoolmistress, p. 1343b.

25. 10-19. Cf this stanza with the following from The Fair Quene, I, 1, 34

A little lowly hermitage it was,
Downe in a dale, hard by a forest's side,
Far from resort of people that did pas
In travell to and froe a little wyde
There was an holv chappell edifyde,
Wherin the hermite dewly wont to say
His holv thinges each morne and eventyde,
Therby a cristall streame did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountaine welled forth allway.

29. 261. This line is a typical example of the 18th century habit of circumlocution
262-70. "I cannot at present recollect any solitude so romantic, or peopled with beings so proper to the place and the spectator. The mind naturally loves to lose itself in one of these wildernesses, and to forget the hurry, the noise, and splendor of more polished life"—Joseph Warton, in An Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope (1750)

32.

TO AMANDA

Amanda was Miss Elizabeth Young, daughter of Captain Gilbert Young of Dumfriesshire, Scotland. Thomson was devoted to her for several years, but she finally married a Mr. Campbell.

HORACE WALPOLE (1717-1797), p. 100

* EDITIONS

- Works*, 9 vols (1798 1825)
The Castle of Otranto (1705, London, Cassell, 1886).
The Castle of Otranto (New York, Alden, 1889)
The Castle of Otranto, in The English Novel before the Nineteenth Century, ed by Anette Hopkins and Helen Hughes (Boston, Ginn, 1915)
Last Journals Memoirs of the Reign of George IV from 1771 to 1783, 2 vols, ed by A F Stewart (London and New York, Lane, 1909)
Letters, 9 vols, ed by P Cunningham (London, Bohn, 1857-59, Bentley, 1880)
Letters, 10 vols, ed by Mrs Paget Toynbee (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1903)
Letters, selections, 2 vols, ed by C D Yonge (London, Unwin, 1889; Sonnenschein, 1891)
Some Unpublished Letters, ed by Sir S Walpole (London, Longmans, 1902)
Letters, selections, ed by C B Lucas (London, Newnes, 1904, New York, Scribner)

BIOGRAPHY

- Bellot-Lowndes, M "Madame Du Deffand and Horace Walpole," The Quarterly Review, April, 1913 (218 513).
Dobson, A Horace Walpole, A Memoir (New York, Harper, 1890, 1910)
Greenwood, Alice D Horace Walpole's World (London, Bell, 1913, New York, Macmillan).
Havens, M A Horace Walpole and the Strawberry Hill Press (Canton, Penn, Kirgate Press, 1901)
Morley, J Walpole (Twelve English Statesmen Series London, Macmillan, 1889)

CRITICISM

- Becker, C "Walpole's Memoirs of the Reign of George the Third," American Historical Review, Jan and April, 1911 (10 255, 490)
Dobson, A "A Day at Strawberry Hill," Eighteenth Century Vignettes, First Series (London, Chatto, 1892, New York, Dodd)
Dobson, A "Officina Arbuteana," Eighteenth Century Vignettes, Third Series (New York, Dodd, 1896).
Macaulay, T B The Edinburgh Review, Oct, 1833, Critical and Historical Essays (London and New York, Longmans, 1898)
More, P E "The Letters of Horace Walpole," Shelburne Essays, Fourth Series (New York and London Putnam, 1906).
Pearson, N "Neglected Aspects of Walpole," The Fortnightly Review, Sept, 1909 (92 482).

CRITICAL NOTES

100.

THE CASTLE OF OTRANTO

On the Title-Page of the first edition, Walpole stated that The Castle of Otranto was "a Story, translated by William Marshal, Gent, from the original Italian of Onuphrio Muralto, Canon of the Church of St. Nicholas at Otranto."

The following account of the story is from Walpole's Preface to the first edition (1765):

"The following work was found in the library of an ancient Catholic family in the north of England. It was printed at Naples, in the black letter, in the year 1529. How much sooner it was written does not appear. The principal incidents are such as were believed in the darkest ages of Christianity, but the language and conduct have nothing that savors of barbarism. The style is the purest Italian. . .

"If the story was written near the time when it is supposed to have happened, it must have been between 1095, the era of the first Crusade, and 1248, the date of the last, or not long afterwards. There is no other circumstance in the work that can lead us to guess at the period in which the scene is laid, the names of the actors are evidently fictitious, and probably disguised on purpose. . .

"Miracles, visions, necromancy, dreams, and other preternatural events, are exploded now even from romances. That was not the case when our author wrote, much less when the story itself is supposed to have happened. Belief in every kind of prodigy was so established in those dark ages, that an author would not be faithful to the manners of the times, who would omit all mention of them. He is not bound to believe them himself, but he must represent his actors as believing them.

"If this air of the miraculous is excused, the reader will find nothing else unworthy of his perusal. Allow the possibility of the facts, and all the actors comport themselves as persons would do in their situation. There is no bombast, no similes, flowers, digressions, or unnecessary descriptions. Everything tends directly to the catastrophe. Never is the reader's attention relaxed. The rules of the drama are almost observed throughout the conduct of the piece. The characters are well drawn, and still better maintained. Terror, the author's principal engine, prevents the story from ever languishing, and it is so often contrasted by pity, that the mind is kept up in a constant vicissitude of interesting passions. . .

"Though the machinery is invention, and the names of the actors imaginary, I cannot but believe that the groundwork of the story is founded on truth. The scene is undoubtedly laid in some real castle. The author seems frequently, without design, to describe particular parts. 'The chamber,' says he, 'on the right hand,' 'the door on the left hand,' 'the distance from the chapel to Conrad's apartment,' these and other passages are strong presumptions that the author had some certain building in his eye. Curious persons, who have leisure to employ in such researches, may possibly discover in the Italian writers the foundation on which our author has built. If a catastrophe, at all resembling that which he describes, is believed to have given rise to this work, it will contribute to interest the reader, and will make The Castle of Otranto a still more moving story."

Walpole acknowledged the authorship of the story, in the Preface to the second edition (1765), and gave further comment on the work, as follows: "It was an attempt to blend the two kinds of romance, the ancient and the modern. In the former, all was imagination and improbability; in the latter, nature is always intended to be, and sometimes has been, copied with success. Invention has not been wanting, but the great resources of fancy have been dammed up by a strict adherence to common life."

The origin of the romance is given by Walpole in a Letter to the Rev. William Cole, dated March 9, 1765. "I had time to write but a short note with The Castle of Otranto, as your messenger called on me at four o'clock, as I was going to dine abroad. Your partiality to me and Strawberry have, I hope, inclined you to excuse the wildness of the story. You will even have found some traits to put you in mind of this place. When you read of the picture quitting its panel, did not you recollect the portrait of Lord Falkland, all in white, in my gallery? Shall I even confess to you, what was the origin of this romance? I waked one morning, in the beginning of last June, from a dream, of which, all I could recover was that I had thought myself in an ancient castle (a very natural dream for a head filled like mine with Gothic story), and that on the uppermost bannister of a great staircase I saw a gigantic hand in armor. In the evening I sat down, and began to write, without knowing in the least what I intended to say or relate. The work grew on my hand, and I grew fond of it—add that I was very glad to think of anything, rather than politics. In short, I was so engrossed with my tale, which I completed in less than two months, that one evening I wrote from the time I had drunk my tea, about six o'clock, till half an hour after one in the morning, when my hand and fingers were so weary that I could not hold the pen to finish the sentence, but left Matilda and Isabella talking, in the middle of a paragraph. You will laugh at my earnestness, but if I have amused you by retracing with any fidelity the manners of ancient days, I am content, and give you leave to think me as idle as you please."

JOSEPH WARTON (1722-1800), p. 80

EDITIONS

Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope, 2 vols. (1765-82, London, Cadell, 1800)

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

Chalmers, A. The Life of Dr. Joseph Warton, in Chalmers's English Poets (London, 1810),

Dennis, J.: "The Wartons," Studies in English Literature (London, Stanford, 1876)

Pattison, M.: "Pope and His Editors," Essays, 1854-88, 2 vols., ed. by H. Nettlehip (Oxford, Oxford Warehouse, 1889)

CRITICAL NOTES

See Gray's Letter to Wharton, Dec 27, 1746, in note on Collins, p 1244b

84.

ODE TO FANCY

"The public has been so much accustomed of late to didactic poetry alone, and essays on moral subjects, that any work where the imagination is much indulged, will perhaps not be relished or regarded. The author therefore of these pieces is in some pain lest certain austere critics should think them too fanciful or descriptive. But as he is convinced that the fashion of moralizing in verse has been carried too far, and as he looks upon invention and imagination to be the chief faculties of a poet, so he will be happy if the following odes may be looked upon as an attempt to bring back poetry into its right channel."—From Warton's prefatory Advertisement to Odes, published in 1746

The Ode to Fancy is imitative of Il Penseroso

THOMAS WARTON (1728-1790), p. 75

EDITIONS

Poetical Works, 2 vols., ed. with a Memoir, by R. Mant (Oxford, Rivington, 1802)

Observations on the Fairy Queen of Spenser, 2 vols. (1754, 1807)

The History of English Poetry, 3 vols. (1774-81, London, Ward and Lock, 1870); 4 vols., ed. by W. C. Hazlitt (London, Tegg, 1871, 1875)

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

Chalmers, A. The Life of Thomas Warton, B. D., in Chalmers's British Poets (London, 1810)

Dennis, J. "The Wartons," Studies in English Literature (London, Stanford, 1876)

Ker, W. P. Thomas Warton (Oxford Univ. Press, 1911)

Binaker, Clarissa. "Thomas Warton and the Historical Method in Literary Criticism," Publications of the Modern Language Association, March, 1915 (n. s. 23 79).

Binaker, Clarissa. Thomas Warton. A Biographical and Critical Study (Univ. of Illinois Press, 1916).

CRITICAL NOTES

"Warton's work is of interest because of the many attractive details scattered through his poems, but there is little unity of effect. The general impression is that he saw Nature first through Milton's eyes, and that when he afterward made many charming discoveries for himself he tried to express them in the Il Penseroso manner.—Myra Reynolds, in The Treatment of Nature in English Poetry between Pope and Wordsworth (1896).

75.

THE PLEASURES OF MELANCHOLY

With regard to title and subject, cf. this poem with Akenside's The Pleasures of the Imagination (p 44), Rogers's The Pleasures of Memory (p 207), and Campbell's The Pleasures of Hope (p 417). With regard to subject it should be compared with Il Penseroso.

76

ODE ON THE APPROACH OF SUMMER

In form and language, this poem is a close imitation of L'Allegro

77.

THE CRUSADE

"King Richard the First, celebrated for his achievements in the Crusades, was no less distinguished for his patronage of the Provençal minstrel, and his own compositions in their species of poetry. Returning from one of his expeditions in the Holy Land, in disguise, he was imprisoned in a castle of Leopold, Duke of Austria. His favorite minstrel, Blondel de Nesle, having traversed all Germany in search of his master, at length came to a castle, in which he found there was only one prisoner, and whose name was unknown. Suspecting that he had made the desired discovery, he seated himself under a window of the prisoner's apartment, and began a song, or ode, which the King and himself had formerly composed together. When the prisoner, who was King Richard, heard the song, he knew that Blondel must be the singer, and when Blondel paused about the middle, the King began the remainder and completed it. The following ode is supposed to be this joint composition of the minstrel and King Richard."—Warton's prefatory Advertisement

WRITTEN IN A BLANK LEAF OF DUGDALE'S MONASTICON

The Monasticon Anglicanum of Sir William Dugdale (1605-86) is a treatise on English Monasteries. It was published in three volumes (1655-73).

78.

WRITTEN AT STONEHENGE

In this sonnet, Warton summarizes several legends concerning the origin and meaning of Stonehenge, the celebrated prehistoric stone monument on Salisbury Plain, Wiltshire, England.

79.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE FAIRY QUEEN OF SPENSER

The selections here printed are taken from the second edition, 1762.

JOHN WILSON ("Christopher North") (1785-1854), p. 1153

EDITIONS

- Works*, 12 vols., ed. by J. F. Ferrier (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1865-68)
Essays, Critical and Imaginative, 4 vols., ed. by J. F. Ferrier (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1866)
Noctes Ambrosianæ, 4 vols., ed. by J. F. Ferrier (Edinburgh, Blackwood 1864), 5 vols., ed. by R. S. Mackenzie (New York, Widdleton, 1872)
The Recreations of Christopher North, 2 vols (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1864)

BIOGRAPHY

- Douglas, G. P. S. The Blackwood Group (Famous Scots Series) Edinburgh, Oliphant, 1897)
 Gordon, Mary. Christopher North 4 Memoir, 2 vols (Edinburgh, Edmonstone, 1862)

CRITICISM

- Le Fèvre Deumier, J. Célébrités Anglaises (Paris, Didot, 1895).
 McCosh, J. The Scottish Philosophy (London, Macmillan, 1874, New York, Carter, 1875)
 Rawnsley, H. D. Literary Associations of the English Lakes, 2 vols (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1894, 1906)
 Saintsbury, G. Essays in English Literature, 1780-1860, First Series (London, Percival, 1890, New York, Scribner)
 Thomson, James. Biographical and Critical Studies (London, Reeves, 1896)
 Walker, H. The English Essay and Essayists, ch. 9 (London, Dent, 1915, New York, Dutton)
 Winchester, C. T. A Group of English Essayists of the Early Nineteenth Century (New York, Macmillan, 1910)

CRITICAL NOTES

"Poetry, sport, and revelry were three fountains of inexhaustible inspiration; and it was from an intimate blending of the most vivid joys of all three that his most original and lasting work proceeded. Tavern meetings with good cheer and good society, long tramps among the heathery glens—"glorious guffawing," as the Wilsonian Hogg put it, "all night, and immeasurable murder all day,"—were the elements which, sung across the rich refracting medium of his imagination, evolved those unique compounds of poetry, wit, humor, drama, high spirits, and balderdash—the Noctes Ambrosianæ—Herford, in The Age of Wordsworth (1897)

ANNE FINCH, COUNTESS OF WINCHILSEA (1661-1720), p. 1

EDITIONS

- Poems*, ed., with an Introduction, by Myra Reynolds (Univ. of Chicago Press, 1908).

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

- Dowden, E. "Noble Authoress," Essays, Modern and Elizabethan (New York, Dutton, 1910)
 Gosse, E. "Lady Winchilsea's Poems," Gossip in a Library (London, Heinemann, 1891)
 Reynolds, Myra. The Treatment of Nature in English Poetry between Pope and Wordsworth (Univ. of Chicago Press, 1896, 1909).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Reynolds, Myra. In her edition of The Poems of Anne, Countess of Winchilsea (1908).

CRITICAL NOTES

"It is remarkable that, excepting the Nocturnal Reverie of Lady Winchilsea and a passage or two in the Windsor Forest of Pope, the poetry of the period intervening between the publication of the Paradise Lost and The Mænons does not contain a single new image of external nature, and scarcely presents a familiar one from which it can be inferred that the eye of the poet had been steadily fixed upon his object, much less that his feelings had urged him to work upon it in the spirit of genuine imagination."—Wordsworth, in Essay, Supplementary to the Preface (1815)

"In general feeling an Augustan, with an undercurrent of real love for nature. It is in her fondness for country life, her love of outdoor beauty, and her accurate descriptions of nature, that she differs from her contemporaries. In these important points, she may certainly be classed as reactionary in tendency. Her octosyllabic ode To the Nightingale has true lyric quality, and her short poems The Tree and A Nocturnal Reverie are notable expressions of nature-worship"—Phipps, in The Beginning of the English Romantic Movement (1898).

1.

THE TREE

This poem was first published by Miss Reynolds in The Poems of Anne, Countess of Winchilsea (1903)

THE PETITION FOR AN ABSOLUTE RETREAT

- The meter of this poem is that of L'Allegro
 2. 59. "Josephus says that every Monday Solomon went to the House of Lebanon in an open chariot, cloth'd in a robe most dazzling white, which makes that allusion not improper, and may give us grounds to believe that the lily mention'd by our Savior (compar'd to Solomon in his glory) might really be the common white lily, altho' the commentators seem in doubt what flowers are truly meant by the lilies, as thinking the plain lily not gay enough for the comparison, whereas this garment is noted by Josephus to be wonderfully beautiful tho' only white, nor can any flower, I believe, have a greater lustre than the common white lily."—Lady Winchilsea's note
 89. "These circumstances are related by Plutarch in his Life of Sylla."—Lady Win-children's note The passage referred to is as follows.

"At Fidentia, also, Marcus Lucullus, one of Sylla's commanders, reposed such confidence in the forwardness of the soldiers as to dare to face fifty cohorts of the enemy with only sixteen of his own, but because many of them were unarmed, delayed the onset. As he stood thus waiting and considering with himself, a gentle gale of wind, bearing along with it from the neighboring meadows a quantity of flowers, scattered them down upon the army, on whose shields and helmets they settled and arranged themselves spontaneously so as to give the soldiers, in the eyes of the enemy, the appearance of being crowned with chaplets. Upon this, being yet further animated, they joined battle and victoriously slaying eight thousand men, took the camp"—See 27, 10 20, Dryden's translation

For other marvels attending the campaign of Lucullus, see Plutarch's Life of Lucullus.

TO THE NIGHTINGALE

12-13. Cf Shelley's To a Skylark, 90 (p. 70). "Our sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest thought" See also Lamb's Letter to Wordsworth, quoted in notes, p 1290b, line 6

CHARLES WOLFE (1791-1823), p. 432

EDITIONS

Remains of the Rev Charles Wolfe, 2 vols., ed by J A Russell (Dublin, Watson, 1825, 1829)
The Burial of Sir John Moore, and Other Poems, ed., with an Introductory Memoir, by C I. Falkiner (London, Sidgwick, 1909)

CRITICAL NOTES

432. THE BURIAL OF SIR JOHN MOORE

Sir John Moore (1761-1809) was a British general who was killed in the Battle of Corunna (Spain) against the French. He had the reputation of being the best trainer of men that the British army ever had. Wolfe's poem is said to be based on the following paragraph, which appeared in The Edinburgh Annual Register, 1808

"Sir John Moore had often said that if he was killed in battle he wished to be buried where he fell. The body was removed at midnight to the citadel of Corunna. A grave was dug for him on the rampart there, by a party of the 9th Regiment, the Alde de Camp attending by turns. No coffin could be procured, and the officers of his staff wrapped his body, dressed as it was, in a military cloak and blankets. The interment was hastened for, about eight in the morning, some firing was heard, and the officers feared that if a serious attack was made, they should be ordered away, and not suffered to pay him their last duty. The officers of his regiment bore him to the grave, the funeral service was read by the chaplain; and the corpse was covered with earth."

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH (1770-1850), p. 223

EDITIONS

- Poetical Works*, 6 vols. (Centenary ed. London, Moxon, 1870)
Poetical Works, 11 vols., ed., with a Life by W Knight (London, Simpkin, 1882-89), 8 vols. (London, Paterson, 1896, New York, Macmillan)
Complete Poetical Works, with an Introduction by J Morley (Globe ed. London and New York, Macmillan, 1888, 1905)
Poetical Works, 7 vols., ed., with a Memoir, by E Dowden (Aldine ed. London, Bell, 1892-93, New York, Macmillan)
Poetical Works, 5 vols., ed., with an Introduction, by T. Hutchinson (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1895)
Poetical Works, ed. by T. Hutchinson (Oxford Univ. Press, 1896, 1911)
Complete Poetical Works, ed., with a Biographical Sketch, by A J George (Cambridge ed. Boston, Houghton, 1904)
Poems, 3 vols., ed., with an Introduction, by N C Smith (London, Methuen, 1908)
Selections, ed. by W Knight (London, Paul, 1889)
Poems, selections, ed. by E Dowden (Athenaeum Press ed. Boston, Ginn, 1897)
Poems, selections, ed., with an Introduction by S A Brooke, illustrated by E H New (London, Methuen, 1907)
Lyrical Ballads, a Reprint ed. by E Dowden (London, Nutt, 1891, 1894), ed. by T Hutchinson (London, Duckworth, 1898, 1907), ed. by H Littledale (Oxford Univ. Press, 1911)
Poems of 1807, a Reprint, ed. by T Hutchinson (London, Nutt, 1897)
Prose Works, 3 vols., ed. by A B Gossart (London, Moxon, 1876)
Prose Works, 2 vols., ed. by W. Knight (Eversley ed. London and New York, Macmillan, 1896)
Prefaces and Essays on Poetry, ed., with an Introduction, by A J George (Boston, Heath, 1892)
Prefaces, with Coleridge's Chapters on Wordsworth in Biographia Literaria, ed. by A J George (Belles Lettres ed.: Boston, Heath, 1906)
Literary Criticism, ed., with an Introduction by N C Smith (London, Frowde, 1906)
Guide to the Lakes, ed., with an Introduction, by E de Sélingourt (Oxford Univ. Press, 1906, 1908)
Letters of the Wordsworth Family from 1787 to 1855, 3 vols., ed. by W A Knight (Boston and London, Ginn, 1907)
The Prelude, ed., with a Preface by A J George (Boston, Heath, 1888, 1900)

BIOGRAPHY

- Bensusan, S. L. William Wordsworth His Homes and Haunts (New York, Dodge, 1912)
- Cottle, J. Early Recollections of S T Coleridge, 2 vols. (London, Houlston, 1837, 1847)
- De Quincey, T. "The Lake Poets," Tait's Magazine, Jan.-Aug., 1839; Collected Writings, ed. Masson (London, Black, 1889-90, 1896-97), 2, 229, 303, 335
- Eagleton, A. J. "Wordsworth, Coleridge, and the Spy," The Nineteenth Century, Aug., 1908 (64 300)
- Fields, J. T. Yesterdays With Authors (Boston, Houghton, 1872)
- Harper, G. M. William Wordsworth, 2 vols (New York, Scribner, 1916)
- Hazlitt, W. "My First Acquaintance with Poets," The Liberal, 1823, Collected Works, ed Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure), 12, 259
- Howitt, W. Homes and Haunts of the Most Eminent British Poets (London, 1847, 1856, Routledge, 1894, New York, Dutton).
- Knight, W. A. Coleridge and Wordsworth in the West Country (New York, Scribner, 1914)
- Knight, W. A. The Life of William Wordsworth, 3 vols (London, Paterson, 1889, New York, Macmillan, 1896).
- Knight, W. A. Through the Wordsworth Country (London, Allen, 1906).
- Lee, E. Dorothy Wordsworth (New York, Dodd, 1887)
- Legouis, E. La Jeunesse de William Wordsworth, 1770-98 (Paris, 1896). English translation by J. W. Mathews, as The Early Life of William Wordsworth (London, Dent, 1897)
- Moorhouse, E. H. Wordsworth (Chicago, Browne, 1913).
- Myers, F. W. H. Wordsworth (English Men of Letters Series: London, Macmillan, 1861; New York, Harper).
- Punch, C. Wordsworth An Introduction to his Life and Works (London, Allman, 1907)
- Rannie, D. W. Wordsworth and His Circle (New York, Putnam, 1907)
- Rawnsley, H. D. Literary Associations of the English Lakes, 2 vols (Glasgow, MacLehose, 1894, 1906).
- Robinson, H. C. Diary, Reminiscences, and Correspondence, 3 vols, ed. by T. Sadler (London, Macmillan, 1869); 2 vols. (1872, Boston, Fields, 1869, 1874).
- Southey, C. C. The Life and Correspondence of Robert Southey, ed. in 6 vols. (London, Longmans, 1849-50).
- Stephen, L. "Wordsworth's Youth," Studies of a Biographer, 4 vols (London, Duckworth, 1898-1902, New York, Putnam).
- Wordsworth, C. Memoirs of William Wordsworth, 2 vols. (London, Moxon, 1851).
- Wordsworth, Dorothy: Journals, 2 vols., ed by W. A. Knight (London and New York, Macmillan, 1897).
- Wordsworth, D. Recollections of a Tour Made in Scotland, ed by J. C. Shairp (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1875, 1894).
- Wordsworth, W.: Letters, Prefaces, The Prelude.

CRITICISM

- Arnold, M. Essays in Criticism, Second Series (London and New York, Macmillan, 1888)
- Bagehot, W. "Wordsworth, Tennyson, and Browning," The National Review, Nov., 1864, Literary Studies, 3 vols, ed. by H. H. Hutton (London, Longmans, 1878-79, 1895).
- Bonig, K. William Wordsworth im Urteil seiner Zeit (Leipzig, 1906).
- Bradley, A. C. English Poetry and German Philosophy in the Age of Wordsworth (Manchester, Sherratt, 1909)
- Bradley, A. C. Oxford Lectures on Poetry (London, Macmillan, 1909, 1911)
- Brandes, G. Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature, Vol 4 (London, Heinemann, 1905, New York, Macmillan, 1906)
- Brimley, G. Essays (London, Macmillan, 1858, 1882).
- Brooke, S. A. Theology in the English Poets (London, King, 1874, New York, Dutton, 1910).
- Buck, P. M. "The Beginnings of Romanticism in England—Wordsworth," Social Forces in Modern Literature (Boston, Ginn, 1913)
- Burroughs, J. Fresh Fields (Boston, Houghton, 1885)
- Caird, E. Essays on Literature and Philosophy (New York, Macmillan, 1892, 1909)
- Church, R. W. Dante and Other Essays (New York, Macmillan, 1888).
- Coleridge, S. T. Biographia Literaria (1817), 2 vols., ed by J. Shawcross (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1907), chaps 5, 14, 17-22
- Cooper, L. "A Glance at Wordsworth's Reading," Modern Language Notes, March and April, 1907 (22 83, 110).
- Dawson, W. J. The Makers of English Poetry (New York and London, Revell, 1906)
- De Quincey, T. "On Wordsworth's Poetry," Tait's Magazine, 1845, Collected Writings, ed Masson (London, Black, 1889-90, 1896-97), 11, 204.
- De Vere, A. Essays, Chiefly on Poetry, 2 vols (London and New York, Macmillan, 1887).
- Dicey, A. V. "Wordsworth and the War," The Nineteenth Century, May, 1915 (77 1041)
- Dowden, E. "Recovery and Reaction," The French Revolution and English Literature (New York and London, Scribner, 1897, 1908).
- Dowden, E. "The Prose Works of Wordsworth," Studies in Literature, 1789-1877 (London, Paul, 1878, 1906)
- Dowden, E. "The Text of Wordsworth's Poems," Transcripts and Studies (London, Paul, 1888, 1910).
- Dunne, M. A.: "Wordsworthian Theory of Solitude," American Catholic Quarterly, Oct., 1911 (36 610)
- Gingerich, S. F.: Wordsworth, Tennyson, and Browning a Study in Human Freedom (Ann Arbor, Wahr, 1911)
- Harper, G. M. "Rousseau, Godwin, and Wordsworth," The Atlantic Monthly, May, 1912 (109 639).

- Haslitt, W. "On the Living Poets," Lectures on the English Poets (London, 1818), "Mr. Wordsworth," The Spirit of the Age (London, 1825): Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure), 5, 156, 4, 270.
- Horne, R. H. "William Wordsworth and Leigh Hunt," A New Spirit of the Age (London, Smith, 1844).
- Hudson, H. N. Studies in Wordsworth (Boston, Little, 1884).
- Hutton, R. H. "Dorothy Wordsworth's Scotch Journal," "Mr Morley on Wordsworth," "Wordsworth the Man," Brief Literary Criticisms (London, Macmillan, 1906).
- Hutton, R. H. "The Genius of Wordsworth," Literary Essays (London, Strahan, 1871; Macmillan, 1888, 1908).
- Jack, A. A. "Wordsworth (Basic or Elemental Poetry)," Poetry and Prose (London, Constable, 1911).
- Jeffrey, F. Criticisms in The Edinburgh Review: "Memorials of a Tour on the Continent," Nov., 1822 (37 449), "Poems," Oct., 1807 (11 214), "The Excursion," Nov., 1814 (24 1), "The White Doe of Rylstone," Oct., 1815 (25 355).
- Johnson, C. F. Three Americans and Three Englishmen (New York, Whitaker, 1886).
- Ker, W. P. In Chambers's Cyclopædia of English Literature, 3 vols. (Philadelphia, Lippincott, 1902-04).
- Knight, W. "Nature as Interpreted by Wordsworth," Studies in Philosophy and Literature (London, Paul, 1879).
- Knight, W. The English Lake District (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1891).
- Lienemann, K. Die Belesenheit von W. Wordsworth (Berlin, Mayer, 1908).
- Lowell, J. R. Among My Books, Second Series (Boston, Houghton, 1876, 1884).
- Lowell, J. R. Democracy and Other Addresses (Boston, Houghton, 1886).
- Mable, H. W. "The Lake Country and Wordsworth," Backgrounds of Literature (New York, Outlook, 1903).
- Macdonald, G. The Imagination and Other Essays (Boston, Lothrop, 1883).
- Mackie, A. Nature Knowledge in Modern Poetry (London and New York, Longmans, 1906).
- Magnus, L. A Primer of Wordsworth (London, Methuen, 1897).
- Masson, D. Wordsworth, Shelley, Keats, and Other Essays (London and New York, Macmillan, 1874).
- Masson, Rosaline. "An 'Inspired Little Creature' and the Poet Wordsworth," The Fortnightly Review, Nov., 1910 (88 874).
- Minchin, H. C. "Browning and Wordsworth," The Fortnightly Review, May, 1912 (91 813).
- Minto, W. "Wordsworth's Great Failure," The Nineteenth Century, Sept., 1889 (26 435).
- More, P. E. Shelburne Essays, Seventh Series (New York and London, Putnam, 1910).
- Morley, J. Studies in Literature (London, Macmillan, 1891).
- Myers, F. W. H., Wordsworth (English Men of Letters Series London, Macmillan, 1881, New York, Harper).
- Olcott, C. S. "A Day in Wordsworth's Country," The Outlook, Nov. 20, 1910 (96 682).
- Pater, W. Appreciations (London and New York, Macmillan, 1889, 1895).
- Paul, H. W. "The Permanence of Wordsworth," The Nineteenth Century, June, 1908 (63 987).
- Payne, W. M. The Greater English Poets of the Nineteenth Century (New York, Holt, 1907, 1909).
- Quarterly Review*, The "The Excursion," Oct., 1814 (12 100); "Poems" and 'The White Doe of Rylstone,' Oct., 1815 (14 201).
- Raleigh, W. A. Wordsworth (London, Arnold, 1903, New York, Longmans, 1913).
- Rickett, A. "The Poet—William Wordsworth," Personal Forces in Modern Literature (London, Dent, 1906; New York, Dutton).
- Roberts, E. C. "The Ascendancy of Wordsworth," The Contemporary Review, May, 1913 (103 708).
- Robertson, F. W. Lectures on the Influence of Poetry, and Wordsworth (London, Paul, 1906).
- Scherer, E. Études Critiques, English translation by G. Saintsbury, as Essays on English Literature (London, Low, 1891; New York, Scribner).
- Scudder, V. D. "Wordsworth and the New Democracy," The Life of the Spirit in Modern English Poets (Boston, Houghton, 1895).
- Shalrp, J. C. "The Three Yairrows," "The White Doe of Rylstone," Aspects of Poetry (Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1881, Boston, Houghton).
- Shalrp, J. C. "Wordsworth as an Interpreter of Nature," On Poetic Interpretation of Nature (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1877, New York, Hurd, 1878, Boston, Houghton, 1885).
- Shalrp, J. C. "Wordsworth, the Man and the Poet," Studies in Poetry and Philosophy (Edinburgh, Douglas, 1888, 1886, Boston, Houghton, 1880, 1887).
- Sneath, E. H. Wordsworth Poet of Nature and Poet of Man (Boston and London, Ginn, 1912).
- Stephen, L. "Wordsworth's Ethics," Hours in a Library, 3 vols. (London, Smith, 1874-79, New York and London, Putnam, 1899), 4 vols. (1907).
- Stephen, L. "Wordsworth's Youth," Studies of a Biographer, 4 vols. (London, Duckworth, 1898-1902, New York, Putnam).
- Stork, C. W. "The Influence of the Popular Ballad on Wordsworth and Coleridge," Publications of the Modern Language Association, Sept., 1914 (n. s. 22 209).
- Swinburne, A. C. "Wordsworth and Byron," Miscellanies (London, Chatto, 1886, 1911, New York, Scribner).
- Symonds, A. The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (London, Constable, 1909; New York, Dutton).
- Whipple, E. P. Essays and Reviews, 2 vols. (Boston, Osgood, 1849, 1878).

White, W. H.: An Examination of the Charge of Apostasy Against Wordsworth (London, Longmans, 1898)

Wilson, John Essays, Critical and Imaginative, 4 vols (Edinburgh, Blackwood, 1866)

Winchester, C. T. William Wordsworth (Indianapolis, Bobbs, 1916)

Woodberry, G. E. "Sir George Beaumont, Coleridge, and Wordsworth," Studies in Letters and Life (Boston, Houghton, 1890. Makers of Literature, New York, Macmillan, 1901)

Woodberry, G. E. The Torch (New York, Macmillan, 1905, 1912)

Wordsworthiana, a Selection from Papers read to the Wordsworth Society, ed by W. A. Knight (London, Macmillan, 1889)

CONCORDANCE

Cooper, L. A Concordance to the Poems of William Wordsworth (New York, Dutton, 1911)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Dowden, E. In his edition of Wordsworth's Poetical Works, Vol 7 (1892-93)

Knight, W. In his edition of Wordsworth's Poetical Works, Vol 8 (1890)

Tutin J. R. In the Globe ed of Wordsworth's Complete Poetical Works (1888, 1905)

CRITICAL NOTES

From Memorial Verses
April, 1850

Goethe in Welmar sleeps, and Greece,
Long since, saw Byron's struggle cease
But one such death remain'd to come,
The last poetic voice is dumb—
We stand today by Wordsworth's tomb

And Wordsworth—"Ah, pale ghosts, rejoice!"
For never has such soothing voice
Been to your shadowy world convey'd,
Since erst, at morn, some wandering shade
Heard the clear song of Orpheus come Through Hades, and the mournful gloom

Wordsworth has gone from us—and ye,
Ah, may ye feel his voice as we!
He too upon a wintry clime
Had fallen—on this Iron time
Of doubts, disputes, distractions, fears
He found us when the age had bound
Our souls in its benumbing round,
He spoke, and loosed our heart in tears.
He laid us as we lay at birth
On the cool flowery lap of earth,
Smiles broke from us and we had ease,
The hills were round us, and the breeze
Went o'er the sun-lit fields again,
Our foreheads felt the wind and rain
Our youth returned, for there was shed
On spirits that had long been dead,
Spirits dried up and closely furl'd,
The freshness of the early world

Ah! since dark days still bring to light
Man's prudence and man's fiery might,
Time may restore us in his course
Goethe's sage mind and Byron's force,
But where will Europe's latter hour
Again find Wordsworth's healing power?
Others will teach us how to dare,
And against fear our breast to steel,
Others will strengthen us to bear—
But who, ah! who, will make us feel?

The cloud of mortal destiny,
Others will front it fearlessly—
But who, like him, will put it by?

Keep fresh the grass upon his grave
O Rotha, with thy living wave!
Sing him thy best! for few or none
Hears thy voice right, now he is gone
—Matthew Arnold

Rotha is a river near the Grasmere churchyard, in which Wordsworth is buried

From Wordsworth's *Grave*¹

Post who sleepest by this wandering wave! 25
When thou wast born, what birth-gift hadst thou then?

To thee what wealth was that the Immortals gave,
The wealth thou gavest in thy turn to men?

Not Milton's keen, translucent music thine;
Not Shakespeare's cloudless, boundless human 30 view

Not Shelley's flush of rose on peaks divine,
Nor yet the wizard twilight Coleridge knew

What hadst thou that could make such large amends

For all thou hadst not and thy peers possessed,
Motion and fire, swift means to radiant ends?— 35
Thou hadst, for weary feet, the gift of rest.

From Shelley's dazzling glow or thunderous haze,
From Byron's tempest-anger, tempest-mirth,
Men turned to thee and found—not blank and blank,

Tumult of tottering heavens, but peace on earth. 40

Nor peace that grows by Lethe, scentless flower,
There in white languors to decline and cease,
But peace whose names are also rapture, power,
Clear sight, and love for these are parts of peace.

A hundred years ere he to manhood came 65
Song from celestial heights had wandered down,
Put off her robe of sunlight, dew and flame,
And donned a modish dress to charm the town

Thenceforth she but festooned the porch of things,
Apt at life's lore, incurious what life meant! 70
Deatrous of hand, she struck her lutes few strings.

Ignobly perfect, barrenly content
Unflushed with ardor and unblanched with awe,
Her lips in pointless derision curled,
She saw with dull emotion—if she saw— 75
The vision of the glory of the world

The human masque she watched, with dreamless
eyes

In whose clear shallows lurked no trembling shade

The stars, unkennered by her, might set and rise, Unmarked by her, the daisies bloom and 80 fade.

The age grew sated with her sterile wit
Herself waxed weary on her loveless throne

Men felt life's tide, the sweep and surge of it,
And craved a living voice, a natural tone

For none the less, though song was but half
true, 85

The world lay common, one abounding theme
Man joyed and wept, and fate was ever new

And love was sweet, life real, death no dream
In sad stern verse the rugged scholar-sage

Bemoaned his toil unvalued, youth uncheered, 90
His numbers wore the vesture of the age,

But, 'neath it beating, the great heart was heard.

From dewy pastures, uplands sweet with thyme,
A virgin breeze freshened the faded day

It wafted Collins' lonely vesper-chime, 95
It breathed abroad the frugal note of Gray

¹ From Selected Poems of William Watson, copy right 1902 by The John Lane Company.

It fluttered here and there, nor swept in vain
The dusty haunts where futile echoes dwell,—
Then, in a cadence soft as summer rain,
And sad from Auburn voiceless, dropped and fell 100

It dropped and fell, and one 'neath northern skies,
With southern heart, who tilled his father's field,
Found Poesy a-dying, bade her rise
And touch quick Nature's hem and go forth healed

On life's broad plain the ploughman's conquering share 105
Upturned the fallow lands of truth anew,
And o'er the formal garden's trim parterre
The peasant's team a ruthless furrow drew

Bright was his going forth, but clouds ere long Whelmed him, in gloom his radiance set, and those 110
Twin morning stars of the new century's song,
Those morning stars that sang together, rose

In elvish speech the Dreamer told his tale
Of marvellous oceans swept by fateful wings—
The Scer strayed not from earth's human pale, 115
But the mysterious face of common things

He mirrored as the moon in Rydal Mere
Is mirrored, when the breathless night hangs
blue
Strangely remote she seems and wondrous near,
And by some nameless difference born anew 120
.

—William Watson

The "scholar-sage" of l 89 is Thomas Gray. The reference in ll 99-100 is to Goldsmith, whose The Deserted Village begins "Sweet Auburn! loveliest village of the plain." The reference in ll 100-110 is to Burns. The "morning stars" of l 111 are Coleridge, the Dreamer, and Wordsworth, the Scer. Cf the aim of the Lyrical Ballads as expressed in Coleridge's Biographia Literaria, 14 (p. 372b). On l. 104 see Matthieu, v 20-22.

For further comments and criticisms on Wordsworth in this text see the following:
Coleridge's To A Gentleman (p. 365) and Biographia Literaria, 14, 17, 18, 22 (pp. 372-95).
Byron's English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, 235-54 (p. 489).

Shelley's To Wordsworth (p. 634).

Jeffrey's reviews of Crabbe's poems (p. 884), and Wordsworth's The Excursion (p. 892) and The White Doe of Rylstone (p. 902).

Lamb's Letter to Wordsworth (p. 918).

Landon's To Wordsworth (p. 968).

Hood's False Poets and True (p. 1137).

223.

EXTRACT

These lines are sometimes entitled Dear Native Regions. They were later recast and incorporated in The Prelude, 8, 468-75 (p. 256).

AN EVENING WALK

This poem was addressed to Wordsworth's sister Dorothy. "There is not an image in it which I have not observed. . . . The plan of it has not been confined to a particular walk or an individual place,—a proof (of which I was unconscious at the time) of my unwillingness to submit the poetic spirit to the chains of fact and real circumstance. The country is idealised rather than described in any one of its local aspects."—Wordsworth's note.

LINES LEFT UPON THE SEAT IN A YEW-TREE

"Composed in part at school at Hawkshead. The tree has disappeared, and the slip of 'common on which it stood, that ran parallel to the lake and lay open to it, has long been enclosed, so that the road has lost much of its attraction. This spot was my favorite walk in the evenings during the latter part of my school-time"—Wordsworth's note.

The poem was published in Wordsworth and Coleridge's Lyrical Ballads, issued anonymously in 1798. The volume contained nineteen poems by Wordsworth and four by Coleridge. For a list of these poems see note p. 1374b. For statements of the occasion and object of the poems, see Wordsworth's Preface to the second edition (p. 317), Wordsworth's note on We Are Seven, below, and Coleridge's Biographia Literaria, 14 (p. 372).

224.

THE REVERIE OF POOR SUSAN

"This arose out of my observation of the affecting music of these birds hanging in this way in the London streets during the freshness and stillness of the spring morning"—Wordsworth's note.

225.

WE ARE SEVEN

"Written at Alfoxden in the spring of 1798, under circumstances somewhat remarkable. The little girl who is the heroine I met within the area of Goodrich Castle in the year 1793. Having left the Isle of Wight and crossed Salisbury Plain, as mentioned in the Preface to Guilt and Sorrow, I proceeded by Bristol up the Wye, and so on to North Wales, to the Vale of Clwydd, where I spent my summer under the roof of the father of my friend, Robert Jones. In reference to this poem I will here mention one of the most remarkable facts in my own poetic history and that of Mr. Coleridge. In the spring of the year 1798, he, my sister, and myself, started from Alfoxden, pretty late in the afternoon with a view to visit Lenton and the valley of Stoney near it; and as our united funds were very small, we agreed to defray the expense of the tour by writing a poem, to be sent to The New Monthly Magazine set up by Phillips the bookseller, and edited by Dr. Aikin. Accordingly we set off and proceeded along the Quantock Hills towards Watchet, and in the course of this walk was planned the poem of The Ancient Mariner, founded on a dream, as Mr. Coleridge said, of his friend, Mr. Cruikshank. Much the greatest part of the story was Mr. Coleridge's invention; but certain parts I myself suggested—for example, some crime was to be committed which should bring upon the old navigator, as Coleridge afterwards delighted to call him, the spectral persecution, as a consequence of that crime, and his own wanderings. I had been reading in Shelvock's Voyages a day or two before that while doubling Cape Horn they frequently saw albatrosses in that latitude, the largest sort of sea-fowl, some extending their wings twelve or fifteen feet. 'Suppose,' said I, 'you represent him as having killed one of these birds on entering the South Sea, and that the tutelary Spirits of those regions take upon them to avenge the crime.' The incident was thought fit for the purpose and adopted accordingly. I also suggested the navigation of the ship by the dead men, but do not recollect that I had anything more to do with the scheme of the poem. The Glows with which it was subsequently accompanied was not thought of by either of us at the time; at least, not a hint of it was given to me, and I have no doubt it was a gratuitous afterthought. We began the composition together on that, to me, memorable evening. I furnished two or three lines at the beginning of the poem, in particular —

'And listened like a three years' child,
The Mariner had his will'

These trifling contributions, all but one (which Mr C has with unnecessary scrupulosity recorded) slipped out of his mind as they well might. As we endeavored to proceed conjointly (I speak of the same evening) our respective manners proved so widely different that it would have been quite presumptuous in me to do anything but separate from an undertaking upon which I could only have been a clog. We returned after a few days from a delightful tour, of which I have many pleasant, and some of them droll-enough, recollections. We returned by Dulverton to Alfoxden. The Ancient Mariner grew and grew till it became too important for our first object, which was limited to our expectation of five pounds, and we began to talk of a volume, which was to consist, as Mr Coleridge has told the world, of poems chiefly on supernatural subjects taken from common life, but looked at, as much as might be, through an imaginative medium. Accordingly I wrote The Idiot Boy, Her Eyes Are Wild, etc., We Are Seven, The Thorn, and some others. To return to We Are Seven, the piece that called forth this note, I composed it while walking in the grove at Alfoxden. My friends will not deem it too trifling to relate that while walking to and fro I composed the last stanza first, having begun with the last line. When it was all but finished, I came in and recited it to Mr Coleridge and my sister, and said, 'A prefatory stanza must be added, and I should sit down to our little tea-meal with greater pleasure if my task were finished.' I mentioned in substance what I wished to be expressed, and Coleridge immediately threw off the stanza thus —

'A little child, dear brother Jem,'—

I objected to the rhyme, 'dear brother Jem,' as being ludicrous, but we all enjoyed the joke of hitching-in our friend, James T[obin]'s name, who was familiarly called Jem. He was the brother of the dramatist,¹ and this reminds me of an anecdote which it may be worth while here to notice. The said Jem got a sight of the Lyrical Ballads as it was going through the press at Bristol, during which time I was residing in that city. One evening he came to me with a grave face, and said, 'Wordsworth, I have seen the volume that Coleridge and you are about to publish. There is one poem in it which I earnestly entreat you to cancel, for, if published, it will make you everlastingly ridiculous.' I answered that I felt much obliged by the interest he took in my good name as a writer, and begged to know what was the unfortunate piece he alluded to. He said, 'It is called We Are Seven.'—'Nay,' said I, 'that shall take its chance, however,' and he left me in despair.'—Wordsworth's note.

See Coleridge's comment on this poem, p. 389a, 30 ff.

The utter simplicity of some of Wordsworth's early poems lent itself easily to imitation and ridicule. The following poem serves as an illustration. It was written by James Smith (1775-1839) and published in his Rejected Addresses (1812), a collection of imitative poems and other pieces purported to have been rejected as unsuitable for speaking at the opening of Drury Lane Theater, Oct. 10, 1812.

The Baby's Debut

My brother Jack was nine in May,
And I was eight on New Year's Day;
So in Kate Wilson's shop
Papa (he's my papa and Jack's)
Bought me, last week, a doll of wax, 5
And brother Jack a top.
Jack's in the pouts, and thus it is,
He thinks mine came to more than his,
So to my drawer he goes,
Takes out the doll, and, O my stars! 10
He pokes her head between the bars,
And melts off half her nose!
Quite cross, a bit of string I beg,
And tie it to his peg-top's peg,
And bang, with might and main, 15
Its head against the parlor-door,
O! flies the head, and hits the floor,
And breaks a window-pane.
This made him cry with rage and spite;
Well, let him cry, it serves him right. 20
A pretty thing forsooth!
If he's to melt, all scalding hot,
Half my doll's nose, and I am not
To draw his peg-top's tooth!
Aunt Hannah heard the window break, 25
And cried, "O naughty Nancy Lake,
Thus to distress your aunt,
No Drury Lane for you today!"
And while papa said, "Pooh, she may!"
Mamma said, "No, she shan't!" 30
Well, after many a sad reproach,
They got into a hackney coach,
And trotted down the street

¹ John Tobin (1770-1804), author of The Honey-Moon, The Curfew, and other plays.

I saw them go: one horse was blind,
The tails of both hung down behind,
Their shoes were on their feet 35

The chaise in which poor brother Bill
Used to be drawn to Pentonville,
Stood in the lumber-room.
I wiped the dust from off the top, 40
While Molly mopped it with a mop,
And brushed it with a broom.

My uncle's porter, Samuel Hughes,
Came in at six to black the shoes
(I always talk to Sam) 45
So what does he, but takes and drags
Me in the chaise along the flags,
And leaves me where I am

My father's walls are made of brick,
But not so tall, and not so thick
As those, and, goodness me! 50
My father's beams are made of wood,
But never, never half so good
As those that now I see.

What a large floor! 'tis like a town!
The carpet, when they lay it down,
Won't hide it, I'll be bound 55
And there's a row of lamps, my eye!
How they do blaze! I wonder why
They keep them on the ground. 60

At first I caught hold of the wing,
And kept away, but Mr Thing-
umbob, the prompter man,
Gave with his hand my chaise a shove,
And said 'Go on, my pretty love, 65
Speak to 'em, little Nan

"You've only got to courtsey, whisper, hold your chin up, laugh and lip,
And then you're sure to take 70
I've known the day when brats, not quite Thirteen got fifty pounds a night,
Then why not Nancy Lake?"

But while I'm speaking, where's papa?
And where's my aunt! and where's mamma?
Where's Jack? O, there they sit! 75
They smile, they nod, I'll go my ways,
And order round poor Billy's chaise,
To join them in the pit

And now, good gentlefolks, I go
To join mamma, and see the show; 80
So bidding you adieu
I courtsey, like a pretty miss,
And if you'll blow to me a kiss,
I'll blow a kiss to you

THE THORN

"Written at Alfoxden Arose out of my observing, on the ridge of Quantock Hill, on a stormy day, a thorn which I had often past, in calm and bright weather, without noticing
it. I said to myself, 'Cannot I by some invention do as much to make this thorn permanently an impressive object as the storm has made it to my eyes at this moment?' I began the poem accordingly, and composed it with great rapidity"—Wordsworth's note

The poem was printed in Lyrical Ballads.

"This poem ought to have been preceded by an introductory poem, which I have been prevented from writing by never having felt myself in a mood when it was probable that I should write it well. The character which I have here introduced speaking is sufficiently common. The reader will perhaps have a general notion of it, if he has ever known a man, a captain of a small trading vessel, for example, who being past the middle age of life, had retired upon an annuity or small independent income to some village or country town of which he was not a native, or in which he had not been accustomed to live.

Such men, having little to do, become credu-lous and talkative from indolence; and from the same cause, and other predisposing causes by which it is probable that such men may have been affected, they are prone to superstition. On which account it appeared to me proper to select a character like this to exhibit some of the general laws by which superstition acts upon the mind. Superstitious men are almost always men of slow faculties and deep feelings; their minds are not loose, but adhesive, they have a reasonable share of imagination, by which word I mean the faculty which produces impressive effects out of simple elements, but they are utterly destitute of fancy, the power by which pleasure and surprise are excited by sudden varieties of situation and by accumulated imagery.

"It was my wish in this poem to show the manner in which such men cleave to the same ideas, and to follow the turns of passion, always different, yet not palpably different, by which their conversation is swayed. I had two objects to attain; first, to represent a picture which should not be unimpressive, yet consistent with the character that should describe it; secondly, while I adhered to the style in which such persons describe, to take care that words, which in their minds are impregnated with passion, should likewise convey passion to readers who are not accustomed to sympathize with men feeling in that manner or using such language. It seemed to me that this might be done by calling in the assistance of lyrical and rapid metre. It was necessary that the poem, to be natural, should in reality move slowly, yet I hoped that, by the aid of the metre, to those who should at all enter into the spirit of the poem, it would appear to move quickly. The reader will have the kindness to excuse this note, as I am sensible that an introductory poem is necessary to give the poem its full effect

"Upon this occasion I will request permission to add a few words closely connected with The Thorn and many other poems in these volumes. There is a numerous class of readers who imagine that the same words cannot be repeated without tautology. This is a great error: virtual tautology is much oftener produced by using different words when the meaning is exactly the same. Words, a poet's words more particularly, ought to be weighed in the balance of feeling, and not measured by the space which they occupy upon paper. For the reader cannot be too often reminded that poetry is passion. It is the history or science of feelings. Now every man must know that an attempt is rarely made to communicate impassioned feelings 220. without something of an accompanying consciousness of the inadequateness of our own powers, or the deficiencies of language. During such efforts there will be a craving in the mind, and as long as it is unsatisfied the speaker will cling to the same words, or words of the same character. There are also various other reasons why repetition and apparent tautology are frequently beauties of the highest kind. Among the chief of these reasons is the interest which the mind attaches to words, not only as symbols of the passion, but as things, active and efficient, which are of themselves part of the passion. And further, from a spirit of fondness, exultation, and gratitude, the mind luxuriates in the repetition of words which appear successfully to communicate its feelings. The truth of these remarks might be shown by innumerable passages from the Bible, and from the impassioned poetry of every nation. 'Awake, awake, Deborah' &c Judges, chap. v, verses 12th, 27th, and part of 28th. See also the whole of that tumultuous and wonderful poem—"Wordsworth's Preface, ed of 1800.

See Coleridge's comment on this poem, p. 378b, 29ff; also Jeffrey's comment, p. 887a, 13ff

228.

GOODY BLAKE AND HARRY GILL

The source of this poem was the following passage in Erasmus Darwin's Zoonomia (1801), 4, 68-69 "I received good information of the truth of the following case, which was published a few years ago in the newspapers. A young farmer in Warwickshire, finding his hedges broke, and the sticks carried away during a frosty season, determined to watch for the thief. He lay many cold hours under a haystack, and at length an old woman, like a witch in a play, approached, and began to pull up the hedge, he waited till she had tied up her bottle of sticks, and was carrying them off, that he might convict her of the theft, and then springing from his concealment, he seized his prey with violent threats. After some altercation, in which her load was left upon the ground, she kneeled upon her bottle of sticks, and, raising her arms to Heaven beneath the bright moon then at the full, spoke to the farmer already shivering with cold, 'Heaven grant, that thou mayest never know again the blessing to be warm.' He complained of cold all the next day, and wore an upper coat, and in a few days another, and in a fortnight took to his bed, always saying nothing made him warm, he covered himself with many blankets, and had a sieve over his face, as he lay; and from this one insane idea he kept his bed above twenty years for fear of the cold air, till at length he died."

This poem was printed in Lyrical Ballads. See Coleridge's comment on it, p. 378a, 50ff.

HER EYES ARE WILD

"The subject was reported to me by a lady of Bristol, who had seen the creature."—Wordsworth's note.

The poem was first entitled The Mad Mother. It was printed in Lyrical Ballads. See Coleridge's comment on the poem, p. 393a, 8ff.

230.

SIMON LEE

"This old man had been huntsman to the squires of Alfoxden, which, at the time we occupied it, belonged to a minor. The old man's cottage stood upon the common, a little way from the entrance to Alfoxden Park. But it had disappeared. Many other changes had taken place in the adjoining village, which, I could not but notice with a regret more natural than well-considered. Improvements but rarely appear such to those who, after long intervals of time, revisit places they have had much pleasure in. It is unnecessary to add, the fact was as mentioned in the poem, and I have, after an interval of forty-five years, the image of the old man as fresh before my eyes as if I had seen him yesterday. The expression when the hounds were out, 'I dearly love their voice,' was word for word from his own lips."—Wordsworth's note

The poem was printed in Lyrical Ballads

231.

LINES WRITTEN IN EARLY SPRING

"Actually composed while I was sitting by the side of the brook that runs down from the Comb, in which stands the village of Alford, through the grounds of Alfoxden. It was a chosen resort of mine. The brook fell down a sloping rock so as to make a waterfall considerable for that country, and across the pool below had a fallen a tree, an ash, if I rightly remember, from which rose perpendicularly, boughs in search of the light intercepted by the deep shade above. The boughs bore leaves of green that for want of sunshine had faded into almost lily-white; and from the underside of this natural sylvan bridge depended long and beautiful tresses of ivy which waved gently in the breeze that might poetically speaking be called the breath of the waterfall. This motion varied of course in proportion to the power of water in the brook. When, with dear friends, I revisited this spot, after an interval of more than forty years, this interesting feature of the scene was gone. To the owner of the place I could not but regret that the beauty of this retired part of the grounds had not tempted him to make it more accessible by a path, not broad or obtrusive, but sufficient for persons who love such scenes to creep along without difficulty."—Wordsworth's note.

The poem was printed in Lyrical Ballads. The dell described is now known as Wordsworth's Glen.

See Coleridge's This Lime-Tree Bower My Prison (p. 384) and note, p. 1235b.

TO MY SISTER

"Composed in front of Alfoxden House My little boy-messenger on this occasion was the son of Basil Montagu. The larch mentioned in the first stanza was standing when I revisited the place in May, 1841, more than forty years after."—Wordsworth's note.

The poem was printed in Lyrical Ballads under the title Lines Written at a Small Distance from My House and Sent by My Little Boy to the Person to Whom They are Addressed.

Dorothy Wordsworth was her brother's most intimate companion during the years 1795-1802. She was not only the inspiration of many of his verses, but a most hallowing influence in his life. That she possessed a fine poetic instinct may be observed in her Journals, in which she wrote entertainingly of what she saw about her. See Wordsworth's Lines Composed a Few Miles above Tintern Abbey, 111-59 (p. 284), It Was an April Morning, 38-47 (p. 273), The Prelude, 11, 333-56 (p. 261), The Sparrow's Nest (p. 281); and It is a Beautiful Evening, Calm and Free (p. 256).

232. A WHIRL BLAST FROM BEHIND THE HILL

"Observed in the holly-grove at Alfoxden. . . I had the pleasure of again seeing, with dear friends, this grove in unimpaired beauty forty-one years after"—Wordsworth's note.

EXPOSTULATION AND REPLY

"This poem is a favorite among the Quakers, as I have learnt on many occasions"—Wordsworth's note.

This poem and the next, The Tables Turned, were published in Lyrical Ballads.

233. LINES COMPOSED A FEW MILES ABOVE TINTERN ABBEY

"No poem of mine was composed under circumstances more pleasant for me to remember than this. I began it upon leaving Tintern, after crossing the Wye, and concluded it just as I was entering Bristol, in the evening, after a ramble of four or five days, with my sister. Not a line of it was altered, and not any part of it written down till I reached Bristol"—Wordsworth's note.

The poem was printed in Lyrical Ballads. Tintern Abbey is a celebrated and beautiful ruin in Monmouthshire, England.

234. 97. Tennyson greatly praised this line, he spoke of it as giving the sense of "the permanent in the transitory"—See Alfred Lord Tennyson: A Memoir by His Son (New York, Macmillan, 1905), 2, 70.

104-07. Wordsworth noted the resemblance of these lines to Young's Night Thoughts, 6, 426-27.

Our senses, as our reason, are divine
And half create the wondrous world they see

115. My dearest friend—See note on To My Sister, above.

THE OLD CUMBERLAND BEGGAR

"Observed, and with great benefit to my own heart, when I was a child written at Racedown and Alfoxden in my twenty-third year. The political economists were about that time beginning their war upon mendicancy in all its forms, and by implication, if not directly, on alms-giving also. This heartless process has been carried as far as it can go by the AMENDED poor-law bill, though the inhumanity that prevails in this measure is somewhat disguised by the profession that one of its objects is to throw the poor upon the voluntary donations of their neighbors, that is, if rightly interpreted, to force them into a condition between relief in the Union poor-house, and alms robbed of their Christian grace and spirit, as being forced rather from the benevolent than given by them, while the avaricious and selfish, and all in fact but the humane and charitable, are at liberty to keep all they possess from their distressed brethren.

"The class of beggars, to which the old man here described belongs, will probably soon be extinct. It consisted of poor, and mostly, old and infirm persons, who confined themselves to a stated round in their neighborhood, and had certain fixed days, on which, at different houses, they regularly received alms, sometimes in money, but mostly in provisions"—Wordsworth's note.

See Lamb's comment on this poem, p. 916b, 11f.

For Wordsworth's views on pauperism, see his Postscript, 1835.

237. NUTTING

"Written in Germany, intended as part of a poem on my own life, but struck out as not being wanted there. Like most of my school-fellows I was an impassioned nutter. For this pleasure, the vale of Esthwaite, abounding in coppice-wood, furnished a very wide range. These verses arose out of the remembrance of feelings I had often had when a boy, and particularly in the extensive woods that still [1843] stretch from the side of Esthwaite Lake towards Graythwaite, the seat of the ancient family of Sandys"—Wordsworth's note.

238. STRANGE FITS OF PASSION HAVE I KNOWN

This and the four following poems belong to what is known as the "Lucy poems," written in Germany in 1799. Nothing is known of the beautiful maiden immortalized in these verses. Wordsworth says nothing about them in his autobiographical notes.

239.

A POET'S EPITAPH

See Lamb's comment on this poem, p 919a, 3-8

MATTHEW

"In the School of [Hawkshead] is a tablet, on which are inscribed, in gilt letters, the names of the several persons who have been schoolmasters there since the foundation of the school, with the time at which they entered upon and quitted their office. Opposite to one of those names the author wrote the following lines

"Such a tablet as is here spoken of continued to be preserved in Hawkshead School, though the inscriptions were not brought down to our time. This and other poems connected with Matthew would not gain by a literal detail of facts. Like the Wanderer in The Excursion, this schoolmaster was made up of several both of his class and men of other occupations. I do not ask pardon for what there is of untruth in such verses, considered strictly as matters of fact. It is enough if, being true and consistent in spirit, they move and teach in a manner not unworthy of a poet's calling"—Wordsworth's note

Some details of the character of Matthew are drawn from the Rev William Taylor, Wordsworth's teacher at Hawkshead, 1782-86. This and the next two poems are known as the "Matthew poems" 241.

LUCY GRAY

"Written at Goslar in Germany. It was founded on a circumstance told me by my sister, of a little girl who, not far from Halifax in Yorkshire, was bewildered in a snow-storm. Her footsteps were traced by her parents to the middle of the lock of a canal, and no other vestige of her, backward or forward, could be traced. The body however was found in the canal. The way in which the incident was treated and the spiritualizing of the character might furnish hints for contrasting the imaginative influences which I have endeavored to throw over common life with Crabbe's matter of fact style of treating subjects of the same kind. This is not spoken to his disparagement, far from it, but to direct the attention of thoughtful readers, into whose hands these notes may fall, to a comparison that may both enlarge the circle of their sensibilities, and tend to produce in them a catholic judgment"—Wordsworth's note.

42.

THE PRELUDE

The design and occasion of The Prelude are thus described by Wordsworth in the Preface to The Excursion, written in 1814:

"Several years ago, when the author retired to his native mountains with the hope of being enabled to construct a literary work that might live, it was a reasonable thing that he should take a review of his own mind, and examine how far nature and education had qualified him for such an employment. As subsidiary to this preparation, he undertook to record, in verse, the origin and progress of his own powers, as far as he was acquainted with them. That work, addressed to a dear friend, most distinguished for his knowledge and genius, and to whom the author's intellect is deeply indebted, has been long finished, and the result of the investigation which gave rise to it, was a determination to compose a philosophical poem, containing views of man, nature, and society, and to be entitled The Recluse, as having for its principal subject the sensations and opinions of a poet living in retirement.

"The preparatory poem is biographical, and conducts the history of the author's mind to the point when he was emboldened to hope that his faculties were sufficiently matured for entering upon the arduous labor which he had proposed to himself, and the two works have the same kind of relation to each other, if he may so express himself, as the antechapel has to the body of a Gothic church. Continuing this allusion, he may be permitted to add, that his minor pieces, which have been long before the public, when they shall be properly arranged, will be found by the attentive reader to have such connection with the main work as may give them claim to be likened to the little cells, oratories, and sepulchral recesses, ordinarily included in those edifices."

The Excursion was to be the second part of The Recluse.

The Prelude is addressed to Coleridge, who at the time of writing was in Malta for his health.

248. 364-38. These lines are sometimes entitled The Boy of Winander. They were written in Germany in 1799, and published in 1800. Wordsworth sent them to Coleridge, who wrote in reply "That

'uncertain heaven received
Into the bottom of the steady lake'

I should have recognized anywhere, and had I met these lines running wild in the deserts of Arabia, I should have instantly screamed out, "Wordsworth!"

The name of the Boy is unknown. He has been wrongly identified with Wordsworth's school-fellow, William Raineck of Raylrigg, who Wordsworth said took the lead of all the boys in the art of making a whistle of his fingers.

249. 52-65. See Wordsworth's Personal Talk, 51-56 (p 301), and of with Milton's ambition to leave behind him "something the world would not willingly let die."

254. 600-64. These lines are quoted, with slight variation, from Paradise Lost, 11, 203-07.

261. 335. Beloved sister—See note on To My Sister, p 1361a.

264. 142-51. Cf. the following passage from Carlyle's Haritor Resartus, II, 2, 10 "In a like sense worked the Postwagen (Stage-coach), which, slow-rolling under its mountains of men and luggage, wended through our Village, northwards, truly, in the dead of night, yet southwards visibly at eventide. Not till my eighth year did I reflect that this Postwagen could be other than some terrestrial Moon, rising and setting by mere Law of Nature, like the heavenly one, that it came on made high-ways, from far cities toward far cities, weaving them like a monstrous shuttle into closer and closer union. It was then that, independently of Schiller's Wilhelm Tell, I made this not quite insignificant reflection (no true also in spiritual things): 'Any road, this simple Entepfuhr road, will lead you to the end of the World!'"

180-85. For a reverse view, see Crabbe's The Village (p. 154).

221-78. "This passage is the finest in thought, and the most perfect in expression, of any of The Prelude. It illustrates the courage of the man who dared thus, in an age of superficiality and pride, to fly in the face of all the poetical creeds, and make the joys and sorrows that we encounter on the common highroad of life the subjects of his song"—George, in The Complete Poetical Works of William Wordsworth (Cambridge ed., 1904)

Independent proprietors of land, here called statesmen, men of respectable education, who daily labor on their own little properties. The domestic affections will always be strong amongst men who live in a country not crowded with population, if these men are placed above poverty. But if they are proprietors of small estates which have descended to them from their ancestors, the power which these affections acquire amongst such men is inconceivable by those who have only had an opportunity of observing hired laborers, farmers, and the manufacturing poor. Their little tract of land serves as a kind of permanent rallying point for their domestic feelings, as a tablet on which they are written, which makes them objects of memory in a thousand instances, when they would otherwise be forgotten. It is a fountain fitted to the nature of social man, from which supplies of affection, as pure as his heart was intended for, are daily drawn. This class of men is rapidly disappearing. The two poems which I have mentioned were written with a view to show that men who do not wear fine clothes can feel deeply. The poems are faithful copies from Nature."

270. 258. Richard Bateman—"The story alluded to is well known in the country"—Wordsworth's note

273. IT WAS AN APRIL MORNING

"Written at Grasmere. This poem was suggested on the banks of the brook that runs through Easedale, which is, in some parts of its course, as wild and beautiful as brook can be. I have composed thousands of verses by the side of it"—Wordsworth's note

The poem is the first of a group of five poems on the Naming of Places, to which Wordsworth prefaced this Advertisement. "By persons resident in the country and attached to rural objects, many places will be found unnamed or of unknown names, where little incidents must have occurred, or feelings been experienced, which will have given to such places a private and peculiar interest. From a wish to give some sort of record to such incidents, and renew the gratification of such feelings, names have been given to places by the author and some of his friends, and the following poems written in consequence."

39. My Emma—See note on To My Sister, p. 1301a.

274. 51. Emma's Voice—See note above.

THE EXCURSION

"The Title page announces that this is only a portion of a poem, and the reader must be here apprised that it belongs to the second part of a long and laborious work, which is to consist of three parts.—The author will candidly acknowledge that, if the first of these had been completed, and in such a manner as to satisfy his own mind, he should

260. MICHAEL

"Written at Town-end, Grasmere, about the same time as The Brothers. The sheepfold, on which so much of the poem turns, remains, or rather the ruins of it. The character and circumstances of Luke were taken from a family to whom had belonged, many years before, the house we lived in at Town-end, along with some fields and woodlands on the eastern shore of Grasmere. The name of the Evening Star was not in fact given to this house, but to another on the same side of the valley, more to the north"—Wordsworth's note

In a letter to his friend Thomas Poole, Wordsworth wrote of the poem (1801) "I have attempted to give a picture of a man, of strong mind and lively sensibility, agitated by two of the most powerful affections of the human heart the parental affection, and the love of property (landed property), including the feelings of inheritance, home, and personal and family independence. In writing it I had your character often before my eyes, and sometimes thought that I was delineating such a man as you yourself would have been under the same circumstances." In a letter to Charles James Fox, dated Jan. 14, 1801, he said "In the two poems, The Brothers and Michael, I have attempted to draw a picture of the domestic affections, as I know they exist amongst a class of men who are now almost confined to the north of England. They are small have preferred the natural order of publication, and have given that to the world first; but, as the second division of the work was designed to refer more to passing events, and to an existing state of things, than the others were meant to do, more continuous exertion was naturally bestowed upon it, and greater progress made here than in the rest of the poem, and as this part does not depend upon the preceding to a degree which will materially injure its own peculiar interest, the author, complying with the earnest entreaties of some valued friends, presents the following pages to the public"—From Wordsworth's Preface to the ed of 1814.

See note on The Prelude, the first part of the "long and laborious work" referred to, p 1362a.

The selection from The Excursion printed here is usually referred to as The Ruined Cottage. The portion omitted after line 87 gives an account of the pedlar's boyhood, education, and manner of life.

See Jeffery's review of this poem, p. 892.

281.

PELION AND OSSA

This is Wordsworth's first sonnet. It is interesting for study in comparison with his more mature work in the same form. Pelion, Ossa, and Olympus were mountains in Thessaly, Greece, famous in Greek mythology.

THE SPARROW'S NEST

"Written in the orchard, Town-end, Grasmere. At the end of the garden of my father's house at Cockermouth was a high terrace that commanded a fine view of the River Derwent and Cockermouth Castle. This was our favorite play-ground. The terrace-wall, a low one, was covered with closely-clipt privet and roses, which gave an almost impervious shelter to birds that built their nests there. The latter of these stanzae alludes to one of those nests."—Wordsworth's note.

9. My Sister Emmeline.—See note on To My Sister, p 1361a.

TO A BUTTERFLY

"Written in the orchard, Town-end, Grasmere. My sister and I were parted immediately after the death of our mother, who died in 1778, both being very young."—Wordsworth's note. See note on l 9 above.

Dorothy Wordsworth writes thus of the poem in her Journal (March, 1802): "While we were at breakfast . . . he wrote the poem To a Butterfly. . . . The thought first came upon him as we were talking about the pleasure we both always felt at the sight of a butterfly. I told him that I used to chase them a little, but that I was afraid of brushing the dust off their wings, and did not catch them. He told me how he used to kill all the white ones when he went to school, because they were Frenchmen."

MY HEART LEAPS UP

The last three lines of this poem were adopted as the motto to the Ode Intimations of Immortality (p 808).

Pity (l 9) is used here in the sense of reverence, affection.

WRITTEN IN MARCH

This poem is sometimes entitled Brother's Water. Wordsworth states that it was composed extempore. Dorothy Wordsworth writes thus about the poem in her Journal (April 16, 1802): "When we came to the foot of Brother's Water, I left William sitting on the bridge. . . . When I returned I found William writing a poem descriptive of the sights and sounds we saw and heard. There was the gentle flowing of the stream, the glittering, lively lake, green fields without a living creature to be seen on them, behind us, a flat pasture with forty-two cattle feeding, to our left, the road leading to the hamlet. No smoke there, the sun shone on the bare roofs. The people were at work ploughing, harrowing, and sowing; lasses working, a dog barking now and then; cocks crowing, birds twittering, the snow in patches at the top of the highest hills, yellow palms, purple and green twigs on the birches, ashes with their glittering spikes, stems quite bare. The hawthorn a bright green, with black stems under the oak. The moss of the oak glows."

William finished the poem before we got to the foot of Kirkstone."

TO THE SMALL CELANDINE

"Written at Town-end, Grasmere. It is remarkable that this flower, coming out so early in the spring as it does, and so bright and beautiful, and in such profusion, should not have been noticed earlier in English verse. What adds much to the interest that attends it is its habit of shutting itself up and opening out according to the degree of light and temperature of the air."—Wordsworth's note.

283.

RESOLUTION AND INDEPENDENCE

"Written at Town-end, Grasmere. This old man I met a few hundred yards from my cottage; and the account of him is taken from his own mouth. I was in the state of feeling described in the beginning of the poem, while crossing over Barton Fell from Mr. Clarkson's, at the foot of Ullawater, towards Askham. The image of the hare I then observed on the ridge of the Fell."—Wordsworth's note.

Dorothy Wordsworth gives in her Journal (Oct. 3, 1800) the following account of the origin of the poem: "When William and I returned, we met an old man almost double. He had on a coat, thrown over his shoulders, above his waistcoat and coat Under this he carried a bundle, and had an apron on and a night-cap His face was interesting He had dark eyes and a long nose. John [Wordsworth's brother], who afterwards met him at Wytheburn, took him for a Jew He was of Scotch parents, but had been born in the army He had had a wife, and 'she was a good woman, and it pleased God to bless us with ten children.' All these were dead but one, of whom he had not heard for many years, a sailor His trade was to gather leeches, but now leeches were scarce, and he had not strength for it. He lived by begging, and was making his way to Carlisle, where he should buy a few godly books to sell He said leeches were very scarce, partly owing to this dry season, but many years they have been scarce. He supposed it owing to their being much sought after, that they did not breed fast, and were of slow growth Leeches were formerly 2s 6d per 100; they are now 30s He had been hurt in driving a cart, his leg broken, his body driven over, his skull fractured He felt no pain till he recovered from his first insensibility . It was then late in the evening when the light was just going away "

In a letter to friends, probably Mary and Sara Hutchinson, dated June 14, 1802, Wordsworth writes "I will explain to you in prose my feelings in writing that poem . . . I describe myself as having been exalted to the highest pitch of delight by the joyousness and beauty of nature, and then as depressed, even in the midst of those beautiful objects, to the lowest dejection and despair A young poet in the midst of the happiness of nature is described as overwhelmed by the thoughts of the miserable reverses which have befallen the happiest of all men, viz, poets I think of this till I am so deeply impressed with it, that I consider the manner in which I was rescued from my dejection and despair almost as an interposition of Providence. A person reading the poem with feelings like mine will have been awed and controlled, expecting something spiritual or supernatural What is brought forward? A lonely place, 'a pond by which an old man was, far from all house or home' not stood, nor sat, but was—the figure presented in the most naked simplicity possible This feeling of spirituality or supernaturalness is again referred to as being strong in my mind in this passage How came he here? thought I, or what can he be doing? I then describe him, whether ill or well is not for me to judge with perfect confidence, but this I can confidently affirm, that though I believe God has given me a strong imagination, I cannot conceive a figure more impressive than that of an old man like this, the survivor of a wife and ten children, travelling alone among the mountains and all lonely places, carrying with him his own fortitude, and the necessities which an unjust state of society has laid upon him."—Quoted from C. Wordsworth's Memoirs of William Wordsworth (1851), I, 172-73.

See Coleridge's comment on this poem, p 388b, 47x.

285.

I GRIEVED FOR BUONAPARTE

"In the cottage, Town-end, Grasmere, one afternoon in 1801, my sister read to me the sonnets of Milton I had long been well acquainted with them, but I was particularly struck on that occasion with the dignified simplicity and majestic harmony that runs through most of them,—in character so totally different from the Italian, and still more so from Shakspeare's fine sonnets. I took fire, if I may be allowed to say so, and produced three sonnets the same afternoon, the first I ever wrote except an irregular one at school Of these three, the only one I distinctly remember is—I grieved for Buonaparte! One was never written down the third, which was, I believe, preserved, I cannot particularize"—Wordsworth's note.

COMPOSED UPON WESTMINSTER BRIDGE

"We left London on Saturday morning at half-past five or six, the 30th of July We mounted the Dover coach at Charing Cross It was a beautiful morning. The city, St Paul's, with the river, and a multitude of little boats, made a most beautiful sight as we crossed Westminster Bridge The houses were not overhung by their cloud of smoke, and they were spread out endlessly; yet the sun shone so brightly, with such a fierce light, that there was even something like the purity of one of nature's own grand spectacles"—Dorothy Wordsworth, in Journal, July 1802

Westminster Bridge is next to the oldest bridge over the Thames at London It was built in 1750. It was replaced by the present structure in 1802

286. COMPOSED BY THE SEA-SIDE, NEAR CALAIS

"We had delightful walks after the heat of the day was passed—being far off in the west the coast of England like a cloud crested with Dover Castle, which was but like the summit of the cloud—the evening star and the glory of the sky, the reflections in the water were more beautiful than the sky itself, purple waves brighter than precious stones, forever melting away upon the sands. . . . Nothing in romance was ever half so beautiful Now came in view, as the evening star sunk down, and the colors of the west faded away, the two lights of England."—Dorothy Wordsworth, in Journal, August, 1802

IT IS A BEAUTIFUL EVENING, CALM AND FREE

"This was composed on the beach near Calais, in the autumn of 1802."—Wordsworth's note.

The last six lines are addressed to Wordsworth's sister Dorothy. See note on To My Sister, p. 1361a.

TO TOUSSAINT L'OUVREURE

Toussaint (surnamed L'Ouvreure, the Opener, because he broke through the enemy's lines) was the noted negro liberator of San Domingo. In 1801 he attempted to free the Island from the control of Napoleon, but was captured and imprisoned for life. The sonnet was written while he was lying in the dungeon at Fort de Joux, France. He died in 1803.

287. WRITTEN IN LONDON, SEPTEMBER, 1802

"This was written immediately after my return from France to London, when I could not but be struck, as here described, with the vanity and parade of our own country, especially in great towns and cities, as contrasted with the quiet, and I may say the desolation, that the revolution had produced in France. This must be borne in mind, or else the reader may think that in this and the succeeding sonnets I have exaggerated the mischief engendered and fostered among us by undisturbed wealth. It would not be easy to conceive with what a depth of feeling I entered into the struggle carried on by the Spaniards for their deliverance from the usurped power of the French. Many times have I gone from Allan Bank in Grasmere Vale, where we were then residing, to the top of the Raise-gap as it is called, so late as two o'clock in the morning, to meet the carrier bringing the newspaper from Keswick. Imperfect traces of the state of mind in which I then was may be found in my Tract on the Convention of Cintra, as well as in these sonnets."—Wordsworth's note.

The Convention of Cintra, concluded between the French and the English in 1808, provided that the French should evacuate Portugal. They were taken to France in English vessels.

288. TO THE DAISY

"This poem and two others to the same flower, were written in the year 1802, which is mentioned, because in some of the ideas, though not in the manner in which those ideas are connected, and likewise even in some of the expressions, there is a resemblance to passages in a poem (late published) of Mr. Montgomery's, entitled A Field Flower. This being said, Mr. Montgomery will not think any apology due to him; I cannot, however, help addressing him in the words of the father of English poets.

"Though it happe me to reherald
That ye han in your freshe songs saied,
Forberith me, and beth not ill apaled,
With that ye se I doe it in the honour
Of Love, and eke in service of the Flour."

—Wordsworth's note (1807).

The lines quoted are from Chaucer's Prologue to The Legend of Good Women, B 13, 78-82.

James Montgomery's A Field Flower, was written before the publication of Wordsworth's poems. It is as follows.

A Field Flower

On Finding One in Full Bloom on Christmas Day, 1803

There is a flower, a little flower,
With silver crest and golden eye,
That welcomes every changing hour,
And weathers every sky

The prouder beauties of the field
In gay but quick succession shine,
Race after race their honours yield,
They flourish and decline

But this small flower, to Nature dear,
While moon and stars their courses run
Wreathes the whole circle of the year,
Companion of the Sun

It smiles upon the lap of May
To sultry August spreads its charms,
Lights pale October on his way,
And twines December's arms

The purple heath and golden broom
On moory mountains catch the gale,
O'er lawns the lily beds perfume,
The violet in the vale

But this bold floweret climbs the hill,
Hides in the forest, haunts the glen,
Plays on the margin of the rill,
Peeps round the fox's den

Within the garden's cultured round
It shares the sweet carnation's bed,
And blooms on consecrated ground
In honor of the dead

The lambkin crops its crimson gem,
The wild-bee murmurs on its breast,
The blue-fly bends its pensile stem,
Light o'er the sky-lark's nest

'Tis Flora's page—in every place,
In every season fresh and fair,
It opens with perennial grace,
And blossoms every where

On waste and woodland rock and plain,
Its humble buds unheeded lie,
The Rose has but a summer reign,
The Daisy never dies

Flora (l. 33) was the Roman goddess of flowers.

290. TO THE DAISY (Bright Flower)

"This and the other poems addressed to the same flower were composed at Town-end, Grasmere, during the earlier part of my residence there. I have been censured for the last line but one—'thy function apostolical'—as being little less than profane. How could it be thought so? The word is adopted with reference to its derivation, implying something sent on a mission, and assuredly this little flower, especially when the subject of verse, may be regarded, in its humble degree, as administering both to moral and to spiritual purposes."—Wordsworth's note.

YEW TREES

"Written at Grasmere. These yew-trees are still standing, but the spread of that at Lorton is much diminished by mutilation. I will here mention that a little way up the hill, on the road leading from Bosthwaite to Stonethwaite (in Borrowdale), lay the trunk of a yew-tree, which appeared as you approached, so vast was its diameter, like the entrance of a cave, and not a small one. Calculating upon what I have observed of the slow growth of this tree in rocky situations, and of its durability, I have often thought that the one I am describing must have been as old as the Christian era. The tree lay in the line of a fence. Great masses of its ruins were strewn about, and some had been rolled down the hillside and lay near the road at the bottom. As you approached the tree, you were struck with the number of shrubs and young plants, ashes, etc., which had found a bed upon the decayed trunk and grew to no inconsiderable height, forming as it were, a part of the hedgerow. In no part of England, or of Europe, have I ever seen a yew-tree at all approaching this in magnitude, as it must have stood. By the bye, Hutton, the old guide, of Keswick, had been so impressed with the remains of this tree that he used gravely to tell strangers that there could be no doubt of its having been in existence before the flood."—Wordsworth's note

Ruskin (Modern Painters, Part III, sec. 2, ch. 4) considers this poem as "the most vigorous and solemn bit of forest landscape ever painted." He calls attention especially to "the pure touch of color in l. 22." Coleridge quotes from it (p. 393b) to illustrate Wordsworth's high imaginative faculty.

201

AT THE GRAVE OF BURNS

This and the next four poems belong to a group of fifteen poems entitled Memorials of a Tour in Scotland. Wordsworth, his sister Dorothy, and Coleridge started the tour together on August 15, 1803. Coleridge, at that time in ill health, left them at Loch Lomond. See Dorothy Wordsworth's Recollections of a Tour Made in Scotland.

202.

TO A HIGHLAND GIRL

"This delightful creature and her demeanor are particularly described in my sister's Journal. The sort of prophecy with which the verses conclude has, through God's goodness, been realized, and now, approaching the close of my 73d year, I have a most vivid remembrance of her and the beautiful objects with which she was surrounded. She is alluded to in the poem of The Three Cottage Girls among my Continental Memorials. In illustration of this class of poems I have scarcely anything to say beyond what is anticipated in my sister's faithful and admirable Journal."

—Wordsworth's note

Dorothy Wordsworth writes thus in her Recollections of a Tour Made in Scotland (Aug. 28, 1803): "When beginning to descend the hill toward Loch Lomond, we overtook two girls, who told us we could not cross the ferry till evening, for the boat was gone with a number of people to church. One of the girls was exceedingly beautiful, and the figures of both of them, in gray plaids falling to their feet, their faces only being uncovered, excited our attention before we spoke to them, but they answered us so sweetly that we were quite delighted, at the same time that they stared at us with an innocent look of wonder. I think I never heard the English language sound more sweetly than from the mouth of the elder of these girls, while she stood at the gate answering our inquiries, her face flushed with the rain, her pronunciation was clear and distinct without difficulty, yet slow, like that of a foreign speech. They told us we might sit in the ferry-house till the return of the boat, went in with us, and made a good fire as fast as possible to dry our wet clothes. We learnt that the taller one was the sister of the ferryman, and had been left in charge with the house for the day that the other was his wife's sister, and was come with her mother on a visit,—an old woman, who sat in a corner beside the cradle, nursing her little grand-child. We were glad to be housed, with our feet upon a warm hearth-stone, and our attendants were so active and good humored that it was pleasant to have to desire them to do anything. The younger was a delicate and unhealthy-looking girl, but there was an uncommon meekness in her countenance, with an air of premature intelligence, which is often seen in sickly young persons. The other made me think of Peter Bell's Highland Girl:

'As light and beauteous as a squirrel,
As beauteous and as wild
[Wordsworth's Peter Bell, 889-90]

She moved with unusual activity, which was chastened very delicately by a certain hesitation in her looks when she spoke, being able to understand us but imperfectly . . .

"The hospitality we had met with . . . gave us very favorable impressions on this our first entrance into the Highlands, and at this day the innocent merriment of the girls, with their kindness to us, and the beautiful figure and face of the elder, come to my mind whenever I think of the ferry-house and waterfall of Loch Lomond, and I never think of the two girls but the whole image of that romantic spot is before me, a living image, as it will be to my dying day."

STEPPING WESTWARD

"While my fellow-traveller and I were walking by the side of Loch Ketterline, one fine evening after sunset, in our road to a hut where, in the course of our tour, we had been hospitably entertained some weeks before, we met, in one of the loneliest parts of that solitary region, two well-dressed women, one of whom said to us, by way of greeting, 'What, you are stepping westward?'—Wordsworth's note

Dorothy Wordsworth writes thus in her Recollections of a Tour Made in Scotland (Sept 11, 1808) "We have never had a more delightful walk than this evening Ben Lomond and the three pointed-topped mountains of Loch Lomond, which we had seen from the garrison, were very majestic under the clear sky, the lake perfectly calm, the air sweet and mild I felt that it was much more interesting to visit a place where we have been before than it can possibly be the first time, except under peculiar circumstances The sun had been set for some time, when, being within a quarter of a mile of the ferryman's hut, our path having led us close to the shore of the calm lake, we met two neatly dressed women, without hats, who had probably been taking their Sunday evening's walk One of them said to us in a friendly, soft tone of voice, 'What! you are stepping westward?' I cannot describe how affecting this simple expression was in that remote place, with the western sky in front, yet glowing with the departed sun William wrote the following poem long after, in remembrance of his feelings and mine"

In connection with this poem, see Wordsworth's The Trowachs (p 314), composed on the same spot 27 years later.

293.

THE SOLITARY REAPER

"As we descended, the scene became more fertile, our way being pleasantly varied—through coppices or open fields, and passing farm-houses, though always with an intermixture of uncultivated ground It was harvest-time, and the fields were quietly—might I be allowed to say pensively?—enlivened by small companies of reapers It is not uncommon in the more lonely parts of the Highlands to see a single person so employed The following poem was suggested to William by a beautiful sentence in Thomas Wilkinson's Tour in Scotland"—Dorothy Wordsworth, in Recollections of a Tour Made in Scotland, Sept 13, 1808

The sentence from Wilkinson is as follows: "Passed a female who was reaping alone; she sung in Erse, as she bended over her sickle; the sweetest human voice I ever heard her strains were tenderly melancholy, and felt delicious, long after they were heard no more"

YARROW UNVISITED

The River Yarrow, in southern Scotland, was a favorite scene of ballads and songs by the poets. See Child's English and Scottish Popular Ballads, Vol. 4, 160-84.

Of Yarrow Unvisited, Dorothy Wordsworth wrote thus in her Recollections of a Tour Made in Scotland, Sept 8, 1808 "At Clovenford, being so near to the Yarrow, we could not but think of the possibility of going thither, but came to the conclusion of reserving the pleasure for some future time, in consequence of which, after our return, William wrote the poem" Upon receiving a copy of the poem from Wordsworth, Scott wrote "I by no means admit your apology, however, ingeniously and artfully stated, for not visiting the bonny holms of Yarrow, and certainly will not rest until I have prevailed upon you to compare the ideal with the real stream"—Wordsworth visited the Yarrow in 1814 and again in 1831. See his Yarrow Visited (p. 308) and Yarrow Revisited (p 312)

294.

OCTOBER, 1808

This sonnet and the two following were inspired by fears of an expected invasion of England by the French in 1808

295.

SHE WAS A PHANTOM OF DELIGHT

"Written at Town-end, Grasmere. The germ of this poem was four lines composed as a part of the verses on the Highland Girl Though beginning in this way, it was written from my heart, as is sufficiently obvious"—Wordsworth's note

The poem refers to Wordsworth's wife.

I WANDERED LONELY AS A CLOUD

"Written at Town-end, Grasmere The daffodils grew and still grow on the margin of Ullswater, and probably may be seen to this day as beautiful in the month of March, nodding their golden heads beside the dancing and foaming waves"—Wordsworth's note

Dorothy Wordsworth writes thus in her Journal, April 15, 1802 "When we were in the woods beyond Gowbarrow Park we saw a few daffodils close to the water-side . . . As we went along there were more, and yet more; and, at last, under the boughs of the trees, we saw there was a long belt of them along the shore. . . I never saw daffodils so beautiful. They grew among the mossy stones, about and above them, some reared their heads on these stones as on a pillow for weariness, and the rest tossed, and reeled, and danced, and seemed as if they verily laughed with the wind that blew upon them over the lake They looked so gay, ever glancing, ever changing. . . There was here and there a little knot, and a few stragglers higher up; but they were so few as not to disturb the simplicity, unity, and life of that one busy highway."

See Coleridge's comment on the poem, p. 387b, 27f.

21-22. These two lines were written by Wordsworth's wife.

THE AFFLICTION OF MARGARET

"Written at Town-end, Grasmere This was taken from the case of a poor widow who lived in the town of Penrith Her sorrow was well known to Mrs. Wordsworth, to my sister, and, I believe, to the whole town She kept a shop, and when she saw a stranger passing by, she was in the habit of going out into the street to enquire of him after her son"—Wordsworth's note

See Coleridge's comment on this poem, p. 393a, 2 f.

296.

ODE TO DUTY

"This ode is on the model of Gray's Ode to Adversity [p. 58], which is copied from Horace's Ode to Fortune Many and many a time have I been twitted by my wife and sister for having forgotten this dedication of myself to the stern lawgiver Transgressor indeed I have been, from hour to hour, from day to day I would fain hope, however, not more flagrantly or in a worse way than most of my tuneful brethren But these last words are in a wrong strain We should be rigorous to ourselves and forbearing, if not indulgent, to others, and, if we make comparisons at all, it ought to be with those who have morally excelled us"—Wordsworth's note.

297.

TO A SKYLARK

Cf this poem with Wordsworth's To a Skylark (p. 312), with Shelley's To a Skylark (p. 704), and with Hogg's The Skylark (p. 479).

ELEGIAC STANZAS

Sir George Beaumont painted two pictures of this subject, one of which he gave to Mrs. Wordsworth, saying she ought to have it; but Lady Beaumont interfered, and after Sir George's death she gave it to Sir Uvedale Price, in whose house at Foxley I have seen it.—Wordsworth's note

The Peele Castle here described is in Lancashire, England. Wordsworth visited his cousin in the vicinity of Peele Castle during one of his summer vacations This poem should be read in connection with Character of the Happy Warrior (p. 298), and Elegiac Verses in Memory of My Brother 298.

CHARACTER OF THE HAPPY WARRIOR

"The course of the great war with the French naturally fixed one's attention upon the military character, and, to the honor of our country, there were many illustrious instances of the qualities that constitute its highest excellence Lord Nelson carried most of the virtues that the trials he was exposed to in his department of the service necessarily call forth and sustain, if they do not produce the contrary vices. But his public life was stained with one great crime, so that, though many passages of these lines were suggested by what was generally known as excellent in his conduct, I have not been able to connect his name with the poem as I could wish, or even to think of him with satisfaction in reference to the idea of what a warrior ought to be For the sake of such of my friends as may happen to read this note I will add, that many elements of the character here portrayed were found in my brother John, who perished by shipwreck as mentioned elsewhere His messmates used to call him the Philosopher, from which it must be inferred that the qualities and dispositions I allude to had not escaped their notice He often expressed his regret, after the war had continued some time, that he had not chosen the naval, instead of the East India Company's service, to which his family connection had led him He greatly valued moral and religious instruction for youth, as tending to make good sailors The best, he used to say, came from Scotland, the next to them, from the North of England, especially from Westmoreland and Cumberland, where, thanks to the piety and local attachments of our ancestors, endowed, or, as they are commonly called, free, schools abound"—Wordsworth's note

The "crime" of Nelson was his relations to Lady Hamilton, a noted adventurer See Southey's The Life of Nelson (p. 416a, 10 f) 299.

POWER OF MUSIC

Wordsworth spent two months in London in the spring of 1806 The poem, he says, was "taken from life"

300.

YEA, IT WAS THE MOUNTAIN ECHO

"Written at Town-end, Grasmere The echo came from Nab-sai, when I was walking on the opposite side of Rydal Mere I will here mention, for my dear sister's sake, that, while she was sitting alone one day high up on this part of Loughrigg Fell, she was so affected by the voice of the cuckoo heard from the crags at some distance that she could not suppress a wish to have a stone inscribed with her name among the rocks from which the sound proceeded On my return from my walk I recited these verses to Mrs. Wordsworth"—Wordsworth's note

PERSONAL TALK

"Written at Town-end, Grasmere The last line but two stood, at first, better and more characteristically, thus

'By my half-kitchen and half-parlor fire.'

My sister and I were in the habit of having the tea-kettle in our little sitting-room, and we toasted the bread ourselves, which reminds me of a little circumstance not unworthy of being set down among these minutiae Happening both of us to be engaged a few minutes one morning when we had a young prig of a

Scotch lawyer to breakfast with us, my dear sister, with her usual simplicity, put the toasting-fork with a slice of bread into the hands of this Edinburgh genius. Our little book-case stood on one side of the fire. To prevent loss of time, he took down a book, and fell to reading, to the neglect of the toast, which was burnt to a cinder. Many a time have we laughed at this circumstance, and other cottage simplicities of that day. By the bye, I have a spite at one of this series of sonnets (I will leave the reader to discover which) as having been the means of nearly putting off forever our acquaintance with dear Miss Fenwick, who has always stigmatised one line of it as vulgar, and worthy only of having been composed by a country squire"—Wordsworth's note

301. 25-26. Cf these lines with Keats's Ode on a Grecian Urn, 11-12 (p 827).

51-54. These lines are carved upon the pedestal of Wordsworth's statue in Westminster Abbey

- 51-56. Cf with Wordsworth's The Prelude, 6, 52-65 (p 249)

ADMONITION

"Intended more particularly for the perusal of those who may have happened to be enamored of some beautiful place of retreat, in the country of the Lakes."—Wordsworth's note

302. COMPOSED BY THE SIDE OF GRASMERE LAKE

Grasmere Lake is in the county of Westmoreland, England

303. ODE INTIMATIONS OF IMMORTALITY

"This was composed during my residence at Town-end, Grasmere. Two years at least passed between the writing of the four first stanzas and the remaining part. To the attentive and competent reader the whole sufficiently explains itself, but there may be no harm in adverting here to particular feelings or experiences of my own mind on which the structure of the poem partly rests. Nothing was more difficult for me in childhood than to admit the notion of death as a state applicable to my own being. I have said elsewhere—

"A simple child,
That lightly draws its breath,
And feels its life in every limb,
What should it know of death?"
[We Are Seven, 1-4 (p 225)]

But it was not so much from feelings of animal vivacity that my difficulty came as from a sense of the indomitableness of the spirit within me. I used to brood over the stories of Enoch and Elijah, and almost to persuade myself that, whatever might become of others, I should be translated, in something of the same way, to heaven. With a feeling congenial to this, I was often unable to think of external things as having external existence, and I communed with all that I saw as something not apart from, but inherent in, my own immaterial nature. Many times while going to school have I grasped at a wall or tree to recall myself from this abyss of idealism to the reality. At that time I was afraid of such processes. In later periods of life I have deplored, as we have all reason to do, a subjugation of an opposite character, and have rejoiced over the remembrances, as is expressed in the lines—

"Obstinate questionings
Of sense and outward things,
Fallings from us, vanishings," etc.
[l. 141-43]

To that dream-like vividness and splendor which invest objects of sight in childhood, every one, I believe, if he would look back, could bear testimony, and I need not dwell upon it here. But having in the poem regarded it as presumptive evidence of a prior state of existence, I think it right to protest against a conclusion, which has given pain to some good and pious persons, that I meant to inculcate such a belief. It is far too shadowy a notion to be recommended to faith, as more than an element in our instincts of immortality. But let us bear in mind that, though the idea is not advanced in revelation, there is nothing there to contradict it, and the fall of man presents an analogy in its favor. Accordingly, a pre-existent state has entered into the popular creeds of many nations, and, among all persons acquainted with classic literature, is known as an ingredient in Platonic philosophy. Archimedes said that he could move the world if he had a point whereon to rest his machine. Who has not felt the same aspirations as regards the world of his own mind? Having to wield some of its elements when I was impelled to write this poem on the Immortality of the Soul, I took hold of the notion of pre-existence as having sufficient foundation in humanity for authorizing me to make for my purpose the best use of it I could as a poet"—Wordsworth's note

Cf with Wordsworth's idea the following extract from Plato's Phaedo, 72-76 (Jowett's trans.) "Your favorite doctrine, Socrates, that knowledge is simply recollection, if true, also necessarily implies a previous time in which we learned that which we now recollect. But this would be impossible unless our soul was in some place before existing in the human form, here then is another argument of the soul's immortality. . . . And if we acquired this knowledge before we were born and were born having it, then we also knew before we were born and at the instant of birth not only the equal or the greater or the less, but all other ideas, for we are not speaking only of equality absolute, but of beauty, good, justice, holiness, and all which we stamp with the name of essence in the dialectal process, when we ask and answer questions . . . But if, after having acquired, we have not forgotten that which we acquired, then we must always have been born with knowledge, and shall always continue to know as long as life lasts—for knowing is the acquiring and retaining knowledge and not forgetting . . . But if the knowledge which we acquired before birth was lost by us at birth, and if afterwards by the use of the senses we recovered that which we previously knew, will not that which we call learning be a process of recovering our knowledge, and may not this be rightly termed recollection by us? . . . Then may we not say, Simmias, that if, as we are always repeating, there is an absolute beauty, and goodness, and essence in general, and to this, which is now discovered to be a previous condition of our being, we refer all our sensations, and with this compare them—assuming this to have a prior existence, then our souls must have had a prior existence, but if not, there would be no force in the argument. There can be no doubt that if these absolute ideas existed before we were born, then our souls must have existed before we were born, and if not the ideas, then not the souls."

Speaking of Wordsworth and this ode in English Traits, ch 17, Emerson says. "Let us say of him that, alone in his time, he treated the human mind well and with an absolute trust. His adherence to his poetic creed rested on real inspirations. The Ode on Immortality is the high water mark which the intellect has reached in this age. New means were employed, and new realms added to the empire of the muse, by his courage."

See Coleridge's comment on the poem, p 388a, 35ff, and 391b, 44ff

303. 66-76. Ruskin cites these lines (Modern Painters, Part III, sec 1, ch 5) as revealing the words of "one whose authority is almost without appeal in all questions relating to the influence of external things upon the pure human soul"

304. 1-43. Fallings from us, vanishings—"There was a time in my life when I had to push against something that resisted, to be sure that there was anything outside of me. I was sure of my own mind, everything else fell away, and vanished into thought"—Wordsworth, quoted by Knight in his edition of Wordsworth's Poems

305. 202-03. "These lines have been often quoted as an illustration of Wordsworth's sensibility to external nature, in reality, they testify to his enriching the sentiment of nature with feeling derived from the heart of man and from the experience of human life"—Dowden, in his edition of Wordsworth's Poems (Atheneum Press ed., 1897)

306.

LAODAMIA

"Written at Rydal Mount. The incident of the trees growing and withering put the subject into my thoughts, and I wrote with the hope of giving it a loftier tone than, so far as I know, has been given to it by any of the ancients who have treated of it. It cost me more trouble than almost anything of equal length I have ever written"—Wordsworth's note

See Landon's comment on this poem in his Imaginary Conversations, "Southey and Porson," I

Laodamia was the wife of Protesilaus, the first Greek killed at the siege of Troy. After his death she implored the gods to allow her to talk with him, and Mercury (Hermes) led him from the lower world. After the interview Protesilaus departed, and Laodamia died with grief. According to another tradition, she voluntarily accompanied him to the lower world.

308.

YARROW VISITED

"As mentioned in my verses on the death of the Ettrick Shepherd [see p 815], my first visit to Yarrow was in his company. We had lodged the night before at Traquahair, where Hogg had joined us and also Dr. Anderson, the editor of the British Poets, who was on a visit at the Manse. Dr A. walked with us till we came in view of the Vale of Yarrow, and, being advanced in life, he then turned back. The old man was passionately fond of poetry, though with not much of a discriminating judgment, as the volumes he edited sufficiently show. But I was much pleased to meet with him, and to acknowledge my obligation to his collection, which had been my brother John's companion in more than one voyage to India, and which he gave me before his departure from Grasmere, never to return. Through these volumes I became first familiar with Chaucer, and so little money had I then to spare for books, that, in all probability, but for this same work, I should have known little of Dryden, Daniel, and other distinguished poets of the Elizabethan age, and their immediate successors, till a much later period of my life. I am glad to record this, not from any importance of its own, but as a tribute of gratitude to this simple-hearted old man whom I never again had the pleasure of meeting. I seldom read or think of this poem without regretting that my dear sister was not of the party, as she would have had so much delight in recalling the time when, travelling together in Scotland, we declined going in search of this celebrated stream, not altogether, I will frankly confess, for the reason assigned in the poem on the occasion"—Wordsworth's note.

"We have there the true Yarrow, the truest Yarrow that ever was pictured, real yet not literal—Yarrow as it is for the spiritual sense made keen, quick, sensitive, and deep through the brooding over the storied of the years and living communion with the heart of things."

J. Veltch, in The History and Poetry of the Scottish Border (1878).

This poem should be read in connection with Wordsworth's Yarrow Unvisited (p. 293) and Yarrow Revisited (p. 312). See notes pp. 1868a and 1873a.

309. HAST THOU SEEN, WITH FLASH INCREASING

This the third of a group of poems entitled Inscriptions Supposed to be Found in and near a Hermit's Cell.

"Where the second quarry now is, as you pass from Rydal to Gasmere, there was formerly a length of smooth rock that sloped towards the road, on the right hand. I used to call it Tadpole Slope, from having frequently observed there the water-bubbles gliding under the ice, exactly in the shape of that creature"—Wordsworth's note.

COMPOSED UPON AN EVENING OF EXTRAORDINARY SPLENDOR AND BEAUTY

"Felt and in a great measure composed upon the little mount in front of our abode at Rydal. In concluding my notices of this class of poems it may be as well to observe that among the Miscellaneous Sonnets are a few alluding to morning impressions which might be read with mutual benefit in connection with these Evening Voluntaries. See, for example, that one on Westminster Bridge (p. 285), that composed on a May morning, the one on the song of the thrush [p. 316], and that beginning—'While beams of orient light shoot wide and high'"—Wordsworth's note.

310. 41 ff. "The multiplication of mountain-ridges, described at the commencement of the third stanza of this ode, as a kind of Jacob's Ladder, leading to Heaven, is produced either by watery vapors, or sunny haze,—in the present instance by the latter cause. Allusions to the ode, entitled Intimations of Immortality, pervade the last stanza"—Wordsworth's note.

THERE IS A LITTLE UNPRETENDING RILL

"This rill trickles down the hill-side into Windermere, near Lowwood. My sister and I, on our first visit together to this part of the country, walked from Kendal, and we rested to refresh ourselves by the side of the lake where the streamlet falls into it. This sonnet was written some years after in recollection of that happy ramble, that most happy day and hour"—Wordsworth's note.

BETWEEN NAMUR AND LIEGE

This and the following poem are from a group of 87 poems entitled Memorials of a Tour on the Continent, 1820. Wordsworth's wife and sister Dorothy and other friends accompanied him on this tour. Namur and Liege are cities in Belgium.

Of the scenery described in this sonnet, Wordsworth says in a note: "The scenery on the Meuse pleases me more, upon the whole, than that of the Rhine, though the river itself is much inferior in grandeur. The rocks both in form and color, especially between Namur and Liege, surpass any upon the Rhine, though they are in several places disfigured by quarries, whence stones were taken for the new fortifications. This is much to be regretted, for they are useless, and the scars will remain perhaps for thousands of years."

311. COMPOSED IN ONE OF THE CATHOLIC CANTONS

See note on preceding poem. This poem refers to the Cantons or States of the Swiss Federation.

THE RIVER DUDDON

The two following sonnets are the fifth and the last of a series of sonnets on the River Duddon. The following quotation is from Wordsworth's prefatory note on the series:

"It is with the little River Duddon as it is with most other rivers, Ganges and Nile not excepted,—many springs might claim the honor of being its head. In my own fancy I have fixed its rise near the noted Shire-stones placed at the meeting-point of the counties, Westmoreland, Cumberland, and Lancashire. They stand by the wayside on the top of the Wrynose Pass, and it used to be reckoned a proud thing to say that, by touching them at the same time with feet and hands, one had been in the three counties at once. At what point of its course the stream takes the name of Duddon I do not know. I first became acquainted with the Duddon, as I have good reason to remember, in early boyhood. Upon the banks of the Derwent I had learnt to be very fond of angling. Fish abound in that large river, not so in the small streams in the neighborhood of Hawkshead, and I fell into the common delusion that the farther from home the better sport would be had. Accordingly, one day I attached myself to a person living in the neighborhood of Hawkshead, who was going to try his fortune as an angler near the source of the Duddon. We fished a great part of the day with very sorry success, the rain pouring torrents, and long before we got home I was worn out with fatigue, and, if the good man had not carried me on his back, I must have lain down under the best shelter I could find. Little did I think then it would be my lot to celebrate, in a strain of love and admiration, the stream which for many years I never thought of without recollections of disappointment and distress."

"During my college vacation, and two or three years afterwards, before taking my Bachelor's degree, I was several times resident in the house of a near relative who lived in the small town of Broughton. I passed many delightful hours upon the banks of this river, which becomes an estuary about a mile from that place."

ECCLESIASTICAL SONNETS

"During the month of December, 1820, I accompanied a much-beloved and honored friend in a walk through different parts of his estate, with a view to fix upon the site of a new church which he intended to erect. It was one of the most beautiful mornings of a mild season,—our feelings were in harmony with the cheering influences of the scene, and such being our purpose, we were naturally led to look back upon past events with wonder and gratitude, and on the future with hope. Not long afterwards, some of the sonnets which will be found towards the close of this series were produced as a private memorial of that morning's occupation.

"The Catholic question, which was agitated in Parliament about that time, kept my thoughts in the same course, and it struck me that certain points in the ecclesiastical history of our country might advantageously be presented to view in verse. Accordingly, I took up the subject, and what I now offer to the reader was the result."—Wordsworth's note 312.

TO A SAILOR

Cf this poem with Wordsworth's earlier poem on the same subject (p. 297) with Shelley's poem (p. 704) and Hogg's (p. 477)

SCOTT NOT THE SONNET

"Composed, almost extempore, in a short walk on the western side of Rydal Lake."—Wordsworth's note

YARROW REVISITED

This and the two following poems are the 1st, 2nd, and 6th of a number of poems written as the result of a tour in Scotland in 1831, and published under the title Yarrow Revisited and Other Poems. In the Preface to these poems, Wordsworth says: "In the autumn of 1831, my daughter and I set off from Rydal to visit Sir Walter Scott before his departure for Italy. . . . How sadly changed did I find him from the man I had seen so healthy, gay, and hopeful, a few years before, when he said at the inn at Latherdale, in my presence: 'I mean to live till I am eighty, and shall write as long as I live'."

On Tuesday morning Sir Walter Scott accompanied us and most of the party to Newark Castle on the Yarrow. When we alighted from the carriage he walked pretty stoutly, and had great pleasure in revisiting those his favorite haunts. Of that excursion the verses Yarrow Revisited are a memorial. Notwithstanding the romance that pervades Sir Walter's works and attaches to many of his habits, there is too much pressure of fact for these verses to harmonize as much as I could wish with other poems. On our return in the afternoon we had to cross the Tweed directly opposite Abbotsford. The wheels of our carriage grated upon the pebbles in the bed of the stream, that there flows somewhat rapidly, a rich but sad light of rather a purple than a golden hue was spread over the Eildon hills at that moment, and, thinking it probable that it might be the last time Sir Walter would cross the stream, I was not a little moved, and expressed some of my feelings in the sonnet beginning—'A trouble not of clouds, or weeping rain.' At noon on Thursday we left Abbotsford, and in the morning of that day Sir Walter and I had a serious conversation à tête à tête, when he spoke with gratitude of the happy life which upon the whole he had led. He had written in my daughter's Album, before he came into the breakfast-room that morning, a few stanzas addressed to her, and, while putting the book into her hand, in his own study standing by his desk, he said to her in my presence—"I should not have done anything of this kind but for your father's sake: they are probably the last verses I shall ever write." They show how much his mind was impaired, not by the strain of thought but by the execution, some of the lines being imperfect, and one stanza wanting corresponding rhymes: one letter, the initial S, had been omitted in the spelling of his own name."

Cf this poem with Wordsworth's Yarrow Unvisited (p. 293) and Yarrow Visited (p. 308). See notes pp. 1368a and 1371b

314. ON THE DEPARTURE OF SIR WALTER SCOTT

See note on preceding poem

THE TROSACHS

The Trosachs is the name given to a romantic valley in the Highlands of western Perthshire, Scotland.

"As recorded in my sister's Journal, I had first seen the Trosachs in her and Coleridge's company. The sentiment that runs through this sonnet was natural to the season in which I again saw this beautiful spot, but this and some other sonnets that follow were colored by the remembrance of my recent visit to Sir Walter Scott, and the melancholy errand on which he was going."—Wordsworth's note

See note on Yarrow Revisited, above

Cf this poem with Stepping Westward (p. 292), composed in the same region, 27 years earlier

IF THOU INDEED DERIVE THY LIGHT FROM HEAVEN

"These verses were written some time after we had become residents at Rydal Mount, and I will take occasion from them to observe upon the beauty of that situation, as being backed and flanked by lofty fells, which bring the heavenly bodies to touch, as it were, the earth upon the mountain-tops, while the prospect in front lies open to a length of level valley, the extended lake, and a terminating ridge of low hills; so that it gives an opportunity to the inhabitants of the place of noticing the stars in both the positions here alluded to, namely, on the tops of the mountains, and as winter-lamps at a distance among the leafless trees."—Wordsworth's note.

"THERE" SAID A STRIPLING, POINTING WITH MEET PRIDE

This and the following sonnet belong to a group of 48 poems "composed or suggested during a tour in the summer of 1833" Wordsworth's companions were his son John and his friend H. Crabb Robinson.

Wordsworth's note on the first of the sonnets here printed is as follows. "Mosgiel was thus pointed out to me by a young man on the top of the coach on my way from Glasgow to Kilmarnock. It is remarkable that, though Burns lived some time here, and during much the most productive period of his poetical life, he nowhere adverts to the splendid prospects stretching towards the sea and bounded by the peaks of Arran on one part, which in clear weather he must have had daily before his eyes. In one of his poetical effusions, he speaks of describing 'fair Nature's face' as a privilege on which he sets a high value, nevertheless, natural appearances rarely take a lead in his poetry. It is as a human being, eminently sensitive and intelligent, and not as a poet, clad in his priestly robes and carving the ensigns of sacerdotal office, that he interests and affects us. Whether he speaks of rivers, hills, and woods, it is not so much on account of the properties with which they are absolutely endowed, as relatively to local patriotic remembrances and associations, or as they ministered to personal feelings, especially those of love, whether happy or otherwise;—yet it is not always so. Soon after we had passed Mosgiel Farm we crossed the Ayr, murmuring and winding through a narrow woody hollow. His line—'Auld hermit Ayr strays through his woods'—came at once to my mind with Irwin, Lugar, Ayr, and Doon.—Ayrshire streams over which he breathes a sigh as being unnamed in song, and surely his own attempts to make them known were as successful as his heart would desire."

315. TO A CHILD

"This quatrain was extempore on observing this image, as I had often done, on the lawn of Rydal Mount"—Wordsworth's note

EXTEMPORE EFFUSION UPON THE DEATH OF JAMES HOGG

"These verses were written extempore, immediately after reading a notice of the Ettrick Shepherd's death in the Newcastle paper, to the editor of which I sent a copy for publication. The persons lamented in these verses were all either of my friends or acquaintance."—Wordsworth's note

316. A POET'—HE HATH PUT HIS HEART TO SCHOOL

"I was impelled to write this sonnet by the disgusting frequency with which the word artificial, imported with other impertinences from the Germans, is employed by writers of the present day for artificial let them substitute artificial, and the poetry written on this system, both at home and abroad, will be for the most part much better characterized"—Wordsworth's note

317. PREFACE

This Preface first appeared in the second edition of Lyrical Ballads, published in 1800. In subsequent editions of Wordsworth's poems it was enlarged and modified, as here given, and transferred to the end of the volume. The phrase "several of the foregoing poems" in the title refers to the original Lyrical Ballads, which included the following poems by Wordsworth.

- Lines left upon a Seat in a Yew-Tree* (p. 223 of this text)
- The Female Vagrant*
- Goody Blake and Harry Gill* (p. 226)
- Lines Written at a Small Distance from my House (To my Sister, p. 231).*
- Simon Lee The Old Huntsman* (p. 230).
- Anecdote for Fathers*
- We Are Seven* (p. 225)
- Lines Written in Early Spring* (p. 231)
- The Thorn* (p. 225).
- The Last of the Flock*
- The Mad Mother (Her Eyes Are Wild, p. 229)*
- The Idiot Boy.*
- Lines Written near Richmond, upon the Thames, at Evening*
- Expostulation and Reply* (p. 212)
- The Tables Turned* (p. 232)
- Old Man Travelling*
- The Complaint of a Forsaken Indian Woman.*
- The Convict.*
- Lines written a Few Miles Above Tintern Abbey* (p. 238)

Also the following by Coleridge

- The Rime of the Ancient Mariner* (p. 335)
- The Foster-Mother's Tale*
- The Nightingale, a Conversational Poem* (p. 356).
- The Dungeon.*

For the other poems which appeared in the second edition of Lyrical Ballads, see the Glossary under Lyrical Ballads.

317b. 252. That is, one expects a poem written in a given period to exemplify the characteristics peculiar to the poetry of that period.

¹ To William Simpson, st. 16, l. 3

² The Vision, Duan I, st. 14, l. 3

³ See To William Simpson, st. 8, l. 5.

The poetry of the age of Catullus, Terence, and Lucretius was less artificial than that of the age of Statius and Claudian. The poetry of the age of Shakspeare and Beaumont and Fletcher was characterized by spontaneity and naturalness; that of Donne and Cowley, by extravagant refinements, that of Dryden and Pope, by precision and conformity to set rules.

314b. 3. Creation—"It is worth while here to observe that the affecting parts of Chaucer are almost always expressed in language pure and universally intelligible even to this day"—Wordsworth's note.

320b. 33. Poetry—"I here used the word poetry (though against my own judgment) as opposed to the word prose, and synonymous with metrical composition. But much confusion has been introduced into criticism by this contradistinction of poetry and prose, instead of the more philosophical one of poetry and matter of fact, or science. The only strict antithesis to prose is metre nor is this, in truth, a strict antithesis, because lines and passages of metre so naturally occur in writing prose, that it would be scarcely possible to avoid them, even were it desirable"—Wordsworth's note

322a. 28ff. (Y. Shelley's A Defense of Poetry (p. 746b, 31ff))

EDWARD YOUNG (1681-1765), p. 33

EDITIONS

Poetical Works, 2 vols., ed., with a Life, by J. Mitford (Aldine ed. London, Bell, 1834, 1871, New York, Macmillan)

Poems, ed., with a Memoir by W. M. Rossetti (London, Ward and Lock, 1871).

Prose Works (London, 1765)

BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM

Ellot, G. "Worldliness and Otherworldliness the Poet Young," Essays (London, Blackwood, 1888)

Hazlitt, W. "On Swift, Young, Gray, Collins, etc.," Lectures on the English Poets (London, 1818), Collected Works, ed. Waller and Glover (London, Dent, 1902-06, New York, McClure), 5, 104.

Johnson, S. The Lives of the English Poets (1779-81), 3 vols., ed. by G. B. Hill (London, Clarendon Press, 1905).

Kind, J. L. Edward Young in Germany (New York, Macmillan, 1906, 1908).

Shelley, H. C. Life and Letters of Edward Young (Boston, Little, 1914).

Texte, J. "Young's Influence in France," Jean Jacques Rousseau, and the Cosmopolitan Spirit in Literature, English translation by J. W. Matthews (London, Duckworth, 1899, New York, Macmillan)

Thomas, W. Le poète Edward Young (Paris, Hachette, 1901)

CRITICAL NOTES

As a rule, Young's verse is hollow and formal, and his thought commonplace, yet his theme—an escape from manners and dress, etc.—and his use of blank verse make his work important among the forerunners of Romanticism

33.

NIGHT THOUGHTS

As originally published this poem was entitled The Complaint, or, Night Thoughts. Young prefixed to it the following Preface

"As the occasion of this poem was real, not fictitious, so the method pursued in it was rather imposed by what spontaneously arose in the author's mind on that occasion, than meditated or designed, which will appear very probable from the nature of it. For it differs from the common mode of poetry, which is, from long narrations to draw short morals. Here, on the contrary, the narrative is short, and the morality arising from it makes the bulk of the poem. The reason of it is that the facts mentioned did naturally pour these moral reflections on the thought of the writer."

36b. 51. Speaking of Dryden, Young says "The strongest demonstration of his no taste for the buskin are his tragedies fringed with rhyme, which in epic poetry is a sure disease, in the tragic, absolute death. To Dryden's enormity, Pope's was a slight offence. As lacemen are foes to mourning, these two authors, rich in rhyme, were no great friends to those solemn ornaments which the noble nature of their works required"—From Conjectures on Original Composition.

GLOSSARY OF PROPER NAMES

The following glossary is meant to include all the proper names occurring in the text, with the following exceptions

- 1 Names explained in the text itself
 - 2 Names explained in the footnotes or in the critical notes, especially names found in titles
 - 3 Names of imaginary persons and places, and of other persons and places not identified
 - 4 Names of very familiar persons and places reference to which is immediately clear
- The glossary aims to supply merely the specific information that is needed in connection with the names as they occur in the text

- Aaron. A high-priest of the Israelites, and the brother of Moses. When the twelve rods of the tribes of Israel were placed in the tabernacle, Aaron's, alone, budded in confirmation of his appointment to the priesthood
- Abassides. A famous dynasty of caliphs at Bagdad, Asiatic Turkey, 749-1258
- Abbotsford. The residence of Sir Walter Scott on the River Tweed, Roxburghshire, Scotland
- Abel. The second son of Adam. He offered a more acceptable sacrifice than his brother Cain, and was slain by him out of jealousy
- Abelard. Peter Abelard (1079-1142), a noted French philosopher and theologian. He was the instructor and pursuor of Heloise. After their marriage, Abelard became a monk, and Heloise retired to a convent. The story of their love is preserved in their letters which have been frequently published. See Pope's Episto to Abellard
- Aberdeen. 1—(493, 495)—George Gordon, (1784-1840), 4th Earl of Aberdeen, a member of the Athenian Society, and the author of An Inquiry into the Principles of Beauty in Grecian Architecture. 2—(1144)—An important seaport in the county of Aberdeen, Scotland
- Aberdour. A small place on the Firth of Forth, near Edinburgh, Scotland
- Aberfoyle. A small village in Perthshire, central Scotland near Loch Katrine
- Abora, Mount. See Mount Abora
- Aboukir. A seacoast village near Alexandria, Egypt, on the west side of Aboukir Bay. Here Admiral Nelson gained a decisive victory over the French fleet, Aug. 1, 1798
- Abram. First of the patriarchs and founder of the Hebrew race
- Abram, Heights of. The scene of Wolfe's victory over Montcalm, before Quebec Sept. 13, 1759
- Abydos. A town in Asia Minor on the Hellespont, the scene of the romance of Hero and Leander
- Abysinia. An empire in northeastern Africa
- Academy of Compliments. A popular treatise with the sub-title The Whole Art of Courtship, Being the Rarest and Most Exact Way of Winning a Maid or Widow by Way of Dialogue or Complimental Expressions. Books of similar titles were published in 1635 and 1669
- Achilles. A Greek legendary warrior son of Peleus and Thetis. He is the principal character in the Iliad, which is largely occupied with a quarrel with Agamemnon leader of the Greek army, and his martial exploits. Achilles was noted for his heroism and his fierce passions. After defeating Hector, Achilles dragged his body around the walls of Troy
- Achitophel. A character in Dryden's Abraham and Achitophel, representing Anthony Ashley Cooper (1621-83), Earl of Shaftesbury, a noted English statesman
- Achray. A lake in western Perthshire, Scotland, near Stirling
- Acon. Acre (Akka), a seaport of Syria, which was taken by Richard Cœur de Lion in 1191
- Acrocerasuntian. The ancient name of a promontory in Epirus Greece formed by the end of a chain of hills called the Ceraunii Montes
- Acon. A Sicilian physician said to have conquered the plague in Athens in 430 B C
- Actæa. A river-goddess
- Actæon. A hunter, who saw Diana bathing, and who was changed by her into a stag, and killed by his own hounds
- Actium. A promontory on the coast of Acarnania, ancient Greece
- Addison. Joseph Addison (1672-1719), a noted English essayist, principal contributor to The Spectator
- Adelung. Johann Christoph Adelung (1732-1806), a noted German philologist and lexicographer, author of Mithridates, a general treatise on language, and of a Grammatico-critical Dictionary, regarded as superior to Johnson's
- Admetus. A mythological king of Thessaly, the husband of Alceste
- Adon'. See Adonis
- Adonais. The name given by Shelley to Keats, and used by him as the title of a poem. See note on Adonais, p. 1340a
- Adonis. A beautiful youth, beloved by Venus. He was slain by a wild boar, and at Venus's request it was decreed that he should spend half the year in the upper world and the other half in the lower
- Adria, Adrian. The Adriatic Sea, lying east of Italy
- Adriatic. A sea lying east of Italy
- Adventures of the Hon. Capt Robert Boyle. A book by W. R. Chetwode (1726)
- Æsea. An island lying between Italy and Sicily, and famed as the abode of Circe
- Ægean. A sea east of Greece
- Ægeria. In Roman mythology, one of the Camenæ (identified with the Muses), by whom Numa was instructed with regard to the forms of worship he was to introduce into Roman temples
- Ægeus. A mythological king of Athens. The Ægean Sea was, by tradition, named after him because he drowned himself in it
- Ægisthus. Son of Thyestes, in Greek mythology, slayer of Atreus, and paramour of Clytemnestra, whom he aided in the slaying of her husband, Agamemnon. He was slain by Orestes
- Æneas. The hero of Virgil's Æneid, and a prominent defender of Troy in Homer's Iliad. He was the son of Anchises and Aphrodite
- Æneid. An epic poem by Virgil relating the wanderings of Æneas from Troy to various countries around the Mediterranean
- Æol. Æolus, god of winds
- Æolia. In ancient geography, the western coast of Asia Minor
- Æolian. Of or pertaining to Æolus, god of winds, of or pertaining to Æolia in Asia Minor. The Æolian harp was a stringed instrument, usually placed where the wind would strike it and produce music. The Æolian lute was the lyre of Pindar, a famous lyric poet, who belonged to the Æolian division of the Greek race
- Æolus. God of the winds
- Æonian. Eternal, lasting for eons
- Æschylus. (5th century B C.) One of the great tragic poets of Greece. He left Athens for the court of Syracuse in 468, in humiliation, accord-

- ing to Plutarch, at being defeated for the tragic prize by Sophocles
- Esau. In classic mythology, the father of Jason (noted for his quest of the Golden Fleece) Medea, the sorceress, at Jason's request, restored aged Esau to the vigor of youth
- Esop. According to tradition, a Greek fabulist of the 8th century B C
- Ethiopia. In ancient times, a country south of Egypt
- Ethon. One of the horses of the sun, named in Ovid's Metamorphoses
- Etnaean. Of or resembling Mt Etna, a volcano in Sicily
- Effra. A small stream near Landon's home in Fiesole, Italy. It was celebrated by Boccaccio in his Ninfale, and near it the stories of his Decameron were related
- Afton. A small river in Ayrshire, Scotland
- Agamemnon. An ancient king of Mycenae and leader of the Greeks in the Trojan War. He is the subject of a tragedy by Aeschylus, a Greek dramatist of the 5th century B C
- Agave. Mother of Pentheus, King of Thebes. Pentheus was discovered watching the orgies of the Bacchus near Thebes, and was torn to pieces by his mother and two sisters, in their frenzy
- Agra. A military and commercial city in a northwestern province of India, taken by the British in 1808
- Agrippa. Cornelius Heinrich Agrippa (1486-1538), a German philosopher and student of alchemy and magic. Numerous marvels are ascribed to him. See Thomas Nash's The Unfortunate Traveller, or, The Life of Jack Wilton (1594)
- Ahasuerus. The name of a Jewish cobbler, according to a late legend, who refused Christ permission to rest when passing his house on the way to Calvary. The sentence pronounced by Christ was, "Thou shalt wander on the earth till I return." The story has frequently been used in literature and art
- Alisa Rock. Alisa Crag, a rocky island on the coast of Ayrshire, Scotland
- Alx. A city of France, near Marseilles, famous for its hot salt mine springs used by the Romans
- Ajax. A leading Greek hero in the Trojan War, noted for his size and strength
- Alban Mount. A mountain near Rome, Italy
- Alban's. See Saint Alban's
- Albin. A poetic name for Scotland
- Albion. A poetic name for England
- Albuera. A town in Spain, the scene of a victory of the British and their allies over the French, in 1811
- Albys. Same as Albin
- Aleceus. (fl. 900 B C) A famous Greek poet
- Aleceia. A daughter of Pelias, and wife of Admetus, a king in Thessaly. She voluntarily died to save the life of Admetus, and was brought back from Hades by Hercules, or, according to another version of the story, by Proserpina. The legend is the subject of a tragedy by Euripides, a Greek dramatist of the 5th century B C
- Alcibiades. (5th century B C) An Athenian statesman and general
- Alcina. A fairy in Orlando Innamorato, an Italian romance by Boiardo (1484?-94)
- Alexander the Great. King of Macedonia (356-323 B C). Immediately upon his accession he made himself master of all Greece. After conquering Persia and Egypt, he crossed the Indus River (B C 327), and invaded India
- Alexandria. A seaport of Egypt, near the westernmost branch of the Nile delta, on the Mediterranean
- Alexis. In Virgil's second Eclogue a beautiful youth beloved by the shepherd Corydon
- Alfonso. 1—(102)—Alfonso IX, King of Castile (1159-1214), surnamed "The Noble" and "The Good" 2—(825)—Alfonso X, King of Leon and Castile (1252-82), surnamed "The Wise" and "The Astronomer"
- Alford. Halford, a village in Somersetshire, England
- Alfoxden. The large mansion and park, the home of Wordsworth in Somersetshire. See My First Acquaintance with Poets (p. 1035b, 51x)
- Alfred. Alfred the Great, the famous King of the West Saxons (871-901), noted for his generous service to his people
- Allan-Raine. A gray-haired bard in The Lady of the Lake
- Allen. Bob Allen, a student at Christ's Hospital, contemporary with Lamb
- All-Isleaden. See Alfoxden
- Alloway. A church not far from Burns's birthplace near Ayr, Ayrshire, Scotland
- Alp. Any one of the Alps Mountains
- Alpheus. In Greek mythology, a river-god, represented originally as a hunter who fell in love with the nymph Arethusa. She fled from him and was transformed into a fountain, Alpheus then became a river
- Alphonso. See Alfonso X
- Amalek. A grandson of Esau, and prince of an Arab tribe, the Amalekites. When they attacked the Israelites in the desert, the Amalekites were driven off by Joshua and doomed to extermination
- Amalfi. A seaport of Italy, south of Naples
- Amalthaea. A nymph who nursed the infant Jupiter
- Amarillis. The name of a rustic maiden or shepherdess, in various pastorals
- Amasis. An Egyptian king of the 6th century B C
- Amazon. One of a race of female warriors, said to have dwelt in Scythia, famous in literature for their contests with the Greeks
- Amber. A name given by the Greeks to the islands in the North Sea
- Amiens. A character in As You Like It
- Amiens. Peace of. A peace concluded at Amiens, France, between Great Britain on the one hand, and France, Spain, and the Batavian Republic on the other
- Ammon. 1—The ancestor of a people called Ammonites, frequently mentioned in the Old Testament 2—(1170)—Alexander the Great, King of Macedonia (340-323 B C), who boasted that he was a son of the Egyptian god Ammon
- Amore. In Spenser's The Faerie Queene, the wife of Sir Scudamore. She is a type of feminine loveliness
- Amphion. A son of Jupiter and Antiope. By the music of his lyre, he caused stones to move and form themselves into a wall around Thebes
- Amphitrite. The wife of Neptune, god of the sea
- Anacreon. (5th century B C) A Greek lyric poet
- Analogy. A theological treatise by Joseph Butler (1692-1752), an English theologian. The full title is Analogy of Religion, Natural and Revealed, to the Constitution and Course of Nature
- Anapoe. A river in Sicily
- Anastadius. The title of a work by the English writer, Thomas Hope (1770-1831)
- Anatomy of Melancholy. The. A book by Robert Burton (1576-1640), an English divine
- Anaxagoras. (5th century B C) A famous Greek philosopher
- Ancient Pistol. See p. 1013b, n 4
- Anderson's. A coffee-house in Fleet St., London
- Andes. A mountain range along the west side of South America
- Andromache. The wife of Hector, leader of the Trojans in the Trojan War. The French opera Andromaque was written by Andre Grétry (1741-1813)
- Andromeda. A northern constellation, supposed to represent the figure of a woman chained. According to Greek legend Andromeda was exposed to a sea-monster, rescued by Perseus, and changed, after her death, into a constellation
- Angelo. See Michelangelo
- Angelode. A famous giantess in Norse mythology
- Anlo. A river in central Italy. It is noted for its beautiful valley and waterfall, 830 ft high
- Ann, St. See St. Ann
- Annabella. A character in John Ford's The Petty Whore (1633)
- Annan. A river in Dumfriesshire, Scotland
- Anne. Queen of England (1702-14)
- Anncy. A town in eastern France
- Anson, Lord George. (1697-1762) An English admiral
- Antiparos. Grotto of. Antiparos is an island of the Greek Archipelago, celebrated for a stalactite cavern
- Antoinette, Marie. See Marie Antoinette
- Antonine. Marcus Aurelius Antoninus (121-180), a celebrated Roman emperor and Stoic philosopher
- Antony and Cleopatra. A tragedy by Shakespeare
- Aonian Muses. The Muses of Aonia, an ancient district in Boeotia, Greece
- Aornoe. In ancient geography, a rocky stronghold, situated near the Indus, taken by Alexander the Great from native defenders in 327 B C
- Apeninne. The central mountain system of Italy
- Aphrodite. At the marriage of Peleus and Thetis in Thessaly, Greece, Paris, son of Priam, King of Troy, awarded the golden apple to Aphrodite

- (Venus, goddess of love and beauty) as the most beautiful woman. This pleased Ares (Mars), the lover of Aphrodite, but aroused the wrath of Athena and Hera (Pallas, goddess of wisdom and war, and Juno, queen of heaven), and led to the fall of Troy. Aphrodite (Venus) fell in love with Adonis. See Adonis.
- Apicius. A famous Roman epicure of the 1st century A. D.
- Apis. The sacred bull worshiped by the ancient Egyptians.
- Apocalypse. The revelation made to the Apostle John and recorded in Revelation.
- Apollonian. Resembling Apollo, noted for his youthful beauty.
- Apollo. One of the great Olympian gods, son of Jupiter and Latona. He was the god of music, poetry, and healing. As god of the sun, he was represented as driving the chariot of the sun through the sky and as sinking into the western ocean at evening. He slew the Python, a monstrous serpent dwelling in the caves of Mount Parnassus. He loved a beautiful youth named Hyacinthus, but accidentally slew him with a quail. He was inspired by Cupid with love for a maiden, Daphne, who fled his advances, and escaped him by being changed into a laurel tree. Apollo's constant attributes were the bow, the lyre, and the laurel wreath.
- Apollo Belvedere. A celebrated antique statue of Apollo in the Belvedere, a portion of the Vatican Palace in Rome.
- Apollyon. The angel of the bottomless pit, in Revelation.
- Appian. A Roman historian of the 2nd century A. D.
- Appleby. A town in the county of Westmoreland, England.
- Aquarius. A constellation supposed to represent a man standing with his left hand extended upward, and with his right pouring a stream of water out of a vase.
- Arabia. A country of southwestern Asia, between the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf.
- Arabian Nights. The A famous and ancient collection of Eastern stories.
- Arabic. The language spoken originally by the Arabians.
- Arabic; Araby. Poetic names for Arabia.
- Aragon. An ancient kingdom, now a part of north-eastern Spain.
- Arcadian. A picturesque district of the Peloponnesus praised for the simplicity and contentment of its people, and represented as the home of pastoral poetry.
- Arcadian Elocutors. Beings who summoned up spirits of the dead. They resided in Phigalia, Greece.
- Arady. A poetic name for Arcadia.
- Arcturi. Arcturus. A brilliant star in the northern hemisphere, the fourth in order of brightness in the entire heavens.
- Ardalia. See note on Life Passes Not as Some Men Say, p. 1306b.
- Arden. A forest in As You Like It, the retreat of the banished Duke and of Rosalind.
- Ardennes. In ancient times, a large forest in Gaul (modern France).
- Ares. Mars, god of war. See Aphrodite.
- Arethusa. A nymph who, while bathing, was pursued by her lover, Alpheus, the river-god. She fled under the sea to the island of Orygia, where she was transformed into a fountain. Alpheus was changed into a river.
- Argenis. A political allegory by John Barclay (1582-1621), said by Cowper to be the most amusing romance ever written.
- Argo. The ship of the Argonauts.
- Argonauts. The sailors who accompanied Jason in the Argo, in quest of the Golden Fleece.
- Argos. The most ancient city in Greece.
- Argus. In Greek legend, the guardian of Io. He was famed to have had one hundred eyes. He was slain by Hermes.
- Argyleshire. A county in western Scotland.
- Ariadne. Daughter of Minos, King of Crete. She fell in love with Theseus, and gave him a clew of thread to guide him out of the labyrinth in case he should slay the Minotaur. Having fled with Theseus, she was abandoned by him on the Isle of Naxos. There Bacchus found her and made her his wife.
- Ariel. A tricky spirit in Shakespeare's The Tempest. See note on With a Guitar to Jane, p. 1842a.
- Arlon. A Greek poet and musician in Lesbos. Returning from Sicily, after a successful musical competition, he was compelled to leap into the sea, by sailors who are said to have robbed him, he was carried to shore by dolphins which had gathered to listen to his music.
- Ariosto (1474-1533). A famous Italian poet.
- Aristides. A celebrated Athenian statesman and general who was exiled through the influence of Themistocles, his rival, in 483 B. C. He was recalled in 480 because of his service at the Battle of Salamis, against the Persians.
- Aristotle (384-322 B. C.). The most famous and influential of Greek philosophers. He was the author of a treatise on moral philosophy entitled Nicomachean Ethics, of a treatise on poetry entitled Poetics, and of other works.
- Ark. See Genesis 6:14f.
- Armada. The fleet sent against England by Philip II of Spain in 1588.
- Armed. A beautiful sorceress who ensnared Rinaldo, in Tasso's epic poem Jerusalem Delivered (1581).
- Arno. 1—(95)—See note on Fagol, p. 1806b. 2—(889, 821)—A river of Tuscany, which flows into the Mediterranean.
- Arpinum. An ancient town in Caserta province, Italy, the birthplace of Marius.
- Arran. An island on the west coast of Scotland, noted for its lofty mountain-peaks. It is the ancient seat of the Hamiltons, a noted Scotch family.
- Art of Cookery. A cook-book by Mrs. Rundell, first entitled Famly Receipt Book (1810), in later editions, Domestic Cookery. It was one of Murray's most successful books. He paid £2,000 for the copyright.
- Artemis. Diana, goddess of the moon and the chase. See Diana.
- Arthur. A British chieftain of the 6th century, celebrated in Welsh, Breton, and old French romance.
- Arve. A river in France and Switzerland, which waters the valley of Chamouni.
- Arvelon. A small stream in eastern France, a branch of the River Arve.
- Arviragus. Cymbeline's son, in Shakespeare's Cymbeline, who assumes the name of Cadwal.
- Arvon. Carnarvonshire, a county in Wales, opposite the Isle of Anglesey.
- Ascarbart. Ascarbart. A giant in the medieval romance Bevis of Hampton, said to have been 30 feet high. He was overthrown by Sir Bevis.
- Ash. A small village in the county of Surrey, England.
- Ashtaroth. A general name of the Syrian deities. See Paradise Lost, 1:422.
- Ashur. Ashur, the highest god of the Assyrians.
- Asmodeus. King of the Demons.
- Aspatia. A character in Beaumont and Fletcher's The Maid's Tragedy (c1610).
- Asphaltes. Asphaltites, an ancient name of the Dead Sea.
- Assyria. An ancient empire in southwestern Asia.
- Atropa. The goddess of justice.
- Atalantis. A scandalous romance entitled Memoirs of the New Atalantis, written by Mrs. Mary Manley, a popular English writer of the early 18th century. The story is an account of the crimes of thinly-disguised persons of high rank.
- Athens. Goddess of wisdom and war. See Aphrodite.
- Athenus. A Greek rhetorician and philosopher of the 2nd century A. D. His Deipnosophistae is a storehouse of quotations.
- Athena. See Athena.
- Athol. A district in northern Perthshire, Scotland.
- Atlantean. Resembling Atlas. See Atlas.
- Atlantides. The Pleiades, daughters of Atlas.
- Athenian. Aberdeen. See Aberdeen (1).
- Atlas. In classic mythology, a Titan, who was supposed to support the pillars of heaven on his shoulders as a punishment for making war against Zeus.
- Attic; Attica. Of or belonging to Attica, an ancient kingdom of Greece.
- Attila. A famous King of the Huns (406?-453) surnamed "The Scourge of God" on account of the terrible destruction wrought by his armies.
- Auber. Feyer. Probably Peter Auber, assistant secretary of the East India Company in 1820.
- Auerstadt. A town in Saxony where the French defeated the Prussians in 1806.
- Augereau. Pierre Francois Charles Augereau (1757-1816), a noted French marshal.
- Augustine. St. Aurelius Augustinus (354-430), the most celebrated father of the Latin Church, author of Confessions.

- Augustus. Augustus Caesar, the first Roman emperor (81 B.C.-14 A.D.) During his reign, Roman literature reached its highest point. See note on Tiberius and Vergil, p. 1305a.
- Aulis. A town on the eastern coast of Boeotia, Greece. It was the rendezvous of the Greek fleet in the expedition against Troy.
- Aurora. Goddess of the dawn, represented as rising from the ocean in a chariot, with her fingers dripping dew. She was attended by the Hours. She fell in love with Tithonus, the son of Laomedon, King of Troy. She prevailed on the gods to grant Tithonus immortality, but forgot to ask immortal youth for him. He grew old, and was changed by Aurora into a grasshopper.
- Aurora Borealis. A phenomenon of the atmosphere, often seen during the night in high northern latitudes, called commonly "Northern Lights."
- Ausonia. A poetical name for Italy.
- Auster. The south wind.
- Austral. Pertaining to the south.
- Aventicum. The ancient name of Avenches, a town in Switzerland. It was an important Roman city, destroyed by the Huns in 447. It contains walls and other ancient remains.
- Avon. A river in the midland counties of England, on which Stratford, where Shakespeare lived, is located.
- Azumé. An ancient city in Abyssinia, noted for its antiquities.
- Aylmer, Rose. A daughter of Lord Aylmer, a friend of Landor's.
- Ayr. The name of a city and a river in Ayrshire, Scotland.
- Azincour. Azincourt, a village in France, southeast of Boulogne, the scene of an English victory over the French in 1415.
- Azrael. The angel of death.
- B. One of De Quincey's guardians. He was a merchant.
- Baal. The supreme divinity of the ancient Syro-Phœnician nations. He was also worshipped as the sun-god.
- Babel. 1—(469)—The city of Babylon. 2—(577)—The tower described in Genesis 11, during the building of which occurred the confusion of tongues. 3—(612, 746)—Tumult, confusion.
- Babes in the Wood. The In Percy's Reliques a ballad of two children who perished in Wayland Wood, Norfolkshire, England.
- Babylon. Babylon. The capital of ancient Babylonia, in Asia, situated on the Euphrates River. For the destruction of the city, see Resurrection, 14, 8 and 18 10-21. It is noted for its Hanging Gardens, one of the seven wonders of the world.
- Bacchanal. Bacchanalian. Pertaining to Bacchanalia, the worship of Bacchus, or a festival in his honor, usually a drunken revel.
- Bacchic Nysa. See Nysa.
- Bacchus (Dionysus). The son of Jupiter, and the god of wine. His forehead was crowned with vine-leaves or ivy. He rode upon the tiger, the panther, or the lynx, and was drawn by them in a car. His worshippers were Bacchanals, or Bacchantes. He was attended by Satyrs and Sileni, and women called Menads who as they danced and sang, waved in the air the thyrsus, a staff entwined with ivy and surmounted by a pine cone. He gained the love of Ariadne, daughter of King Minos of Crete.
- Baelzeub. Baelzeub. Sir Walter Scott of Branxholm (Branksome), in Roxburghshire, Scotland.
- Bacon. Francis Bacon (1561-1626), a celebrated English philosopher, jurist, statesman, and essayist.
- Badajoz. A town and fortress in Spain, stormed by Wellington in 1812.
- Bagdat. Bagdad, an ancient city in Asiatic Turkey.
- Bagshot. A village in the county of Surrey, England.
- Bala. Bala. A small seaport of Italy, west of Naples.
- Balley. Benjamin Balley (1749-1852), an intimate friend of Keats.
- Bajazet. A Turkish sultan (1389-1402) who appears as a character in Marlowe's Tamburlaine the Great (c1588), Racine's Bajazet (1672), and other plays.
- Balaam. The prophet to whom Balak, King of Moab, sent presents to induce him to curse Israel, and who was rebuked by the ass he rode. His utterance, by God's power, was a blessing instead of a curse.
- Balbec. An ancient city of Syria, Asia Minor, famous for its ruins, it was sacred to the worship of Baal, the sun god.
- Balboa. A Spanish navigator who discovered the Pacific Ocean in 1513.
- Balclutha. See note on Carthage, p. 1306a.
- Balder. See note on The Descent of Odin, p. 1266b.
- Baldwin. C. B. Baldwin or Herbert Baldwin, both of whom were members of the House of Commons, 1830-33.
- Balk. Balkh, a region of Turkestan, in Asia.
- Ballad of Betty Foy. A poem by Wordsworth.
- Bamborowe. A district in Northumberlandshire, England. It contains Bamborough Castle, which is built on a high rock projecting into the North Sea.
- Bangor. A city on the coast of Carnarvonshire, North Wales.
- Bank. Bank of England. The custodian of the public money of Great Britain, and manager of the public debt, now the largest bank in the world.
- Banka. John Banks (d. 1696) author of The Unhappy Favorite and other melodramatic plays.
- Bannister. Jack Bannister (1700-1830), an English comedian.
- Bannochbar. A valley on the borders of Loch Lomond, in the county of Dumbarton, Scotland.
- Banquo. A Scottish thane and general, the legendary ancestor of the Stuarts, he appears in Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- Baramoule. A locality in the western part of Cashmere, which is bounded by Eastern Turkestan, Tibet, and India.
- Barbara. A child mentioned in Wordsworth's 'Tis So Sad That Some Have Died for Love. Not to be confused with Barbara, Lewthwaite, mentioned in Wordsworth's The Plover.
- Barbary. The Mohammedan countries on the north coast of Africa, not including Egypt.
- Barhican. A street in London, so called from a former watch-tower which stood on it.
- Barclay. John Barclay (1582-1621) a Scottish poet.
- Barden. A moor in Cumberlandshire, England.
- Bardic clan. Bards, or poets.
- Barker's. A former bookshop in what is now Russell Street, London.
- Barleycorn. John. The personification of malt liquor, as being made from barley.
- Barnesdale. A woodland region in the western part of Yorkshire, England.
- Barnet. A village in Hertfordshire, north of London.
- Barnwell. George. A character in George Lillo's tragedy The London Merchant or The History of George Barnwell (1731).
- Barrett. Elizabeth. An English poet (1806-61).
- Barrow. John Barrow (1764-1848), an English writer and traveler.
- Bartholinus. Thomas Bartholin (1616-80), a Danish physician and scholar.
- Bartholomew, St. One of the twelve apostles.
- Bartram. William Bartram (1733-1823) an American botanist and ornithologist, who wrote Travels Through North and South Carolina, Georgia, East and West Florida, etc.
- Basques. A race of unknown origin inhabiting the Basque provinces and other parts of Spain in the neighborhood of the Pyrenees.
- Bateable Land. Debatable Land, a region on the border of England and Scotland formerly claimed by both kingdoms. It comprised about 30 square miles north and east of the mouth of the River Esk.
- Bath. A town in Somersetshire, England. It is one of the leading watering places of England, and is noted for its hot springs.
- Bathylus. A poem by Anacreon, a Greek lyric poet of the fifth century B.C.
- Battle. A town in the county of Sussex which received its name from the Battle of Hastings, fought there in 1066.
- Battle Abbey. A large Benedictine monastery, built by William the Conqueror in 1067 on the spot where Harold's banner had been planted in the Battle of Hastings.
- Battle of Hexham. A comedy by George Colman the Younger (1762-1836).
- Bavins. An inferior Roman poet of the first century B.C.; an enemy of Virgil and Horace.
- Beacon-hill. A prominent hill near Penrith, Cumberlandshire, England.
- Bear, The Great. Ursa Major, a large northern constellation, containing the seven conspicuous stars called the Great Dipper.
- Beattie. James Beattie (1735-1803), a Scotch poet, essayist, and philosophical writer. See p. 119.

- Beatty, Mr. Sir William Beatty (d. 1842), an English surgeon, for many years in the service of the navy
- Beaumont, Francis Beaumont (1584-1616), an Elizabethan dramatist, collaborator with John Fletcher
- Beaumont, Sir George (1758-1827) An English landscape painter and patron of art
- Bede (673-735) A celebrated English monk and ecclesiastical writer
- Bedford, John Plantagenet (1389-1435), Duke of Bedford, an English general and statesman. He abetted the execution of Joan of Arc in 1431
- Bedlam. The hospital of St Mary of Bethlehem in London, founded about 1247. On the suppression of religious houses by Henry VIII, it was incorporated as a hospital for the insane, in 1547
- Bedlamites —(264)—Discharged inmates of Bedlam Hospital, licensed to beg
- Bedouin Arab One of the nomadic Arabs of Syria, Arabia, and northern Africa
- Beelzebub. The prince of the demons, the devil
- Behman Jacob Ischman (1575-1624), a noted German mystic
- Bela A town in the district of Lus, in southeastern Baluchistan west of India
- Belcher. Tom Belcher (1783-1854), younger brother of James Belcher, a well-known prize-fighter, who kept a tavern in Holborn, a district in the central part of London
- Belial. The ancient Hebrew personification of recklessness or lawlessness, hence, the devil
- Bellarmino. Cardinal Roberto Bellarmine (1542-1621), an Italian divine
- Bellini. Vincenzo Bellini (1802-85), a famous Italian operatic composer
- Bembo, Cardinal (1470-1547) An Italian cardinal and writer
- Ben-an. A mountain north of the Trossachs, a valley of western Perthshire Scotland
- Benbecula, Island of. An island of the Hebrides, between North Uist and South Uist, west of Scotland
- Bengal. A province in northeastern British India
- Benledi. A mountain in Perthshire, Scotland. The name signifies Mountain of God
- Ben-Lomond. A mountain in Stirlingshire, Scotland
- Benmore. A mountain near Loch Katrine in Perthshire, Scotland
- Benvenue. A mountain in Perthshire Scotland
- Benwulfrich. A mountain in Perthshire Scotland
- Berkeley. George Berkeley (1685-1753), an Irish bishop and philosopher
- Berkeley Castle. A Norman stronghold Gloucestershire England. Here Edward II was murdered in 1327
- Bermoothes. An old form of Bermudas
- Bermudas. A British island group in the North Atlantic Ocean
- Bernard, Abbot of Clairvaux (1091-1153) A celebrated French ecclesiastical
- Berwick-Law. North Berwick Law, a prominent height in Haddingtonshire Scotland overlooking the Firth of Forth
- Bess, Queen. Elizabeth, Queen of England (1558-1603)
- Bethlehem. An ancient city in Palestine, the birthplace of Christ
- Betterton, Thomas Betterton (1635?-1710), a noted English actor
- Bey. A title given to sons of Pashas and to the nobility. It is conferred by the Sultan
- Bev Ogion. The title of a Turkish nobleman
- Bigod, Ralph. John Fenwick, an early nineteenth century editor. His life was full of misfortunes. Lamb borrowed the name Bigod from the old family name of the Earls of Norfolk
- Billet, Mr. Lamb's "poor relation"
- Birkbeck, George Birkbeck (1766-1841), a London physician, founder of Mechanics' Institute, Birkbeck College and University College, London
- Birmingham. A large manufacturing city in Warwickshire, England
- Bishopsgate. The principal entrance through the northern wall of Old London
- Black. John Black (1785-1856), a distinguished journalist, editor of The Morning Chronicle, a prominent London paper, from 1819 to 1843
- Black Prince, The. Edward, Prince of Wales (1330-76), a son of Edward III of England, so named by "terror of his arms"
- Blackwood. 1—(412)—Sir Henry Blackwood (1770-1832) an English naval captain. 2—(863, 1035)—William Blackwood (1776-1834), a Scotch publisher and bookseller, founder of The Edinburgh Magazine. He was a rank Toiy
- Blackwood's Magazine. A magazine of Edinburgh, Scotland, founded and edited by William Blackwood (1770-1834).
- Blake, Robert Blake (1598-1657), a famous British admiral who won notable victories over the Dutch and Spanish. He died at sea, and was buried in Westminster Abbey
- Blanc, Mont. See Mont Blanc
- Bland, Mrs. Maria Theresa Bland (Dorothea Jordan) (1760-1838), a well-known Irish actress
- Blenheim. 1—(400)—See Note on The Battle of Blenheim, p. 1345a. 2—(1027)—A village in Oxfordshire, England. It is the seat of Blenheim Palace, noted for its fine apartments
- Bloomfield. Robert Bloomfield (1760-1823), an English pastoral poet
- Bloomsbury. A noted district in London. Lamb never lived there
- Blue Anchor. Probably the name of a hill near Minchhead, in Somersetshire, England
- Blue Bonnets. Scotchmen, so called from the broad, flat cap of blue wool which they wore
- Bluebeard. The hero of a popular story, who gave his wives, in turn, a key to a certain room, and forbade their opening it on penalty of death
- Bobby, Master. A character in The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy (v. T.), a novel by Laurence Sterne (1713-68)
- Boccate, Boccaccio. Giovanni Boccaccio (1313-75), a noted Italian writer
- Bochastle. A moor in Perthshire, Scotland
- Bodleian. The library of Oxford University, named after Sir Thomas Bodley, who re-established it, 1597-1602
- Boetian. Belonging to or having the traits of the inhabitants of Boetia, Greece, proverbial for their dulness
- Boetius. Boethius (475-524), a Roman philosopher. His most famous work is the De Consolatione Philosophiae
- Bolleau Nicholas Bolleau-Despreaux (1686-1711), a famous French critic and poet
- Bollingbroke. Henry St John (1678-1751), Lord Bolingbroke, an English statesman, political writer, and Deistic philosopher
- Bolton Priory. An abbey in the western part of Yorkshire, England
- Bond-street. In the West End of London, the fashionable shopping district
- Bonnivard. Francis de Bonniard (1496-1570), a French reformer who aided the Genevese against Charles of Savoy. He was imprisoned at Chillon
- Boreas. The god of the north wind
- Borgia. Cesare Borgia (1478-1507), an Italian cardinal, soldier, and adventurer, noted for the murder of his brother and as an adept in peccadillo politics
- Borgia, Lucretia. See note on On Seeing a Hair of Lucretia Borgia, p. 1304a
- Borrodale. Borrowdale, a romantic vale in the lake country, Cumberlandshire, England
- Borrowgate. A small place in Cumberlandshire, England
- Borysthenes. The ancient name of the River Dniester, in Russia
- Bosnia. A poetic name for Bosnian. Bosnia is a province of Austria-Hungary
- Boswell. James Boswell (1740-1795), a Scotch lawyer, biographer of Samuel Johnson
- Botany Bay. An inlet on the east coast of New South Wales Australia. It was formerly used by the British as a convict station
- Bothwellhaugh. See note on Cadown Castle, p. 1320a
- Bowles. William Lisle Bowles (1762-1850), an English clergyman and minor poet. He published an edition of Pope in 1806. See p. 164
- Bracklinn. A beautiful cascade in the River Keltie, near Callander, Perthshire Scotland
- Braemar. The highland portion of the district of Mar, Aberdeenshire, Scotland. It is famed for its deer and its forests
- Brahma. The creator in Hindu mythology
- Bramins. Members of the first of the four castes of India
- Brankome Ha; Brankholm. A castle and an estate three miles southwest of the village of Hawick, in Roxburghshire, Scotland. It was the residence of the Buccleuch family
- Bratha Head. The source of the River Bratha, which flows through the county of Westmoreland into Lake Windermere, England
- Brasenose College. A college of Oxford University, so named from the sign of the former Brasenose Hall, a brazen nose

- Breadalbane. A district in Perthshire, Scotland, north of Loch Lomond.
- Brenta. A river of northern Italy, flowing into the Gulf of Venice.
- Brentford. A town in the county of Middlesex, England, on the Thames, nine miles west of London.
- Brian. King of Dublin in the eleventh century.
- Briareus. A son of Uranus and Gaea, a monster with a hundred arms.
- Bridge of Sighs. The covered bridge in Venice leading from the Doge's Palace to the state prison, so called because condemned prisoners formerly passed over it from the judgment hall to the place of execution.
- Bridge Street Jumble. See p. 1033a, n. 2.
- Bridgewater. A seaport in Somersetshire, England.
- Brigs of Turk. An old stone bridge over the Turk, a small stream in Glenfinlas Valley, in Perthshire, Scotland.
- Brinsley. Richard Brinsley Sheridan (1751-1816), an Irish dramatist and politician.
- Bristol, Bristowa. A town in Gloucestershire, England.
- Britannia. A poetical name for Great Britain.
- British Fairfax. See Fairfax.
- British Museum. A national institution in London. It contains collections of antiquities and a library of more than 2,000,000 books.
- Britomart. A lady knight in Spenser's The Faerie Queene, representing chastity.
- Britonferry. A seaport in Glamorganshire, Wales.
- Brocken. One of the Harz Mountains in Saxony, famous for its "specter" caused by the shadow cast upon the clouds.
- Bronte. A title of Lord Nelson.
- Brooke, Lord. Fulke Greville (1574-1628), Lord Brooke, an English poet and philosopher.
- Brougham. Henry Peter, Baron Brougham and Vaux (1778-1868), a celebrated British statesman, jurist, and scientist. He became Chancellor in 1830. He was one of the founders of The Edinburgh Review, in 1802.
- Broughton. Jack Broughton (1704-88), a prizefighter, he fought with George Stevenson in 1771.
- Brown. Tom Brown (1683-1704), an English satirical poet and prose writer.
- Browne. Sir Thomas Browne (1605-82), an English physician, author of Religio Medici, Urn Burial, etc.
- Bruce. Robert de Bruce (1274-1329), King of Scotland, he defeated Edward II of England at Bannockburn in 1314.
- Brunetiere. Ferdinand Brunetiere (1849-1906), a French literary critic.
- Bruno. St. An eleventh century monk, founder of the order of Carthusian monks, at Chartreuse, France.
- Brunswick. A duchy in Germany.
- Brusa. A city in Turkey, Asia Minor.
- Brussels. Capital of the kingdom of Belgium. In 1830 it was the scene of the outbreak of the Belgian Revolution.
- Brutus. The legendary king and founder of Britain.
- Bryan and Perrine. A West Indian ballad, founded on an actual occurrence, which happened in the Island of St. Christopher, about 1760.
- Bucclerich. See Bucleuch.
- Bucephalus. The war-horse of Alexander the Great, hence, any saddle horse.
- Buchan. William Buchan (1729-1805), a Scottish physician.
- Bucks. Buckingham, an inland county of England.
- Buffalmalo. Buonamico Buffalmacco (c. 1262-1840), a Florentine painter, celebrated in Boccaccio's Decamerone.
- Bull. —(380)—William Bull (1738-1814), Lord Mayor of London in 1773.
- Bull, John. A name that stands for England or an Englishman.
- Bulwer-Lytton. Edward Robert, Earl of Lytton (1831-91), an English poet and diplomat.
- Bunbury. H. Henry William Bunbury (1750-1811), an English artist and caricaturist.
- Bunce, John. See John Bunce.
- Barford Bridge. A small village near Dorking, in the county of Surrey, England.
- Bürger. Gottfried August Bürger (1748-94), a noted German poet.
- Burgoyne. John Burgoyne (1722-82), an English general in the American Revolution.
- Burgundy. A former province in east-central France, famous for its wines.
- Burke. Edmund Burke (1729-97), an Irish orator, statesman, and writer. See p. 1186.
- Burleigh. See Exeter, Lord.
- Burnet. Thomas Burnet (1685-1715), an English writer, noted chiefly as the author of Telluris Theoria Sacra, remarkable for its vivid imagery and purity of style.
- Burn-mill. A meadow in the Yarrow Valley, Selkirkshire, Scotland.
- Burton. Robert Burton (1577-1640), a noted English writer, author of The Anatomy of Melancholy.
- Buayrane. An enchanter in Spenser's The Faerie Queene.
- Bute. John Stuart (1713-82), Earl of Bute, an English statesman and leader of the party of George III.
- Butler, Bishop. Joseph Butler (1672-1752), an English theologian.
- Byzantine. Of ancient Byzantium.
- Byzantium. A. Of ancient Greek city on the site of modern Constantinople.
- Cadix. A seaport of southwestern Spain.
- Cadmusian forest. A forest near Cadmea, the citadel or acropolis of Thebes, in Boeotia, Greece.
- Cadmus. The reputed founder of Thebes in Boeotia, Greece. He brought the old Phoenician, or Cadmean, alphabet of sixteen letters to Greece.
- Cadwalader (d. 708). The last king of Wales, the hero of Welsh poems.
- Cadwallo. An ancient Welsh poet.
- Cecilia. See Cecilia, Saint.
- Cesar, Augustus. See Augustus.
- Cesar. Julius Caesar (100-44 B.C.), a famous Roman general, statesman, and writer. He was assassinated by Brutus, Cassius, and others.
- Cæsarean. Belonging to Julius Caesar.
- Caf. In Mohammedan mythology, a mountain, consisting of a single emerald, said to surround the whole earth.
- Cain. The eldest son of Adam and Eve, and the murderer of his brother Abel. He was condemned to be a fugitive for his sin.
- Cairo. The capital of Egypt, on the east bank of the Nile.
- Calais. A fortified seaport on the north coast of France.
- Calantha. A character in John Ford's tragedy The Broken Heart (1633). She drops dead of a broken heart after an extraordinary ballroom scene during which, with apparent calm and while continuing her dance, she listens to the announcement of the death of one after another, of her father, lover, and brother.
- Calchas. In Greek legend, the wisest soothsayer who accompanied the expedition against Troy.
- Calcutta. The capital of Bengal, India.
- Calder. Sir Robert (1745-1818). A British admiral who fought an indecisive naval battle with the Franco-Spanish fleet in 1805, and was severely blamed for not continuing the action to the finish.
- Calderon. Pedro Calderon (1600-81), a Spanish dramatist.
- Caleb Williams. A famous political novel by William Godwin (1756-1830), published in 1794.
- Caledon, Caledonia; Caledoniae. Ancient and poetical names for Scotland.
- Callban. A deformed savage slave of Prospero, in Shakespeare's The Tempest.
- Callidore. A courteous knight in Spenser's The Faerie Queene.
- Calligula. A Roman emperor (37-41 A.D.).
- Calne in Wiltshire. A mystification for Ottery St. Mary in Devonshire, England, the early home of Coleridge.
- Calpe. The ancient name of Gibraltar.
- Calvary. The place where Christ was crucified.
- Calypso. A nymph of Ogygia, the island on which Ulysses was shipwrecked. She detained him seven years, and promised him immortal youth if he would remain there, but he refused.
- Cambria. The ancient name of Wales.
- Cambridge. Capital of Cambridgeshire, England, and the seat of Cambridge University.
- Cambro-Briton. A Welshman.
- Cambronne. Baron Pierre Jacques de Cambronne (1770-1848), a celebrated French marshal, who commanded a division at Waterloo.
- Cambronne. The estate of a family named Buchanan, near Callander, Perthshire, Scotland.
- Cambyse. An ancient king of Persia. As a character in several dramas, he became proverbial for his ranting speeches.
- Camilla. An English novel by Madame D'Arbly (Frances Burney, 1752-1840), published in 1796.
- Camoens. Luis de Camoens (1524-80), a noted Portuguese poet.
- Campania. A province in Italy.

- Campbell, Thomas Campbell (1777-1844), a British poet, critic, and miscellaneous writer See p. 417
- Campbells. A powerful Highland Scotch family, the descendants of Colin Campbell, first Earl of Argyll (d. 1498)
- Canann. The part of Palestine between the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea
- Canary. Islands in the North Atlantic Ocean, north-west of Africa, famous for their wines
- Cancer. A constellation represented by the form of a crab, and showing the limits of the sun's course northward in summer
- Candlemas. The feast of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, or presentation of Christ in the Temple, celebrated Feb. 2, with the burning of many candles In England this was one of the customary dates for settling debts
- Canidia. A sorceress reviled by Horace in Epode 5
- Canne. A village in Italy where Hannibal defeated the Romans, 216 B.C. called "The Field of Blood" from the heavy loss suffered by the Romans
- Canning. George Canning (1770-1827), a British Tory statesman, famous for his foreign policy of non-intervention His wit made many believe he was insincere
- Canobie. A village near the Esk River in Dumfriesshire, Scotland
- Canongate. The principal thoroughfare in the Old Town of Edinburgh
- Canopus. The second brightest star in the heavens
- Canova. Antonio Canova (1757-1822), an Italian sculptor
- Canzon. Italian song
- Cape St Vincent. See St Vincent
- Capitol, The. 1—(80, 210, 001)—A temple of Jupiter, in Rome, called the Capitolium It stood on the Capitoline Hill 2—(544)—The part of the Capitoline Hill occupied by the temple of Jupiter
- Caracci, Annali (1560-1600) An Italian painter, celebrated for his ceiling decorations in the Farnese Palace, Rome
- Caradoc. Caractacus (1st century A.D.) a king of a British tribe in South Wales
- Carasman. Carasman Oglou, the principal landholder in Turkey The line of Carasman dates back to the fourteenth century
- Cardigan. A county in South Wales
- Caria. An ancient division of Asia Minor
- Carlisle. A city in Cumberland, England
- Carlo Dolce. See Dolce
- Carmanian waste. A frightful salt desert in Carmania, an ancient province of Asia, on the Persian Gulf
- Carmel. A famous mountain in central Palestine, near the Mediterranean
- Carnarvonshire. A county in Wales
- Carr, Sir John Carr (1772-1832) author of several books of travel, one of which The Stranger in Ireland was ridiculed by Edward Du Bois by the publication of his My Pocket Book (1807) An unsuccessful suit for damages resulted
- Carrick. The southern district of Argyllshire, Scotland It is south of the River Doon
- Carterhaugh. An extensive plain near the junction of the Ettrick and Yarrow rivers in Selkirkshire, Scotland
- Carthage. An ancient city and state in northern Africa, famous for its wars with Rome, called the Punic Wars
- Carloons. Seven drawings done by Raphael, an Italian painter, in 1515-16 for Leo X, to be reproduced in Flemish tapestry
- Carv, Sir Lucius (1610-48) An English politician and writer
- Cashmere, Vale of. A beautiful and fertile valley in the state of Kashmir a native state bounded by eastern Turkestan, Tibet and India It is now a part of India
- Casimir. King of Poland (1040-58) He is called "The Restorer of Poland"
- Caspian. An inland salt sea between Europe and Asia
- Cassandra. 1—(495, 607)—In Greek legend a prophetic daughter of Priam and Hecuba By command of Apollo (whose advances she had repelled), her predictions though true were always discredited She was made a slave by Agamemnon after the fall of Troy 2—(1081)—A French historical romance by La Calprenède (1610-65)
- Castalia. A fountain on Mt. Parnassus near Delphi, Greece, supposed to give inspiration to those who drank of it It was sacred to the Muses
- Castaly. A poetical name for Castalia
- Castile. A former kingdom in the north central part of Spain
- Castilian. A native of Castile, Spain
- Castle of Otranto. The romance by Horace Walpole, published in 1765 See p. 100
- Castle Spectre, The. A drama presented at Drury Lane theatre in 1797
- Castle hill. A hill in Cumberland, England
- Castlerough. See note on Lincs Written During the Castlerough Administration, p. 1832b
- Castor. In Greek mythology, twin brother of Pollux The brothers were placed in the heavens as a constellation, Gemini
- Catalani. Angelica Catalani (1770-1849), a noted Italian singer
- Cathay. A Chinese province, it is a poetical name for China
- Catiline (1st century B.C.) A Roman politician and conspirator He is the subject of plays by S. Jonson (1579), H. Chettle (1598), Ben Jonson (1611), and G. Croy (1811)
- Cato. Marcus Porcius Cato (234-149 B.C.), a Roman statesman, general, and writer
- Catworth's vale. A valley in Yorkshire, England Catworth may be Catterick, a town in Yorkshire
- Catullus. Gaius Valerius Catullus (87-45? B.C.), a famous Latin lyric poet
- Caucasus. A mountain range between the Caspian and Black seas
- Cave, Edward Cave (1691-1754), a noted English printer and bookseller
- Cavendish. The name of a family of the English nobility
- Cecil, Earl of Salisbury Robert Cecil (1563-1612), an English statesman, minister to Queen Elizabeth, 1598-1603, and to James I, 1603-12
- Cecilia, Saint (third century A.D.) A Christian martyr, she is generally regarded as the patron saint of music, particularly church music
- Cecropian port. Athens Cecrops was the traditional first king of Athens
- Celt. A member of the western European branch of the Aryan family that includes the Irish, Welsh, Cornish, and Low Bretons
- Cenchrea. A small seaport in Greece, southeast of Corinth
- Cenci, The. A tragedy by Shelley dealing with the story of Beatrice Cenci (1577-1599), an Italian woman, beheaded for taking part in the murder of her father
- Cenis, Mount. See Mont Cenis
- Centaur. A fabled monster having the head, arms, and body of a man from waist up, united to the body and legs of a horse
- Cepheus. A river in Attica, Greece
- Cerberus. In classic mythology the sleepless watchdog at the entrance of the infernal regions, usually represented with three heads
- Cerenta. The rustic home of Marius's childhood, near Arpinum
- Ceres. 1—(61, 126, 840, 1175)—In classic mythology, the goddess of corn and harvests 2—(798)—An asteroid discovered in 1801
- Cervantes. Miguel de Cervantes (1547-1616), a noted Spanish writer
- Cethegus. Gaius Cornelius Cethegus (1st century B.C.), a Roman of the most corrupt and profligate character, one of the accomplices of Catiline
- Ceylon. An island south of India, noted for its pearl fisheries
- Chaldean. An inhabitant of Chaldaea, an ancient kingdom at the head of the Persian Gulf
- Chaldee land. Chaldaea
- Chamberry. A city in southeastern France
- Chamouni. A beautiful valley at the foot of Mont Blanc on the eastern border of France
- Chancery-lane. A street in London leading from Fleet Street to Holborn, and passing by the Inns of Court
- Channel. The English Channel, a strait between England and France
- Chantry. Sir Francis Chantry (1781-1842), a noted English sculptor and portrait painter He executed the bust of Wordsworth about 1820
- Chaos. The first state of the universe In Greek mythology, the most ancient of the gods
- Chapman. George Chapman (c.1559-1634), an English poet, dramatist, and translator
- Charlemagne. Charles the Great (742-814), the great King of France, and Emperor of the West
- Charles. 1—(473)—Charles I., King of England (1625-49) 2—(484)—Charles Edward, "The Young Pretender" (1720-88), who headed an insurrection to recover the British crown for his father, called James III At first he was

- successful, but finally was routed at Culloden, in the county of Inverness, Scotland, in 1746. 2—(1105)—Charles II, King of England (1049-85)
- Charlotte, Princess. Charlotte Augusta (1796-1817), daughter of George IV of England. In 1816, she married Leopold Duke of Saxe-Coburg, afterwards King of Belgium (1831-65)
- Charon. In classic mythology, the ferryman who transported the souls of the dead over the Styx, a river in Hades
- Chartier, Alain. A French writer of the fifteenth century
- Chartreuse, La Grande. A former monastery in Isère department, France, altitude 4000 feet, it was founded by St Bruno in 1084
- Chatham. William Pitt (1708-78), first Earl of Chatham, a famous English Whig statesman and orator
- Chatterton. Thomas Chatterton (1752-70), an English poet who committed suicide in a fit of despondency. See p 125
- Cheap; Cheapside. The central, east-and-west thoroughfare of London
- Chenars, Isle of. Probably an island in the ancient Lake of Cashmere, India
- Cheops. A king of Egypt (fourth century B C), said to have built the first pyramid, at Gizeh, near Cairo
- Chepstow Castle. A famous castle in Chepstow, a town in Monmouthshire, England
- Cheroneese. An ancient name of several European peninsulas the Malay Peninsula, Jutland (Denmark), Crimea (Russia), and Gallipoli (southern Turkey)
- Cherubim. A high order of angels, excelling in knowledge
- Cherwell's flood. A small river in England, which joins the Thames at Oxford
- Cheshire. A county in western England, noted for its dairy products
- Chester. The capital of Cheshire, England
- Cheviot Hills. A mountain range between Scotland and England
- Child Harold. See page 523
- Children in the Wood, The. A comedy by Thomas Morton (1709-1898). It was also the title of an old ballad included in Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry
- Chimera. In Greek mythology, a fire-breathing monster variously described as a combination of lion, goat, and serpent
- Chirk. A small town in Denbighshire, Wales
- Chitty. Joseph Chitty (1776-1841) a noted English writer of legal treatises
- Chorasmanian shore. Chorasania, or Khiva, a portion of central Asia in Russian Turkestan. The country is almost wholly a sandy desert
- Christ's Hospital. A famous charity school for boys founded in 1532 by Edward VI in the buildings formerly belonging to the dissolved order of Grey Friars
- Chrysostom. Saint John Chrysostomus (fourth century), a celebrated father of the Greek church, the author of Commentaries
- Chyviat. Same as Cheviot
- Cibber. Theophilus Cibber (1708-58), an English actor and dramatist
- Cicero. Marcus Tullius Cicero (106-43 B C), a celebrated Roman orator, philosopher and statesman, the author of a treatise on moral philosophy entitled De Officiis (Of Duties)
- Cicilia, Sainte. See Cecilia, Saint
- Cimmerian. Pertaining to the Cimmerii, a mythical people mentioned by Homer as living in perpetual darkness
- Cincinnatus. Lucius Quinctius Cincinnatus (fifth century B C) a Roman legendary hero. He distinguished himself in 462-454 as an opponent of the plebeians in their struggle against the patricians. He was appointed dictator in 458
- Circassian. Pertaining to Circassia, a former country northwest of the Caucasus Mountains, now part of Russia
- Circe. The sorceress in the Odyssey who feasted the mariners and then turned them into beasts
- Circus. Bewitching like Circe
- Circus. A large enclosure used frequently for gladiatorial combats in Roman times
- Clair, St. See. St. Clair
- Clarendon. Edward Hyde (1608-74), Earl of Clarendon, an English royalist statesman and historian
- Clarens. A village in Switzerland, situated near the east end of Lake Geneva. It is celebrated as the scene of Rousseau's La Nouvelle Héloïse
- Clarissa. Clarissa Harlowe. A novel by Samuel Richardson (1689-1761), it takes its name from the leading character
- Clarke. Samuel Clarke (1675-1729) a celebrated English philosopher and theologian
- Clarkson. Thomas Clarkson (1760-1846), an English philanthropist, devoted to the abolition of slave-trade
- Claud. —(440)—Lord Claud Hamilton, son of the Duke of Chateaufort, he was a loyal supporter of Queen Mary and her cause
- Claude. Claude Lorrain (1600-82), a celebrated French landscape painter
- Claudian. Claudius Claudianus, a noted Latin poet of the fourth century
- Claverhoe. See note on Bonny Dundee, p 1321b
- Cleome. 1—(835)—A town in Greece, southwest of Corinth. 2—(804)—A friend and correspondent of Aspasia in Lander's Pericles and Aspasia
- Cleopatra. Queen of Egypt (69-30 B C)
- Clevedon. A town in Somersetshire, England
- Clinkumbell. A humorous name for a bellman
- Clinton. Sir Henry Clinton (1739-95), an English general in the American Revolution
- Cilturnus. A river of Umbria, Italy. It is celebrated for its sanctity and beauty
- Clotho. In Greek mythology, one of the three Fates she spins the thread of life
- Clyde. A river in southwestern Scotland
- Clydesdale. The valley of the River Clyde in southwestern Scotland, noted for its horses
- Clymene. In Greek mythology, a daughter of Oceanus and Tethys, mother of Atlas and Prometheus
- Cobbett. William Cobbett (1762-1835) an English politician and writer who was continually getting into trouble because of the views he expressed in his political publications. He was the author also of an English grammar. See p 1002
- Coblenz. An important city in Prussia. It suffered in the Thirty Years War and in the wars of Louis XIV
- Clovenford. A fishing station on the road from Edinburgh to Skikirk, Scotland, within a few miles of the Yarrow and Ettrick rivers
- Clyd. A river in North Wales
- Cochrane, Thomas Lord. A Scottish noble and British naval commander (1773-1860), noted for his brilliant service against Spanish and French vessels. In 1814, he was accused of starting for personal gain, a report of Napoleon's death was imprisoned, fined, and expelled from the navy and from the House of Commons. He was exonerated from the charge in 1832
- Cockshut. A hill in Cumberlandshire, England
- Codri. Codrus was an alleged author of a tragedy on the subject of Theseus. See Juvenal's Satires, 1-12
- Coleba's Wife. A novel by Hannah More (1809)
- Cœlus. The sky, father of Saturn (Cronos)
- Cœus. One of the Titans, a family of giants
- Coliseum. An amphitheatre in Rome, the greatest architectural monument left by the Romans
- Collingwood. Lord Cuthbert Collingwood (1750-1810), an English admiral, second in command at Trafalgar
- Collins. Anthony Collins (1676-1729) a noted English deist, a friend of John Locke
- Colloquies. A Latin work by Desiderius Erasmus (1460-1536), a Dutch scholar and theologian
- Colnaghi. A London printseller of the eighteenth century
- Colonsay. An island of the Inner Hebrides in Argyllshire, Scotland. It is noted for its ecclesiastical antiquities
- Columbia. A poetical name for America
- Columbian. Pertaining to the United States
- Columbus. Christopher Columbus (1440-1506), an Italian navigator, discoverer of America
- Comberbatch. Silas Titus Comberbatch, the name assumed by S T Coleridge when he enlisted in the 15th Light Dragoons, in 1793
- Commons. A college boarding-hall
- Complaint of a Poor Indian Woman, The. A poem by Wordsworth
- Complient Angler, The. A celebrated work by Isaac Walton (1593-1688), an English writer
- Comus. The evil spirit in Milton's Comus who, like his mother, Circe, the enchantress, could transform human beings into swine
- Condé. Prince de Condé (1530-89), a French general, leader of the Huguenot army, who was captured in 1569 and treacherously shot after he surrendered his sword

- Condorcet. Marquis de Condorcet (1748-94), a celebrated French philosopher and mathematician.
- Conduit in Cheap. A leaden cistern built in the middle of Cheapside Street, London, in 1285, for holding water brought underground from Paddington, a western division of London. In times of public festivity the conduit ran wine instead of water.
- Confucius (551-478 B.C.) A celebrated Chinese philosopher, founder of the Confucian religion.
- Congress. A meeting for deliberation and negotiation.
- Congress of Vienna. An assembly, held at Vienna, Austria, in 1814-1815, at which the rulers of Austria, Bavaria, Denmark, Prussia, Russia, and other states settled the affairs of Europe after the Napoleonic wars.
- Congreve, William Congreve (1670-1729), an English dramatist.
- Constantine. Constantine I, surnamed "The Great" (272-337), the first Christian Emperor of Rome.
- Conwy 1—(163)—A picturesque river in North Wales 2—(227)—An ancient walled seaport in Carnarvonshire, Wales.
- Cook, Captain James Cook (1728-79), a celebrated English navigator. He discovered the Sandwich Islands in 1778.
- Coomb. In England or Scotland, the name for any short steep valley or hollow.
- Copenhagen. The capital of Denmark, it was bombarded by the British fleet under Parker and Nelson in 1807.
- Coptic. Language of the Copts, the name given to the Christians who lived in Egypt at the time of the Mohammedan conquest, 639.
- Cordara, Guilio (1704-85) An Italian poet and historiographer of the Jesuits.
- Cordelia. In Shakespeare's King Lear, Lear's youngest and best loved daughter.
- Corin. A conventional name for a shepherd in pastoral poetry.
- Corinth. An ancient fortified city in Greece.
- Corinthians. Inhabitants of Corinth, Greece.
- Coriolanus. A tragedy by Shakespeare.
- Cornish. Of or belonging to Cornwall, a southwestern county in England.
- Cornwall. A county in southwestern England.
- Corsican. Napoleon, who was born in Corsica, an island in the Mediterranean Sea.
- Cortez. Hernando Cortez (1494-1547) a famous Spanish soldier who conquered Mexico and discovered California.
- Coruna. A seaport on the northwest coast of Spain.
- Corvate, Thomas Corvate (1777-1817), an English traveler, author of Travels in Craditica.
- Coribantes. The attendants of the goddess Cybele in ancient Phrygia, whose rites were conducted with wild revelry.
- Coridon. Corydon is a conventional name for a shepherd in pastoral poetry.
- Cosack. A member of the race inhabiting eastern Russia on the lower Don and Dnieper rivers.
- Cottle, Amos (1768-1800) An English writer, elder brother of Joseph Cottle.
- Cottle, Joseph (1770-1813) An English bookseller and poet, a friend of Coleridge, Southey, and Wordsworth, and the publisher of several of their works.
- Cotton, Charles (1630-87) A minor English poet, author of The Year Lear.
- Cottus. In Greek mythology, a giant having a hundred hands. He was the son of Uranus and Gaea.
- Covenanters. Scottish Presbyterians, who in 1638-48 engaged in a struggle against the Pope and prelacy.
- Covent Garden. A square in the center of London, famous for its fruit and flower markets.
- Coventry. A town of Warwickshire, England.
- Cowgate. A street in the village of Mauchline, Ayrshire, Scotland.
- Cowley. Abraham Cowley (1618-67), an English poet, one of the founders of the Royal Society.
- Cowper. William Cowper (1731-1800), a noted English poet. See p. 145.
- Cove, Archdeacon. William Cove (1747-1828), Archdeacon of Wiltsire, an English historian and writer of travels. His Memoirs of the Duke of Marlborough appeared in 1817-18.
- Crabbe. George Crabbe (1754-1832), an English poet. See p. 164.
- Cranmer. Thomas Cranmer (1489-1533), an English Protestant divine and reformer, burned at the stake by Mary I.
- Crashaw. Richard Crashaw, a seventeenth century English poet.
- Craven. A district in western Yorkshire, England.
- Crecy. A small town in northern France, where Edward III of England defeated the French in 1346.
- Cressian negro. A negro born in Africa.
- Cressid. Cressida, the heroine of several medieval stories and later dramas, depicting the love between her and Troilus, a noted Trojan hero.
- Cretan. A native of Crete.
- Crete. An island in the Mediterranean Sea.
- Crius. A Titan, probably a divinity of the sea.
- Cribbs. Tom Cribbs (1781-1848), an English champion pugilist.
- Crisfel. A mountain in the county of Kircudbright, Scotland.
- Crimea. A peninsula in southern Russia extending into the Black Sea.
- Cripps. A young painter in whom Keats and his friend Haydon were interested.
- Croesus. King of Lydia, Asia Minor, noted for his fabulous wealth.
- Croly. George Croly (1780-1800), an Irish poet, divine, novelist, and miscellaneous writer.
- Cromwell. Oliver Cromwell, Lord Protector of England (1658-59).
- Cronus. See Saturn.
- Crothwaite Church. A church in Langdale, Westmoreland, the burial-place of Southey.
- Crow-park. A hill in Cumberlandshire, England.
- Crusade. Third. A warlike enterprise undertaken by Christians against the Saracens late in the 12th century.
- Cuesta. Don Gregorio dello Cuesta. A Spanish general in the Napoleonic wars. He refused to follow Wellington's advice with regard to the part that he should play preparatory to the Battle of Talavera, Spain, 1809.
- Culloden. A village in Inverness-shire, Scotland, the scene of the bloody defeat of the Pretender, Charles Edward by the Duke of Cumberland, 1746.
- Cumæan shore. Cumæ, an ancient city in Campania, Italy. Near by was Ithurnum, the native country seat of Scipio Africanus, who retired there in 185 B.C., after a life of warfare.
- Cumberland. 1—A county in northwestern England 2—(346)—Richard Cumberland (1732-1811), an English dramatist and essayist.
- Cumbria. An ancient British kingdom, which comprised what is now the greater part of Cumberlandshire.
- Cunningham. The northern division of Ayrshire, Scotland.
- Cupid. The god of love.
- Curl. Edmund Curl (1675-1747), a notorious London bookseller and piratical publisher.
- Currie. Doctor James Currie (1750-1805), a Scottish physician.
- Curtis, Mr. One of the members of Parliament for Sussex whose political policies were held in contempt by Cobett.
- Curtis. Sir Roger Curtis (1746-1816) an English admiral who defeated the French before Gibraltar Sept. 13, 1782.
- Cybele. Mother of the Olympian gods. She was represented in art with a turreted crown.
- Cyclades. A group of islands in the Ægean Sea east of Greece.
- Cyclops. One of a race of giants having but one eye and said to assist Vulcan, the blacksmith of the gods.
- Cynthia. One of the names of Artemis, or Diana, the moon-goddess. Her birthplace was Mt. Cynthus, in Delos, an island in the Ægean Sea east of Greece.
- Cyprus. An island in the Mediterranean, south of Asia Minor.
- Cyrus (6th century B.C.) Surnamed "The Great", the founder of the Persian Empire.
- Cytherea. In Greek mythology the surname of Aphrodite, one of whose shrines was on the island of Cythera, south of Greece.
- Dacre, Lord. Thomas Fiennes (1517-41), Baron Dacre, an English nobleman. He engaged in a poaching expedition which resulted in the death of one of the keepers and was condemned to death for murder.
- Dædalian wings. Dædalus was a legendary sculptor noted for the wings, made of wax with which he and his son Icarus escaped imprisonment from the labyrinth. See Icarus.
- D'Alembert. Jean le Rond d'Alembert (1717-83) a noted French philosopher and mathematician.
- Dalgarnock. The name of a romantic spot near the Nith, a river in Ayrshire, Scotland.

- Dalston. Formerly a suburb of London, now an outlying district of the city itself.
- Damascus. A city of Syria, famous for its silks and steel.
- Damocles. A courtier of the 4th century B. C., who, having praised the pleasures of kingly estate, was placed, by order of Dionysius, at a banquet with a sword suspended over his head by a single hair, that he might learn the insecurity of such happiness.
- Damon (5th century B. C.) An Athenian musician and sophist, a teacher and close friend of Pericles.
- Danaë. In Greek mythology, the daughter of Acrisius and Eurydice, beloved of Zeus and by him mother of Perseus.
- Daniel. Samuel Daniel (1562-1619), an English poet and historian.
- Dante. Alighieri Dante (1265-1321), the most famous of Italian poets.
- Danube. A river of Europe flowing through Germany, Austria, Hungary, and Roumania to the Black Sea.
- Daphne. In Greek mythology, the daughter of the river-god, Peneus. She was changed to a laurel while fleeing from Apollo.
- D'Arblay. Madame d'Arblay (Frances Burney, 1752-1840), an English novelist.
- Dardan. Trojan.
- Dardanelles. The strait between Europe and Asia, connecting the Sea of Marmora with the Aegean Sea, in ancient times known as the Hellespont.
- Darien. Another name for the Isthmus of Panama.
- Davenant. Sir William Davenant (1605-68), an English poet and dramatist.
- David. Second king of Israel (1055-1015 B. C.), noted in his youth for his playing on the harp.
- Davies. Sir John (1569-1626) An English statesman and poet.
- Dawlish. A seaside resort in Devonshire, England.
- Dead Sea. A salt lake in Palestine.
- Death of Abel, The. A prose idyl Der Tod Abels (1758), by Solomon Gessner (1730-88), a Swiss poet and painter.
- Deborah. A Hebrew prophetess who helped to free the Israelites from the Canaanites, and who celebrated the victory in a famous song of triumph. See Judges, 4-5.
- Decalogue. The Ten Commandments.
- Dee. A river on the boundary of Denbighshire, Wales.
- De Foe. Daniel De Foe (1661-1731), an English political writer and adventurer, author of Robinson Crusoe.
- Deira. An Anglian kingdom extending from the Humber to the Lees, it included about what is now Yorkshire.
- Della. Turkish soldiers who form the forlorn hope of the cavalry, always beginning the action.
- Delphi. In ancient geography, a town in Greece situated at the foot of Mount Parnassus, the seat of the world-renowned oracle of Apollo.
- Delphic. Relating to the oracle of Apollo at Delphi.
- Delphos. See Delphi.
- Delos. An island off the coast of Greece.
- Demetrius. An Ephesian silversmith who assailed Paul.
- Democritus. A famous Greek philosopher (5th century B. C.).
- Demogorgon. An evil spirit or magician. See note on Prometheus Bound, p. 1837a.
- Dem. A promenade between Teignmouth and the sea, in Devonshire, England.
- Denbighshire. A county in Wales.
- Dennis. John Dennis (1657-1734), an English critic. He incurred the enmity of Pope and was ridiculed by him in The Dunciad.
- Derwent. A river of Cumberland and Lancashire, England.
- Derwentwater. House of The earls of Derwentwater, zealous supporters of the Stuarts. James Radcliffe (1689-1716), 3rd Earl of Derwentwater, was a leader in the Jacobite rebellion of 1715. He was captured and executed in 1716.
- Désaix. Louis Charles Désaix (1768-1800), a noted French general killed in the Battle of Marengo, Italy.
- Desdemona. The beautiful white wife of Othello the Moor, in Shakespeare's Othello.
- De Staël. Madame de Staël (1766-1817), a celebrated French writer.
- Democleon. In Greek mythology, a king of Thessaly. He and his wife, Pyrrha, survived a nine days' deluge, their ark grounding on Mount Parnassus. To replenish the earth, an oracle commanded them to cast stones behind them, those of Deu-
- calion becoming men and those of Pyrrha, women.
- Deva. The old Latin name for the River Dee, in North Wales.
- Devon. Devonshire, a county in southwestern England.
- Devonport. A fortified seaport in Devonshire, England.
- Devonshire. A county in southwestern England.
- Dian, Diana. Goddess of the moon and the chase. She fell in love with the shepherd boy Endymion, found sleeping in a cave on Mt Latmos, Asia Minor.
- Dickie of Dryhope. A member of the Armstrong family who assisted in the rescue of Kinmont Willie. He lived in Liddesdale, Dumfriesshire, Scotland. He was outlawed in 1608.
- Dido. The Queen of Carthage, who killed herself for love of Aeneas. See Virgil's Aeneid, Books 1 and 2.
- Diogenes. A Greek cynic philosopher (4th century B. C.), who is said to have lived in a tub. He searched Corinth with a lantern to find an honest man.
- Diomed. Diomedes, one of the bravest of the Greeks in the Trojan War.
- Dionysius, the Younger. A tyrant of Syracuse (367-356 B. C.).
- Dirce. 1—(967)—A fountain on Mt Cithæron, near Thebes, Greece. It took its name from (2) Dirce—(968)—wife of Lycus, King of Thebes. She was put to death by the two sons of Antiope, divorced wife of Lycus, her body was thrown into the fountain which bears her name. According to another legend, her body was changed by Dionysus into the fountain.
- Dia. Pluto, god of the lower world, who bore away Proserpina, daughter of Demeter (Ceres).
- Dives. 1—(148, 144)—Evil spirits of Persian mythology. 2—(338)—The rich man who, when he died, looked up from hell and saw Lazarus the beggar in Abraham's bosom (Luke 16 19-31).
- Dnieper. A river in southwestern Russia, flowing to the Black Sea.
- Dodsley. Robert Dodsley (1703-84), an English bookseller and playwright. He was the publisher of A Select Collection of Old Plays, 12 vols (1744).
- Dog of Darkness. Cerberus, the watchdog at the entrance to Hades.
- Doge. The elective chief magistrate, holding princely rank in the republics of Venice and Genoa, Italy.
- Dolce. Carlo Dolce (1616-86), a Florentine painter, best known through his Madonnas. The painting referred to on p. 1084a, 24, is Christ Breaking the Bread.
- Dolor. One of the Titans, who warred against the Olympian gods.
- Domdaniel. In The Arabian Tales a seminary for evil magicians and a resort of evil spirits, it was an immense cavern "under the roots of the ocean" off the coast of Tunis, in North Africa.
- Domenichino. Zampieri Domenichino (1581-1641), a noted Italian painter.
- Domingo's Shore. San Domingo, an island republic of the West Indies. Under the negro leader Toussaint L'Ouverture, the island rebelled against the French in 1801, but was subdued by Napoleon.
- Don. A river of Aberdeenshire, Scotland, which flows into the North Sea.
- Donald. —(327)—Donald Cameron (1695?-1748), a Scottish Highland chieftain known as "Gentle Lochiel." He was a descendant of Sir Evan Cameron of Lochiel.
- Donne. John Donne (1572-1631) an English divine, founder of the so-called metaphysical school of poetry.
- Don Quixote. The gaunt hero of Don Quixote, a Spanish romance by Cervantes (1547-1616).
- Doon. A small river in Ayrshire, Scotland, flowing into the Clyde.
- Dorian; Doric. Relating to the Doric race, which originated in Doris, an ancient province in Northern Greece.
- Doris. —(806)—In Greek mythology, a sea-goddess, the daughter of Oceanus, and mother of the Nereids.
- Douglas. 1—(455)—James Douglas (d. 1488), a Scottish nobleman, who headed the rebellion against James II of Scotland, 1482-56, as a result of which he was banished. 2—(466)—See note on Lives on the Lifting of the Banner of the House of Burreluch, p. 1323b.

- Douglas Tower. A ruined castle in Douglas, a village in Lancashire, Scotland.
- Dove. A river of England forming part of the boundary between the counties of Derby and Stafford.
- Dover. A fortified seaport in the county of Kent, England.
- Drachenfels. A mountain in the Siebengebirge, a mountain range on the Rhine, in Germany.
- Drayton. Michael Drayton (1568-1631), an English poet.
- Drontheim. Trondhjem, a province and seaport on the west coast of Norway.
- Druid. A priest of religion among the ancient Celts of Gaul, Britain, and Ireland. The Druids were supposed to have some knowledge of geometry, natural philosophy, etc.
- Drummond, William (1585-1649). A Scottish poet of Hawthornden, near Edinburgh.
- Drury-lane. A street in London near the Strand.
- Dryad. In Greek mythology, one of the nymphs of trees. The life of each Dryad was bound up with the tree, usually an oak, in which she lived.
- Dryades. The Dryads.
- Dryburgh. A beautiful monastic ruin on the River Tweed, in Berwickshire, Scotland.
- Dryden. John Dryden (1631-1700), a noted English poet and dramatist.
- Dryope. A shepherdess in Greek mythology, the playmate of the Hamadryads, changed by them into a poplar.
- Duck. Stephen Duck (1705-56), an English farm laborer who won some distinction as a poet.
- Duddon. A river in the counties of Cumberland and Lancashire, England.
- Dudley, Earl of. Worcester. An English statesman and soldier (1582-88), the favorite of Elizabeth.
- Dunfermline. A town in Fife, Scotland. It has a noted abbey and was formerly a royal residence.
- Duncan. In Shakespeare's Macbeth, King of Scotland, murdered by Macbeth.
- Dunciad. A satirical poem by Alexander Pope (1688-1744).
- Dundagel. A castle near the shore of Cornwall, England.
- Dunedin. A poetical name for Edinburgh, Scotland.
- Dunoon-gill. A steep narrow valley at the head of Langdale Vale in the county of Westmoreland, England. See Wordsworth's The Idle Shepherd-Boys.
- Dunmailraise. Dunmail Raise, a pass in the Lake district of England, on the borders of the counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland.
- Dunning. John Dunning (1731-88), an English lawyer and politician.
- Dunster. A town in Somersetshire, England.
- Dyfed. An old British name for a region in southwestern Wales.
- E. One of De Quincey's guardians. He was a rural magistrate in a populous district close to Manchester.
- Easdale. A valley in the county of Westmoreland, England.
- East Everly. A small town in Wiltshire, England.
- Echelles. Les Echelles, a village in eastern France, near the Italian border. It is named from the stairs which formerly existed there and have now been replaced by a road.
- Echo. A nymph who by her prattling kept Hera from surprising her husband Zeus in the company of the nymphs. For this, she was punished by being compelled never to speak first and never to be silent when anyone else spoke. She pined away to an echo for love of Narcissus.
- Eden. 1—(192, etc.)—In Biblical history, the Garden of Eden. 2—(443)—A river in the counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland, England. It is 8 miles northwest of Carlisle.
- Edgeworth, Miss. Maria Edgeworth (1764-1849), an English novelist.
- Edina. A poetic name of Edinburgh.
- Edinburgh Review. The. A literary and political journal, founded at Edinburgh in 1802. It was the organ of the Whig Party.
- Edward the Confessor. King of the West Saxons (1042-66).
- Edward I. King of England (1272-1307).
- Edward II. King of England (1307-27).
- Edward III. King of England (1327-77).
- Edward IV. King of England (1461-83).
- Egina. Egina, an island of Greece in the Gulf of Argina, on the east side of Greece.
- Egremont. Egremont, a town in Cumberlandshire, England.
- Egremont, Lord. Sir George O'Brien Wyndham (1751-1837), an English patron of art, much interested in agriculture.
- Egripo. A former name for Chalcis, a seaport of Euboea Island, Greece.
- Ehrenbreitstein. A town and fortress in Prussia, Germany. It was taken by the French in 1799.
- Eildon-hills. Three conical peaks in northwestern Roxburghshire, Scotland.
- Elira. Ireland.
- Elamites. People of an ancient kingdom, now part of Persia.
- Elba. An island on the Tuscan coast of Italy.
- Elbe. A river of Germany flowing from the Bohemian Alps to the North Sea.
- Elbingerode. A town in the province of Hanover, Prussia, situated in the Harz Mountains.
- Eldon. John Scott (1751-1838), 1st Earl Eldon, an English jurist, twice Lord Chancellor.
- Electeur of Hanover. One of the seven great princes, who, from the 12th century to the dissolution of the Holy Roman Empire in 1806, had the right of electing the emperor.
- Electra. The heroine of Electra, a Greek tragedy by Sophocles (5th century B. C.).
- Elves. Elves, tiny spirits in human form, without a soul.
- Elgin. Thomas Bruce (1777-1841), Earl of Elgin, a British diplomat. He collected the "Elgin Marbles," ancient Greek sculptures brought from the Parthenon in Athens, Greece, in 1811, and now in the British Museum.
- Elia. The pseudonym of Charles Lamb (1775-1834) in his essays contributed to The London Magazine, beginning in 1820. The name was borrowed from an Italian, Lamb's fellow-clerk at the South-Sea House.
- Elia, Bridget. Charles Lamb's sister Mary.
- Elia, James. Charles Lamb's elder brother.
- Elijah. A Hebrew prophet of the 9th century B. C.
- Elkett. George Elliott (1717-90), an English general. He defended Gibraltar against the Spaniards and French in 1779-83.
- Elisha. A Hebrew prophet of the 9th century B. C. He was the attendant and successor of Elijah.
- Elizabeth. Queen of England (1558-1603).
- Elliot, Sir Gilbert. —(442)—One of the rescuers of Kinmont Willie.
- Elliston, Mr. Robert William Elliston (1774-1831), a noted English actor and theatrical manager.
- Elpenor. One of the companions of Odysseus in Homer's Odyssey.
- Elsmore. A seaport near Copenhagen. It was at the entrance of the sound where the Battle of Copenhagen was fought April 2, 1801.
- Elwina. A character in Perry, a tragedy by Miss Hannah More (1746-1833), which was first acted in 1777.
- Elysian. Of or pertaining to Elysium.
- Elysium. The abode of the blessed after death.
- Emily. See note on Epipsychidion, p. 1338b.
- Emma. A name given to Wordsworth's sister Dorothy.
- Emmet, Robert (1778-1808). An Irish patriot, leader of the United Irishmen. He attempted an uprising in 1803 and was hanged.
- Empedocles (490-430 B. C.). A Greek philosopher, poet, and statesman.
- Encecladus. In Greek mythology, a giant with one hundred arms. He was killed by Zeus and buried under Mt. Aetna.
- Endor. A village in Palestine, where Saul consulted the female soothsayer (witch of Endor) on the eve of his last battle with the Philistines. At Saul's request she called up Samuel to advise Saul regarding the battle.
- Eudymion. A beautiful youth, a shepherd of Mt. Latmus, in Caria, Asia Minor, who was beloved by Selene (Diana), the moon-goddess.
- Enfield. A suburb of London.
- Engaddi. Engedi, in scriptural geography, a place abounding in caverns, situated on the shore of the Dead Sea, southeast of Jerusalem. In the desert of Engedi, David hid from Saul.
- Enna. An ancient city in Sicily. It was from a flowery meadow near this place that Pluto, ruler of Hades, carried off Proserpina, daughter of Ceres.
- Entrance of Christ into Jerusalem. The. A famous painting by Benjamin Robert Haydon (1786-1846), a noted English painter.
- Eolian. See Eolian.
- Ephesian. Of Ephesus, a city in Asia Minor.
- Epictetus (1st century A. D.). A noted Greek Stoic philosopher; he was born a slave in Phrygia, Asia Minor.

- Epicurean. Pertaining to the Greek philosopher Epicurus, or to his doctrine.
- Epicurus (342-270 B C) A Greek philosopher who taught that pleasure is the only good and the end of all morality.
- Epirus. An ancient country in northwestern Greece.
- Epithalamium. A lyric poem in celebration of a marriage.
- Epsom. A town in the county of Surrey, England, famous for its mineral spring and its race-course.
- Erasmus. Desiderius Erasmus (1466-1536), a famous Dutch classical scholar.
- Erebus. A place of utter darkness between the earth and Hades.
- Erie. A poetic name for Ireland, ear, war, west, and in, an island.
- Ermione. In Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered, the heroine, who goes in armor with her lover Tancred to Jerusalem.
- Erse. The language of the Celts in the Highlands of Scotland.
- Erymanthus. A mountain of Arcadia in Greece.
- Esau. The oldest son of Isaac, who sold his birth-right to Jacob (Genesis 25: 25).
- Eskdale. The valley of the Esk River, in Dumfriesshire, Scotland.
- Esk. A river in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, near the English border.
- Essex. Robert Devereux (1567-1601), 2nd Earl of Essex, a favorite of Queen Elizabeth.
- Etherege. Sir George Etherege, a seventeenth century English dramatist.
- Ethiop. Archaic for Ethiopian, a native of Ethiopia, an ancient country south of Egypt.
- Ethwalde. A lake and valley south of Hawkshead, in Lancashire, England.
- Eton. A town on the Thames, opposite Windsor, in Buckinghamshire, England, the seat of Eton College.
- Etrurians. The ancient inhabitants of Etruria, the modern Tuscany, in Italy.
- Eitrick. A river in Selkirkshire, Scotland, which joins the Tweed near Selkirk. The wood adjoining it was formerly known as Eitrick Forest.
- Euclid (c 300 B C) A famous Greek geometrical.
- Euganean Hills. A chain of volcanic hills in north-eastern Italy.
- Eugene. Prince François of Savoy (1663-1736), an Austrian general.
- Euphrosine. Originally, a euphemistic title of the Furies.
- Euphrates. A river of Asiatic Turkey.
- Euphrosia. In John Lyly's Euphrosia (1578-79), an Athenian youth who embodies qualities of elegance, beauty, and amorousness.
- Euripides (5th century B C) One of the greatest tragic poets of Greece, a friend of Socrates.
- Eurus. The god of the east wind.
- Eurydice. In Greek mythology, a nymph the wife of Orpheus. After her death, her husband was allowed to follow her to the lower regions, and lead her thence on condition that he should not look around at her during the passage. He violated the condition and she was returned to Hades.
- Euxine. The Black Sea, an inland sea bounded by Russia, Asia Minor, European Turkey, and Bulgaria.
- Evans. 1—A river in Scotland. It merges with the Clyde near Greenock, in the county of Renfrew 2—(527)—Sir Evan Cameron (1629-1719), a noted Scottish Highland chieftain of Lochiel, the head of the Cameron clan.
- Evandale. A wooded region in the valley of the River Evan, Scotland.
- Evander. A son of Hermes, and the leader of an Arcadian colony into Italy, some years before the Trojan War.
- Evans. William Evans, a clerk in the South-Sea House, who became deputy-cashier in 1792.
- Examiner. The. A weekly liberal and literary journal, established in January, 1808. Leigh Hunt was at one time editor.
- Excise-man. A tax officer who collects duties on domestic goods and guards against violation of the tax laws.
- Exeter. The capital city of Devonshire, England.
- Exeter, Lord. A member of the titled Cecil family, residing at Burielgh House, Stamford, Lincolnshire, England.
- Excellin. Excellino da Romano (1194-1259), an Italian tyrant who conquered Verona, Padua, and other Italian cities. His name became proverbial for cruelty.
- Fairfax, British. Edward Fairfax (1590-1633), an English writer and poet, translator of Tasso.
- Fallero. Marino Fallero, the hero of Byron's tragedy Marino Faliero. He was a doge of Venice, beheaded for treason in 1355.
- Falkirk. A town in Shropshire, Scotland, where Charles Edward, The Young Pretender, defeated the English in 1746.
- Falstaff. A fat, witty, and bibulous old knight in Shakespeare's The Merry Wives of Windsor and Henry IV.
- Fanny, Lord. Lord John Hervey (1696-1743), an English writer and politician, called "Lord Fanny" on account of the effeminacy of his habits.
- Farnham. A town in the county of Surrey, England.
- Fates. In Greek mythology, the goddesses Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos, who were supposed to control destinies.
- Fatima. A common name of Turkish women.
- Fauns. In Roman mythology, deities of the woods, represented as half-human, with pointed ears, a tail, and goat's feet.
- Faunus. A mythical king of Latium, worshiped as a god of agriculture, sometimes identified with the Arcadian Pan.
- Fawcett. Henry Fawcett (1833-84) a noted English statesman and political economist.
- Fays. Fairies.
- Felnsage. Gregor von Felsnagel (1707-1810), an inventor of a system of rules to assist the memory.
- Femelon (1651-1715) A French ecclesiastical and writer.
- Fenton. Elijah Fenton (1689-1730), an English versifier, who was associated with Pope in translating the Odyssey, he edited the works of Milton and Waller.
- Ferdinand. A character in Shakespeare's The Tempest, in love with Miranda.
- Fergusson. Robert Fergusson (1750-74), a Scottish poet.
- Ferneu. A village in France, near the Swiss border, the residence of Voltaire.
- Ferragus. A giant celebrated in medieval romance. He appears as Ferrau in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, an Italian romance of the 16th century.
- Fes. An ancient province and city in Morocco, North Africa.
- Fiametta. Maria, daughter of the King of Naples, beloved by Boccaccio.
- Fichte. Johann Fichte (1762-1814), a German philosopher, one of the founders of transcendental philosophy.
- Fidentia. A town in northern Italy, the scene of the victory of Lucullus, a noted Roman general, over Carbo, the leader of the civil war against Sulla the dictator, in 82 B C.
- Field. Barron Field (1786-1840), an English lawyer and friend of Charles Lamb.
- Fielden. John Fielden (1784-1849) a radical reformer who because of his pertinacious advocacy of factory legislation was called, "The Self-acting Mule."
- Fielding. Henry Fielding (1707-54), an English novelist and dramatist.
- Fiesole. A small village on a hill near Florence, Italy. Lander lived there for some years.
- Fife. A county on the east coast of Scotland.
- Filias, Saint. A Scottish abbot of the 7th century. His name was given to several towns and to many chapels and holy fountains in Scotland.
- Fingal. See note on Fingal, p. 1300b.
- Finn. An Irish politician who took an active part in attacking and breaking up the Orangemen an anti-Catholic organization.
- Fitzgerald. William Thomas Fitzgerald (1779-1829), a minor British poet.
- Fitzjames, James. James V, King of Scotland (1513-42).
- Fitzroy. The name of a titled family in England. See Grafton.
- Fives Court. A place for playing fives, a game similar to tennis.
- Flaccus. Caius Valerius Flaccus (1st century A D), a Roman poet.
- Fiatman. Thomas Fiatman (1687-88), a well known lawyer, painter, and poet.
- Flavius. A steward of Timon, in Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
- Fleet Street. A prominent street in London.
- Fleming. A native of Flanders, an ancient district now divided among France, Belgium, and Holland.
- Fletcher. John Fletcher (1579-1625), an English dramatist and poet, collaborator with Francis Beaumont.

- Flora. In Roman mythology, the goddess of flowers and spring.
- Florence. A large city in north-central Italy, noted for its art treasures and former prominence in literature.
- Florentines. Inhabitants of Florence, Italy.
- Florisel. A prince in Shakespeare's The Winter's Tale, in love with Perdita.
- Flower Pot, The. An inn in Bishopsgate Street, the starting place of coaches for the north of London.
- Flutter, Sir Fopling. An affected and fashionable fop in George Etherege's comedy, The Man of Mode (1676).
- Ford. John Ford (1586?-1639), an English dramatist.
- Forth. The Firth of Forth, a bay on the east coast of Scotland.
- Fortinbras. The warlike Prince of Norway in Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- Fortunate Blue-Coat Boy, The. A romance (1770) which shows how a Blue-coat boy marries a rich woman of rank.
- Fox. Charles James Fox (1749-1806), a celebrated English statesman and orator.
- Franché-Comté (f. r. fr. com. t.). The old County of Burgundy, in eastern France.
- Francis I. —(912)—King of France (1515-47), conqueror of Milan (1515) and Burgundy (1544).
- Francis, Mr Philip (1740-1818), an English political writer.
- Frank. A member of one of the Germanic tribes which conquered Gaul in the 6th century, and from whom the country was named France. In the Orient, any European.
- Franklin. Benjamin Franklin (1706-90), a noted American printer and diplomat.
- Frederick Barbarossa. Frederick I the most noted emperor of the Holy Roman Empire (1155-89).
- Freers, Friars.
- Friar Bacon. The Friar Roger Bacon, an English philosopher and scientist of the 13th century, the hero of popular legend.
- Friuli. An ancient duchy in northern Italy, now partly included in Austria.
- Fuller. Thomas Fuller (1608-61), an English preacher author of History of the Worthies of England.
- Furies. The goddesses of vengeance sometimes synonymous with Fates.
- Furness-fells. Upland tracts in northern Lancashire, England.
- Fusell. John Henry Fusell (1741-1825), a Swiss painter and art critic.
- G. One of De Quincey's guardians. He was a banker in Lincolnshire.
- Gaelic. Belonging to the Celtic Gaels or Highland Scotch or their language.
- Galaxy. Popularly known as the Milky Way.
- Galesus. An Italian river famous for fine-fleeced sheep.
- Gallilee. A sea in Palestine frequented by Christ and his disciples. It is nearly 700 feet below sea-level.
- Galileo (1564-1642). A famous Italian physicist and astronomer.
- Galla. Water. A small stream in Roxburghshire, Scotland, it flows into the Tweed near Abbotsford, Scott's home.
- Gallie. Pertaining to ancient Gaul, modern France.
- Gallian land. France.
- Galston Muirs. The moorlands near Galston, a small town in Ayrshire, Scotland.
- Gamelyn. The hero of a medieval tale, once attributed to Chaucer.
- Gamester, The. A tragedy by Edward Moore (1753) depicting the horrors of gambling.
- Ganges. A river in northern India, venerated by Hindus.
- Ganymede. The beautiful youth who succeeded Hebe as cup-bearer to the gods.
- Gaul. Same as all.
- Garamant. Fezzan, a province in northern Africa.
- Garrick. David Garrick (1717-79), a noted English actor and dramatist.
- Garth. Samuel Garth (1661-1719), an English physician and poet.
- Gascoigne. Bamber Gascoigne (1725-91), a British Member of Parliament from the county of Essex.
- Gate Slack. A passage among the Lowther hills on the border of Dumfriesshire, Scotland.
- Gath. A Philistine city in Judah.
- Gaul. Ancient Gallia, which in the time of the Romans included what is now France, northern Italy, Belgium, and parts of Switzerland, Germany, and Holland.
- Gay. John Gay (1685-1732), an English poet.
- Gelra. One of the Fatal Sisters.
- Gell. Sir William Gell (1777-1836), a writer of travels and topography, especially of Greece and Troy.
- Geneva. The name of a canton, a city, and a lake in Switzerland.
- Genii. Tutelary spirits.
- Genoa. A seaport and province in Liguria, Italy.
- Genoese. A native of Genoa, Italy.
- Genille. A non-Jewish people.
- George. —(480a, 87)—See Lambe, George.
- George Barnwell. A tragedy by George Lillo (1693-1739), an English dramatist.
- George I. King of England (1714-27).
- George II. King of England (1727-60).
- George III. King of England (1760-1820).
- George IV. King of England (1820-30).
- George Rex. George III, King of England (1760-1820).
- George, St. (d. 303?). The patron saint of England.
- Georgics. A Latin poem treating of agriculture, trees, animals, etc., written by Virgil about 25 B.C.
- Gervon. A fabulous monster with three heads. It was killed by Hercules.
- Ghent. A prominent commercial and manufacturing city of East Flanders, Belgium.
- Giant Despair. The owner of Doubting Castle in John Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress (1679-84).
- Giants. A mythological race of monstrous beings, who assaulted the gods and were imprisoned by them.
- Giant's Causeway. The A famous rock formation on the north coast of Ireland.
- Gibbon. Edward Gibbon (1737-94), an English historian, author of The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.
- Gibraltar. A fortified rock and town on the southern coast of Spain, a British possession since 1704.
- Gideon. A judge of Israel. As a sign that Israel should be saved through his hand Gideon asked that God should let dew fall upon a fleece of wool and not upon the earth around it.
- Jerusalem. Liberata. Jerusalem Delivered, an Italian epic poem by Torquato Tasso (1544-95) on the deliverance of Jerusalem by Godfrey of Bouillon, leader of the First Crusade (1096-1100).
- Gleita. A loyal subject of Charles XII, King of Sweden (1697-1714).
- Gifford. William Gifford (1756-1826), editor of The Quarterly Review; he was hostile to Keats. His satires The Banned and The Unbanned, were published in 1797.
- Gilbert. Sir William Schwenck Gilbert (1836-1911), an English poet and dramatist.
- Gilpin. The hero of William Cowper's poem The Dying History of John Gilpin (1782).
- Gilpin. Horner. See Horner.
- Giovanni 1—(922)—A character in John Ford's His Pity Shes a Whore (1633). 2—(996)—The Christian name of Boccaccio (1313-71), a great Italian poet.
- Giraldus Cambrensis. A Welsh ecclesiastic and historian of the early 13th century.
- Glabbe. A town on the western border of Yorkshire.
- Glaramara. A rugged mountain in Borrowdale Valley, in the western part of Cumberland, England.
- Glasgow. The industrial and commercial metropolis of Scotland. It is the seat of the University of Glasgow founded in 1451.
- Glasse. Mrs Hannah Glasse author of The Art of Cookery (1747), and similar works.
- Glaucus. A sea god, originally a fisherman, who became immortal by tasting magic grass.
- Gleim. Johann W. Gleim (1731-1803) a German poet.
- Glen Fruin. A valley southwest of Loch Lomond, in Dumfriesshire, Scotland.
- Glen Liss. A valley southwest of Loch Lomond, in Dumfriesshire, Scotland.
- Glenalva. A character in John Horne's tragedy, Douglas (1776).
- Glenartney. A forest in Perthshire, Scotland.
- Glencairn. Earl of. A staunch supporter of Regent Murray of Scotland.
- Glenfinlas. A tract of forest ground in the Highlands of Perthshire, Scotland.
- Glo'ester. —(63)—"Gilbert de Clare surnamed the Red, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford, son-in-law to King Edward"—Gray.

- Gloucester. A city in Gloucestershire, England
Gloucester. Duke of. Later Richard III. King of England (1483-85). On the death of Edward IV, his older brother, Richard, seized the young Edward V and, in 1483, assumed the crown, the death of Edward V and his brother in prison being announced shortly after
- Gnidos. Cnidus, an ancient city of Caria, Asia Minor, a seat of the worship of Aphrodite
- Godwin. William Godwin (1766-1836), an English novelist and political writer See p 218
- Godwin, Earl. An English statesman (1807-1853), chief minister of Edward the Confessor
- Godwin, Mary Wollstonecraft. An English author (1757-1851), daughter of William and Mary Godwin, second wife of Shelley
- Goethe. Johann W Goethe (1749-1832), a famous German poet and dramatist
- Gog and Magog. Fabulous giants, names of two wooden statues in the London Guildhall supposed to represent the survivors of a race of giants which formerly inhabited Britain
- Golconda. A town in India, once famous as a diamond market
- Golden Age. A mythical period of perfect innocence, peace, and happiness In Roman literature, the period (81 B.C.-14 A.D.) of the greatest classical writers, Virgil, Horace, Livy, Ovid, and others
- Golden Square. A prominent square in London
- Goldsmith. Oliver Goldsmith (1728-74), an Irish poet, novelist, and dramatist
- Gondula. One of the Fatal Sisters
- Gorgon. Typh. Theobald Gorgon, a knight of an ancient family near Bristol He appeared as an actor in Chatterton's Ælia and Godwyn
- Gorgon. A fabulous female monster said to inhabit the Western Ocean The name is usually applied to Medusa, whose hair was transformed into serpents so terrible that all who looked upon them were turned to stone She was slain by Perseus and her head set on the shield of Athena
- Goshen. The district in Egypt allotted to the Children of Israel for their residence
- Goslar. An ancient city in the province of Hanover, Prussia
- Goth; Goths. A low German tribe that overran the Roman Empire in the 3rd and 4th centuries They founded kingdoms in Italy, Spain, and southern France The name is used of any barbaric or uncivilised person or people
- Gotham. A village in Northamptonshire, England, famous for the proverbial follies of its inhabitants Irving applied the name to New York
- Gothic. Pertaining (1) to the ancient Goths or their language, (2) to the so-called pointed types of medieval architecture (3) —(97)—to the Middle Ages in general, or (4) characterised by display
- Gowder crag. A rocky eminence in Cumberland-shire, England
- Grammes. The old and powerful family of Graham, which held extensive possessions in the counties of Dumfries and Stirling, in Scotland
- Grace. One of three goddesses embodying and conferring grace, beauty, and joy and represented as attending on Venus The names usually given them are Euphrosyne, Aglaia, and Thalia
- Grafton. A H Fitzroy (1785-1811), Duke of Grafton, an English political leader during the reign of George III (1760-1820)
- Grahame. James Grahame (1765-1811) a Scottish poet, whose chief work is The Rabbat (1804)
- Grammaticus, Saxo. A Danish historian of the 12th and 13th centuries
- Granby. Marquis of John Manners (1721-70), a British general
- Grande Chartreuse. See Chartreuse
- Grandison. Lady. A character in Samuel Richardson's The History of Sir Charles Grandison (1744)
- Granicus. A river in Mysia, Asia Minor the scene of Alexander the Great's victory over the Persians in 334 B.C.
- Grant. Charles Grant (1778-1866), a very unpopular statesman In 1827 he entered Canning's last ministry as President of the Board of Trade and Treasurer of the Navy
- Granville. George Granville (1667-1785), an English poet, dramatist and politician
- Grasmere. A village in the county of Westmoreland, England, at the head of Grasmere Lake
- Grass Market. The place of executions in Edinburgh in the 17th century
- Grassini. Josephina Grassini (1778-1850), a famous Italian opera singer
- Grattan. Henry Grattan, Jr (1746-1820), an Irish Member of Parliament who was noted for his quarrels in regard to legislation
- Gray. Thomas Gray (1710-71), an English poet. See p 57
- Great Bear, The. See Bear.
- Grecian. —(987, 959)—A name given to students of the first class who were preparing for a university
- Greenhead Ghyll. A small valley near Grasmere, in the county of Westmoreland, England
- Grenada. Granada, a province in southern Spain
- Grenville. W W Grenville (1759-1834), an English statesman, Secretary of Foreign Affairs in Pitt's ministry (1791-1801)
- Greta Woods. A wood along the River Greta in northern Yorkshire, England
- Grétry. André Grétry (1741-1813), a French opera composer
- Greville. Fulke Greville (1534-1628), Lord Brook, author of poems and tragedies, and a Life of Sir Philip Sidney
- Grey Friars. A school established on the site of the old Grey Friars' Monastery, London Christ's Hospital, founded on this site by Edward VI, was moved to Hotham, Sussex, in 1902
- Gribelin. Simon Gribelin (1661-1738), an engraver, who in 1707 drew plates of the Cartoons of Raphael (1483-1520), the Italian painter
- Griffin. A fanciful creature, half lion and half eagle
- Groat's House. John o'. See John o' Groat.
- Groat's Place. A fashionable square in London, it has been the residence of many famous men
- Grotto of Antiparos. See Antiparos
- Group from the Sistine Chapel. The Sistine, or Sistine, chapel is the private chapel of the Pope Its walls and ceilings are decorated with paintings, most noted of which are pictures of the Creation, the Deluge, and the Judgment, by Michelangelo
- Grub Street. A London street (now Milton Street) formerly noted as the residence of poor and needy authors
- Guadalquivir. A river in southern Spain
- Guardian. The An 18th century periodical published by Addison Steele, and others
- Guelphs (Guelfs, Welfs). A powerful family in Germany and Italy from the 9th to the 15th century
- Guildenstern. A courtier in Shakespeare's Hamlet
- Guildford. A town in the county of Surrey, England
- Guildhall. The corporation hall of the city of London, England
- Guinea. The coast-land of western Africa
- Gulliver's Travels. A social and political satire in the form of a book of travels, written by Jonathan Swift (1726)
- Gully. John Gully (1783-1863), a prize-fighter and sportsman
- Gwyneth. North-Wales
- Gyges. A son of Uranus and Gaea, one of the giants, he was killed by Hercules
- Hadrian. Publius Ælius Hadrianus a Roman emperor (117-138) He constructed a wall against the Picts and Scots in northern England between Solway Firth and the mouth of the River Tyne
- Hag of Endor. See Endor
- Hagar. Concubine of Abraham
- Halber. A place of execution near Carlisle, Cumberland-shire, England
- Haldon. A range of hills in Devonshire, England
- Hallam. Henry Hallam (1777-1859), a noted English historian
- Hallowell, Captain. Benjamin Hallowell, a British naval captain with Nelson at the Battle of Trafalgar (1805)
- Hamadryades. See note on The Hamadryad, p 1804b
- Hamelin. A town in Hanover province, Prussia
- Hamet. Cid Hamet Benengeli, the imaginary chronicler from whom Cervantes said he got the account of Don Quixote Byron states that Hamet promises repose to his pen, in the last chapter of Don Quixote
- Hamilton. —(438, 441)—See note on Cadyow Castle, p 1820a
- Hamilton, Gavin. A Scottish painter and antiquarian (1780-97)
- Hamilton, Lady. —(411, 416)—Emma Lyon Hamilton (c1761-1815), the wife of Sir William Hamilton, a British Ambassador at Naples She was the mistress of Lord Nelson whom she met in Naples in 1783, and the cause of his separation from his wife

- Hamlet. The leading character in Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- Hampden. John Hampden (1594-1643), an English patriot and statesman who refused to pay ship-money exacted by Charles I.
- Hampshire. A county in South England.
- Hampstead. See note on To Hampstead, p. 1278a.
- Handel. George Frederick Handel (1685-1759), a famous German musical composer, he lived in London for some years.
- Hanging Gardens of Babylon. A four-acre terraced garden, 300 feet high, built on a raised base supported by pillars. It was constructed by Nebuchadnezzar (6th cent. B. C.), and is known as one of the seven wonders of the world.
- Hannibal. The famous general of Carthage. He overcame Marcellus, the Roman general, in southern Italy, in 208 B. C.
- Hanover. A province in Prussia.
- Hanway, Jonas (1712-86). An author and tourist. He was a vehement opponent of tea, over which he got into conflict with Samuel Johnson, an inveterate tea drinker.
- Haram. Harem.
- Hardy. Sir Thomas Hardy (1769-1839), an English rear-admiral.
- Harfleur. A seaport in northern France, taken by the English, Sept., 1415, retaken by the French, 1449.
- Harmer-hill. A prominent hill on the road between Wem and Shrewsbury in Shropshire, England.
- Harmodius. See p. 694a, n. 8.
- Haroun Al Raschid (Haroun the Just). Caliph or Prince of Bagdad (786-809). He is an important character in The Arabian Nights' Entertainment.
- Harrington. Charles Stanhope (1733-1829). Third Earl of Harrington, an English general, aide-de-camp of Burgoyne in the American Revolution.
- Harriott. John Harriott, author of Struggles Through Life (1807), a work which contains an interesting account of the author's adventures in New England.
- Harrison. John Harrison (1693-1776), a noted English mechanician and watch-maker.
- Henry the V. Henry V, King of England (1413-22).
- Hartz Mountains. A mountain range in Brunswick and Anhalt, Germany, and in the provinces of Hanover and Saxony in Prussia.
- Harvey, Captain. Sir Elisha Harvey (1759-1830), an English Admiral.
- Hasecombe. A hill in the county of Surrey, England.
- Hasan. An Arabian prince of the 7th century. He was the grandson of Mohammed.
- Hathaway. Nathaniel Hathaway, steward at Christ's Hospital from 1790 to 1813.
- Hawthhead. A village in northern Lancashire, England.
- Hawthornden. A town in the county of Edinburgh, Scotland, it is famous for its caves.
- Haydon. Benjamin Robert Haydon (1786-1846), a noted English historical painter.
- Hayley. William Hayley (1745-1820), an English writer, author of The Triumph of Temper (1781), The Triumph of Music (1804), and various biographies.
- Haslitt. William Haslitt (1778-1830), an English author and critic. See p. 1007.
- Hebe. The cup bearer of the gods.
- Hebride Isles; Hebrides. A group of islands on the west coast of Scotland.
- Hecate. A goddess of the infernal regions, teacher of witchcraft and sorcery.
- Hecle. A volcano in Iceland.
- Hector. In Greek legend, the son of Priam and Hecuba, and the leader of the Trojans in the Trojan War. He was slain by Achilles. He is a prominent character in Homer's Iliad.
- Hela. The goddess of death, who presided over Nifheimr, the hell of the Gothic nations.
- Helen. 1—(864, 1075)—Helen of Troy, wife of Menelaus, King of Sparta, carried off on account of her beauty by Paris, son of Priam, King of Troy. She was the Trojan war heroine of Homer's Iliad. 2—(1104n) Julia Flavia Saint Helen (247-328) mother of Constantine.
- Helicon. A part of the Parnassus, a mountain range in Boeotia, in Greece. It had two springs, Aganippe and Hippocrene, sacred to the Muses.
- Heligoland. An island and fortress in the North Sea.
- Hellas. The sun-god, called Hyperion by Homer, later he was identified with Apollo.
- Hellas. Greece.
- Helle. The Hellespont. See Hellespont.
- Hellensia. A group of poems on Greek topics.
- Hellespont. The ancient name of the Strait of Dardanelles, between Europe and Asia. It took its name from Helle (daughter of Athamas and Nephele), who was drowned in it.
- Heloise. —(70)—A French abbess of the 12th cent. See Abelard.
- Helots. The slave class of Laconia, or Sparta, Greece.
- Helvellyn. A mountain in Cumberlandshire, England.
- Helvetia. The ancient Latin (now poetical) name for Switzerland.
- Hengest. A fifth century chief of the Jutes, founder of the Kingdom of Kent, in Britain.
- Henry. The name of a number of English Kings. I, 1100-35, II, 1154-89, III, 1216-72, IV, 1399-1413, V, 1413-22, VI, 1422-61, VII, 1485-1509, VIII, 1509-47.
- Henry VIII. A chronicle-history play, partly written by Shakespeare.
- Heraclia. An ancient Greek city on the coast of Asia Minor.
- Heraclius. See Hercules.
- Heraclitus (fl. 500 B. C.). A Greek philosopher of Ephesus, surnamed "The Obscure" because of his style, he was known also as "The Weeping Philosopher" because of the solemnity of his bearing and the hopelessness of his view of life.
- Heralds' College. A body of officials, instituted in 1484 to determine rights and titles in heraldry and to regulate the use of heraldic devices.
- Herbert. William Herbert (1778-1847), a translator of Icelandic and other poetry. One of his principal pieces is entitled Song on the Recovery of Thor's Hammer.
- Herculaneum. An Italian city buried with Pompeii in 79 A. D., by the eruption of Mount Vesuvius.
- Herculean. Resembling Hercules in strength; requiring great strength or labor.
- Hercules. The son of Zeus, he was noted for his gigantic strength, hero of numerous mighty labors, one of which was the securing of the girdle of the Amazon queen Hippolyta.
- Hercynian forest. A forest near the Rhine in southern and central Germany.
- Hera. Queen of heaven. See Aphrodite.
- Hermaphroditus. The fabled son of Hermes and Aphrodite, combining both sexes in one body, having been joined to Salmacia, a nymph presiding over a fountain near Halicarnassus. He is regarded as an emblem of indissoluble marriage.
- Hermes. The messenger and herald of the gods.
- Hero. 1—(592, 764, 780, 794)—A priestess of Aphrodite, beloved by Leander, who swam nightly across the Hellespont from Abydos, Asia Minor, to meet her. Leander was drowned during a storm, and Hero, in despair, threw herself into the sea. 2—(780)—A character in Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing.
- Herod. Surnamed "The Great," King of Judea (40-4 B. C.). He is alleged to have ordered the massacre of the infants in Bethlehem, in order to kill the child Jesus. See Herod's Lament for Marianne (p. 512) and note, p. 1221b, also Stephen Phillips's Herod, a Tragedy (1900).
- Herodotus (5th century B. C.). A noted Greek historian.
- Henry the fourth. Henry IV, King of England (1399-1413).
- Hertford. A branch of Christ's Hospital School, for girls, located in Hertford, Hertfordshire, England.
- Hertfordshire. A county in the south-central part of England.
- Hertha. (Nerthus). A German goddess of fertility and growth.
- Hervey, William. An English soldier and nobleman of the early 17th century.
- Hesiod (8th century B. C.). A celebrated Greek poet.
- Hesper, Hesperus. The evening star in Greek mythology.
- Hesperian. Of or pertaining to Hesperus, the evening star.
- Hesperides. The maidens who guarded the golden apples in the garden of the gods, also, the garden itself, on the borders of eternal darkness.
- Hessey. James Augustus Hessey. A member of the publishing firm of Taylor & Hessey, Keats's publishers.
- Heywood. Thomas Heywood, A noted English dramatist of the early 17th century.
- Hibernian Strangford. See Strangford.
- Hierarch. A leader of celestial hosts.
- High-Born Helen. This poem appears as Helen in most editions of Lamb's works.

- Highflyer. A fast stage coach
Highgate. A suburb of London
Highland Mary. A name given by Burns to Mary Campbell and to Mary Morrison
Hilda. One of the Fatal Sisters
Himara. An ancient town in Sicily
Hinckleam. Of Hinckley, a town in Leicestershire, England
Hindu. A member of one of the native races of Hindustan, the central peninsula of Asia
Hindhead. A ridge in the southwest part of the county of Surrey, England
Hinnom, Hinnom's Vale. The ancient valley of Hinnom, south of Jerusalem. It was called also Gehenna and Tophet, and in later times, it became the prototype of the place of punishment, and was regarded as the mouth of Hell
Hippias. Son of Pisistratus, he became ruler and tyrant of Athens in 527 B C and was expelled in 510
Hippocrates. A celebrated physician who served Athens at the time of the great plague, 420 B C. He was a native of Cos, an island in the Ægean sea
Hippocrene. A fountain sacred to the Muses, on Helicon, a part of the Parnassus, a mountain range in Boeotia, in Greece. The tale was that the fountain gushed out where the hoof of Pegasus struck the ground
Hippolyta. See note on Thesus and Hippolyta, p. 1304b
Hobbes. Thomas Hobbes (1588-1679), a celebrated English philosopher
Hoder. See note on Gray's The Descent of Odin, 67b, 55-56, p. 1260b
Hodges. A student at Christ's Hospital with Lamb
Hoel. The son of Prince Owain Gwynedd of North Wales; he was a poet and a warrior
Hofer. Andreas Hofer (1767-1810), a Tyrolean patriot and insurgent leader, executed by the French under Napoleon
Hogarth. William Hogarth (1697-1764), a noted English painter and engraver
Hogg, James. A Scottish poet (1770-1835). See p. 476
Hog-lane. A disreputable street in London, now Middlesex Street
Hog's Back. A mountain ridge in the county of Surrey, England
Holcroft. Thomas Holcroft (1745-1800), an English dramatist, actor, and miscellaneous writer
Holland. Henry Richard Vassall (1773-1840), 3rd Lord Holland, who Byron thought wrote the hostile attack upon his Hours of Idleness. Byron says that Holland was "applauded for dinners and translations"
Holy Alliance. An alliance made in 1815 by the Emperors of Austria and Russia and the King of Prussia, subsequently joined by all the European sovereigns except the Pope and the King of England
Holyhead. A seaport in Anglesea, Wales
Holy Paul. —(884)—St Paul's Cathedral, London, it contains a statue of John Howard (1726-90), the prison reformer
Holy Roman Empire. Certain portions of the old Roman Empire together with the Frankish possessions of Charlemagne who was crowned Emperor at Rome, 800, by Pope Leo III. In 962 the real Holy Roman German Empire began. It became extinct in 1806 when Francis II resigned for the hereditary crown of Austria
Holy Thursday. Thursday of Holy Week—4 e, the week before Easter
Homer. An ancient Greek poet, variously assigned to the 8th to 12th century B C the reputed author of the Iliad and the Odyssey and of the so-called Homeric hymns. According to tradition he lived in Smyrna and on the islands of Chios and Ios in the Ægean Sea, and in his old age was blind
Honorable Society of the Middle Temple. See Temple
Hooker. Richard Hooker (1534-1600), a noted English divine
Horace. Quintus Horatius Flaccus (65-8 B C), a noted Roman lyric and satirical poet Horatio. A character in Shakspeare's Hamlet
Horner, Giffin. The goblin page in Scott's The Lay of the Last Minstrel Hornio. The devil
Horton, Lady Wilmot. Anne Beatrix Horton, wife of Byron's second cousin, Robert John Wilmot (1784-1841). She died in 1871
Hounslow. A town in the county of Middlesex, England
Houri. The beautiful damsels who, according to the Moslem faith, are to be companions of the faithful in Paradise Hours. Mythological beings represented as accompanying Venus, and as bringing the changes of the season
House of Commons. The lower legislative body of England
House of Tudor. An English dynasty, descended on the male side from Owen Tudor, on the female side from John of Gaunt through the Beauforts. It comprised the sovereigns, Henry VII, Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth Houses of Parliament. The legislative body of England consisting of the House of Commons, and the House of Lords
Howard. 1—(381, 984)—John Howard (1726-90), an English philanthropist noted for his efforts in behalf of prison reform. 2—(482)—See note on U Kimman, p. 1272 b. 3—(527)—See p. 527b, n. 2
Howard, Earl of Nottingham. —(230)—Charles Howard (1530-1624), an English admiral
Howe. William Howe (1720-1814), a British general in the American Revolution
Hoyle. Edmund Hoyle (1672-1769), an English writer on whist and other card games
Hubert, Saint (656?-727). A bishop of Liège, Belgium, the patron saint of hunters Huguenot. The Huguenots were French Protestants, who suffered great persecution during the religious wars of the 16th and 17th centuries
Hull. A seaport on the east coast of Yorkshire, England
Humboldt. F. H. A. Humboldt (1769-1859), a German naturalist and statesman
Hume, David (1711-76). A famous Scottish philosopher and historian
Hume, Joseph (1777-1855). An English politician who devoted himself to financial questions and was indefatigable in exposing extravagance and abuse. Retrenchment was his watchword
Hun. One of an obscure Asiatic nomadic and warlike race living between the Volga and the Volga about the dawn of the Christian era. —(420)—Austrians Hungerford. A city in western Berkshire, England
Hunt. James Henry Leigh Hunt (1784-1830), an English poet and essayist. See p. 866
Hyalanth. The anemthus, a beautiful youth beloved of Apollo and accidentally killed by him while playing at discus-throwing. From the blood of Hyacinthus sprang the flower called hyacinth
Hybla. An ancient town of Sicily famous for its honey Hydaspes. The ancient name of the River Jhelum in India
Hyde Park Corner. Hyde Park is a park in Westminster, London, one of the largest of the London parks
Hymen. The god of marriage
Hyperion. Titan father of Helios the sun-god, also the sun-god himself, the incarnation of light and beauty
Iago. The villain in Shakspeare's Othello
Ianthe. Sophias Jane Swift, London's early sweetheart. Her first husband died in 1612 and she soon afterwards married M. de Moliand. They went to live in Paris where her second husband died. She spent two years (1829-31) in Florence, and passed the remainder of her life between England and France. She died in Paris in 1851
Iapetus. A Titan, father of Prometheus and Atlas, and fabled ancestor of the human race Iberian. Of Iberia, the ancient name of the Spanish peninsula
Icarus. A youth who flying with his father, Daedalus on wings fastened with wax, soared so high that the sun melted the wax and he fell into the Ægean Sea and was drowned
Icolmkill. Iona, an island of the Inner Hebrides on the west coast of Scotland
Ida. An ancient mountain in the Island of Crete, southeast of Greece, connected with the worship of Zeus Idalia. A town in the Island of Cyprus, in the Mediterranean, containing a temple for the worship of Venus, goddess of love Iliad. A Greek epic poem dealing with the story of the siege of Ilium (Troy). It is ascribed to Homer
Ilion. See Troy
Iliacus. A small river in Attica, Greece
Ilium. See Troy
Imogen. A character in Shakspeare's Cymbeline

- Inde. 1—(816)—Indus, a river in India 2—(800)—India
- India House. The London headquarters of the East India Company, a trading company formed in 1600 to carry on commerce with the East Indies. It became also a great political power, until in 1858 it practically governed India.
- Indostan. India
- Indus. A river in India
- Inferno. The first part of Dante's The Divine Comedy, describing the poet's journey through hell under the guidance of Virgil
- Inner Temple. See Temple
- Inquisition. The Roman Catholic court for examination and punishment of heretics. It came into being in 1531, and took its most severe form in Spain where torture, as a means of eliciting evidence, was generally employed
- Inverlochy. A place in Argyllshire, Scotland, where James Graham (1612-50), Earl of Montrose, defeated the Scottish Covenanters in 1645
- Inverness. A county in north-central Scotland
- Invermayde. A village in Shirlingshire, Scotland, near the head of Loch Lomond
- Io. A beautiful nymph beloved of Jupiter, she aroused the jealousy of Juno
- Iona. Island of. One of the Inner Hebrides, off the west coast of Scotland
- Ionian, Ionic. Pertaining to Ionia, the ancient name of the coast district and islands of western Asia Minor, peopled by Greek colonists
- Iphigenia. See note on On His Own Agamemnon and Iphigenia, p. 1304a
- Iran. Persia
- Iris. The personification of the rainbow, regarded as the swift messenger of the gods. She was supposed to loosen the hair of dying persons so that their spirits might depart
- Irish Rebellion. A rebellion fostered in 1798 by the Society of United Irishmen for the avowed purpose of separating Ireland from the British Empire
- Iron Age. In Greek mythology the last and most degraded period of the ages preceding the human era. Opposed to Golden Age
- "Iron Mask." An allusion to the Man in the Iron Mask, a mysterious figure of the late 17th century in Italy. He has been identified as Count Maitelli, Secretary of State at the Court of Gonzaga, Duke of Mantua
- Irthing. A river in the northeastern part of Cumberlandshire, England
- Isaiah. A Hebrew prophet (740-701 B. C.)
- Iscariot. A boon companion of Canyng. He appears as an actor in Chatterton's Billa and Todd
- Isar. A river in Bavaria, Germany
- Isle of Man. An island in the Irish sea
- Islington. A parish in northern London
- Ismail. A town of Russia, formerly a Turkish fortress. The massacre which followed the storming of the city by the Russians in 1790 was one of the bloodiest events in the annals of European warfare
- Israel. The kingdom of the northern tribes of the Israelites, who seceded from the southern tribes in the reign of Rehoboam, 953 B. C.
- Israel's sons. Children of Israel, descendants of Jacob
- Istambol. Istanbul or Istamboul, a Turkish name of Constantinople
- Italia. The ancient name of Italy
- Ithaca. An island of the Ionian group, Greece, in classical times the home of Odysseus
- Ixion. In Greek legend, a king of a wild people of Thessaly, Greece, in the heroic age. He made love to Hera, by whom (in the form of a cloud sent by Zeus) he became father of the Centaurs. For boasting of the favors of Hera, Ixion was bound to an endlessly revolving wheel in Tartarus
- Jack. The conventional name of a sailor
- Jack Cade. Jack Cade was the leader of "Cade's Rebellion," a political uprising in Kent, in 1450
- Jack Horner. An old nursery rhyme, the hero of which "sat in a corner eating his Christmas pie"
- Jackson. John Jackson (1700-1845), a well-known prize-fighter
- Jacob. The son of Isaac and ancestor of the Israelites
- Jacobi. Friedrich Heinrich Jacobi (1743-1819) a noted German philosopher
- Jaffa. A seaport of Palestine. It was stormed by the French under Napoleon in 1799
- Jamblichus. One of the Neo-Platonic philosophers of the 4th century
- Janus. An ancient Roman deity, god of gates and doors. He was represented with two faces looking in opposite directions, thus seeing the past and the future at the same time
- James. 1—(443)—James VI, King of Scotland (1567-1625) and—(627)—King of England as James I (1603-25) 2—(455)—James V, King of Scotland (1512-42) 3—(1070)—James I, King of Scotland (1400-87), 4—(1150)—King of England (1185-88)
- Jamy. the Skottish King —(116)—James I, King of Scotland (1406-37)
- Jason. See Medea
- Jean. Burns's wife
- Jeffrey. Francis Jeffrey (1773-1850), a Scottish critic, essayist, and jurist. He was editor of The Edinburgh Review. See p. 884
- Jenkins. A dissenting minister in Whitchurch, Shropshire, England
- Jephthah. A judge of Israel who sacrificed his daughter in fulfillment of a vow that if he subdued the Ammonites he would kill whatever came out of his house to meet him on his return
- Jericho. An ancient walled city of Palestine. When attacked by the invading Israelites under the command of Joshua, its walls were miraculously destroyed
- Jerome. St. Jerome (c.340-420) one of the fathers of the Latin Church. He published a Latin version of the Bible known as the Vulgate
- Jesuit. One of a Catholic religious order founded by Ignatius Loyola in 1534 under the title of The Society of Jesus, whence its name—Jesuits
- Jewel. John Jewel (1522-71), Bishop of Salisbury, an English divine
- Joan of Arc. "The Maid of Orleans" (1412-31) the French national heroine. She won a great battle against the English in 1429
- Jock of Hareldam. A traditional ballad hero
- Job. The chief personage in the book of Job, in the Old Testament
- John Bunloe. A novel by Thomas Amory (1801?-1749) an English humorist and moralist. The hero John Bunloe is noted for his amorosness; he was married seven times
- John o' Groat's House. A building near Duncansby Head, the northernmost point of Scotland, said to have been erected by John o' Groat, a Dutchman who probably settled there about 1480
- John, Saint. One of the twelve apostles, author of the book of John
- Johnson. Samuel Johnson (1709-84), a celebrated English essayist and lexicographer. He wrote in the conventional classical manner
- Jonathan. —(620)—See Hull, John
- Jonson. Ben Jonson (c.1573-1637), a celebrated English poet and dramatist
- Josephus. Flavius Josephus (37-96?) a celebrated Jewish historian
- Joshua. A leader of the Israelites who conquered Canaan. He is the subject of the book of Joshua
- Jove. Same as Jupiter or Zeus
- Jovian. Remembling Jove
- Judah. The tribe descended from Judah, or the territory in Palestine assigned to it
- Judaism. The Jewish civil and religious law
- Judas. Judas Iscariot, the betrayer of Christ
- Judean. Of Judea, a southern division of Palestine in the Roman period
- Julian, Count. The hero of Landor's dramatic poem Count Julian
- Julian, Emperor. Emperor of Rome (361-363)
- Juliet. The heroine in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet
- Jungfrau. A high mountain of the Alps in Switzerland
- Junius. The signature of an unknown writer of letters attacking the British government, published 1769-72
- Juno. The wife of Jupiter and queen of heaven. She was identified with the Greek goddess Hera. See Ixion
- Junot. Andoche Junot (1771-1813), a French general
- Jupiter. The supreme deity in Roman mythology. He was worshiped on the Capitoline Hill at Rome. His weapon was the thunderbolt, the eagle was sacred to him
- Jura. A chain of mountains in eastern France and western and northern Switzerland
- Juvenal. (c.55-125) A Roman satiric poet
- Kaf. In oriental legend a mountain range consisting of a single emerald, said to surround the world

- Kaff. Caucasus, a mountain system in Russia, between Europe and Asia
- Kaliburn. The sword of King Arthur, which Monkish historians say came into the possession of Richard I, and was given by him, in the Crusades, to Tancred, King of Sicily, as a royal present, about 1190
- Kant. Immanuel Kant (1724-1804), founder of the so-called Critical System of Philosophy
- Kathay (Cathay). A poetical name for China
- Katrine. A lake in the western highlands of Perthshire, Scotland
- Kean, Mr. Edmund Kean (1787-1833), a celebrated English actor
- Keats, George and Georgiana. George Keats was the brother of John Keats the poet, Georgiana was George Keats's wife
- Kemble, Mr. John Philip Kemble (1757-1823), a noted English actor
- Kendal. A town in the county of Westmoreland, England
- Kensington. A western section of London
- Kent. 1—(81)—William Kent (1684-1748), an English painter, sculptor, architect, and landscape gardener 2—(287, 294)—A county in south-eastern England 8—(958)—The servant of Lear in King Lear
- Kentish Town. A district in the northwestern part of London
- Keppel. Augustus Keppel (1725-86), an English admiral
- Keewick. A town in Cumberland, England, the burial-place of Southey
- Keymer. Mr. Keymer, a London bookseller
- Kilda (St. Kilda). A small island outside of the Hebrides, west of Scotland
- Kilmarnock. An ancient mining and manufacturing town in Ayrshire, Scotland
- King of Day. Hyperion, god of the sun
- King of Terrors. Death. See Job 18
- King's College. A college of Cambridge University, Cambridge, England
- Kirk-Alloway. See Alloway
- Klopstock. Friedrich Gottlieb Klopstock (1724-1803), a German lyric and epic poet, author of The Messiah
- Knox. John Knox (1505-72), a celebrated Scottish reformer, statesman, and writer
- Koran. The Mohammedan sacred scripture
- Koshusko. See note on Koshusko, p. 1234b
- Kotzebue. See p. 898b, n. 2
- Krüdener, Madame. Barbara von Vietinghoff-Scheel (1764-1824), Baroness of Krüdener, a Russian mystic, friend of the Czar, Alexander I (1775-1825)
- Kyrkstone; Kirkless. A priory in western Yorkshire
- Labrador. A peninsula between Hudson Bay and the Atlantic Ocean in northeastern Canada
- Lady Blanche. A picture known as Modesty and Vanity
- Laertes. A character in Shakespeare's Hamlet
- Lahore. An important trade and educational city in India, annexed by the British in 1849
- Lalan. Lalus, legendary King of Thebes, upon learning from the oracle that he would be killed by his son, who would wed his own mother, left his infant son Oedipus in an exposed place. The boy was rescued, and later slew his father unwittingly
- Lake District; Lakes. The region in northern England including the counties of Lancaster, Cumberland, and Westmoreland, so called because of its beautiful lakes
- Lake Leman. See Leman
- Lakers. A name given to Wordsworth, Coleridge, Southey, and others because of their residence in the Lake district of England
- Lamb. Charles Lamb (1775-1834), a noted English essayist. See p. 915
- Lamb, Miss. Charles Lamb's sister Mary (1764-1847)
- Lamb. 1—(486a, 55)—William Lamb (1779-1848), 2—(486a, 57, 486b, 82, 493, 495)—George Lamb (1784-1834). Both were cousins of Byron's wife George Lamb was a contributor to The Edinburgh Review, and the author of an unsuccessful farce, Whistle for It. At the time of Byron's separation from his wife, George Lamb supported Byron, the wives of George and William Lamb supported Lady Byron. William Lamb supported neither
- Lambros. 1—(506)—Lambros Katsones, a noted Greek revolutionist and pirate, of the late 18th century 2—(605)—Haidée's father, in Byron's Don Juan, probably identified with 1
- Lancashire. A county in northwestern England
- Lancaster. 1—(64, 182, 221)—The name of a line of English kings descended from John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, third son of Edward III. In the 15th century, the House of Lancaster contested for the throne with the House of York, descendants of Edmund, Duke of York, fourth son of Edward III, in the War of the Roses, so called from the red rose and the white rose, badges of the adherents of the respective houses 2—(1120)—A city in Lancashire, England
- Lane's novels. The novels published by William Lane at the Minerva Press, in London
- Langdale Pike. A hill in the county of Westmoreland, England, at the head of Langdale Vale, near Ambleside
- Laocoon. An antique group in marble representing the death of the Trojan priest Laocoon and his two sons, who are represented as crushed by huge serpents
- Laodamia. See note on Laodamia, p. 1371a
- La Place. Pierre La Place (1749-1827), a French astronomer and mathematician
- Lapland. A region in the northern parts of Norway, Sweden, and Russia
- Lapponian. Belonging to Lapland
- Lara. 1—(83)—See note on Fugate, p. 1306b 2—(906)—A poem by Byron
- Last Supper. A famous painting by Leonardo da Vinci (1452-1519), in Milan, Italy. It was finished in 1498
- Latium. Of or pertaining to ancient Latium in Italy
- Latimer. Hugh Latimer (1484-1555), an English Protestant martyr, bishop of Worcester
- Latium. An ancient country in Italy, between Etruria and Campania, the home of the Latin or Roman people
- Latmian. Endymion, a shepherd on Mt. Latmus, Asia Minor, who was loved by Diana
- Latmos. Latmus, a mountain in Caria, Asia Minor, where Diana found the shepherd boy Endymion, sleeping
- Latona. Name as Leto, mother of Apollo and Artemis. She personifies night
- Laura. The sweetheart of Petrarch, immortalized in his sonnets
- Lausanne. A city in Switzerland
- Lawrence, Sir. Sir Thomas Lawrence (1769-1830), a noted portrait painter
- Lawson. Dr. Thomas Master of Manchester School when Dr. Quincey was a student there, in 1800
- Laybach (Laibach). A city in Austria
- Lazarus. The beggar "full of sores" who desired to be fed with the crumbs from the table of the rich man Dives (Luke 16:19-31). See Dives
- Lea. A river in Bedfordshire, England, famous for its fish
- Leadenhall Street. A street in London on which was located the East India House, where Lamb served as a clerk from 1792 to 1825
- Leader Haughs. Lowlands along the River Leader, which joins the Tweed, near Melrose, in Roxburghshire, Scotland
- Leander. See Hero (1)
- Lear. King Lear in Shakespeare's King Lear
- Lebanon. A mountain range in Syria, once famous for its forests of cedar
- Lebeau, Prince. Jean Louis Joseph Lebeau (1779-1863), a Belgian diplomat, who carried on important negotiations with England, 1830-31
- Leda. Zeus, in the form of a swan, made love to Leda, and from this amou, according to one legend, were born Castor and Pollux, Helena and Clytemnestra
- Leicestershire. An inland county of England
- Leigh, Mrs. Byron's half-sister Augusta
- Leipzig. The largest city in Saxony, Germany
- Leith. A seaport of Scotland, near Edinburgh
- Leman, Lake. Lake of Geneva, Switzerland
- Lemnos (Limno). An island in the Aegean Sea, belonging to Turkey
- Lennox. A district at the lower extremity of Loch Lomond, in the county of Dumbarton, Scotland. It was the residence of the Lennox family, and was frequently raided by the mountaineers
- Lenzy. A pass from the village of Callander, Perthshire, Scotland, to the Highlands
- Lent. A fasting period of forty days immediately preceding Easter
- Leopold, Prince. Duke of Saxe-Coburg (1790-1865), afterwards, Leopold I, King of Belgium (1831-65). He married Princess Charlotte, daughter of George IV of England, in 1816
- Lepanto. A naval battle fought in the Bay of Lepanto, on the west coast of Greece, between the fleet of Turkey and the allied fleets of Spain and

- Italy, Oct. 7, 1871 The Turks were defeated with great loss
- Lessing, Gotthold E. Lessing (1729-81), a celebrated German critic and dramatist
- L'Estrange, Sir Roger L'Estange (1616-1704), an English journalist and pamphleteer
- Lethe, Lethæum, Lethe was the river of forgetfulness in Hades
- Laurium, A village in ancient Boeotia, Greece, the scene of a victory by the Thebans over the Spartans, in 371 B. C.
- Leven-glen, The valley of the River Leven, which connects Loch Lomond with the River Clyde in Dumbartonshire, Scotland
- Leviathan, A large unidentified animal mentioned in the Bible, hence, anything huge or colossal
- Lewis, Monk Lewis, Matthew Gregory Lewis (1775-1816), an English novelist and dramatist, author of the romance Amoroso, or the Monk (1795)
- Libe, The west-southwest wind
- Libyan, Of ancient Libya, a part of northern Africa, west of Egypt
- Liddendale, A valley in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, on the English border
- Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy, The A discursive novel by Laurence Sterne (1713-68), an English novelist and humorist
- Lilliputian, Very small, like the people of Lilliput, an imaginary island in Swift's Gulliver's Travels (1726)
- Lillo, George Lillo (1693-1739), an English dramatist, author of George Barnwell and other plays
- Lima, A city and province in Peru, South America
- Limbo-lake, The 'pit' of Hell
- Lincoln, A city in Lincolnshire, England
- Lincoln green, A cloth made in the city of Lincoln, and worn by huntmen
- Linden, Hohenlinden, a village in Bavaria, Germany
- Lindsay, Lord Lindsay, a staunch supporter of Regent Murray of Scotland. He was noted for his fierceness and brutality
- Linlithgow, A town in the county of Linlithgow (West Lothian), Scotland
- Linton, A parish near Cambridge, in Cambridgeshire, England
- Lion —(813)—The constellation Leo
- Lion of St. Mark, A winged lion holding an open book with the inscription "Pax tibi Marce, Evangelista meus" the national emblem of Venice. It was cast in the 12th century
- Liabon, The capital of Portugal
- Lithgow, William Lithgow (1582-1645?), a noted English traveler. He is said to have walked over 30,000 miles through Europe, Asia, and Africa. He is the author of a book of travel and of other works
- Little, A pseudonym of Thomas Moore (1779-1852), an Irish poet. See p. 424
- Little John, A lieutenant of Robin Hood, noted for his skill with the bow
- Liverpool, A large seaport in Lancashire, England
- Livia, The wife of Augustus Cæsar, Emperor of Rome (31 B. C.-14 A. D.)
- Livv, Titus Livius (59 B. C.-17 A. D.), a famous Roman historian
- Llanollen, A town in Denbighshire, Wales
- Llewellyn, A Welsh prince noted for his mild temperament
- Lloyd, Charles Lloyd (1775-1839), a minor English poet. Charles Lamb and Lloyd were classed with Coleridge and Southey, in The Last Jacobin, as advocates of French socialism
- Loch-Achray, A small lake in Perthshire, Scotland
- Lochard, A small lake near the village of Aberfoyle, in Perthshire, Scotland
- Lochgyle, A partially land-locked arm of the sea on the west coast of Scotland
- Lochiel, The chief of the Camerons. See note on Lochiel's Warning, p. 1228b
- Loch Lomond, The largest lake of Scotland situated in the counties of Stirling and Dumbarton. It is noted for scenes of grandeur and beauty
- Lochlann, The Gaelic name of Scandinavia
- Locke, John (1632-1704). A noted English philosopher
- Lockhart, J. G. Lockhart (1794-1854), a Scottish critic and biographer, son-in-law of Sir Walter Scott
- Lo-dear banks, Crag-like heights in Cumberlandshire, England
- Loder, A famous cataract of a branch of the River Derwent, in Cumberlandshire, England
- Logan, John Logan (1748-88), a Scottish lyric poet
- Lok (Loki) in Norse mythology, the god of discord and evil
- Lombard Street, An important street in London occupied by many banks
- Lomond, Loch. See Loch Lomond.
- Lomonds, Ben-Lomond is a mountain in Stirlingshire, Scotland. West of it is the beautiful lake Loch Lomond
- London Gazette, The official government newspaper of London
- London Magazine, The. A monthly magazine founded in London in 1820 under the editorship of John Scott. In 1821, it passed into the ownership of the publishing firm of Taylor and Henson. Among its contributors were Lamb, Hazlitt, De Quincey, Hood, Keats, and Carlyle
- London Tower, Originally a royal residence and citadel, situated on the River Thames, in London. It was long famous as a state prison for political offenders. It is now a national arsenal
- Longinus, Dionysius Cassius Longinus (213?-273?), a Greek Platonic philosopher and critic
- Longman, Messara, A long established English publishing house
- Lopé, Lope de Vega (1562-1635), a celebrated Spanish poet and dramatist
- Lord Lieutenant of the County, A deputy of the sovereign who had wide military powers
- Lords and Commons, Members of the upper and lower houses of Parliament
- Lords of Convention, The Scottish Parliament
- Lorenzo, —(85)—Probably Philip, Duke of Wharton (1698-1731), an English political intriguer noted for his profligacy
- Lorrain, Claude Gellée (1600-82), a celebrated French landscape painter
- Lorton Vale, A small valley in Cumberlandshire, England
- Lothbury, A street in London, near the Bank of England, it is frequented by business men and clerks
- Lothian, The county in which Edinburgh is situated
- Louis XIV, King of France (1643-1715)
- Lowe, Sir Hudson Lowe (1769-1844), a British general, governor of St. Helena during Napoleon's captivity
- Lowth, Dr. Robert Lowth (1710-87), an English scholar and theologian
- Lowther Park, A small place on the River Lowther, Cumberlandshire, England
- Lucan, Marcus Annæus Lucanus (39-65), a Roman poet and prose writer, author of Pharsalia
- Lucifer, Satan, the prince of darkness, so called from the impression the church fathers had that he had fallen from heaven. Also, the morning star
- Lucrētilla, A hill near the farm of Horace, among the Sabine Hills, east of Rome
- Lucretius, Titus Lucretius Cæcilius (c95-55 B. C.), a celebrated Roman poet and philosopher
- Lucullus, Marcus Licinius Lucullus (c110-57 B. C.), a Roman general and consul. He defeated Carbo, the leader of the civil war against Sulla the dictator, in 82 B. C., and other noted generals. He was famous for his wealth and luxury
- Lugar, —(175)—A small stream near the village of Lugar in Ayrshire, Scotland
- Lunardi, Vincenzo Lunardi (1759-1806), a famous Italian aeronaut, who made several successful ascents in England and Scotland in 1784-86. He was secretary to the Neapolitan ambassador in England at the time
- Luss, A small village on the west shore of Loch Lomond, in the county of Dumbarton, Scotland
- Luxor, A winter resort on the Nile River in upper Egypt, the site of ancient Thebes. It is famous for its antiquities
- Lyceum, Mount Lyceum, a mountain in Arcadia, Greece, the chief seat of the worship of Pan, god of flocks and shepherds
- Lydia, Lydia, In Milton's Lyricus, a name given to Milton's friend Edward King, lamented in the poem
- Lynceolne, See Lincoln Green
- Lyons, A seaport in Norfolkshire, England
- Lyons (Lyon), An important city in the Department of Rhone, France
- Lyrical Ballads, A collection of poems by Wordsworth and Coleridge published in 1798. For contents of the first edition see p. 1374b. The second edition, published in two volumes in 1800, contained all of the poems of the first edition, Wordsworth's Preface, and a number of additional poems, including The Two April Mornings (p. 240), The Fountain (p. 240), The Brothers Ruff, The Two Thieves, Michael (p. 266), and

- The Old Cumberland Beggar (p. 234).—by Wordsworth, and Love, by Coleridge
- Lylicrates. See Monument of Lylicrates
- Lyttleton, Lord George Lyttleton (1709-78), an English author and politician
- Mab. A fairy queen who delivers dreams from men. See Romance and Juhol, 1, 4
- Macartney, Lord, George Macartney (1737-1806), an Irish diplomat, Governor of Madras, a province in India
- Macassar. A former kingdom in one of the East India Islands
- Macbeth. A character in Shakspeare's Macbeth
- Maccaronies. Fops or dandies. The word came into use in England between 1750 and 1773. Horace Walpole tells about the Macaroni Club, composed of "all the traveled young men who wear long curls and spying-glasses"
- Macculloch, John Ramsay Macculloch (1789-1864), Professor of Political Economy, London University (1828-32)
- Macedonia. An ancient county in northern Greece, the most powerful seat of empire of its time, under Alexander the Great (4th century B C)
- Macfarlane. A clan of Scottish Highlanders attached to the Regent Murray. They resided in Lennox, the ancient name of a district comprising parts of the counties of Stirling, Perth, Renfrew, and the county of Dumfriesshire
- Machivell, Niccolò Machiavelli (1469-1527), a celebrated Italian statesman and political writer
- Mackenzie, Dr James Mackenzie (d. 1837), a practicing physician at Mauchline Irvine, and Edinburgh, Scotland. He was one of Burns's warmest friends
- Mackintosh, Sir James Mackintosh (1765-1833), a Scottish philosopher and historian, he published Vindicta Guillelmi in 1791 in answer to Burke's Reflections on the Revolution in France
- Macnelli, Hector Macnelli (1746-1818), a popular Scottish poet
- Macon. An obsolete form of Makond, often used as a name for the devil
- Macpherson, James Macpherson (1736-96), a Scottish writer and politician, translator or author of Osian. See p. 96
- Madeira. A Portuguese island northwest of Africa, it is noted for its wine
- Madison, James. President of the United States (1809-17)
- Mador. A legendary Welsh prince, said to have discovered America about 1170
- Madonna. An old Italian form of address equivalent to Vadum. Also, an Italian designation of the Virgin Mary
- Maeand. A priestess or female votary of Bacchus, hence, a woman given to revelry and debauchery
- Maeonius. A mountain in Arcadia Greece, the favorite haunt of Pan, god of flocks and shepherds
- Maender. In ancient geography, a winding river which rose in Asia Minor and flowed into the Aegean Sea near Samos. Its modern name is Menderes
- Maenides. A poetical epithet of Homer from his reputed native place, Maenonia, the ancient name of Lydia, a district in Asia Minor
- Mævius. An inferior Roman poet of the first century B C, an enemy of Virgil and Horace
- Magdalen. Mary Magdalen, traditionally regarded as the repentant sinner forgiven by Christ. See Luke 7, 38
- Magi, Magian. The learned and priestly caste of the ancient Medes and Persians, the keepers of sacred articles, tutors of the kings, philosophers, augurs, and astrologers
- Magog. See Gog
- Magus Zoroaster. See Zoroaster
- Mahomet. See Mohammed
- Maia. The eldest of the Pleiades, and mother of Hermes. She was identified by the Romans with an old Italian goddess of spring
- Malano, Benedetto Malano (1424?-98), an eminent Italian sculptor and architect
- Maid Marian. A companion of Robin Hood, a legendary medieval outlaw hero
- Maldenhead. A borough in Berkshire, England, situated on the Thames
- Malaga. The name of a city and a province on the southern coast of Spain
- Malaprop, Mrs. A character in Richard Sheridan's The Rivals (1775)
- Malay. The most southern portion of continental Asia. The name is also applied to inhabitants of the country
- Mallet, David Mallet (1705-65), a Scottish poet and author. See p. 15
- Mammon. The god of riches and the personification of wealth. He is one of the fallen angels in Milton's Paradise Lost
- Man, Isle of. An island in the Irish Sea
- Manasseh. One of the 12 tribes of the Hebrews dwelling along the Jordan River, named from Manasseh, the son of Joseph
- Manchester. A large manufacturing city in Lancashire, England
- Mandarin. A Chinese public official
- Mandeville, Sir John Mandeville the reputed author of a 14th century book of travels
- Manners. The name of a titled English family, prominent in the 14th century
- Manning, Thomas Manning (1774-1840), an English linguist who spent a number of years in Tibet and China
- Mantua. A surname of Virgil, a native of Mantua, in Lombardy, Italy
- Marathon. A plain in Attica Greece, the scene of the Battle of Marathon, in which the Athenian general Miltiades defeated the Persian army and saved Greece, 490 B C
- Marceau, François Marceau (1769-96), a general of the French Republic, killed in a battle at Altenkirchen, Prussia
- Marcellus. A famous Roman general. See Hannibal
- Marengo. A village in northwestern Italy, the scene of Napoleon's victory over the Austrians on June 14, 1800
- Mareotis. Mareotis is a lake in the northwestern part of Lower Egypt
- Margaret. 1—(276-279, 899)—The Weaver's wife in Book 1 of Widdowson's The Jacksons, 2—(140)—The wife of Hamilton in Boothwell, 3—(474)—A character in Scott's The Lady of the Lake, 4—(914)—Identified 5—(1070)—De Quincey's wife
- Margaret of Anjou. Queen of Henry VI, King of England (1422-61)
- Marian, Maid. See Maid Marian
- Marie Antoinette. Daughter of Emperor Francis I and Maria Theresa, of Austria. Queen of France and wife of Louis XVI, king of France (1774-92), she was executed by the Jacobins in 1793
- Marius, Marinus of Plavia Neopoli, in Palestine, a philosopher and rhetorician of the 5th century A D. He was a disciple of Plotinus
- Marius, Caius. A Roman general of the 2nd century B C. He served in the siege of Numantia, a famous city in Spain, 132 B C, under Scipio Africanus the Younger
- Mark, Mt. See St Mark
- Marlborough, Marlboro. 1—(400, 598)—John Churchill (1650-1722) Duke of Marlborough, a famous English general and statesman. He defeated the French in the Battle of Blenheim in Bavaria, in 1704. 2—(1007)—A town in Wiltshire, England. 3—(1111)—A forest near the town of Marlborough, Wiltshire
- Marlowe, Christopher Marlowe (1564-93), an English dramatist, who developed blank verse
- Marmaduke Thompson. See Thompson
- Marmion. The hero of Scott's tale Marmion
- Mars. The family name of Virgil (Publius Virgilius Maro, 70-19 B C), a famous Latin poet
- Marrs. Marr was the name of a family, murdered by the notorious John Williams in the early 19th century. See De Quincey's Postscript to On Murder Considered as One of the Fine Arts
- Mars. 1—God of War. 2—(711)—One of the planets
- Marshal Ney. See Ney
- Marston Moor. A plain in Yorkshire, England, the scene of a victory of the Parliamentary forces and Scots over the Royalists, July 2, 1644
- Martial, Marcus Valerius Martialis (1st century A D), a Latin poet, author of 14 books of epigrams
- Martin. —(1016)—Jack Martin, a prize-fighter
- Martin, M. An author of books of travels, born in the Island of Skye, west of Scotland. He died in 1719
- Martinmas. A festival in honor of St. Martin of Tours, France (4th century A D), that took the place of an old pagan festival. It was celebrated Nov. 11
- Marvel, Andrew Marvel (1621-78), a minor English poet
- Mary. 1—(158)—See note on To Mary, p. 1250a. 2—(198, 202)—Mary Campbell, see note on Thou

- Ling'ring Star, p 1215a. 4—(440)—See note on The Maid of Nodapath, p 1212b. 5—(840, 1004)—
Mary II, wife of William III, and Queen of England (1689-94)
Mary Mother, Mary Queen. —(380, 572)—The Virgin Mary, mother of Christ
Mary Queen of Scots. Mary Stuart (1542-87) She laid claim to the English throne in 1558, as the great-granddaughter of Henry VII, on the ground of Elizabeth's illegitimacy She was beheaded by Queen Elizabeth in 1587
Massons. Members of an old and extensive secret order or fraternity dating from the Middle Ages
Messinger. Philip Messinger (1583-1640), an English dramatist and poet
Matilda. —(494)—Probably Rosa Matilda, author of The Liberine, 4 vols (1807), and The Passions, 4 vols (1811)
Matthew. See note on Matthew, p 1802a
Mauchline. A small town in Ayrshire, Scotland Burns lived there eleven years
Maurice. The Rev Thomas Maurice (1754-1824), an English clergyman, scholar, and poet He wrote various works on India His History of Ancient and Modern Hindostan was severely attacked in The Edinburgh Review
Meander. See Meander
Mecca. A city in Arabia As the birthplace of Mohammed, it is a sacred city of Mohammedans, and the object of pilgrimages to Kaaba, the shrine of Mecca
Medea. An enchantress the daughter of the King of Colchis She aided her lover Jason to get the golden fleece and fled with him to Thessaly, preventing her father, who pursued them from overtaking them by attacking the sea with the limbs of her young brother She restored Jason's father Aeson, by replacing his blood with magic liquid Jason deserted her for Creusa Princess of Corinth, and Medea took vengeance upon her rival by sending her a poisoned robe she also killed her own children, set fire to the palace, and then fled to Athens
Medew. The people of an ancient kingdom, now part of Persia Medorus. Probably Medora a beautiful Moorish youth in Alciato's romance Orlando Furioso Hiselopment with Angelica causes the madness of Orlando Medusa. See Gorgon
Melnoom. The ideal lover of Persian legend For the story of 'Lelli and Melnoom' see Francis Gladwin's translation of Saadi's The Gulistan, or Rose Garden, Tale IV (London, 1865)
Melbourne House. The house of Pelton Lamb (1748-1819) Viscount Melbourne the father of William and George Lamb, cousins of Lady Byron Melpomene. A muse of tragedy, usually represented as wearing a tragic mask Melrose Abbey. The ruins of a famous monastery in Melrose, a village in Roxburghshire, Scotland The abbey was founded in 1136
Melville's Sound. Melville Bay is an inlet of north-western Greenland Memnon. Memnonian A name given to a colossal statue of Amenhotep III, an Egyptian king, who reigned about 1500 B C. See p 879b, n 1
Memphis. Of or pertaining to Memphis
Memphis. An ancient capital of Egypt, on the Lower Nile It is now in ruins Menai. A narrow strait separating the Island of Anglesey from Wales Mennander. A Greek dramatic poet who flourished in the 2nd and 3rd centuries B C Mementus. Mementus Agrippa, a Roman senator and a friend of Cornelius in Shakespeare's Coriolanus
Menteth. A district north of Loch Lomond, in Perthshire, Scotland
Merches. Same as Marches, or borders
Mercury. The herald and messenger of the gods
Merionethshire. A county in western Wales
Merlin. A famous magician in medieval romance especially in the cycle of stories dealing with King Arthur Mermaid in the Zodiac. The sign of the Virgin in the Zodiac
Merton. A village in the county of Surrey, England
Mestastano. Assumed name of Pietro Bonaventura Trapassi (1608-1782), a noted Italian poet and dramatist Methuselah. The oldest man mentioned in the Bible He lived 969 years See Genesis 5 27
Meton (5th century B C) A famous Greek astronomer.
Meuse. A river in France, Belgium, and the Netherlands
Michael. 1—(184, 617, 938, 991, 1104)—An archangel mentioned in the Bible, regarded as the leader of the host of angels By the Roman Catholic Church, he is considered as representative of the church triumphant His feast occurs on Sept 29 A noted Church of St Michael is in Coventry, a city in Warwickshire, England 2—(192)—An archangel in Paradise Lost (Book 6) sent to wage battle against Satan and his angels 3—(378)—The hero of Wordsworth's Michael Michael's Hold. —(1170)—St Michael's Mount, a lofty pyramidal rock in Mount Bay, off the coast of Cornwall, England It was once a fortified port of importance
Michelangelo. A famous Italian painter and sculptor (1475-1564)
Midas. Lord. A mythological King of Phrygia, who, upon being promised anything he might ask, asked that everything he touched might turn to gold For his decision in a musical contest between Pan and Apollo in favor of Pan Apollo changed Midas's ears into ass's ears His barber discovered them and to relieve himself of the secret, dug a hole into which he whispered, "King Midas has ass's ears," and then filled it up A reed, however, grew there and betrayed the secret by its whispers
Middle Temple. See Temple
Middleton, Thomas Farnshaw (1760-1822) An English divine He was made Bishop of Calcutta in 1814
Midgard Serpent, The. The world-serpent, hidden in the ocean, whose coils gird the whole earth
Milan. A city in northern Italy, noted for its manufactures of steel and other products
Miletus. A coast city in Caria, Asia Minor
Milky-Way. An irregular luminous band encircling the heavens, consisting of numberless stars too small to be seen separately by the naked eye
Miller. 1—(180)—Alexander Miller (d 1804), a parish preacher in Ayrshire, Scotland 2—(486)—'Joe' Miller (1684-1758), an uneducated man, noted for his many jokes These were compiled after his death, by John Mottley 3—(498)—William Miller (1760-1844), a London publisher and bookseller
Millwood. An adventurer in George Lillo's The London Merchant or the History of George Barnwell (1751)
Milman. Henry Hart Milman (1791-1869), an English clergyman and author, he was Professor of Poetry at Oxford University
Miltiades (5th century B C) A celebrated Athenian general, tyrant of Chersonesus Being unable to pay a fine of 50 talents imposed because he failed in an expedition against Paros, an island in the Ægean Sea, he was imprisoned, and died without being freed
Mincio. A river in northern Italy
Minehead. A small seaport of Somersetshire, England
Minerva. The daughter of Jupiter the goddess of invention, thought, and intelligence She was ultimately identified with the Greek goddess of wisdom, Pallas or Athena Minos. A king and lawgiver of Crete, an island in the Mediterranean, after death he was made a judge in Hades
Minster-square. The portion of a city adjacent to a monastery church
Miranda. A character in Shakespeare's The Tempest
Mirandula. Giovanni Piccolomini della Mirandula (1408-84), a young Italian nobleman of refined character and extraordinary intellect and accomplishments
Miserere. A musical setting of the 51st Psalm, beginning "Miserere mei, Domine" (Have mercy upon me, O God)
Minta. One of the Fatal Sisters
Mithridates. 1—(1068)—See Adelung 2—(1184)—King of Pontus, Asia Minor (120-63 B C) He subjugated the nations around the Black Sea, and made himself master of nearly all the Roman possessions in Asia Minor He was defeated by Lucullus in 69 B C, and by Pompey in 66 B C
Memnosyne. The goddess of memory, daughter of Heaven and Earth, and by Zeus, the mother of the Muses
Moria. A large lake of ancient Egypt
Mohammed (670-632) The founder of the Mohammedan religion

- Mon. Anglessea, an island and county of North Wales, northwest of the mainland
- Monan's rill. St Monan was a Scotch martyr of the 4th century. No stream of this name has been identified
- Monela. A name given to a brook in Glenartney forest, in the Highlands of Perthshire, Scotland
- Mont Blanc. The highest mountain of the Alps, situated on the boundary of France, Italy, and Switzerland
- Mont Cenis. A summit of the Alps between France and Italy
- Mont Saint Jean. A village near Waterloo, Belgium, which sometimes gives its name to the Battle of Waterloo, in which Napoleon was defeated by Wellington, in 1815
- Montagu. —(123)—John Montagu (1718-92), an English politician. He was Secretary of State in 1770, and first Lord of the Admiralty, 1771-82
- Montague, Lady Mary Wortley (1689-1762). An English author and letter writer
- Montague, Wortley Edward Wortley Montague (1713-76), an English author, son of Lady Mary Wortley Montague
- Montgomery. James Montgomery (1771-1854), an English poet and hymn writer, bitterly reviled by The Edinburgh Review
- Montmorenci. A river in the Province of Quebec, Canada, noted for its torrent and its waterfalls, 265 feet high, near the city of Quebec
- Montrose. James Graham (1612-50), Earl and Marquis of Montrose, a noted Scottish statesman and soldier. As a royalist supporter, he led an attack on Scotland in 1650, was captured, and executed
- Monument of Lysicrates. A celebrated monument in Athens, Greece, erected by the chorus-trainer Lysicrates as the result of a victory by his musicians in a Dionysiac festival at Athens, 335 B.C. The monument was in honor of Dionysus (Bacchus), god of wine
- Moodie. Alexander Moodie (1722-99), a Scottish clergyman at Riccarton, a small town in Ayrshire, Scotland. He was noted for his strict enforcement of law
- Moors. 1—(505, 579)—A member of the mixed Mauritanian-Arab race inhabiting Morocco or other North African states 2—(542)—Othello, in Shakespeare's Othello
- Moore Thomas Moore (1779-1852), an Irish poet. See p. 424
- Moorish. Of or pertaining to the Moors, inhabiting North African states
- Morat. A small town in Switzerland, celebrated for the victory of the forces of the republic over the invading tyrant Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy (1438-77), on June 22, 1476. Fifteen thousand men were killed in the engagement
- Moray (Murray). —(421, 454, 482)—A Scotch name common in Border warfare and poetry
- Mordecai. A Jew who accepted a position at court in order to be near his adopted daughter Esther, who had been raised to the rank of queen. Haman, the court favorite, was distressed when he came to the queen's banquet at seeing Mordecai sitting at the gate. See Esther, 3-5
- More, Dr. Henry (1614-87). An English theologian
- More, Sir Thomas (1478-1535). An English statesman and author, beheaded on a charge of treason
- Morgana. A fairy in Orlando Innamorato, an Italian romance by Bolardo (1347-94)
- Morning Post. A London newspaper started in 1772. Sir J. Mackintosh and Coleridge were among its contributors
- Moro. El Moro, the castle at Santiago harbor, Cuba. It was stormed by the English in 1762
- Morpheus. Of or pertaining to Morpheus, the son of Sleep, and god of dreams
- Morpheus. The son of Sleep, and god of dreams
- Morris. William Morris (1834-90), an English poet, decorative artist, and socialist
- Mortimer. Roger Mortimer (1287?-1330), Earl of March, a favorite of Isabella, Queen of Edward II of England
- Moscow; Muscovy. A name given to Russia, derived from Moscow, the ancient capital
- Moses. The great Hebrew prophet and lawgiver who led the Israelites out of Egypt and through the wilderness to Canaan
- Moslem. Mohammedan
- Mossiel Farm. The home of Burns in Ayrshire, Scotland
- Mount Abern. Apparently a mountain of Coleridge's imagination. Professor Lane Cooper (Mod Phil. Jan., 1906) suggests that it is a variant of
- Amara, the name of a hill in Abyssinia and the seat of a terrestrial paradise like that described in Coleridge's Kubla Khan (p. 859)
- Muzain. A public crier, in Mohammedan countries, who calls the faithful to prayer at the appointed hours
- Mulberry-Gardens. A noted London pleasure resort of the 17th century, containing a number of mulberry trees planted by James I., King of England (1603-25). The Garden occupied the present site of Buckingham Palace and Garden
- Muliber. A surname of Vulcan, the blacksmith of the gods
- Munich. A city, capital of Bavaria, in Germany
- Mul Kirk. A manufacturing town in East Ayrshire, Scotland
- Murillo. Bartolomé Esteban Murillo (1617-82), a Spanish painter, chiefly of religious subjects
- Murray. 1—(440)—James Stuart (1333-70), Earl of Murray, Regent of Scotland. He was half brother of Mary Queen of Scots. See note on Cadyow Castle, p. 1320a. 2—(488, 568, 613, 1083)—John Murray (1778-1848), a famous English publisher, founder of The Edinburgh Review. He was the publisher of Byron's works
- Muse. 1—One of the nine goddesses who preside over poetry, art, and science. Calliope, muse of epic poetry, Clio, muse of history, Erato, muse of love poetry, Euterpe, muse of lyric poetry, Melpomene, muse of tragedy, Polymnia, muse of sacred poetry, Terpsichore, muse of dancing, Thalia, muse of comedy, Urania, muse of astronomy. 2—The inspiring power of poetry
- Museum of the Capitol. A famous museum at Rome
- Musset, Alfred de (1810-57). A noted French poet, novelist, and dramatist
- Musulman. A Mohammedan
- Myrcene. An ancient city in Argolis, Greece
- Mychal. See Michael (1)
- Mysteries of Udolpho, The. A Gothic romance by Anne Radcliffe (1764-1823), an English novelist
- Nalad. One of the nymphs believed to live in lakes, rivers, springs, and fountains, and to give life to them
- Nalae. A Nalad, a river nymph
- Namur. A strongly fortified city of Belgium
- Narcissus. A beautiful youth, who, having rejected the love of Echo, is fabled to have fallen in love with his own reflection in the water, to have pined away and to have been changed into the flower which bears his name
- Naseby. A parish in Northamptonshire, England, the scene of the Battle of Naseby, in which the forces of Charles I. were defeated by the Parliamentary army in 1645
- Nash. Thomas Nash (1567-1601), an English author and satirist. He wrote The Unfortunate Traveller, or Jack Wilton
- Naxos (Naxia). An island belonging to the Cyclades group, in the Aegean Sea, southeast of Greece
- Nazareth. A city of Galilee in northeastern Palestine
- Neapolitans. Citizens of Naples, Italy
- Nelson. Horatio Nelson (1758-1805), the greatest of English naval commanders. He was killed on board his ship, in the Battle of Trafalgar, 1805. He was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral. (See p. 411)
- Nemesis. An ancient goddess of retributive justice
- Neo-Platonic. Relating to Neo-Platonism, a system of philosophy in the third century which endeavored to reconcile the teachings of Plato and Aristotle with Oriental mysticism
- Neptune; Neptunus. God of the sea, represented as bearing a trident for a scepter
- Nereids. Sea nymphs attendant upon Neptune, god of the sea
- Nero. Lucius Domitius Nero (37-68), a Roman Emperor (54-68) notorious for his profligacy and cruelties
- Ness. A promontory near Teignmouth, a seaport in Devonshire, England
- Nessus. A mythical character shot with a poisoned arrow by Hercules for making love to Hercules's wife Deianira. In compliance with the last request of Nessus, Deianira steeped her husband's shirt in the blood of Nessus, as a love charm, but the shirt poisoned Hercules, causing such agony that he killed himself
- Nestor. Counselor of the Greeks in the Trojan War
- Netherby. A village near the northern boundary of Cumberland, England
- Nether-Storey. A town in Somersetshire, England

- Neva. A river near Petrograd, Russia.
- Nevia. An island of the Leeward group, British West Indies.
- New Bastille. —(1144)—Probably a name given to the state prison.
- New Eloise. A French novel by J J Rousseau (1712-78).
- New River. —(981)—An artificial stream that brings water for the supply of the City of London.
- Newark. A manufacturing city in Nottinghamshire, England, situated on the River Trent. It contains the ruins of a 12th century castle in which King John of England died, in 1216.
- Newbury. A city in Berkshire, England, the scene of two battles between the forces of Charles I and of the Parliamentary Party, Sept., 1648, and Oct., 1644.
- Newcastle. A large manufacturing city in Northumberlandshire, England, on the River Tyne.
- Newcastle, Margaret. Margaret Cavendish (1624-78), Duchess of Newcastle, an eccentric Restoration nobility woman. She entitled her life of her husband The Life of the Thrice Noble, High, and Pleasant Prince William Cavendish and Earl of Newcastle, by the Thrice Noble, Illustrious, and Excellent Princess, Margaret Duchess of Newcastle, his Wife.
- Newland valley. A small valley in Cumberlandshire, England.
- Newman, John Henry (1801-90). An English divine and philosopher. He is the author of Lead, Kindly Light.
- Newstead Abbey. The home of Lord Byron, the poet, an estate in Nottinghamshire, England, bestowed by Henry VIII on Sir John Byron in 1558.
- Newton. 1—(154)—John Newton (1725-1807), an English clergyman, a friend of Cowper, and associated with him in writing the Olney Hymns. 2—(180)—A village in Ayrshire, Scotland, at the mouth of the River Ayr. 3—(827, 680, 912, 930, 1039, 1108)—Sir Isaac Newton (1647-1727), a celebrated English mathematician, scientist, and natural philosopher.
- Ney, Marshal. Michel Ney (1769-1815), a famous French marshal. He commanded the rear-guard in the retreat from Moscow in 1812. He was defeated by Wellington at Quatre-Bras, Belgium, June 16, 1815, and at Waterloo two days later. When summoned to capitulate, he is alleged to have said, "A marshal of France never surrenders." (See p. 1104b n. 5.)
- Nicholas, St. A noted bishop of Myra, Asia Minor, of the 4th century. He is a prominent saint of the Greek church.
- Nick. A name of the devil.
- Niger. One of the chief rivers of Africa.
- Nilus. The god of the River Nile.
- Nimrod. A grandson of Ham, a mighty hunter. See Genesis 10:8.
- Nineveh. An ancient city, the capital of Assyria, noted for its vast royal palaces.
- Niobe. A mythological character noted for her pride in her twelve children, which led her to compare herself with Leto, the wife of Zeus, who had only two. In punishment, Apollo and Artemis, Leto's children, slew Niobe's children, and Niobe was changed by Zeus into a rock, and in that form she continued to weep her loss.
- Nithdale. A dale along the River Nith in Dumfriesshire, Scotland.
- Noah. A patriarch who built an ark to save his family and representatives of all living creatures at the time of the Flood. See Genesis, 8-10.
- Nominalis Umbra. See p. 623a, n. 3.
- Norfolk. A county on the east coast of England.
- Norfolk, Duke of. Thomas Howard (1473-1544), an English general, diplomat, and statesman.
- Norfolk Island. An island in the South Pacific used by England as a penal colony.
- Norman. Pertaining to Normandy, in northern France. The Norman Conquest was the subjugation of England by William of Normandy, in the 11th century.
- Norris, Daniel (1751-1827). A friend of Lamb. For many years he was Sub-Treasurer and Librarian of the Inner Temple, London. See Temple.
- Northumberland; Northumbria. A northern county of England.
- Norton, Richard. The head of a 16th century English family loyal to Mary Queen of Scots.
- Nottingham. An east-central county in England. In the western part is Sherwood Forest, the haunt of Robin Hood and his followers.
- Notus. The south wind.
- Nox. The goddess of night.
- Nubian. A native of Nubia, a region in eastern Africa.
- Nucua. Joseph Nutt, an 18th century apothecary at Hinckley, a town in Leicestershire, England.
- Numa. Numa Pompilius, the legendary second King of Rome (715-672 B C), and reputed founder of many Roman institutions.
- Numantia. A famous ancient city in Spain, taken and destroyed by the Romans in 133 B C.
- Numidian. Of Numidia, an ancient country of North Africa, corresponding to modern Algeria.
- Nymphs. Inferior divinities of nature represented as beautiful maidens dwelling in the mountains, forests, meadows, waters, etc.
- Nysa. In ancient geography, the birthplace of Bacchus. Of several cities so named, the chief city was in Caria, Asia Minor.
- Oban's bay. A beautiful bay on the west coast of Argyllshire, Scotland.
- Oberon. The king of the fairies.
- Ocean Isle. England.
- Oceanus. The god of the stream Oceanus, believed to encircle the earth.
- Octavius. Augustus Caesar, the first Roman emperor (81 B C-14 A D).
- Odin. The supreme deity of Scandinavian mythology, same as Woden.
- Odysseus. Ulysses, King of Ithaca, one of the Greek heroes in the Trojan War. He is a leading character in Homer's Iliad, and the hero of Homer's Odyssey. He was famed for his wisdom and craftiness.
- Odyssey. An epic poem by Homer, recounting the adventures of Odysseus (Ulysses), one of the Greek heroes of the Trojan War.
- Edipus. A legendary king of Thebes, an ancient city of Boeotia, Greece. See Laius.
- Olympian. Inhabiting Olympus.
- Olympians. The gods who were said to inhabit Mt. Olympus.
- Olympus. A famous mountain in Thessaly, Greece, the home of the gods. It is often celebrated in poetry.
- Omphale. A queen of Lydia, Asia Minor, whom Hercules was compelled to serve for three years, wearing female apparel and spinning with the maids, while she wore his lion skin.
- O'Neill, Miss. Eliza O'Neill (1780-1872), a noted Irish tragic actress.
- Onondaga. A tribe of North American Indians whose chief seat was in the vicinity of Lake Onondaga, New York.
- Ophelia. A character in Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- Oporto. A district in Portugal.
- Ops. The goddess of agriculture, the harvest, and plenty.
- Oran, St. (6th century A D). A friend and follower of St. Columba (521-97), a Celtic missionary in Scotland. According to legend, Oran consented to be buried alive in order to propitiate certain demons of the soil who hindered Columba in building a chapel. A chapel and a cemetery in Icolmkill, an island west of Scotland, were named after him.
- Oreads. Mountain nymphs.
- Orestes. A son of the Greek king Agamemnon and Clytemnestra who slew his mother and her lover Aegisthus, in revenge for their murder of Agamemnon.
- Orford, Lord. Horace Walpole (1717-97), 4th Earl of Orford, an English author. See p. 100.
- Orion. A famous hunter of giant stature, beloved by the goddess Artemis, but accidentally slain by her, and after his death transformed into a constellation.
- Orkney. An island group north of Scotland.
- Orlando Furioso. A romance by Ariosto (1474-1533), a famous Italian poet.
- Orpheus. Resembling Orpheus, or possessing the quality of his lyre.
- Orpheus. A mythological poet and musician whose lyre could charm beasts and move trees and stones. When his wife Eurydice died, Orpheus descended to the lower world and gained permission from Pluto to lead her back to the upper world on condition that he should not look back at her until they had reached the upper air. Orpheus broke the condition, and Eurydice vanished.
- Ortygian. Of Ortygia, an ancient island near Sicily.
- Oscar. —(72)—The name of a warrior in Macpherson's Osian.

- Osirian. Belonging or relating to Osiris, the most popular of Egyptian gods.
- Osman. The name of a line of Turkish sultans tracing to Osman I, who founded the Ottoman Empire about 1300.
- Osman Bey. The nobleman Osman.
- Osman, 1—A semi-tabulous Scottish bard of the 3rd century, said to be the son of Fingal, King of Morven. 2—A pretended translation of the poems of Ossian, published by James Macpherson in 1763. See p 86.
- Ostend. A noted seaport of Belgium.
- Oswestry. A town in Shropshire, England.
- Otaheite. Tahiti, the principal island of the Society Archipelago in the South Pacific Ocean.
- Othello. The chief character in Shakspeare's Othello.
- Otter. A river in Devonshire, England.
- Ottomite. A native of Turkey.
- Otway. Thomas Otway (1651-85), an English tragic dramatist.
- Ouse. A small river in Sussex county, England.
- Ovid. Publius Ovidius Nasco (43 B.C.-17 A.D.), a famous Roman poet. He was banished by Augustus and died in exile.
- Oxford. The county town of Oxfordshire, England, the seat of Oxford University.
- Oxonian. Of or pertaining to Oxford, England, or its university.
- Oxus. Amu-Daria, a river in central Asia.
- Pacha. Same as Pasha.
- Padua. The capital of Padua province, Italy, seat of the University of Padua.
- Paine, Tom. Thomas Paine (1737-1809), an English political writer, author of Common Sense and The Rights of Man.
- Paisley. A manufacturing town in the county of Renfrew, Scotland.
- Palestine. A country in southwestern Syria. Its capital is Jerusalem.
- Paley. William Paley (1743-1805), an English orthodox theologian and philosopher.
- Palladian. Introduced by or in the pompous Renaissance style of Andrea Palladio (1518-80), an Italian architect and author who had much influence in shaping the modern Italian school of architecture.
- Pallas. Pallas Athena, goddess of wisdom and war.
- Palm. Johann Philipp Palm (1766-1800), a German publisher, shot because of the publication of a pamphlet against Napoleon.
- Palm Sunday. The Sunday before Easter.
- Palmer. John Palmer (1742-1818), noted for his reform in the mail service of England.
- Palmerston. John Temple Palmerston (1784-1805), an English statesman, the enemy of slavery, injustice, and oppression. In private life his personality made his opponents forget their differences.
- Pan. An Arcadian woodland spirit and god of hills and woods, flocks and herds. He is represented as horned goat-footed, playing on his pipes, and as exciting sudden fear. It was because they believed him to have caused the panic among the Persians at Marathon that the Athenians instituted his worship on the Acropolis.
- Panama, Bay of. The Gulf of Panama on the west coast of Panama.
- Pandion. An early king of Athens.
- Pandora. A beautiful but deceitful woman sent to earth by the gods to bring misery upon the human race in revenge for Prometheus's theft of fire from heaven. Some say that she brought with her a box from which escaped all human ills, hope alone remaining. Others say that she brought blessings all of which, when she opened the box, escaped and departed excepting hope.
- Pantheists. Believers in pantheism, a doctrine which identifies the universe as a whole and God.
- Pantheon. 1—(299, 1080)—A building in Oxford Street, London, formerly a concert hall. 2—(397-1121)—A circular temple at Rome with a fine Corinthian portico and a great domed roof, originally built by Agrippa, 27 B.C. In its present form it represents the building by Hadrian.
- Paphian. Of or belonging to Paphos.
- Paphos. Paphos was an ancient city on the island of Cyprus containing a temple of Aphrodite, goddess of love and beauty.
- Parcae. The three Fates of the Greeks. See Fates.
- Paros. A seaport of Turkey, in Epirus on a rocky height opposite the island of Paxos.
- Pariahs. See p 1086b, n 1.
- Parian. Of or pertaining to Paros, an island in the Aegean sea, noted for its white marble.
- Parkhead. George Douglas of Parkhead, a staunch supporter of Robert Murray of Scotland.
- Parnassus. A mountain range in Boeotia, Greece, celebrated as the haunt of the Muses of poetry and music.
- Paroles. A son of Pericles.
- Parry, Captain. Sir Edward Parry (1790-1855). He made unsuccessful attempts to find the Northwest Passage in 1819, 1821, and later. He passed the winter of 1819 on Melville Island, in the Arctic Ocean.
- Parthenon. The official temple of Pallas in Athens.
- Parthenope. One of the sirens who, unable to charm Ulysses by her singing, cast herself into the sea.
- Parthians. People of an ancient kingdom, now part of Persia.
- Pasha. The title of a high official or prince in Turkey and Egypt.
- Pastorella. A character in Spenser's The Faerie Queene, VI, 2.
- Paswan. Pasawan Oglou (1758-1807), a famous rebel of Widdin, a department in northwestern Bulgaria.
- Patmos. An island of the Sporades, off the west coast of Asia Minor, belonging to Turkey.
- Paul and Virginia. A French story by Bernardin de Saint Pierre (1737-1814).
- Paul Potter. See Potter.
- Paul, St. 1—(302, 610, 634, 1094)—An apostle of the Gentiles, who was called, before his conversion, Saul of Tarsus. 2—Sir Paul (1146) and Tully St Paul (1149) are unidentified.
- Paullet. William Paullet, Marquis of Winchester, an English courtier of the 16th century.
- Paulus. (d. 100 B.C.) A noted Roman general and consul.
- Pavlim. Mohammedan.
- Peacock. Thomas Love Peacock (1791-1866), an English novelist and poet. See p 898.
- Peelies. The Rev William Peablis minister at Newton-on-Ayr Ayrshire, Scotland.
- Peele Castle. A castle on the Isle of Man west of England.
- Pegasus. A winged horse fabled to have sprung from the body of Medusa at her death. With a blow of his foot he caused Hippocrene the inspiring fountain of the Muses, to spring from Mount Helicon. Hence he is associated with poetic inspiration.
- Peggy. A conventional name for a Scottish shepherdess.
- Pelasgians. The Pelasgians were prehistoric inhabitants of Greece.
- Peleus. A king of Thessaly, father of Achilles.
- Pellion. A mountain of Thessaly, Greece, famous in mythology.
- Pembroke Hall. A college of Cambridge University, Cambridge, England.
- Pendragon. An ancient British chief, the father of King Arthur.
- Peneus. A river in Arcadia, Greece.
- Pennant. Thomas Pennant (1726-98), an English naturalist and antiquary.
- Pentameron. The. See note on The Pentameron, p 1305a.
- Pentland. A range of hills in the counties of Peebles, Lanark and Edinburgh Scotland.
- Pentonville. A district in the north central part of London.
- Peona. The sister of Endymion in Keats's Endymion.
- Peraea. Of Pera, a city in Greece, northeast of Corinth.
- Percy. Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland a distinguished English military leader of the early 15th century.
- Perdita. A character in Shakspeare's The Winter's Tale.
- Peri. An imaginary being like a fairy, originally regarded as evil, but later regarded as benevolent and beautiful.
- Pericles. A celebrated Athenian statesman of the 5th century B.C. See Aspasia.
- Perla. See Peri.
- Perry. John Perry, steward at Christ's Hospital from 1761 to 1785.
- Perré. See Perry.
- Perseus. A famous hero of classical mythology.
- Perrth. The capital of Perthshire Scotland.
- Peter Bell. A poetical tale by Wordsworth (1819). It was burlesqued by Shelley in Peter Bell the Third.
- Peter, St. One of the twelve apostles.
- Peter Wilkins. The Life and Adventures of Peter Wilkins (1750), a grotesque romance by Robert Paltock.

- Peterborough. A city in the counties of Northampton and Huntingdon, England. It is noted for the famous Cathedral of Peterborough.
- Petra. An ancient city in the rocky region of north-western Arabia.
- Petrarch; Petrarch. A famous Italian poet of the 14th century.
- Petroneus Arbiter. A Roman satirist of the 1st century A D. He arranged the entertainments of Nero, and hence was known as arbiter elegans.
- Phaedrus. A Latin writer of fables in the 1st century A D. He was originally a slave.
- Phaeton. A mythical son of Helios, the sun god. He was allowed to guide for one day the chariot of the sun, he lost control of the steeds, was killed by Jupiter with a thunderbolt, and fell into the River Po.
- Pharaoh(s). A line of kings of ancient Egypt, under whom the Exodus took place.
- Pharsalia. A district of Thessaly, ancient Greece.
- Phidias. Of or resembling Phidias.
- Phidias. A celebrated Greek sculptor of the 5th century B C.
- Phigalia. An ancient city of Greece, modern Pavlita in Messenia.
- Philip. Philip II (382-336 B C), King of Macedon, and father of Alexander the Great.
- Philippi. An ancient city of Macedon, the scene of the victory of Octavius and Antony over Brutus and Cassius, 42 B C.
- Phyllis. See Phyllis.
- Phylmel, Philomela. The nightingale. Philomela, daughter of Pandion, King of Athens, was violated and deprived of her tongue by Tereus, the husband of her sister Procne. In revenge, the sisters served up Tereus's own son to Tereus as a meal and fled. As Tereus pursued them, all three were turned into birds. Philomela into a swallow, Procne into a nightingale, Tereus into a hawk. According to Ovid, Philomela was turned into a nightingale.
- Phoebe. 1—(81)—A poetic name for a shepherdess or rustic maiden. 2—(252)—A character in Shakespeare's As You Like It. 3—(1807-1024)—A surname of Diana, goddess of the moon. See Diana.
- Phoebus. An epithet of Apollo. See Apollo.
- Phoenicia. An ancient country in Asia Minor.
- Phorus. The old man of the sea in classic mythology, the father of the Gorgons and the Hesperides.
- Phyllis. A poetic name for a shepherdess or rustic maiden.
- Phylian Jove. Jupiter Phytius, the protector of exiles.
- Pieradilly. The great thoroughfare in London between Hyde Park Corner and the Haymarket.
- Pichegru. Charles Pichegru (1761-1804), a distinguished French general, said to have been assassinated in prison because he engaged in a conspiracy against Napoleon in 1803-04.
- Pictish. Scottish. The Picts were an early race inhabiting the Highlands of Scotland. They carried on border wars with the Romans.
- Piedmont. A province in northern Italy.
- Pierre. The hero of Thomas Otway's tragedy Venue Piracida (1682). He was a favorite character of great actors. Byron was an admirer of Otway.
- Pigmies. An African race of dwarfs.
- Pigott, Jack. Peter George Patmore (1780-1835), an active journalist and writer in London, and an intimate friend of Hazlitt and Lamb.
- Pilate. A Roman governor of Judea of the 1st century A D. When Christ was tried before him, Pilate allowed him to be condemned and washed his own hands as symbolical of innocence of guilt. See Matthew, 27-24.
- Pilgrim's Progress. A religious allegory by John Bunyan (1628-88).
- Pillans. James Pillans (1778-1864), a Scottish educational reformer, at one time a private tutor at Eton, later, Professor of Humanity at Edinburgh University. He was the supposed author of an unfriendly review of a translation of Juvenal, by his friend Francis Hodgson (1781-1852). The review was published in The Edinburgh Review, April, 1808. Pillans was an intimate friend of Byron.
- Pindar. (5th century B C). A celebrated Greek lyric poet.
- Pindus. A range of mountains in Greece between Thessaly and Epirus.
- Pious. Mrs Pious (Eather Lynch Salisbury, 1780-1821), an English author.
- Piræus. The seaport of Athens.
- Piranesi. Giovanni Battista Piranesi (1720-78), an Italian engraver, who was especially interested in restoring in engravings the ruined architecture of Rome.
- Pisa. The capital of the province of Pisa, Italy.
- Piscator. A character in Walton's The Complete Angler (1653).
- Plaisistrates. (6th century B C). A tyrant of Athens.
- Plato. Ancient. See p 1018b, n 4.
- Pitt. William Pitt (1759-1806), a celebrated English statesman and orator. He was premier, 1760-68.
- Plancus. Lucius Plancus, a profligate Roman politician, who was a partisan of Caesar in the Civil War. He was consul in 42 B C.
- Plato. (427-347 B C). A celebrated Greek philosopher.
- Pleiad. One of a group of small stars in the constellation Taurus.
- Plinlimmon. A mountain in Montgomeryshire and Cardiganshire, Wales.
- Pliny. Caius Plinius Secundus (23-79), a celebrated Roman naturalist.
- Plotinus. (3rd century A D). A Greek philosopher who founded the Neo-Platonic school of philosophy, a system of refined Platonic doctrines combined with Oriental mysticism.
- Plumer. Richard Plumer, deputy-secretary in the South-Sea House in 1800.
- Plutarch. (1st century A D). A famous Greek historian, celebrated as the author of a number of Lives of Greeks and Romans.
- Pluto. In Roman mythology, the god of the infernal regions.
- Po. The largest river of Italy. It empties into the Adriatic Sea.
- Poitiers. Poitiers, the capital of the department of Vienne, France, the scene of an English victory over the French in 1356.
- Pollux. See Caster.
- Polonius. The father of Ophelia, and the king's chamberlain, in Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- Poltava. Capital of the government of Pultowa, Russia, where the Russians defeated the Swedes in 1709.
- Polybius. (204-125 B C). A celebrated Greek historian.
- Polycrates. Tyrant of Samos (536-522 B C). He was a patron of literature and art.
- Polypheus. In Homer's Odyssey, the one-eyed giant who imprisoned Ulysses.
- Pomona. In Roman mythology, the goddess of fruit-trees.
- Pompell. An ancient city of Italy, buried by an eruption from Mt Vesuvius in 79 A D.
- Pompey. Cneius Pompeius Magnus (106-48 B C), a famous Roman general.
- Pontus. An ancient country in Asia Minor south of the Black Sea.
- Poole, Tom. (1765-1837). A wealthy tanner Coleridge's friend, correspondent and patron, who lived at Stowey. He was noted for his kindness to authors.
- Pope. Alexander Pope (1688-1744), a famous English poet.
- Porphyron. In Greek mythology the fire-king of the giants.
- Portland. William Henry (and his son Bentinck) (1758-1800), Duke of Portland, an English Whig statesman, prime minister, 1783 and 1807-08.
- Portsmouth. A seaport in Hampshire, England, situated on the English Channel.
- Poseidon. In Greek mythology, god of the sea and brother of Zeus.
- Posillipo. A hill west of Naples, Italy.
- Potiphar. One of Pharaoh's officers who bought Joseph.
- Potter's Bar. A village in Hertfordshire, England.
- Potters, Paul. Paintings by Paul Potter (1625-54), a noted Dutch painter of landscapes and cattle.
- Poule. St Paul.
- Poussin. Gaspard Poussin (1613-75), a noted Italian painter.
- Powle, Seyneta. See Seyneta Powle.
- Powley. The Reverend George Croly, D D. (1780-1800) at one time a dramatic critic of The London Times.
- Prague. The capital of Bohemia, Austria, seat of a university founded by Charles IV in 1347.
- Pratt. Charles Pratt (1718-94), Chief Justice and Lord Chancellor of England.
- Praxitelean. Of or relating to Praxiteles.
- Praxiteles. (4th century B C). A Greek sculptor, noted for the grace and naturalness of his feminine figures.

- Pre-adamite kings. Seventy-two kings or sultans, each said to govern a distinct species of rational beings before the existence of Adam.
- Preston. 1—(54)—Prestonpans, a small town in Haddingtonshire, Scotland, the scene of a Jacobite victory over the English in 1745. 2—(1120)—A city in Lancashire, England, noted as an industrial center.
- Preston Mill. —(475)—A rustic village in Dumfriesshire, Scotland.
- Prism. Legendary King of Troy, a city of Asia Minor.
- Priapus. The god of fruitfulness and procreative power, of horticulture and vine-growing.
- Prince Eugene. See Eugene.
- Prior. Matthew Prior (1664-1721), an English diplomat, and lyric and humorous poet.
- Prühl. A character in Venue Preserved, a tragedy by Thomas Otway (1651-85).
- Precious (412-485). A Greek philosopher and religious commentator.
- Promethæan. Of or pertaining to Prometheus.
- Prometheus. In Greek mythology, regarded as the founder of civilisation, and the benefactor of mankind. For an act of deception by Prometheus, Zeus denied mankind the use of fire, but Prometheus stole fire from heaven and carried it to earth in a hollow tube. For this act he was chained, by order of Zeus, on Mt. Caucasus, where a vulture fed daily upon his liver, which grew again at night. The vulture was finally slain by Hercules, and Prometheus released.
- Prospic. The present Sea of Marmora, between European and Asiatic Turkey. It is not subject to tides.
- Proserpina, Proserpine. The wife of Pluto, and queen of the lower regions. While gathering flowers in the Valley of Enna, Sicily, she was carried off by Pluto. Zeus allowed her to spend half of her time on earth with her mother, Ceres.
- Prospero. In Shakespeare's The Tempest, the banished Duke of Milan. He is shipwrecked on an island, where he works enchantments, and after sixteen years of exile raises a storm to shipwreck the usurper of his rightful title.
- Protagoras (6th century B C). A famous Greek philosopher.
- Protean. Pertaining to or characteristic of Proteus.
- Proteus. A sea god in the service of Neptune, god of the sea. Proteus had the power of assuming different shapes.
- Prowse, Captain. William Prowse (1752?-1826). A famous English naval commander and rear-admiral.
- Fryocles. A character in Sir Philip Sidney's pastoral romance Arcadia (1690).
- Paelius, Michael. Michael Constantinus Paelius (11th century). A celebrated Greek writer and scholar. He was born in Constantinople.
- Psyche. In classical mythology, the name given to a personified soul. She was beloved by Eros, god of love. She is represented in art as a maiden with the wings of a butterfly.
- Ptolemean. Of Ptolemy (2nd century A D), a celebrated Egyptian astronomer and mathematician.
- Pulci, Luigi Pulci (1432-87), an Italian romantic poet.
- Pultowa. See Poltava.
- Punic War, Second (218-201 B C). A war waged between Carthage and Rome. By the peace Carthage was forced to cede her possessions in Spain and the Mediterranean, and to pay a heavy tribute.
- Pye. Henry James Pye (1745-1813). A minor English poet.
- Pygmalion. In Greek legend, a sculptor, King of Cyprus, who fell in love with a statue he had carved and which came to life.
- Pyrene. A mountain range between Spain and France.
- Pyrrhic. Pertaining to Pyrrhus (318?-272 B C), King of Epirus, Greece.
- Pyrrho (360-270 B C). A Greek skeptic and philosopher.
- Pythagorean. Referring to Pythagoras (6th century B C), a Greek philosopher of Samos, an island west of Asia Minor.
- Pythian. Referring to Python.
- Python. In classical mythology, a sooth-saying spirit or demon. The serpent Python delivered oracles at Delphi before the coming of Apollo, who slew it.
- Quarles. John Quarles (1624-65), a minor English poet.
- Quarterly. Quarterly Review, The. A periodical started in 1809 in opposition to The Edinburgh Review, the organ of the Whig party. William Gifford was the first editor.
- Quatre-Bras. A place in Belgium, near Brussels. It was the scene of a battle between the French under Ney and the Allies under Wellington, in 1815. Ney was forced to retreat.
- Queen Beas. See Beas.
- Queen of Numbers. The goddess of poetry.
- Queen of Scots. Mary Stuart (1542-87), who was beheaded by Queen Elizabeth.
- Quixotic. Resembling Don Quixote, an adventurous knight, the hero of Don Quixote, a Spanish romance by Cervantes (1547-1616).
- Racer Jess. Janet Gibson, the half-witted daughter of Mrs. Gibson or "Poodle Nannie", being fleet of foot, she often ran errands.
- Rachel. In the Old Testament, the wife of Jacob.
- Radcliffe. Same as Radcliffe.
- Radcliffe. Mrs. Anne Radcliffe (1764-1823), a popular English romantic novelist.
- Radical. A member of a political party holding the most progressive views, opposed to conservative.
- Ragusan. Of Ragusa, a seaport of Dalmatia, Austria-Hungary, situated on the Adriatic.
- Rajah. A Hindu prince in a tribal state in India.
- Ralph. James Ralph, a minor English poet of the eighteenth century.
- Rama. A place near ancient Bethlehem, Judea.
- Ramsay. Allan Ramsay (1686-1768), a Scottish poet. See p. 7.
- Randall's, Jack. A tavern, known as "The Hole in the Wall," in Chancery Lane, London, kept by Jack Randall, a noted pugilist.
- Raphael (1483-1520). A noted Italian painter.
- Rapp, General. Count Jean Rapp (1772-1821), a noted French general who accompanied Napoleon on the march to Moscow.
- Ratcliffe Highway. A public thoroughfare in a disreputable quarter of eastern or nautical London.
- Ravenna. A city and province of Italy.
- Ravensheuch, Castle. A large castle on the Firth of Forth, Fifeshire, Scotland. It was given to William St. Clair by James III in 1471.
- Reading. A city in Berkshire, England.
- Rebecca, Rebekah. The wife of the patriarch Isaac, and mother of Jacob and Esau.
- Red Cross Knight. A character in Spenser's The Faerie Queene (Bk. 1), who personifies St. George, patron saint of England, and typifies Christian holiness.
- Red Rowan. "Red Rowy Forster," one of the rescuers of Kilmont Willie. He lived about 1550.
- Red Sea. An inland sea between Egypt and Arabia, joined to the Mediterranean by the Suez Canal.
- Redi. Francesco Redi (1626-95) an Italian poet. Lander uses the name (970) for himself.
- Reform Bill. An electoral reform bill passed by the British Parliament in 1832 for the correction and extension of the suffrage.
- Reign of Terror, The. In French history that period of the first revolution (1793-94) when the faction in power recklessly executed persons obnoxious to their measures.
- Religio Medici. A religious treatise by Sir Thomas Browne (1605-82), an English physician and author.
- Rembrandt (1606-69). A celebrated Dutch painter.
- Reni, Guido (1675-1642). An Italian painter.
- Ree-cross. A fragment of an old cross on the summit of Stanmore, a ridge which divides the mountains of the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland, England. The cross was originally intended as a landmark.
- Reynolds, J. H. See note on Keats's Letters, p. 1293b.
- Reynolds. Sir Joshua Reynolds (1723-92). An English portrait-painter.
- Rhadamanthus. A son of Zeus, and a judge in Hades.
- Rhaetian. Of or pertaining to ancient Rhaetia, a province of the Roman Empire.
- Rhen. See Rhine.
- Rhine. The chief river of Germany.
- Rhodes. An island in the Aegean Sea, southwest of Asia Minor.
- Rhone. A river in Switzerland and France.
- Rhymes on Blenheim. The Battle of Blenheim. See p. 400.
- Rialto. A bridge over the Grand Canal, in Venice, Italy. Byron uses the word (542) figuratively for Venetian commerce.

- Rice. James Rice, a London solicitor of the early 19th century, a friend of Keats and J. H. Reynolds.
- Richard, English. Richard I, surnamed "The Lion-Hearted," King of England (1189-99).
- Richard I. King of England (1189-99).
- Richard II. King of England (1377-99).
- Richard III. 1—King of England (1483-85). 2—(1525)—King of England in Shakespeare's Richard III.
- Richards. George Richards (1767-1837), author of a poem, Aboriginal Britain, and a governor of Christ's Hospital.
- Richardson. Samuel Richardson (1689-1761), an English novelist.
- Richmond. 1—(465, 491)—A town in the county of Surrey, England. It is built on a hill. 2—(980)—Charles Lennox (1735-1806), 3rd Duke of Richmond, an English politician. 3—(1016)—Bill Richmond, a veteran colored boxing teacher of the early 19th century.
- Riminal. See note on The History of Rimini, p. 1276b.
- Rion. Captain Edward Rion, commander of the frigates and smaller craft in the Battle of Copenhagen, April 2, 1801. He was killed in that battle.
- Rob Roy (Red Rob). Robert McGregor (1671-1784), a Scotch freebooter and outlaw. He took the name of Campbell after he was outlawed, in 1712.
- Robbers, The. A German drama by Schiller (1750-1805).
- Robert. The husband of Margaret in Wordsworth's The Excursion.
- Robert Boyle. A story by W. R. Chetwood, an 18th century English dramatist.
- Robin Good-fellow. A merry and mischievous sprite of folk-lore.
- Robin Hood. A legendary medieval hero in England, celebrated as a bold, chivalrous, and generous outlaw.
- Robinson Crusoe. A novel of adventure by Daniel Defoe (1661-1731).
- Rockingham. Charles Wentworth (1730-82), Marquis of Rockingham, Prime Minister of England (1755-60).
- Roderic. Said to have been Prince of all Wales in the 10th century.
- Roderick Random. A novel by Tobias Smollett (1721-71), a British novelist.
- Rogers. Samuel Rogers (1763-1835), an English poet. See p. 207.
- Roland de Vaux. See Tryermaine.
- Roméo. The lover of Juliet in Shakespeare's Roméo and Juliet.
- Romilly. Sir Samuel Romilly (1757-1818). An English lawyer and philanthropist.
- Rosa. Salvator Rosa (1615-78) a famous Italian painter of history, landscapes, and battles. He was partial to desolate, wild, and romantic scenery.
- Rosalind. A character in Shakespeare's As You Like It.
- Rosamond's Pond. A pond in the southwest corner of St James's Park, London, it was the scene of many suicides of unhappy lovers, before it was filled up in 1770.
- Roscoe. Mr. William Roscoe (1758-1831), historian, banker, and Whig Member of Parliament (1806-07), a strong advocate of peace with France.
- Rosenberg. Mount Rosenberg, a mountain in Switzerland. A landslide from it buried the village of Goldau in 1803, killing over 450 persons.
- Rosencrans. A courtier in Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- Roses, Wars of the. In English history, the prolonged armed struggle between the rival houses of Lancaster and York, beginning about 1455 and ending in 1485, so called from the red rose and the white rose, badges, respectively, of the followers of the two families.
- Roslin. The family seat of the St. Clairs near Hawthornden, in the county of Edinburgh. Scotland. Roslin Castle stands on a woody bank of the North Esk River. Wordsworth and his sister Dorothy visited it in 1803. For the account of the visit and a description of the scenery, see Dorothy Wordsworth's Recollections of a Tour Made in Scotland, Sept. 17, 1803.
- Ross-dhu. A valley on the western border of Loch Lomond, Dumbartonshire, Scotland.
- Rotherham. Edward Rotherham (1753 ? -1830), an English naval captain.
- Rothschild, Baron. Nathan Meyer Rothschild (1777-1836), a rich financier in London, founder of the English branch of the banking house of Rothschild.
- Roumelia. Rumelia, a name applied to the eastern portion of the Turkish dominions in Europe.
- Rousseau. Jean Jacques Rousseau (1712-78), a celebrated Swiss-French philosopher and writer on educational subjects.
- Rowe. Mr. A Unitarian minister at Shrewsbury, later at Bristol, Somersetshire, England, in the early nineteenth century.
- Rowe, Mrs. Elizabeth Rowe (1674-1787), daughter of a Dissenting minister in Somersetshire, England, author of a number of poems and treatises.
- Rowley. Thomas. A fictitious priest of Bristol, invented by Chatterton.
- Rowley, William. An English dramatist of the early 17th century.
- Rowley Powley. See Powley.
- Rubens. Peter Paul Rubens (1577-1640), a Flemish painter.
- Rudesheimer. A famous Rhenish wine named after Rudesheim, a town in Prussia, in which it was made.
- Russel, Lord John (1792-1878). A famous English statesman and author.
- Russell. Black John Russell (1740?-1817), a minister in Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, Scotland. He was a Calvinist of the steepest type.
- Ruth. A Moabite woman who was married to Boaz. Her story is the subject of the book of Ruth.
- Rylstone. The property and residence of the Nortons, a 16th century English family loyal to Mary Queen of Scots.
- Rymer. Thomas Rymer (c1641-1718), a noted English antiquary and critic.
- S. T. C. Samuel Taylor Coleridge.
- Sackville. The family name of the English noble family of Dorset.
- Sadi (c1190-1291). A celebrated Persian poet and moralist.
- Saint Alban's. A cathedral city in Hertfordshire, England.
- St. Ann. A river of Quebec, which empties into the St. Lawrence.
- St. Augustine. See Augustine.
- St. Bartholomew. One of the twelve apostles.
- St. Bruno. See Bruno, St.
- St. Valre. A noted Norman family which settled in Scotland in the 11th century.
- Saint Fillan. See Fillan, Saint.
- St. George. See George, St.
- Saint Hubert. See Hubert.
- St. Helena. An island in the South Atlantic belonging to Great Britain.
- St. John. 1—See John, St. 2—See Bollingbroke.
- St. John, Henry. See Bollingbroke.
- St. Kite. An abbreviation for St. Christopher, an island in the British West Indies.
- St. Leon. St. Leon, a novel by William Godwin (1756-1836), written in 1799.
- St. Mark. 1—(212)—St. Mark's Square, the principal square in Venice. It contains St. Mark's Church, near it are the Ducal Palace, the Bridge of Sighs, etc. 2—(542)—St. Mark's Church, a famous Venetian basilica, the most superb piece of architectural coloring in the world. 3—(848)—See note on The Eve of St. Mark, p. 1292b.
- St. Martin's-le-Grand. A monastery and church formerly in London, dating from very early times.
- St. Mary's Lake. A lake at the source of the River Yarrow in Selkirkshire, Scotland.
- St. Maurice. An abbey in the town of St. Maurice, Switzerland, it was founded in the 6th century.
- St. Michael. See Michael (1).
- St. Neots. A town in Huntingdonshire, England.
- St. Nicholas. See Nicholas.
- St. Oran. See Oran.
- St. Paul. See Paul, St.
- St. Peter. See Peter, St.
- St. Peter's Field. The scene of the Manchester massacre, Manchester, England, August 16, 1819.
- St. Preux. A character in Rousseau's La Nouvelle Héloïse.
- St. Sebastian. A seaport on the north coast of Spain.
- St. Vincent, Cape. The southwest extremity of Portugal.
- Sakelde. Deputy to Lord Scroop, the warden of the West-Marches of England, in the late 16th century.
- Saladin. (1137-93). Sultan of Egypt and Syria, he defended Acre for two years against the Crusaders.
- Salamanca. A famous British victory over the French and Spanish, fought in the province of Salamanca, western Spain, in 1812.
- Salamis. An island of Greece in the Gulf of Egina, west of Athens.
- Salem. An ancient name of Jerusalem.

- Salisbury. A town in Wiltshire, England
Salisbury Plain. A region in Wiltshire, England. It contains Stonehenge, a famous prehistoric ruin
- Salt, Samuel (d. 1792). A friend of the Lambs. He was instrumental in getting Charles Lamb into Christ's Hospital and into the East India House. He gave Charles and Mary Lamb the freedom of his library
- Samarah. In his notes on Vathek, Henley says that Samarah is a city of Babylonia, supposed to have stood on the site where Nimrod erected his tower
- Samarand. A city of Turkestan. It is noted for its silver and gold wares, leather goods, silks, wine, and pottery
- Samlan. Of or relating to the Island of Samos
- Samos. An Island in the Ægean Sea, west of Asia Minor
- Samson Agonistes. A drama by Milton
- Sammuel. A Hebrew judge and prophet
- San Benito. The yellow garment worn by persons condemned by the Spanish Inquisition. The name is derived from the robes worn by members of the order of St. Benedict, founded about 529
- Sanche. The ignorant but clever squire in the Spanish romance Don Quixote by Cervantes (1547-1616)
- Handham. 1—A town on the Isle of Wight, south of England. 2—(1942)—An imaginary residence
- Mangrida. One of the Fatal Sisters
- Sappho (7th century B.C.). A Greek lyric poetess of Lesbos, she was known as the Tenth Muse
- Saracen. In general, a Mohammedan or other enemy of medieval Christians
- Sarmatia. The ancient name of Poland
- Saturn. A Roman deity, supposed to have ruled in the golden age. He was identified with the Greek Cronus, father and predecessor of Zeus
- Saturnalia. In Roman antiquity, the annual festival of Saturn held at Rome in mid-December, a form of harvest-home, an occasion of riotous indulgence
- Saturnian. Pertaining to the god Saturn, hence, characterized by simplicity, virtue, and happiness
- Saturus. Same as Saturn
- Satyr. In Greek mythology, woodland deities in the train of Dionysus, god of wine; they are depicted as shy creatures with goat-like ears, tails, and horns, and delighting in music and revelry
- Saul. First king of the Hebrews (1055-1033 B.C.)
- Savoy. A former duchy, now divided into the departments of Savoie and Haute-Savoie in France
- Sawbridge. John Sawbridge (1732-95), Lord Mayor of London in 1775
- Saxon. The people that formerly dwelt in the northern part of Germany and invaded England in the 5th and 6th centuries, hence, the English-speaking peoples
- Saramander. The ancient name of a river in Mysia, Asia Minor, the Mæander, now known as the Menderes. The river is mentioned by Homer in the Iliad (Ilk. 21)
- Scarlet. Will Scarlet, one of the companions of Robin Hood
- Schelling. F. W. Schelling (1775-1854), an eminent German philosopher
- Schiller. Johann C. F. Schiller (1759-1805), a famous German poet and dramatist
- Selo (Chios). An island in the Ægean Sea, west of Asia Minor, formerly celebrated for its wine and figs
- Scipio. 1—(27)—Publius Scipio Africanus Major (c.234-183 B.C.), a famous Roman general, who, after a life of warfare, retired in 185 B.C. to his native seat near Cumæ, a city in Campania, Italy. 2—(89)—Publius Scipio Africanus Minor (c.185-129 B.C.) a famous Roman general who captured Carthage in 146 and Numantia, Spain, in 133
- Scipio's Tomb. A group of ancient Roman tombs situated on the Appian Way, near Rome
- Scene. A village in Perthshire, Scotland, the coronation place of Scottish kings from 1153 to 1488
- Scotia. Scotland
- Scott. 1—(313, etc.)—Sir Walter Scott (1771-1832), a famous Scottish poet and novelist. See p. 483. 2—(864)—John Scott (1751-1838), an English jurist, Lord Chancellor of England, 1801-04, and 1807-27
- Scroggins. Jack 'Scroggins, a well-known prize-fighter
- Scoope, Lord. Warder of the West-Marches of England, late in the 16th century
- Scylla. The monster inhabiting Scylla, a rock on the coast of Italy opposite Sicily, she was beloved by Glaucus, and from jealousy was changed by Circe into a monster surrounded with barking dogs
- Scythia. In ancient times, the whole north and northeast of Europe and Asia, called such by the Greeks
- Scythian. The Scythians were a nomadic people of Europe and Asia, expert in horsemanship and archery. They often made raids upon neighboring peoples
- Seasons, The. A poem by James Thomson, an English poet of the 18th century. See p. 15
- Seeva (Siva). The usual name of one of the gods of the Hindu triad. He represented the destructive power of nature
- Seine. A river of France which empties into the English channel
- Selkirk. The capital of Selkirkshire, Scotland
- Sennacherib. King of Assyria (705-681 B.C.), well known in Biblical history. He was engaged in numerous wars
- Seraphim. One of the highest orders of angels, excelling in wisdom and in zeal in the service of God
- Sesostris. A legendary king of Egypt, said to have conquered the world
- Sestos. A ruined town in European Turkey on the Dardanelles
- Seven Dials. A locality in London, notorious for its poverty and crime. It took its name from a column which stood at the junction of seven streets and which bore a sundial facing each street
- Seven Sleepers. Seven Christian youths said to have hidden in a cave near Ephesus Asia Minor, during the persecution under Decius (249-51 A.D.), and to have fallen asleep, not awaking till two or three hundred years later, when Christianity had become established
- Severn. A river in southwestern England
- Seville. A city in southwestern Spain
- Seyncte Powle. —(129)—St. Paul's Cathedral, London
- Sforza, Ludovico (1451-1510). Duke of Milan Italy
- Shacklewell. Formerly a suburb of London, now an outlying district of the city itself
- Shadwell. Thomas Shadwell (1640-92), a Restoration dramatist, satirized by Dryden in Mac Flecknoe and in Abdolum and Achitophel
- Shaldon. A village on the River Tigris, across from Teignmouth, Devonshire, England
- Shanklin. A seaside resort on the coast of the Isle of Wight, south of England
- Sheeraz (Shiraz). A city in Persia
- Sheffield. 1—(491)—John Sheffield (1648-1721), Duke of Buckingham, an English statesman and author. 2—(168)—A manufacturing town in Yorkshire, England, famous for its works in steel and cutlery
- Shelburne. William Petty (1737-1805), Earl of Shelburne, an English statesman
- Shem. The son of Noah, and reputed ancestor of the Hebrew, Arabic, and other Semitic races. See Genesis 9:27
- Shenstone. William Shenstone (1714-63), an English poet. See p. 40
- Sheridan. Richard Brinsley Sheridan (1751-1816), a noted Irish dramatist, orator, and politician
- Sherwood. A forest in Nottinghamshire, England, the principal scene of the legendary exploits of Robin Hood
- Shrewsbury. A town in Shropshire, England
- Shropshire. An inland county of England, bordering on Wales, sometimes called Salop, from the Latin name Salopia
- Shylock. The Jew in Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice
- Siam. A kingdom in southeastern Asia
- Siberia. A country of Asiatic Russia, it is noted for its mines
- Sibir. Siberia
- Sibyl. In ancient mythology, one of several women reputed to possess powers of prophecy or divination. They spoke their utterances in a frenzied state
- Sicily. An island in the Mediterranean, belonging to Italy, situated southwest of the mainland
- Siddons. Mrs. Sarah Kemble Siddons (1755-1831), a noted English actress
- Sidmouth. Henry Addington (1757-1844), Viscount Sidmouth, an English politician noted for his repressive measures

- Sidney. 1—(267, 380)—Algernon Sidney (c1022-88), an English politician and patriot. 2—(417, 922, 1039, 1082)—Sir Philip Sidney (1554-86), an English author and general. His chief works are Arcadia and The Defense of Poesy.
- Sidney, Smug. See Smug Sidney.
- Sidon. An ancient city in Asia Minor.
- Sidonius Apollinaris (c430-482) A Christian author.
- Siege of Corinth. The. A narrative poem by Lord Byron, published in 1810.
- Siena (Siena) A city and province in central Italy, noted for its works of art.
- Sigeum. In ancient geography a promontory and town in Asia Minor, at the entrance to the Hellespont. It was the legendary station of the Greek fleet in the Trojan War.
- Sigtrygg (Sictryg). See Gray's Preface to The Fatal Sisters, p. 126a.
- Sileni. Woodland nymphs, companions of Bacchus, god of wine. See Mileneus.
- Silenus. The eldest of the satyrs, sometimes regarded as the son of Hermes, or of Pan. He was the fosterer and later the companion of Bacchus. He was represented as a jovial old man, corpulent, bald, and commonly tipsy. He carried a wine bag in his hand and rode on an ass. He was fond of sleep, music, and dancing. He is sometimes said to be the inventor of Pan's pipes. See Pan.
- Silius Italicus (d 100 A D) A Roman poet, imitator of Virgil, the author of Punica, a dull poem giving an account of the Second Punic War.
- Silols. A small river in Asia Minor.
- Sirocco. A hot dry wind of the desert.
- Sinbad. Sinbad, a character in the Arabian Nights' Entertainments. He was once shipwrecked on an island where the Old Man of the Sea, a monster, got on his back and would not dismount until finally Sinbad succeeded in killing him.
- Sion (Zion) A hill on which was situated the old city of Jerusalem.
- Sir Charles Grandison. A novel written by Samuel Richardson (1699-1761).
- Siren. One of the sea nymphs said to inhabit an island near Italy, and by their singing to lure mariners to destruction.
- Sistine Chapel. The Sistine, or Sixtine Chapel is the papal private chapel built by Pope Sixtus IV in 1473. Its walls and ceilings are covered with magnificent paintings, of which the most famous are those by Michelangelo, of the Creation, the Deluge, and the Judgment.
- Sisyphus. A legendary character condemned in the lower world to roll up a hill, without ceasing, a huge stone which when he reached the top always rolled back to the valley.
- Skiddaw. A mountain in Cumberland, England.
- Sky (e). A rocky, mountainous island off the western coast of Scotland the largest of the Inner Hebrides.
- Slough. A town in the county of Buckingham, England.
- Smith, Adam (1723-90) A celebrated Scottish political economist.
- Smithfield. A locality in London near St Paul's, it was formerly used as a recreation ground.
- Smug Sidney. The Rev Sidney Smith (1771-1847) a Canon of St Paul's, one of the founders and editors of The Edinburgh Review.
- Snowdon. The highest mountain in Wales.
- Snowdon, Knight of James V of Scotland who chose this name to disguise his identity. Snowdon refers to Stirling Castle, one of the Scottish royal palaces.
- Soare. A river in Leicestershire, England.
- Society of the Middle Temple. See Temple.
- Socrates (5th century B C) A famous Greek philosopher.
- Soho Square. A square in London, south of Oxford Street.
- Sol. The sun.
- Solomon. A king of Israel famous for his great wisdom.
- Solway. The Solway Firth, a large inlet of the Irish Sea, partly separating England and Scotland.
- Somersetshire. A county in southwestern England.
- Sophia. The capital of Bulgaria, formerly a portion of the Turkish Kingdom.
- Sophocles (5th century B C) One of the greatest tragic poets of Greece.
- Sorrento; Sorrento. A town on the west coast of Italy, across the bay from Naples.
- Sotheby. William Sotheby (1757-1833), an English scholar and poet.
- Soul. Nicolas Jean de Dieu Soulé (1709-1851), a French marshall. He was engaged in many important battles, and was ambassador at the coronation of Queen Victoria in 1838.
- South. Robert South (1634-1716), a celebrated English divine.
- South-Sea House. See note on The South Sea House, p. 1297b.
- Spartan. Pertaining to Sparta, capital of Laconia in ancient Greece, hence, resembling the Spartans in discipline or courage.
- Spectator. An 18th century periodical published by Addison, Steele, and others.
- Spey. A river in northern Scotland.
- Sphinx. In Greek mythology, a winged monster represented with a woman's head and a lion's body; she sat on a high rock by the roadside in Thebes, Boeotia, and killed all passers-by who could not guess a riddle which she proposed. When Oedipus finally guessed the riddle she cast herself down from the rock and was killed.
- Spinosa. Baruch de Spinoza (1632-77), a famous Dutch Jewish pantheistic philosopher.
- Sporus. The name under which Lord John Hervey (1696-1743), an English writer and politician, was satirized by Pope in his Kipling to Dr Arbuthnot, 305 ff.
- Stamboul. Constantinople.
- Staneshaw-bank. A place on the River Eden, in Cumberland, England, near the Scottish border.
- Stanhope, Lord. See p. 1186b, n. 5.
- Stannore. A ridge which divides the mountains of the counties of Westmorland and Cumberland, England.
- Status. Publius Papinius Statius (60-100), a Roman poet.
- Staubach. A famous waterfall in the canton of Berne, Switzerland.
- Steele. Sir Richard Steele (1672-1729), an English essayist, contributor to The Spectator.
- Sterne. Laurence Sterne (1713-68), an English novelist and humorist, author of Tristram Shandy.
- Sternhold. Thomas Sternhold (d 1549), an English writer.
- Stevenson, George. An 18th century English pugilist. He fought with Jack Broughton in 1771.
- Stewart, Mr. Dugald Stewart (1773-1828), an eminent Scottish philosopher.
- Stirling. A city and county in Scotland, noted for its picturesque buildings.
- Stobart. Sir Gilbert Elliot, a Scottish Border-Warrior of the 16th century. He lived near Hawick, Roxburghshire, Scotland.
- Stonehenge. A famous prehistoric stone ruin in Salisbury Plain, Wiltshire, England.
- Stothard. Thomas Stothard (1755-1834), an English painter and illustrator.
- Stott. Robert Stott, a minor English poet of the early 19th century. He contributed articles to The Morning Post, under the name of "Hafiz".
- Stow. Stowe, a village in Buckinghamshire, England, noted for its castle and park.
- Stowey. Nether Stowey, a village in Somersetshire, England.
- Strabo (c63 B C-24 A D) A Greek geographer and historian.
- Strand. A long prominent London street running parallel with the Thames.
- Strangford, Hibernian. P. C. Smythe (1780-1855), Viscount Strangford, an Irish diplomat, and translator of poems of Camoens, a noted 16th century Portuguese poet. In a note on one of the love songs Strangford said that "eyes of blue have been ever dear to the sons of song".
- Stygian. Pertaining to or belonging to the River Styx, or to the infernal regions in general.
- Styx. A fabulous river in Hades over which all newcomers were ferried by Charon. Before it the most solemn oaths were sworn. Violation of such oaths was punished by deprivation of nectar and ambrosia, and by loss of all heavenly privileges for ten years.
- Suckling, Captain. Sir John Suckling (1609-42), an English poet and soldier.
- Suetonius. Gaius Tranquillus Suetonius (c70-140), a Roman historian.
- Suli. A mountainous district in Albania, European Turkey.
- Sultan. A Mohammedan sovereign ruler.
- Sunium. In ancient geography, the promontory at the southeastern extremity of Attica, Greece, now known as Cape Colonna.

- Surrender of Calais. A comedy by George Colman, the Younger (1762-1836)
- Surrey; Surry. A county in southeastern England
- Susa. An ancient city in Asia Minor
- Sussex. A county in southeastern England
- Swift. Jonathan Swift (1667-1745), a celebrated English satirist and man of letters
- Syllable Leaves. A collection of poems by Coleridge, published in 1817
- Sydney. Algernon Sydney (1622-83), an eminent English Republican patriot
- Sylvans. Fabled spirits or deities of the wood
- Symplegades. Two island rocks on the Strait of Constantinople (or Bosphorus), a narrow passage which separates Europe from Asia
- Syracuse. A province in the southeastern part of Sicily It was conquered by Marcellus in 212 B C
- Syria. The language of Syria, a country in Asiatic Turkey
- Syrian. Pertaining to Syria, a country in Asiatic Turkey
- Syrinx. In Greek mythology, a nymph who was pursued by Pan and who was changed into a reed, out of which Pan then constructed his musical pipe See Pan.
- Tacitus. Cornelius Tacitus (55-117?), a celebrated Roman historian and legal orator
- Talavera. A town in the province of Toledo, Spain Near it in 1809, the allied English and Spanish army under Wellington and Cuesta defeated the French under King Joseph
- Talesian. Talesian, a Cymric or Welsh bard said to have lived in the 6th century
- Talleyrand. Charles Maurice de Talleyrand-Périgord (1754-1838), a famous French statesman and diplomatist
- Talymalpa. A small bay on the northeast coast of Anglesea, an island of Wales in the Irish Sea
- Tamar. 1—(960, 1048)—The brother of Gebir 2—(1150)—A river on the border of Cornwall and Devonshire, England
- Tame. Thomas A deputy-cashier in the South-Sea House in 1798
- Tamerlane. (1336-1405) A Tartar conqueror of India and Asia
- Tanagra. In ancient geography, a town in Boeotia, Greece
- Tancred. One of the chief heroes of the First Crusade 1096-99 His virtues are celebrated in Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered
- Tantalus. A mythological king, punished for betraying the secrets of the gods, by being placed in the midst of a lake the waters of which reached to his chin but which receded whenever he attempted to drink
- Tara. A place in the county of Meath, Ireland It was famous in the early history of Ireland as a royal residence
- Tarbat (Tarbat). The name of a village and a narrow neck of land between Loch Lomond and Loch Long, forming the northern end of the county of Dumbarton, Scotland Tarbat is Gaelic for tailhouse
- Tartar. The Tartars were mixed tribes Mongolian or Turkish, inhabiting Russia and Central and Eastern Asia They were warlike tribes, noted for their skill in archery
- Tartarian. Of or pertaining to the Tartars or Tartary, a name formerly applied to the middle portion of the Eurasian continent
- Tartary. In the manner of a Tartar,—4 s., savagely
- Tartarus. The lowest portion of hell the place of punishment for the spirits of the wicked
- Tartary. A name formerly applied to the middle portion of the Eurasian continent Its people were warlike tribes
- Tasso. Torquato Tasso (1544-85) a celebrated Italian epic poet
- Tate. Nahum Tate (1652-1715), an English poet and dramatist
- Taunton. A town in Somersetshire, England
- Tay. The longest river of Scotland, it empties into the North Sea
- Taylor. Bishop Jeremy Taylor (1618-67), an English bishop and theological writer, author of Holy Living (1650), Holy Dying (1651), and other works
- Teesdale. The valley of the River Tees in northern England, it flows into the North Sea
- Teignmouth. A bathing resort in Devonshire, England
- Teth. A small river chiefly in Perthshire, Scotland
- Telemachus. In Greek legend, the son of Odysseus and Penelope He slew the suitors of Penelope while his father was away from home
- Tell, William. One of the legendary heroes of Switzerland in the struggle for independence The story is that Tell, having refused to salute the cap which the Austrian governor had placed in the market place for that purpose was ordered to shoot an apple from his little son's head He did so successfully
- Tellus. A Roman goddess, the personification of the earth
- Tempe. A valley in eastern Thessaly, Greece It has been celebrated from ancient times for its beauty
- Temple. Originally, a lodge of the medieval religious Order of Knights Templars After this Order was abolished in 1812, the property passed to the crown and thence to the religious military Order of Knights Hospitallers, who in 1546 leased part of it to the students of law On its site now stand two Inns of Court, known as the Inner and the Middle Temple These are occupied by barristers, and are owned by the Societies of the Inner and Middle Temple, which have the right to admit students to the bar The Inner Temple is so called because it is within the old City of London, the Middle Temple was between the Inner and the Outer Temples The Outer Temple became a part of the Exeter Buildings, used for religious, charitable, and other assemblies
- Tenerife. The largest of the Canary Islands, in the Atlantic Ocean, northwest of Africa
- Tenosa. An island of the Cyclades in the Aegean Sea, southeast of Greece
- Terence. Publius Terentius Afer (c185-159 B C), a noted Roman writer of comedies
- Termagant. A name given in medieval romances to the god of the Saracens
- Tethys. A sea-goddess, the wife of Oceanus
- Teviot. A river in Roxburghshire, Scotland
- Teviotdale. Roxburghshire Scotland so called from the River Teviot, which flows through it
- Tewkesbury. A town in Gloucestershire, England
- Thalaba. The hero of Thalaba, an Oriental epic by Robert Southey (1744-1843)
- Thalia. One of the Muses, she inspired gaiety, and favored rural pursuits and pleasures
- Thamoudocana. A town of Africa near the border of the Sahara Desert
- Thebes. 1—(397, 687, 739)—The chief city of Boeotia, Greece 2—(636)—The ancient capital of Upper Egypt
- Themis. The personification of divine justice, represented as the wife or companion of Zeus In art Themis is represented as carrying scales in one hand and a horn of plenty in the other
- Theocritus. (3rd century B C) A famous Greek idyllic poet
- Thermodon. A river now Thermeh in Pontus, Asia Minor, the reputed home of Hippolyta
- Thermopylae. A pass in northern Greece, famous for the valiant stand made there in 480 B C by Leonidas and his band of Spartans against the Persian host of Xerxes
- Thesida. The Thesida is a tragedy on the subject of Theseus, of which Codrus is the alleged author
- Theseus. A legendary hero of Attica, Greece In his exploit against the Amazons, he carried off their queen
- Thespis. (6th century B C) An Attic poet, the reputed founder of tragedy
- Thessalian. Of or pertaining to Thessaly
- Thessaly. A province in northern Greece
- Thetis. The chief of the Nereids, the mother of Achilles whom she dipped in the River Styx, thus making him invulnerable except in the heel, by which she held him The story of the marriage of Thetis and Peleus King of Thessaly, Greece, was a favorite subject in early painting, especially on vases
- Thomas, Holy. St Thomas Aquinas (1225-74), a noted Italian divine
- Thomson. James Thomson (1700-48), a British poet See p 18
- Thone. Wife of Polydamna, daughter of Zeus See the Odyssey, 4, 220 ff
- Thor. In Scandinavian mythology, the god of thunder, always represented as carrying a hammer.
- Thorn, Tha. A poem by Wordsworth See p 225
- Thrace. In ancient times a name applied by the Greeks to the regions northeast of Macedonia, and later to the greater part of the eastern half of the Balkan Peninsula.

- Thrace. Thrace.
- Thucydides (5th century B C) A celebrated Greek historian
- Thursley. A town in the county of Surrey, England
- Thurston-mere. Coniston Lake, west of Hawkeshead, Lancashire, England
- Thyras. A common name in literature for a rustic or shepherd
- Tiber. A river of central Italy which enters the Mediterranean below Rome
- Tiberius. See note on Tiberius and Vipsania, p. 1805a.
- Tickler. "Timothy Tickler," an Edinburgh lawyer named Sym, an uncle of John Wilson's wife
- Timon. A typical hater of mankind, in Shakspeare's Timon of Athens
- Timour. See Tamerlane.
- Tintagel. Tintagel, a village in Cornwall, England. Near it is the ruined Tintagel Castle, celebrated in Arthurian legend as the birthplace of King Arthur
- Tipp, John. An accountant in the South-Sea House about 1794
- Titan. One of a mythological race of giants, said to have piled mountain upon mountain to scale heaven
- Titania. Resembling the Titans, a race of giants
- Titchfield. A prominent street in London
- Tithon. Tithonus. A legendary character loved by Aurora, who prevailed on the gods to grant him immortal life, but forgot to ask for him immortal youth. He grew old and shriveled, and was changed by Aurora into a grasshopper
- Titian. Tiziano Vecelli (1477-1576), a famous Venetian painter
- Tityrus —(155)—A freedman in Virgil's Eclogues, supposed to represent Virgil himself
- Tivdiale. See Teviotdale.
- Tiviot. See Teviot.
- Tmelus. A mountain range in Asia Minor
- Tobin. James Webb Tobin (d. 1814), an English lawyer. See note on Wordsworth's We Are Seven, p. 1357b
- Tolbooth. The principal prison in Edinburgh. Many criminals were executed in front of it
- Tom Thumb. A legendary diminutive personage celebrated in English literature
- Toma, Jo. Joseph Parkes (1796-1865), a Radical politician
- Tomson, Jacob (c1656-1736) A prominent London publisher
- Tooke. John Horne Tooke (1726-1812), an English politician, philosopher, and philologist, he opposed the war with America in 1776
- Torfaen. Thormodr Torfaen (1638-1719), an Icelandic antiquary and historian
- Tory. The Tories, in English history, were members of one of the two great political parties which arose at the end of the 17th century. They favored conservative principles in church and state
- Toulmin, Dr Joshua Toulmin (1740-1815), a Dissenting historian and theologian. He preached at Taunton, Somersetshire, England, for nearly 40 years
- Toulouse. A city in southern France the scene of massacres of Huguenots in 1562 and 1572
- Tournour. Cyril Tournour, an English tragic poet of the early 17th century
- Toussaint L'Ouverture (1743-1803) A Haitian revolutionist and liberator. He was captured by the French and imprisoned for life
- Tower; Tower of London. An ancient palace-citadel near the eastern wall of London. It was long a prison for political offenders, it is now a national arsenal
- Towy. A river in Carmarthenshire, South Wales
- Trafalgar. The name of a famous British naval victory over the French and Spanish, off Cape Trafalgar, on the southern coast of Spain, 1805. See p. 41
- Trajan. Marcus Ulpius Trajanus, a famous Roman emperor (98-117)
- Trent. A river flowing through the counties of Stafford, Derby, Nottingham, and Lincoln, England
- Trevelyan. Raleigh Trevelyan (1781-1865), a miscellaneous English writer
- Trimmer, Mrs. Sarah Trimmer (1741-1810), whose original name was Kirby, the author of various juvenile and educational works of great merit
- Tristram Shandy. The hero of Tristram Shandy, a novel by Laurence Sterne (1713-68), an English novelist
- Triton. One of the sea gods, son of Poseidon
- Troilus. 1—(780)—In medieval romance, a son of Priam, King of Troy, lover of Cressida 2—(864)—The hero of Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida
- Troilus and Cressida. A tragedy by Shakspeare
- Trojan. 1—(806, 969, 1123)—Pertaining to ancient Troy. 2—(989, 1040)—The Trojan War, the ten years' war between Greeks and Trojans, described in the Iliad
- Trollope, Mrs. Frances Trollope (1790-1863), a popular English novelist
- Troppau. A city in Austria
- Trossachs; Trossachs. A romantic and beautiful valley between lakes Achray and Katrine in Perthshire, Scotland
- Trout Hall. In The Complete Angler, a treatise by Isaak Walton (1593-1683), an English writer
- Troy. An ancient city in Troas, Asia Minor, the scene of Homer's Iliad
- Tryermaine. A fief of the Barony of Gilsland, in Cumbriandshire, England. Roland Vaux was the name of successive owners of Tryermaine during the 14th and 15th centuries
- Tullibardine. The name of an old seat of the Murrays, a powerful family of Scotland, near Stirling in Stirlingshire. See Murray
- Turn. A castle of Ulster, North Ireland
- Turin. A city of Italy, capital of the province of Turin
- Turkish Spy, The. An Italian romance by Giovanni Paolo Marana (1684). Defoe wrote a continuation of it
- Turner, Ned. A well-known English pugilist of the early 19th century
- Turtle, Tom. John Thurtell (1794-1824), an English prize-fighter, gambler, and murderer
- Tuscan, Tuscany. A territorial division of west central Italy
- Tweed. A river on the border of England and Scotland
- Tygris. Tigris, a river in Asiatic Turkey
- Typhon. Typhon, a giant monster with a hundred snake-heads. He contended for the throne of the lower world with Zeus, who cast him into Tartarus, or, according to another account buried him under Mt. Aetna
- Tyre. One of most important cities of Phoenicia, noted at one time for its magnificence and luxury. Alexander the Great reduced the city after a nine-months' siege
- Tyrian. Of or pertaining to Tyre
- Tyrolese. The inhabitants of Tyrol, an Austrian Alpine province
- Tyrtæus. A Greek poet of about 650 B C, who inspired his Spartans by his patriotic elegies and war songs
- Uam-Var. A mountain in Mentelth, a district in Perthshire, Scotland
- Ucalagon. A close companion and counselor of Priam, King of Troy
- Uist. Either of two Scottish islands of the Outer Hebrides, North Uist or South Uist
- Ukraine. The former name of a region of European Russia, lying in the valley of the River Dnieper
- Ulysses. See Odysseus.
- Ulv's Isle. A small island off the west coast of Scotland
- Ulw-water. Ullswater, a large lake between the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland, England
- Umfraville. Probably Sir Robert de Umfraville (d. 1486), Earl of Angus, a member of an influential Norman family in Northumberlandshire, England. He fought on the side of Henry IV and Henry Percy (Hotspur) against the Scots. The Umfravilles and the Percys were closely related
- Uma. In Spenser's The Faerie Queene, a beautiful maiden, the personification of truth
- Upton. A town in Worcestershire, England, midway between the cities of Worcester and Gloucester
- Uranis. The Muse of astronomy. The name was applied also to Aphrodite as the goddess of spiritual love
- Uranus. With the exception of Neptune, the outermost of the planets
- Uric. An ancient Welsh poet, nothing is extant of his works
- Utopia. An imaginary island having a perfect political system, described by Sir Thomas More in a romance entitled Utopia (1516)
- Valdarno. A beautiful valley near Florence, Italy.
- Valerius Maximus (1st century A D) A Roman historian

- Vallombrosa. A famous monastery east of Florence, Italy.
- Vandals. A Teutonic race formerly inhabiting the southern shores of the Baltic.
- Vandyke. Paintings by Sir Anthony Vandyke (1609-1641), a Flemish portrait painter.
- Vane. Sir Henry Vane (1612-82), an English Puritan statesman, one time Governor of Massachusetts Bay.
- Vaux, Roland de. See Tryermaine.
- Velasquez. Diego Velasquez (1599-1660), a noted Spanish painter.
- Vennachar. The "Lake of the Fair Valley," in Perthshire, Scotland.
- Venta. Venta Belgarum, the ancient name of Winchester, a city in Hampshire, England.
- Venus. The goddess of love and beauty. See Aphrodite.
- Venus del Medici. A beautiful marble statue of Venus, in the Uffizi Gallery, Florence. It is the work of the Greek sculptor Cleomenes (3rd century B. C.).
- Verona. The capital of a province in northeast Italy.
- Verrio. Antonio Verrio (c1639-1707), an Italian painter. He was employed by Charles II of England to paint frescoes in the royal residence, Windsor Castle.
- Vernalles. A city in France, near Paris.
- Vertumnus. A god of the changing seasons who presided over orchards and gardens.
- Vesper. Venus when an evening star, also, the evening.
- Vesta. The goddess of the hearth.
- Vesuvio. Vesuvius, a mountain of southern Italy, the only active volcano in Europe.
- Vevey. A town on Lake Geneva Switzerland.
- Vicar of Wakefield. The novel by Oliver Goldsmith (1724-74).
- Villeneuve. Pierre Charles Jean de Villeneuve (1733-1800), a French admiral who commanded the French fleet at Trafalgar.
- Vinci. Leonardo da Vinci (1452-1519), a noted Italian painter, sculptor, architect, and engineer.
- Viola. The heroine of Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, she was shipwrecked on the coast of Illyria, a region in the Balkan peninsula.
- Virgil. Publius Virgilius Maro (70-19 B. C.), a famous Roman epic, didactic and idyllic poet.
- Virginia. The picture of the Virgin Mary.
- Vittoria. A famous British victory over the French and Spanish at Vittoria, a city in northern Spain, in 1813.
- Vittoria Corombona. A tragedy written by John Webster (1580?-1625?), an English dramatist.
- Voltaire. Francois Voltaire (1694-1778), a famous French writer and skeptic.
- Vulcan. The blacksmith of the gods.
- Wakefield. A small town in the south-central part of Yorkshire, England.
- Wallace. William Wallace (c1270-1305), a celebrated Scottish hero and patriot. His achievements have been a favorite theme with Scottish poets and writers of romance.
- Walla-crag. A rocky eminence in Cumberlandshire, England.
- Waller. Edmund Waller (1606-87), an English poet.
- Walpole. Horace Walpole (1717-97), an English author and wit. See p. 100.
- Waltham. A suburb of London.
- Walter, Sir. Sir Walter Scott (1771-1832).
- Walton. Isaac Walton (1593-1683), an English writer.
- Wandering Jew. The shoemaker Ahasuerus, fabled to be condemned to wander on the earth till the end of the world for driving Christ from his door when he rested there while bearing the cross.
- Wapping. A quarter of London along the Thames, frequented by sailors.
- War of the Second Coalition. The war conducted by the allied European powers against Napoleon, 1799-1801.
- Warden. The title of a chief executive officer.
- Ware. A town in Hertfordshire, England.
- Warsaw. The capital of the Kingdom of Poland, from 1800 to 1813.
- Wat Tyler. A revolutionary epic by Robert Southey, dealing with the English rebel Wat Tyler and the insurrection started by him in 1381, because of the levying of a capitation tax.
- Waterloo. A decisive victory gained by the Allies over Napoleon at Waterloo, a village near Brussels, Belgium, on June 18, 1815.
- Water-Monarch. Neptune, god of the sea.
- Waterton, Mr. Charles Waterton (1782-1865), an English naturalist.
- Webster. John Webster, an English tragic dramatist of the early 17th century.
- Wedgewood, Tom. An Englishman who, with his brother Josiah (1730-95), paid Coleidge an annuity of £150 as the result of his preaching in Shrewsbury, Shropshire, England.
- Weirclaw Hill. A hill in the Ettrick Valley, Selkirkshire, Scotland.
- Welborn. A character in Philip Massinger's A New Way to Pay Old Debts (1632).
- Wellington, Duke of. Arthur Wellesley (1760-1852), a celebrated British general.
- Wem. A town in Shropshire, England.
- Went. A small river in the southern part of Yorkshire, England.
- Wesley. John Wesley (1703-91), a distinguished religious reformer, founder of Methodism.
- Westall. Richard Westall (1765-1836), a prominent historical painter.
- Westbrook, Harriet. The first wife of the poet Shelley.
- Westminster Abbey. A famous church in Westminster, London.
- Westminster Bridge. The oldest bridge but one built over the Thames at London.
- Westmoreland. A northern county of England.
- West Riding. The western division of a county of Yorkshire, England.
- Wharfe. A river flowing through the central part of Yorkshire, England.
- Wheatthampstead. A small station near Mackery End in Hertfordshire, England.
- Whigs. In English history members of one of the two great political parties which arose at the end of the 17th century. They professed more liberal principles than did the Tories.
- Whinfield. A place in Cumberlandshire, England.
- Whitechurch. A small town north of Wem in Shropshire, England.
- White, Henry. Henry White (1785-1806), a minor poet, who died at Cambridge as a result of too much exertion in the pursuit of studies which increased his tendency to epilepsy.
- White Horse Cellar. Probably the name of a London tavern.
- Whitechapel. A district in London inhabited by the poorer classes and criminals.
- Whitehall. In modern London, the main thoroughfare between Trafalgar Square and the House of Parliament. On it is Whitehall Chapel formerly royal palace.
- Whole Duty of Man. A once popular ethical treatise of unknown authorship, published in 1659.
- Widdin. A town in Bulgaria, situated on the Danube. It was formerly an important fortress.
- Wilkes, Jack. John Wilkes (1727-97), an English politician, publicist, and political agitator.
- Will of the Wisp. An ignis fatuus.
- William 1.—(84, 1004).—William of Orange King of England (1689-1702). 2.—(232).—William Wordsworth.
- Williams, Mr. John Williams, an English seaman and a noted murderer of the early 19th century. See De Quincey's postscript to On Murder Con sidered as One of the Fine Arts.
- Wilmot. John Wilmot (1770-1815), an English politician and author.
- Wilson. Thomas Wilson (1603-1755), a noted English theologian.
- Wiltshire. An inland county of England.
- Windsor. Windermere, a large lake on the borders of the counties of Westmoreland and Lancaster, England.
- Winchester. A city in Hampshire, England.
- Windham. William Windham (1750-1810), an eminent English orator and statesman.
- Windsor. A town in Berkshire, England, situated on the Thames, 23 miles from London. It contains Windsor Castle, a famous royal residence founded by William the Conqueror. Nearly opposite the castle is Eton College.
- Winkfield. A village in Wiltshire, England, the seat of a private school attended by De Quincey.
- Wurtemberg. Same as Wuerttemberg, a kingdom of southern Germany.
- Witham-common. Witham is a town in the county of Essex, England.
- Withers. George Withers (1558-1607), a minor English poet.
- Wittenberg. A town in the province of Saxony, Prussia.
- Wollstonecraft, Mary (1759-97). An English author, wife of William Godwin, and mother of the - second wife of Shelley. Her chief work is Vindication of the Rights of Women (1782).

- Woman Killed with Kindness. A tragedy by Thomas Heywood, an English dramatist of the early 17th century.
- Wood. Sir Matthew Wood (1768-1843), an English political reformer, a consistent and strenuous supporter of the Whig ministries.
- Wood Street. A street in London, it is off Cheapside, the leading east and west thoroughfare.
- Woodhouse. Robert Woodhouse (1773-1827), an English astronomer and mathematician.
- Woodhouselee. A barony belonging to Bothwellhaugh, along the banks of the Esk River, in Dumfriesshire, on the Scottish Border.
- Woollett. William Woollett (1735-85), a noted English landscape engraver.
- Woolston. Thomas Woolston (1680-1733), an English theological writer.
- Worcester. A city in Worcestershire, England.
- Wrexham. A town in Denbighshire, Wales.
- Wright, John W. Wright (1769-1805), an Irish naval officer. He was captured by the French in 1804, and confined in the Temple at Paris. In 1805 he was found dead in prison, and it was suspected that he had been murdered.
- Wye. A river in Wales and England, noted for its picturesque scenery.
- Wyndermere. Lake Windermere, on the borders of the counties of Westmoreland and Lancaster, one of the finest and largest lakes of England.
- Xanthippos. A son of Pericles.
- Xenophon (430-357 B.C.) A celebrated Greek historian and essayist, author of the Anabasis and the Memorabilia.
- Xerxes (c.519-465 B.C.). King of Persia.
- Yardley. A parish in Worcestershire, England.
- Yarrow. A river in Selkirkshire, Scotland.
- York. 1—(73, 903, 1114)—A city in Yorkshire, England. 2—(221)—A branch of the English royal dynasty, descended from Edmund, Duke of York, fourth son of Edward III, King of England (1327-77).
- York, Duke of. —(873)—Frederick Augustus (1703-1827), second son of George III, King of England (1700-1820).
- Yule. Christmas time (from A.S. geol, December).
- Zeno (3rd century B.C.) A Greek philosopher, founder of the Stoic school of philosophy, known for the sternness of its doctrines.
- Zephyrus. The West Wind regarded as the mildest of all the sylvan deities.
- Zeus. In Greek mythology, the chief of the gods.
- Zimmerman. Johann Georg von Zimmerman (1728-97), a Swiss philosopher and physician, who wrote a book entitled On Solitude.
- Zion. A hill on which was situated the heavenly Jerusalem.
- Zoe. Haidée's maid in Byron's Don Juan.
- Zoroaster (fl. 600 B.C.) The traditional founder of the ancient Irano-Persian religion.

CHIEF ENGLISH, GERMAN, AND FRENCH WRITERS, 1720-1840

| ENGLISH | GERMAN | FRENCH |
|------------------------|----------------------------------|---------------------------|
| Pope (1688-1744) | | Voltaire (1694-1778) |
| Thomson (1700-1748) | | |
| Richardson (1689-1761) | | |
| Johnson (1709-1784) | Gellert (1715-1769) | Rousseau (1712-1778) |
| Collins (1721-1759) | | |
| Gray (1716-1771) | | |
| Macpherson (1738-1796) | Lessing (1729-1781) | Diderot (1713-1784) |
| Burke (1729-1797) | Klopstock (1724-1803) | |
| Gibbon (1737-1794) | Kant (1724-1804) | |
| Percy (1729-1811) | | |
| Chatterton (1752-1770) | | |
| Beckford (1759-1844) | | |
| Cowper (1731-1800) | Herder (1744-1803) | Saint-Pierre (1737-1814) |
| Crabbe (1754-1832) | Wieland (1733-1813) | |
| Blake (1757-1827) | | |
| Burns (1759-1796) | | Chénier (1762-1794) |
| Rogers (1763-1855) | Goethe (1749-1832) | de Staël (1766-1817) |
| Godwin (1756-1836) | Schiller (1759-1805) | Chateaubriand (1768-1848) |
| Wordsworth (1770-1850) | Richter (1763-1825) | |
| Coleridge (1772-1834) | Klinger (1752-1831) | |
| Southey (1774-1843) | Schleiermacher (1768-1834) | |
| Campbell (1777-1844) | Hardenburg (Novalis) (1772-1801) | |
| Moore (1779-1852) | Fichte (1762-1814) | |
| Scott (1771-1832) | Kleist (1777-1811) | |
| Hogg (1772-1835) | Hoffmann (1776-1822) | |
| | A. W. Schlegel (1767-1845) | |
| | F. Schlegel (1772-1829) | |
| Byron (1788-1824) | Hegel (1770-1831) | |
| Shelley (1792-1822) | Arndt (1769-1860) | |
| Keats (1795-1821) | Tieck (1773-1853) | |
| Hunt (1784-1859) | Arnim (1781-1831) | |
| Jeffrey (1773-1850) | Brentano (1778-1842) | |
| Lamb (1775-1834) | Göres (1776-1848) | |
| Landor (1775-1864) | Schelling (1775-1854) | Beranger (1780-1857) |
| Peacock (1785-1866) | J. Grimm (1785-1863) | Stendhal (1783-1842) |
| Austen (1775-1817) | W. Grimm (1786-1859) | Lamartine (1790-1869) |
| Hazlitt (1778-1830) | Eichendorff (1788-1857) | Balzac (1799-1850) |
| DeQuincey (1785-1859) | Uhland (1787-1862) | de Vigny (1797-1863) |
| Beddoes (1803-1849) | Ruckert (1788-1866) | Dumas (père) (1802-1870) |
| Hood (1790-1845) | Heine (1797-1856) | Sand (1804-1876) |
| Praed (1802-1839) | | Hugo (1802-1885) |
| Wilson (1785-1854) | | de Musset (1810-1857) |
| Elliott (1781-1849) | | Gautier (1811-1872) |

IMPORTANT HISTORICAL EVENTS, 1730-1850

| | ENGLAND | GERMANY | FRANCE |
|------|--|---|--|
| 1730 | GEORGE II 1727 60 War of the Austrian Suc- cession 1741 48 Jacobite Rebellion in Scot- land, Headed by Charles Edward 1745 46 Battle of Culloden 1746 French and Indian War 1756 61 GEORGE III 1760 1820 | FREDERICK II (The Great) King of Prussia 1740 80 War of the Austrian Suc- cession 1741 46 FRANCIS I, Emperor of Germany 1745 65 Seven Years' War 1756 63 JOSEPH II, Emperor of Germany 1765 90 | War of the Polish Suce- sion 1733 35 War of the Austrian Suc- cession 1741-48 Seven Years' War 1756 63 |
| 1770 | Lord North's Ministry 1770-82 War with American Col- onies 1775 83 War with France 1778 85 War with Spain 1779 82 Anti Slavery Agitation 1780 1813 William Pitt's Ministry 1783-1806 | First Partition of Poland 1772 War of the Bavarian Suc- cession 1778-79 FREDERICK WILLIAM II, King of Prussia 1786 97 | LOUIS XVI 1774 French Revolution 1789 95 Formation of National As- sembly 1789 Destruction of the Bastille 1789 |
| 1790 | Birmingham Riots 1791 Society of United Irish- men 1791 War With France, First Coalition (England, Ger- many, Austria, Prus- sia, Holland Spain Naples) 1793 97 War with Spain 1796 Bank of England Sus- pends Specie Payment 1797 Great Irish Rebellion 1798 Battle of the Nile 1798 Second Coalition against France 1799 1801 | LEOPOLD II, Emperor of Germany 1790 92 War with France 1791 FRANCIS II, Emperor of Germany 1792 1800 First Coalition against France 1793 97 Second Partition of Poland 1795 Third Partition of Poland 1795 FREDERICK WILLIAM III, King of Prussia 1797 1840 Second Coalition against France 1799 1801 | War with Austria 1792 Activities of the Jacobins 1792 Execution of Louis XVI 1793 War of the First Coal- ition 1793 97 Reign of Terror 1793 Fall of Robespierre 1794 Napoleon's Invasion of Austria and Venice 1797 Napoleon in Rome, Fstab- lishment of Helvetic Re- public 1798 Battle of the Nile 1798 Napoleon Made First Consul 1799 War of the Second Coal- ition 1799 1801 |
| 1800 | Union of Great Britain and Ireland 1800 Battle of Copenhagen 1801 Peace of Amiens 1802 War with France 1803 Irish Rebellion (Emmet) Third Coalition against France 1805 Battle of Trafalgar 1805 Fourth Coalition against France 1806 07 Abolition of Slave Trade 1807 Convention of Cintra 1808 Fifth Coalition against France 1809 | Third Coalition against France 1805 Fourth Coalition against France 1806 07 Dissolution of the Holy Roman Empire 1806 | Battle of Marengo 1800 Napoleon President of the Italian Republic 1802 Peace of Amiens 1802 Napoleon 'Crowned Em- peror of the French 1804 15 Napoleon Proclaimed King of Italy 1805 War of the Third Coal- ition 1805 War of the Fourth Coal- ition 1806 07 War of the Fifth Coalition 1809 |
| 1810 | The Regency 1810 War with United States 1812 14 Sixth Coalition against France 1813 15 Peace of Paris 1814 Battle of Waterloo 1815 Agricultural and Weaving Riots Agitation for Par- liamentary Reform 1816 19 Manchester Massacre 1819 | Napoleon Annexes North Germany 1810 Sixth Coalition against France 1813 15 Battle of Leipzig 1813 Congress of Vienna 1814 Russia Prussia and Aus- tria Form the Holy Al- liance 1814 Diet of the German Con- federation 1816 | War with Russia, Burn- ing of Moscow Retreat of French 1812 War of the Sixth Coal- ition 1813 15 Battle of Leipzig 1813 LOUIS XVIII, King of France, the First Res- toration 1814 Napoleon Abdicates 1814 Battle of Waterloo 1815 Second Restoration of Louis XVIII 1815 Napoleon Banished to St Helena 1815 |
| 1820 | GEORGE IV 1820 30 Cato Street Conspiracy 1820 Bank of England Re- sumes Specie Payments 1821 Catholic Emancipation 1829 WILLIAM IV 1830 37 Manchester-Liverpool Rail- way 1829 First Reform Bill 1830 32 Abolition of Slavery 1833 | Congress at Vienna 1820 Congress at Laybach 1821 Revolution in Brunswick The Zollverein 1834 | CHARLES X King of France 1824-30 Bourbon Overthrown 1830 LOUIS PHILIPPE, King of the French 1830 48 |
| 1835 | VICTORIA 1837-1901 Birmingham Riots 1839 Chartist Agitation 1838 Anti Corn-Law League 1838 repeal of Corn Laws 1840 Irish Rebellion 1848 | FREDERICK WILLIAM IV King of Prussia 1840 61 Revolutionary Movements 1848 Constitution of German Empire Completed 1849 | Louis Philippe Abdicates 1848 LOUIS NAPOLEON BONA- PARTE Elected President of the Republic 1848 Louis Napoleon Made Em- peror of the French as Napoleon III 1852 70 |

INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND FIRST LINES

In the following index, the names of authors represented in this text are printed in heavy type; the titles of selections are printed in italics; and first lines of poems are printed in ordinary Roman type. Poems having titles and first lines identical are entered only under titles.

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|---|------|--|----------|
| A chieftain, to the Highlands bound. | 421 | After Thought | 311 |
| A cypress bough, and a rose wreath sweet | 1181 | Age (Landon) | 982 |
| A fig for those by law protected | 184 | Age, To (Landon) | 981 |
| A flock of sheep that leisurely pass by. . . . | 302 | Aged Curie, The (Why Sitt'st Thou by That | |
| A good sword and a trusty hand' | 1150 | Ruin'd Hall') | 467 |
| A green and silent spot, amid the hills. | 353 | Aged Man Who Loved to Doze Away, An . . . | 985 |
| A Highland lad my love was born | 182 | Ah' County Guy, the hour is nigh | 471 |
| A Ho! A Ho! | 1180 | Ah, gentle shepherd, thine the lot to tend. . . | 17 |
| A little black thing among the snow | 171 | Ah me' full sorely is my heart forlorn | 40 |
| A little fairy comes at night. | 1144 | Ah, Sunflower | 171 |
| A lovely form there late beside my bed | 369 | Ah, sunflower, weary of time | 171 |
| A lovely morn, so still, so very still | 1172 | Ah, what avails the sceptred race | 963 |
| A Poet!—He Hath Put His Heart to School | 316 | Ah, what can all thee, wretched wight | 829 |
| A postal as of shadowy adamant | 710 | Ah' who can tell how hard it is to climb . . | 120 |
| A rainbow's arch stood on the sea. | 672 | Ailsa Rock, To | 825 |
| A robe of seeming truth and trust | 185 | Akenside, Mark (1721-1770) | 44, 1201 |
| A Sensitive Plant in a garden grew | 609 | Alas, How Soon the Hours Are Over | 974 |
| A simple child | 225 | Alastor; or, The Spirit of Solitude | 635 |
| A Slumber Did My Spirit Seal | 239 | Alfred Tennyson, To | 1153 |
| A spade' a rake' a hoe' | 1143 | Alison's Essays on the Nature and Princi- | |
| A still, serene, soft day, enough of sun | 972 | ples of Taste, From Jeffrey's Review of . . . | 887 |
| A Sunny Shaft Did I Behold | 366 | All Is Not Over While the Shade | 983 |
| A tale of the times of old! The deeds of days | | All Nature seems at work Slugs leave their | |
| of other years' | 88 | lair | 368 |
| A thing of beauty is a joy forever | 767 | All Tender Thoughts That E'er Possess'd . . | 96; |
| A thousand miles from land are we | 1169 | All thoughts, all passions, all delights. | 359 |
| A trouble, not of clouds, or weeping rain . . . | 314 | All worldly shapes shall melt in gloom. . . . | 423 |
| A Widow Bud Sate Mourning for Her Love | 743 | Allegory, An | 710 |
| Ablett, To Jomph | 969 | Allen-A-Dale | 405 |
| Abou Ben Adhem and the Angel | 869 | Allen A-Dale has no fagot for burning. . . | 405 |
| Abou Ben Adhem (may his tribe increase) | 869 | Amanda, To | 32 |
| Absence (Bowles) | 165 | An aged man who loved to doze away. . . | 985 |
| Absence (Landon) | 964 | An Allegory | 710 |
| Accounts of W. Canynges Feast, The | 130 | An Essay on Criticism, From | 1176 |
| Address to the Deil | 191 | An Essay on Man, From | 1178 |
| Address to the Unco Guid; or, The Rigdly | | An Evening Walk, From | 223 |
| Righteous | 193 | An Exquisite Balade of Charitie. | 132 |
| Addressed to Benjamin Robert Haydon . . . | 763 | An old, mad, blind, despised, and dying king | 659 |
| Admonition | 801 | An Orpheus' an Orpheus' yes, Faith may | |
| Adonais An Epitaph on the Death of John | | grow bold | 290 |
| Keats | 730 | An Thou Were My Ain Thing | 9 |
| Advice to Young Men, From | 1231 | Ancient Ballad of Chevy Chase, The | 112 |
| Ae Fond Kiss | 201 | And art thou cold and lowly laid. | 462 |
| Ae fond kiss, and then we sever | 201 | And did those feet in ancient time | 174 |
| Ella: A Tragical Interlude, From | 180 | And is this—Yarrow?— This the stream. . . | 303 |
| Affliction of Childhood, The | 1089 | And like a dying lady, lean and pale | 709 |
| Affliction of Margaret, The | 295 | And the weak day weeps. | 697 |
| After Dark Vapors Have Oppress'd Our | | And this place our forefathers made for man' . | 335 |
| Plains | 764 | And What Though Winter Will Punch Scvere | 468 |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|---|-----------|--|------------|
| Angelica bee wrought to bee of neidher kynde | 180 | Bard's Epitaph, A | 198 |
| Anna, Countess of Winchelsea (1661-1720) | 1, 1352 | Bards of Passion and of Mirth..... | 826 |
| Another on Fame | 880 | Barfooted Friar, The | 468 |
| Another year!—another deadly blow! | 802 | Battle of Beal' an Duine | 460 |
| Answer to a Child's Question | 364 | Battle of Blenheim, The | 409 |
| Anticipation, October, 1803 | 204 | Battle of the Baltic | 422 |
| Antiquary, From The | 467 | Battle of Trafalgar, The | 411 |
| Approach of Summer (Bowles) | 165 | Battle Song | 1165 |
| Approach of Summer, From Ode on the War- ton) | 76 | Battle's Opinions on Whist, Mrs | 940 |
| Are They Not All Ministering Spirits? | 1153 | Beacon, From The | 474 |
| Arethusa | 708 | Beatification, The | 409 |
| Arethusa arose | 708 | Beattie, James (1735-1803) | 110, 1202 |
| Ariel to Miranda—Take | 742 | Beaumont, Francois | 922 |
| Art thou a statist in the van | 239 | Beckford, William (1759-1844) | 134, 1208 |
| Art thou pale for weariness | 709 | Beddoes, Thomas Lovell (1803-1849) | 1120, 1204 |
| Artemidora! God's invisible | 907 | Before those cruel Twins, whom at one birth | 711 |
| Arundell, To E | 982 | Behind a tree upon the plain | 9 |
| As flies the unconstant sun | 91 | Behind yon hills, where Lugar flows | 175 |
| As from the Darkening Gloom a Silver Dove | 754 | Behold her, single in the field | 298 |
| As I lay asleep in Italy | 655 | Behold, within the leafy shade | 281 |
| As in the soft and sweet eclipse | 697 | Belle of the Ball-Room, The | 1147 |
| As late I journey'd o'er the extensive plain | 328 | Bells, Oatend, The | 164 |
| As once, if not with light regard | 49 | Ben Battle was a soldier bold | 1185 |
| As one who, long by wasting sickness worn | 165 | Beneath the Cypress Shade | 998 |
| As slow I climb the cliff's ascending side | 104 | Beneath these fruit-tree boughs that shed | 290 |
| As the dissolving warmth of dawn may fold | 696 | Beneath yon birch with silver bark | 358 |
| As when far off the warbled strains are heard | 329 | Bereavement | 104 |
| Aspasia to Cleone | 994 | Between Namur and Liege | 310 |
| Aspasia to Pericles (6) | 993, 994 | Bird of the wilderness | 477 |
| Ass, To a Young | 328 | Birks of Endermay, The | 15 |
| At midnight by the stream I roved | 352 | Biographia Literaria, From | 372 |
| At summer eve, when Heaven's ethereal bow | 417 | Blair, Robert (1699-1746) | 37, 1205 |
| At the corner of Wood Street, when daylight | | Blake, William (1757-1827) | 160, 1205 |
| appears | 224 | Blue was the loch, the clouds were gone | 209 |
| At the Grave of Charles Lamb in Edmonton | 1297 | Boat Song | 455 |
| At the Grave of Burns | 291 | Bob Southey! You're a poet—Poet-laureate | 577 |
| At Tynemouth Priory | 164 | Boding Dreams, The | 1182 |
| Auricles of Innocence | 172 | Bonic Doon (Ye Flowery Banks) | 201 |
| Augusta, Epistle to | 519 | Bonnie Kilmeny gaed up the glen | 477 |
| Augusta, Stanzas to | 518 | Bonny Dundee | 471 |
| Auld Lang Syne | 195 | Book of Theil, The | 168 |
| Auld Neebor, I'm three times doubly o'er your | | Border March | 469 |
| debtor | 177 | Borgia, thou once wert almost too august | 908 |
| Autobiographic Sketches, From | 1089 | Borough, From The | 160 |
| Autumn (Hood) | 1137 | Bound for holy Palestine | 77 |
| Autumn, From (Thomson) | 21 | Bowles, To the Reverend W. L. | 329 |
| Autumn A Dirge (Shelley)..... | 709 | Bowles, William Lisle (1782-1850) | 164, 1208 |
| Autumn, To (Keats) | 800 | Boy, call the gondola, the sun is set | 211 |
| Awake, Æolian lyre, awake | 61 | Boy of Egremont, The | 210 |
| Away, my verse, and never fear..... | 963 | Boy's Song, A | 482 |
| Away, ye gay landscapes, ye gardens of roses | 484 | Brace of Yarrow, The | 13 |
| | | Break the dance, and scatter the song | 602 |
| | | Breathes there the man, with soul so dead | 444 |
| | | Bride, Feb 17, 1846, To a | 972 |
| Baby's Début, The | 1358 | Bride of Abydos, The | 496 |
| Bacchus, On a Bust of | 880 | Bride's Tragedy, From The | 1129 |
| Back to the flower-town, side by side | 1801 | Bridge of Sighs, The | 1142 |
| Baillie, Joanna (1762-1851) | 474, 1202 | Bright Be the Place of Thy Soul! | 485 |
| Ballade of Charlotte, An Excellent | 182 | Bright clouds float in heaven | 691 |
| Ballad (It was not in the winter)..... | 1188 | Bright Flower! whose home is everywhere | 290 |
| Ballad of Chevy-Chase, The Ancient | 112 | Bright Star, Would I Were Steadfast As Thou Art | 861 |
| Ballad of the Dark Ladie, The | 358 | Brignall Banks | 464 |
| Bamborough Castle | 164 | Bring the bowl which you boast..... | 473 |
| Bard, The | 63 | Brother mine, calm wanderer | 695 |
| Bard of the Fleece, whose skilful genius | | Brother's Water (Written in March) | 282 |
| made | 1200 | | |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|--|------------|--|------------|
| Browning, To Robert | 975 | Chrysolites and Rubies Bacchus Brings, The | 982 |
| Bruce's Address to His Army at Bannockburn (Noote, Wha Hae) | 203 | Circassian Love-Chant, The (Lowell) | 352 |
| Buonaparte, Ode to Napoleon | 510 | Circling of the Mead Horns, The | 1000 |
| Burial of Sir John Moore at Corunna, The | 432 | Citation and Examination of William Shakspeare, From The... | 966 |
| Burke, Edmund (1729-1797) | 1186, 1208 | Claron | 468 |
| Burns, Robert (1759-1796) | 175, 1210 | Clod and the Pebble, The | 170 |
| Busk ye, busk ye, my bonny bonny bride | 13 | Close by the ever-burning brimstone beds | 917 |
| Bust of Bacchus, On a | 880 | Cloud, The | 703 |
| Butterfly, To a (Wordsworth—I've watched you now) | 282 | Clouds, lingering yet, extend in solid bars | 302 |
| Butterfly, To a (Wordsworth—Stay near me) | 281 | Clovelly | 1150 |
| Byron, George Noel Gordon, Lord (1788-1824) | 484, 1217 | Cobbett, William (1763-1835) | 1002, 1230 |
| Byron ' how sweetly sad thy melody ' | 752 | Coleridge, Hartley (1796-1849) | 1171, 1232 |
| Byron, To | 752 | Coleridge, Samuel Taylor (1772-1834) | 328, 1232 |
| By the blue taper's trembling light | 5 | Collins, William (1721-1759) | 48, 1244 |
| By the power which hath broken | 561 | Come, all ye jolly shepherds | 476 |
| Cadyow Castle | 439 | Come back, ye wandering Muses, come back home | 975 |
| Calm is all nature as a resting wheel | 223 | Come, dear Amanda, quit the town | 32 |
| Calm on the bosom of thy God | 1160 | Come from the sea | 483 |
| Cambridge and the Alps | 249 | Come hither, all sweet maidens, soberly | 764 |
| Campbell, Thomas (1777-1844) | 417, 1228 | Come, Sleep ' but mind ye ' if you come without | 972 |
| Can restlessness reach the cold sepulchred head | 424 | Comfort thee, O thou mourner, yet awhile ' | 970 |
| Can there be a moon in heaven tonight | 1238 | Composed by the Sea-side, near Calais, August, 1803 | 256 |
| Canadian Boat Song, A | 425 | Composed by the Side of Gramere Lake | 302 |
| Caradoc | 68 | Composed in One of the Catholic Cantons | 311 |
| Carthou A Poem | 86 | Composed in the Valley near Dover, on the Day of Landing | 287 |
| Castaway, The | 154 | Composed upon an Evening of Extraordinary Splendor and Beauty | 309 |
| Castle of Indolence, The | 24 | Composed upon Westminster Bridge, September 3, 1802 | 285 |
| Castle of Otranto, From The | 100 | Conan | 68 |
| Cataract of Lodore, The | 410 | Conan's name, my lay, rehearse | 68 |
| Cavalier Song (And What Though Winter Will Pinch Service) | 468 | Conceal not Time's misdeeds, but on my brow | 972 |
| Ceaseless, and rapid, and fierce, and free | 692 | Confessions of an English Opium Eater | 1043 |
| Celandine, To the (To the Same Flower) | 283 | Conjectures on Original Composition, From | 36 |
| Celandine, To the Small | 282 | Contented wi' Little | 204 |
| Chapman, George | 922 | Contented wi' Little, and cattle wi' mair | 204 |
| Chapman's Homer, On First Looking into | 753 | Corinna to Tanagra, From Athens | 967 |
| Character of the Happy Warrior | 298 | "Cornwall, Barry" (B. W. Procter) (1787-1874) | 1168, 1815 |
| Characteristics of a Child Three Years Old | 305 | Coronach | 456 |
| Characteristics of Shakspeare's Dramas | 395 | Corpses are cold in the tomb— | 655 |
| Characters of Dramatic Writers Contemporary with Shakspeare, From | 920 | Cottis Saturday Night, The | 188 |
| Characters of Shakspeare's Plays, From | 1007 | County Guy | 471 |
| Charles ' my slow heart was only sad, when first | 331 | Couplet (Great things are done when men and mountains meet) | 174 |
| Charles The First, From | 743 | Cowper, William (1731-1800) | 145, 1246 |
| Chase, The | 448 | Crabbe, George (1764-1832) | 154, 1250 |
| Chatterton, Thomas (1752-1770) | 125, 1229 | Crabbe's Poems, From Jeffrey's Review of | 884 |
| Chatterton, To | 752 | Cradle Song, A | 172 |
| Cherub-Charm, The Ancient Ballad of | 112 | Croker, John Wilson (1780-1857) | 913, 1252 |
| Child, is thy father dead? | 1105 | Crotchit Castle, From | 1001 |
| Child of a Day, Thou Knowest Not | 967 | Crusade, The | 77 |
| Child, To a | 315 | Cuckoo, To the (Wordsworth—Not the whole warbling grove in concert heard) | 312 |
| Child Harold's Pilgrimage, From (Byron) | 523 | Cuckoo, To the (Wordsworth—O blithe New-comer ' I have heard) | 294 |
| Child Harold's Pilgrimage, Oanto the Third From Jeffrey's Review of | 904 | Cunningham, Allan (1784-1842) | 475, 1252 |
| Childhood | 916 | Curse of Kehama, From The | 403 |
| Chimney-Sweeper, The | 171 | Cuthullin sat by Tara's wall..... | 92 |
| Chorus of Northumbrians | 1824 | Cyclamen, To a | 983 |
| Christabel | 343 | | |
| Christian Forbearance (A Poison Tree) | 171 | | |
| Christian Year, From The | 1133 | | |
| Christ's Hospital Five and Thirty Years Ago | 931 | | |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|---|------------|--|------------|
| Daffodils, The (I Wandered Lonely As a Cloud) | 295 | Distant Prospect of Eton College, Ode on a | 57 |
| Daisy, To a Mountain (Burns) | 194 | Distinc Image, The | 167 |
| Daisy, To the (Wordsworth—Bright Flower! whose home is everywhere) | 290 | Do you ask what the birds say? The Sparrow, the Dove | 864 |
| Daisy, To the (Wordsworth—In youth from rock to rock I went) | 288 | "Do you remember me? or are you proud?" | 965 |
| Daisy, To the (Wordsworth—To the Same Flower) | 289 | Does the eagle know what is in the pit | 168 |
| Dark, deep, and cold the current flows | 1168 | Don Juan, From | 577 |
| Darkness | 521 | Doom of Devergill, From The. | 471 |
| Darkness Has Dawned in the East | 788 | Doomed as we are our native dust | 311 |
| Daughter of Jove, relentless power.. . . . | 58 | Dream, A | 168 |
| Dave, To | 177 | Dream of Boccaccio, The | 996 |
| Day glimmered in the east, and the white moon | 210 | Dream of Eugene Aram, the Murderer, The | 1138 |
| Day, like our souls, is fiercely dark | 1105 | Dream of the Unknown, A (The Question) | 707 |
| Day Returns, My Natal Day, The | 974 | Dreams on the Borders of the Land of Poetry, From | 879 |
| Days of Old, In the | 1001 | Dream Children | 946 |
| Dear Alice! you'll laugh when you know it | 1149 | Dream-Fugue | 1125 |
| Dear Brook, farewell! Tomorrow's noon again | 228 | Dream-Pedlary | 1132 |
| Dear child of Nature, let them rail! | 298 | Dreary Change, The | 468 |
| Dear Harp of My Country | 428 | Drops of bloody agony flow | 670 |
| Dear Harp of my Country! in darkness I found thee | 428 | Dull Is My Verse Not Even Thou | 972 |
| Dear is my little native vale | 209 | Dungeon, The | 535 |
| Dear native regions, I foretell | 228 | Duty, Ode to | 296 |
| "Dearest Endymion! my entire love!" | 806 | Dyer, John (1700-1758) | 10, 1260 |
| Death (Shelley—Death is here, and death is there) | 709 | Dyer, To the Poet, John | 1280 |
| Death (Shelley—They die—the dead return not) | 650 | E Arundell, To | 982 |
| Death is here, and death is there | 709 | Earth has not anything to show more fair | 285 |
| Death of Artemidora, The | 907 | Earth, Ocean, Air, beloved brotherhood! | 635 |
| Death of Coleridge, The | 959 | Earth, ocean, air, night, mountains, winds, thy star | 651 |
| Death of Hoel, The. | 68 | Ecclesiastical Sonnets, From | 311 |
| Death of Mr. Thomson, Ode on the | 52 | Echoes we listen! | 676 |
| Death Song | 1152 | Edom o' Gordon | 117 |
| Death Stands above Me | 982 | Edward Williams, To | 740 |
| Death stands above me, whispering low | 982 | Elgiac Stanzas | 297 |
| Death, tho' I see him not, is near | 982 | Elegy on the Death of Adonis | 1341 |
| Death-Bed, The | 1140 | Elegy on the Death of Bion | 1141 |
| Death-Boat of Heligoland, The | 424 | Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard | 59 |
| Death's Jest Book, From | 1180 | Elgin Marbles, On Seeing the | 765 |
| Dedication to the Second, or Edinburgh Edition of Burns's Poems | 200 | Elliott, Ebenezer (1781-1849) | 1105, 1260 |
| Dedication to The Revolt of Islam | 648 | Emilia Villani, To | 729 |
| Deem not devoid of elegance the sage... | 77 | Enchanter of Erin, whose magic has bound us | 1308 |
| Deep in the shady sadness of a vale. | 549 | Enchantress, farewell, who so oft hast decoy'd me | 471 |
| Defense of Poetry, From A | 743 | Endymion (Keats) | 767 |
| Devil's Awa wi' th' Excelsior, The | 201 | Endymion. A Poetic Romance, Croker's Review of | 913 |
| Deflection An Ode | 360 | England in 1819 | 650 |
| Demands of Poetry, The | 579 | England's Dead | 1160 |
| Departing Year, Ode on the | 831 | English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, From | 485 |
| Departure of Mr Walter Scott, On the | 814 | English Mail-Coach, The | 1108 |
| De Quincey, Thomas (1785-1859) | 1043, 1253 | Enquiry Concerning Political Justice, From An | 213 |
| Descent of Odin, The | 67 | Enthusiasm, The, or, The Lover of Nature | 80 |
| "Describe the Borough"—though our idle tribe | 160 | Eolian Harp, The. | 320 |
| Destruction of Sennacherib, The | 513 | Epipsychidion | 720 |
| Deihs of Sir Charles Bawdin, The | 125 | Epistle to Augusta | 519 |
| Dirge | 968 | Epistle to Davie | 177 |
| Dirge, A (Hemans) | 1160 | Epistle to J Lapraik | 177 |
| Dirge, A (Shelley) | 743 | Epistle to The Rev. John M'Math | 179 |
| Dissertation upon Roast Pig, A | 948 | Epitaph | 370 |
| Dissolution of the Holy Alliance, The | 430 | Epitaph on Robert Camyngo | 134 |
| | | Ere on my bed my limbs I lay | 304 |
| | | Essay on Criticism, From An | 1176 |

INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND FIRST LINES

1417

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|---|------|--|---------|
| Essay on Man, From An | 1178 | Featherstone's Doom | 1181 |
| Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope, | | Feeling of Immortality in Youth, On the | 1037 |
| From | 85 | Feelings of a Republican on the Fall of Bona- | |
| Eternal hatred I have sworn against | 984 | parte | 635 |
| Eternal Spirit of the chainless Mind! | 514 | Fergusson, Robert (1750-74) From The | |
| Ethereal minstrel' pilgrim of the sky' . | 312 | Farmer's Ingle | 1214 |
| Eve of St. Agnes, The | 842 | Field Flower, A | 1366 |
| Eve of St. Mark, The | 848 | Fiend, I defy thee' with a calm, fixed mind | 685 |
| Evening (Shelley) | 789 | Fiesolan Idyl, A | 965 |
| Evening, Ode to (Collins) | 50 | Fifth Day's Interview, From | 996 |
| Evening Star, Ode to the | 47 | Fight, The | 1014 |
| Evening Walk, From An | 223 | Fill the blue horn, the blue buffalo horn | 1000 |
| Ever let the Fancy roam | 828 | Finch, Anna, Countess of Winchelsea (1661- | |
| Every Day Characters, From | 1147 | 1720) | 1, 1432 |
| Facile Balade of Charic, An | 132 | Fingal, in Ancient Epic Poem, From | 92 |
| Excursion, From The (Wordsworth) | 274 | First Fathers, The | 1181 |
| Excursion, From Jeffrey's Review of The | 892 | First Looking into Chapman's Homer, On | 733 |
| Exort thy voice, sweet harbinger of Spring' | 2 | First Sunday after Trinity | 1133 |
| Expostulation and Reply | 232 | First when Maggie was my care | 196 |
| Extempore Effusion upon the Death of James | | Fish, the Man, and the Spirit, The | 870 |
| Hogg | 315 | Fisherman's Song | 474 |
| Extinction of the Venetian Republic, On the | 286 | Five years have past, five summers, with the | |
| Extrait From the Conclusion of a Poem, Com- | | length | 233 |
| posed in Anticipation of Leaving School | 223 | Florio, The | 17 |
| | | Fletcher, John | 922 |
| Fables for the Holy Alliance, From | 430 | Flow gently, sweet Afton, among thy green | |
| Faintly as tolls the evening chime | 425 | braes | 196 |
| Fair Inc | 1136 | Flow, Precious Tears! Thus Shall My Rival | |
| Fair Isabel, poor simple Isabel' | 818 | Know | 964 |
| Fair seed-time had my soul, and I grew up | 242 | For a Grotto | 46 |
| Fair Star of evening, Splendor of the west | 286 | For A' That, an' A' That | 184 |
| Fair tree, for thy delightful shade | 1 | For an Epitaph at Fiesole | 963 |
| Fairies' Song (Song of Fairies Robbing Or- | | For auld lang syne, my dear | 195 |
| chard) | 869 | For Orford and for Waldegrave | 613 |
| Fairy Song | 1148 | For the Slender Beech and the Hapling Oak | 998 |
| Fairy Tale, A | 3 | For their elder sister's hair..... | 918 |
| Faithless Nelly Gray | 1135 | Foray, The | 473 |
| Faint Poets and True | 1137 | For'd from home and all its pleasures... | 148 |
| Fame, like a wayward girl, will still be coy | 830 | Ford, John | 921 |
| Fame, On | 830 | Forester's Carol, The | 1164 |
| Familiar Style, On | 1011 | Fountain, The (Rogers)... | 212 |
| Fancy (Keats) | 826 | Fountain, The (Wordsworth)... | 240 |
| Fancy, Ode to (Warton) | 84 | Four seasons fill the measure of the year | 767 |
| Fanny, To | 861 | Fragment of an Ode to Maud | 825 |
| Far from the sight of earth, yet bright and | | Franco An Ode | 351 |
| plain | 1172 | Francis Beaumont—John Fletcher | 922 |
| Far From Will | 513 | Fresh morning gusts have blown away all | |
| Far thee well' and if forever | 514 | fear | 753 |
| Farwell'—But Whenever You Welcome the | | Friar's Song, The (Though I Be Now a Gray, | |
| Hour | 427 | Gray Friar) | 999 |
| Farwell' If Ever Fondest Prayer | 484 | Friend of the wise' and teacher of the good', | 365 |
| Farewell, life! My senses swim | 1144 | Friends' hear the words my wandering | |
| Farewell to the Forest (The Woods That Off | | thoughts would say | 983 |
| at Sultry Noon) | 999 | From eve to morn, from morn to parting | |
| Farewell to the Highlands, Farewell to the | | night | 971 |
| North (My Heart's in the Highlands) | 196 | From Heaven my strains begin, from Heaven | |
| Farewell to the Land | 463 | descends | 44 |
| Farewell to the land where the clouds love | | From heavy dreams fair Helen rose..... | 433 |
| to rest | 463 | From low to high doth dissolution climb..... | 311 |
| Farewell to the Muse | 471 | From Stirling castle we had seen | 293 |
| Farmer's Ingle, From The | 1214 | From the brown crest of Newark its sum- | |
| Fatal Sisters, The | 66 | mons extending | 466 |
| Father' the little girl we see..... | 968 | From the ends of the earth, from the ends | |
| Fear not 'tis but some passing spasm | 660 | of the earth | 669 |
| Fears in Solitude | 353 | From the forests and highlands..... | 707 |
| | | From unremembered ages we..... | 671 |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|---|-----------|---|------------|
| Frost at Midnight | 350 | Ha' whare ye gaun, ye crowlin ferlie? | 104 |
| Funeral, The | 408 | Had I but the torrent's might | 68 |
| | | Had this effulgence disappeared | 800 |
| G. A. W., To | 768 | Hail to our Master!—Prince of Earth and Air! | 580 |
| Gene Were But the Winter Could | 478 | Hail to the chief who in triumph advances! | 455 |
| Garden of Boccaccio, The | 388 | Hail to the Headlong | 998 |
| Garden of Love The | 171 | Hail to the Headlong! the Headlong Ap-Head- | |
| Gebir, From | 959 | long! | 996 |
| Gellatley's Song to the Deerhounds (Hic | | Hail to thee, blithe spirit! | 704 |
| Away, Hic Away) | 465 | Hamadryad, The | 977 |
| Gentle Shepherd, From The | 9 | Hamilton, William, of Bangour (1704- | |
| Gentleman, To a | 365 | 1754) | 1267 |
| George Chapman | 922 | Hamlet | 1007 |
| Getting Up on Cold Mornings | 878 | Hampstead, To | 867 |
| Gipsy's Dirge, The (Wasted, Weary, Where- | | Happy Innumbability (Ntansas) | 768 |
| fore Stay) | 406 | Happy is England | 763 |
| Gipsy's Malison, The | 917 | Happy is England! I could be content | 768 |
| Give me, O indulgent Fate! | 1 | Hark, my soul! It is the Lord | 145 |
| Glee Me the Eyes That Look on Mine | 978 | Hark! 'Tis the Thrush | 816 |
| Glee for King Charles | 478 | Hark! 'tis the Thrush, undaunted, undeprest | 816 |
| Glennalas | 436 | Harold | 445 |
| Glory and loveliness have pass'd away | 704 | Harp of the North! that mouldering long | |
| Glory of Motion, The | 1108 | haat hung | 448 |
| Gloves and the Lions, The | 870 | Harp That Once through Tara's Halls, The | 426 |
| Go, fetch to me a pint o' wine | 195 | Harley Coleridge, To (To H O) | 288 |
| God moves in a mysterious way | 145 | Hast thou a charm to stay the morning-star | 362 |
| God said—"Let there be light!" | 1166 | Hast Thou Seen, with Flash Incessant | 800 |
| God Scatters Beauty As He Scatters Flowers | 953 | Have ye seen the tuskv boar | 68 |
| God's Judgment on a Wicked Bishop | 401 | Hawker, Robert Stephen (1804-1873) | 1267 |
| Godwin, William (1756-1836) | 213, 1261 | Hazlitt, William (1778-1830) | 1268 |
| Goethe in Weimar sleeps, and Greece | 1850 | He has conn'd the lesson now | 1148 |
| Going a Journey, On | 1022 | He is gone on the mountain | 456 |
| Going Down with Victory | 1118 | Headlong Hall, From | 998 |
| Gondola, The | 211 | Hear, Sweet Spirit, Hear the Spell | 866 |
| Goody Blake and Harry Gil | 228 | Hearing Music | 871 |
| Gordon, George Noel, Lord Byron (1788- | | Hearken, thou craggy ocean pyramid! | 825 |
| 1824) | 484, 1217 | Heart of Midlothian, From The | 468 |
| Grasshopper and Cricket, On the (Keats) | 764 | Heart's-Ease | 968 |
| Grasshopper and the Cricket, To the (Hunt) | 868 | Hellas, From | 787 |
| Grave, From The | 37 | Hellenica, From The | 975 |
| Grave of Burns, At the | 291 | Hellenica, On The | 975 |
| Grave of Charles Lamb in Edmonion, At the | 1297 | Hemans, Felicia Dorothea (1793- | |
| Graves of a Household, The | 1160 | 1835) | 1160, 1271 |
| Gray, Thomas (1716-1771) | 57, 1262 | Hence, iron-accepter'd Winter, haste | 76 |
| Gray's Letters, From | 69 | Her Eyes Are Wild | 229 |
| Great Men Have Been among Us | 287 | Her eyes are wild, her head is bare | 229 |
| Great spirits now on earth are sojourning | 768 | Here Ever Since You Went Abroad | 964 |
| Great things are done when men and moun- | | "Here lieth One whose name was writ on | |
| tains meet | 174 | water" | 740 |
| Grecian Urn, Ode on a | 827 | Here, oh here! | 690 |
| Green Grow the Rushes, O | 176 | Here, on our native soil, we breathe once | |
| Green Linnet, The | 200 | more | 287 |
| Green little vaulter in the sunny grass | 868 | Here Pause the Poet Claims at Least This | |
| Greenwood Tree, A (For the Slender Beech | | Praise | 306 |
| and the Sapling Oak) | 908 | Here, where precipitate Spring with one light | |
| Grongor Hill | 16 | bound | 965 |
| Grove of Love, The (Beneath the Cypress | | Herod's Lament for Mariamne | 512 |
| Shade) | 998 | Heroic Idyll, From | 984 |
| Gryll Grange, From | 1001 | Hesperus, Ode to (Ode to the Evening Star) | 47 |
| Guard-Room, The | 456 | Hester | 916 |
| Guy Mannering, From | 465 | Heywood, Thomas | 921 |
| | | Hic Away, Hic Away | 465 |
| H—, thou return'st from Thames, whose | | Highland Girl, To a | 292 |
| naiads long | 58 | Highland Laddie, The | 7 |
| H. C., To | 288 | Highland Mary | 202 |
| Ha! ha! the caverns of my hollow mountains | 695 | | |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|--|------|--|------|
| His Young Rose an Old Man Said, To | 983 | I grieved for Buonaparté, with a vain ... | 285 |
| History of the Caliph Vathek, From The | 134 | I had a dream, which was not all a dream . | 521 |
| Mogg, James (1772-1835) 476, | 1271 | I hated thee, fallen tyrant! I did groan . | 685 |
| Hohenlinden | 420 | I have beheld thee in the morning hour | 968 |
| Holly Tree, The | 401 | I have had playmates, I have had companions | |
| Holy Fair, The | 185 | (The Old Familiar Faces) | 916 |
| Holy Thursday | 170 | I have lived, and I have loved | 1171 |
| Holy Willie's Prayer | 1212 | I heard a thousand blended notes | 281 |
| Homage | 968 | I Held Her Hand, the Pledge of Bliss | 964 |
| Homer (H. Coleridge) | 1172 | I know not whether I am proud . | 974 |
| Homer, To (Keats) | 825 | I loved him not, and yet now he is gone | 966 |
| Homes of England, The | 1161 | I met a traveller from an antique land | 650 |
| Honey from silkworms who can gather | 650 | I mourn Adonis dead—loveliest Adonis | 1241 |
| Wood, Thomas (1799-1845) 1135, | 1272 | I once was a maid, tho I cannot tell when | 181 |
| Hope | 105 | I pant for the music which is divine | 741 |
| Hours of Idleness, From Brougham's Review | | I played with you mild cowslips blowing | 1001 |
| of | 1220 | I Remember, I Remember | 1136 |
| How does the water | 410 | I sate beside a sage's bed | 672 |
| How fever'd is the man, who cannot look | 830 | I saw a horrid thing of many names | 1167 |
| How Many Bards Gild the Lapser of Time | 753 | I saw an aged beggar in my walk . | 234 |
| How many summers, love | 1170 | I saw where in the shroud did lurk | 917 |
| How Many Times Do I Love Thee, Dear? | 1130 | I shiver, Spirit fierce and bold | 291 |
| How Many Voices Gaily Ring | 975 | I sing the fates of Gebir He had dwelt | 959 |
| How, my dear Mary, are you critic-bitten | 710 | I spin beneath my pyramid of night | 697 |
| How shall I meet thee, Summer, wont to fill | 105 | I stood in Venice, on the Bridge of Sighs | 541 |
| How sleep the brave who sink to rest | 50 | I stood on Brocken's sovran height, and saw | 359 |
| How Sweet I Roamed | 160 | I Stood Tiptoe upon a Little Hill | 754 |
| How sweet I roamed from field to field | 106 | I strove, with none, for none was worth my | |
| How sweet is the shepherd's sweet lot! | 167 | strife | 982 |
| How Sweet It Is, When Mother Fancy Rocks | 301 | I thought of thee, my partner and my guide | 311 |
| How sweet the tuncful bells' responsive peal! | 164 | I Travelled among Unknown Men | 238 |
| Human Reasons, The | 767 | I travelled through a land of men | 173 |
| Hunt, James Henry Leigh (1784-1859) 806, | 1275 | I Wandered Lonely As a Cloud . | 295 |
| Hunt, Esq., To Leigh | 764 | I want a hero, an uncommon want | 579 |
| Hunter's Song, The | 1169 | I was angry with my friend | 171 |
| Hunting of the Cheviot, The (The Ancient | | I was thy neighbor once, thou rugged Pile! | 297 |
| Ballad of Chevy-Chase) | 112 | I weep for Adonais—he is dead! | 730 |
| Hunting Song | 440 | I went to the Garden of Love | 171 |
| Hurd, Richard (1720-1808) 97, | 1278 | I Will Not Love | 967 |
| Hurray, hurray, the jade's away | 481 | I Wonder Now That Youth Remains ... | 903 |
| Hymn before Sunrise in the Vale of Cham- | | I would not enter on my list of friends | 148 |
| mount | 362 | Ianthe, Lyrics to | 968 |
| Hymn of Apollo | 707 | Ianthe! you are call'd to cross the sea | 964 |
| Hymn of Pan | 707 | Idiot Boy, From The | 1248 |
| Hymn on the Seasons, A | 23 | If from My Lips Some Angry Accents Fell | 916 |
| Hymn to Adversity | 58 | If from the public way you turn your steps . | 266 |
| Hymn to Contentment, A | 6 | If Nature, for a favorite child | 239 |
| Hymn to Intellectual Beauty | 644 | If ought of oaten stop, or pastoral song | 50 |
| Hyperion | 849 | If solitude hath ever led thy steps | 627 |
| | | If there were dreams to sell | 1132 |
| I am a bard of no regard | 184 | If This Great World of Joy and Pain | 314 |
| I am a son of Mars, who have been in many | | If Thou Indeed Derive Thy Light from Heaven | 314 |
| Wars | 181 | If Thou Wilt Ease Thine Heart | 1131 |
| I am as a spirit who has dwelt | 661 | If to thy heart I were as near | 1165 |
| I am not one who much or oft delight | 800 | I'll give thee, good fellow, a twelvemonth or | |
| I am the rider of the wind | 551 | twain | 468 |
| I arise from dreams of thee | 601 | I'm three times doubly o'er your debtor | 177 |
| I bring fresh showers for the thirsting flowers | 708 | Imaginary Conversations, From . | 985 |
| I Cannot Tell, Not I, Why She | 971 | Imitation of Spenser | 751 |
| I come to visit thee again | 983 | Immortality, Ode on | 303 |
| I cry your mercy—pity—love—aye, love! | 861 | In a dream-nighted December | 763 |
| I dreamed that, as I wandered by the way | 707 | In a Library (My Days among the Dead Arc | |
| I dug, beneath the cypress shade | 998 | Past) | 408 |
| I Entreat You, Alfred Tennyson | 982 | In Britain's isle and Arthur's days | 8 |
| I fear thy kisses, gentle maiden | 700 | In lover's ear a wild voice cried | 1132 |
| I Grieved for Buonaparté | 285 | In Memory of Walter Savage Landor .. | 1301 |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|--|------|--|------------|
| In my poor mind it is most sweet to muse | 916 | Jeanie Morrison | 1163 |
| In such a night, when every louder wind | 2 | Jeffrey, Francis (1773-1850) .. | 884, 1270 |
| In the atmosphere we breathe | 678 | Jenny kissed me when we met | 870 |
| In the blue depth of the waters | 550 | Jock of Haeledean | 467 |
| In the Days of Old | 1001 | John Anderson My Jo | 196 |
| In the sweet shire of Cardigan | 280 | John Anderson my jo, John | 196 |
| In the wide sea there lives a forlorn wretch | 802 | John Ford . . . | 921 |
| In the world unknown | 676 | John Webster | 921 |
| In Virgyn the sweltie sun gan sheene | 182 | Johnson, Samuel (1709-1784) | 1180, 1282 |
| In Xanadu did Kubla Khan | 358 | Jolly Beggars, The | 180 |
| In yonder grave a druid lies | 52 | Joseph Ablett, To .. | 960 |
| In youth from rock to rock I went | 288 | Journal in France, From .. | 68 |
| Indian Serenade, The | 661 | Journal in the Lakes, From . | 78 |
| Indolence, Ode on | 828 | | |
| Influence of Natural Objects (The Prelude, 1, 401-68) | | Keats, John (1795-1821) | 751, 1284 |
| Influence of Time on Grief | 243 | Keats, On | 740 |
| Inland, within a hollow vale, I stood | 165 | Keats's Letters, From | 861 |
| Inscription for a Fountain on a Heath (Cole-ridge) | 287 | Kable, John (1792-1866) | 1133, 1294 |
| Inscription for a Fountain (Procter) | 304 | Keen, Pitful Gusts do Whup ring Here and There . . | 753 |
| Inscription in the Cinema, An | 1170 | Keene | 477 |
| Inside of King's College Chapel, Cambridge | 209 | King Francis was a hearty king, and loved a | |
| Intimations of Immortality | 312 | royal sport | 870 |
| Introduction to Songs of Innocence | 303 | King of the stormy sea' . | 805 |
| Introduction to the Poems of Opium, From | 166 | Kimmont Willie | 441 |
| Iphigenia and Agamemnon | 1067 | Knight's Tomb, The | 367 |
| Iphigenia, when she heard her doom | 976 | Knocking at the Gate in Macbeth, On the | 1080 |
| Irish Melodies, From . . | 976 | Know ye the land where the cypress and myr- tle | 496 |
| Is It Not Better at an Early Hour | 425 | Koskiusko | 329 |
| Is there a whim-inspired fool | 974 | Kubla Khan | 358 |
| Is There for Honest Poverty | 193 | | |
| Is this a holy thing to see | 204 | | |
| Is thy face like thy mother's, my fair child' | 170 | La Belle Dame Sans Merci | 829 |
| Is your war-pipe asleep, and forever, M'Kilm- man? | 523 | La Fayette | 829 |
| Isabella, or The Pot of Basil | | Lachin y Gair | 484 |
| Isidore | 482 | Lady of the Lake, From The | 448 |
| Isle, The | 818 | Lady, Was It Fair of Thee | 1181 |
| It fell about the Martinmas | 1288 | Lady with Flowers from the Roman Wall, To a | 436 |
| It flows through old hush'd Egypt and its sands | 748 | Lake of Geneva, The | 210 |
| It interpenetrates my granite mass | 117 | Lake of the Dismal Swamp, The | 424 |
| It Is a Beautiful Evening, Calm and Free | 868 | Lalla Rookh, From | 429 |
| It is an ancient Mariner | 995 | Lamb, Charles (1775-1834) | 915, 1295 |
| It Is Not to Be Thought Of That the Flood | 286 | Lament (Scott) | 462 |
| It is the first mild day of March | 335 | Lament, A (Shelley) | 729 |
| It keeps eternal whisperings around | 258 | Lament in rhyme, lament in prose . . | 176 |
| It may indeed be phantasy, when I | 211 | Lamia | 882 |
| It Often Comes into My Head | 765 | Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers in New Eng- land | 1161 |
| It seems a day | 867 | Landor, Walter Savage (1775-1864). | 959, 1300 |
| It was a summer evening | 903 | Laodamia | 306 |
| It was a well | 237 | Lassie wi' the Last White Locks | 204 |
| It Was an April Morning | 400 | Last Man, The | 423 |
| It was an April morning fresh and clear | 212 | Last May a Braw Wooer | 202 |
| It was not in the winter | 278 | Last May a braw wooer cam down the lang glen | 202 |
| Italian Song, An | 1138 | Lately Our Songsters Laiter'd in Green Lanes | 984 |
| Italy, From | 209 | Laughing Song .. | 167 |
| Ioanchoe, From | 210 | Lay of Rosabelle, The (Harold) . . . | 445 |
| I've had a dream that bodes no good | 468 | Lay of the Imprisoned Huntsman | 462 |
| I've often wished that I could write a book | 430 | Lay of the Laborer, The | 1143 |
| I've wandered east, I've wandered west | 1225 | Lay of the Last Minstrel, From The | 444 |
| I've watched you now a full half-hour | 1163 | Leaves Are Falling, No Am I, The . | 973 |
| | 282 | Leech Gatherer, The (Resolution and Independ- ence) | 283 |
| Jane, To | 742 | Leigh Hunt, Esq, To | 764 |
| Jealous, I own it, I was once— | 1273 | | |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|---|---------------------|---|----------|
| Leofric and Godiva | 991 | Lines Written in the Album at Eldingerode, in the Hartz Forest | 359 |
| Lesbia Hath a Beaming Eye | 426 | Little Aglae to Her Father on Her Statue Being Called Like Her | 968 |
| Let Dew the Flowers Fall | 1133 | Literature of Knowledge and Literature of Power | 1101 |
| Let me ryke up to fight that tear | 183 | Little Black Boy, The | 167 |
| Letters | | Lives of the English Poets, From The | 1185 |
| Burns to Alison | 1280 | Lo' where the four mimosa's blend their shade | 963 |
| Burns to Thomson | 1217 | Lo' where the rosy-bosom'd Hours | 57 |
| Byron to Murray (2) | 1224, 1225 | Lochiel, Lochiel! beware of the day | 420 |
| Cowper to Johnson | 1248 | Lochiel's Warning | 420 |
| Cowper to Mrs Cowper | 1247 | Lookinvar | 447 |
| Cowper to Unwin (3) | 1202, 1247, 1248 | Lock the Door, Lariston | 483 |
| Gray to Hurd | 1264 | Lock the door, Lariston, lion of Liddesdale | 483 |
| Gray to Mason (2) | 72 | London, 1802 | 287 |
| Gray to Mrs Gray | 69 | Lone Flower, hemmed in with snows, and white as they | 310 |
| Gray to Stonehewer | 71 | Long night succeeds thy little day | 1000 |
| Gray to Walpole (3) | 71, 1203, 1205 | Look how the lark soars upward and is gone | 1137 |
| Gray to Went | 70 | Lord of the Celtic dells | 969 |
| Gray to Wharton (2) | 71, 1244 | Lord Randal | 444 |
| Johnson to Macpherson | 1805 | Lord Ronald's Coronach | 436 |
| Keats to Bailey (3) | 861, 1287, 1291 | Lord Thomas and Fair Ellen | 118 |
| Keats to George Keats | 1290 | Lord Thomas he was a bold forrester | 118 |
| Keats to George and Georgiana Keats (3) | 864, 1226 | Lord Ullin's Daughter | 421 |
| Keats to Healey | 864 | Lowce, To a | 194 |
| Keats to Reynolds (4) | 802 865, 1211, 1289 | Love (Coleridge) | 359 |
| Keats to Shelley | 865 | Love and Age | 1001 |
| Keats to Taylor | 863 | Love Goes A-Hawking (A Ho' ' Ho') | 1130 |
| Lamb to Wordsworth (2) | 918, 1299 | Love in a hut, with water and a crust | 838 |
| Letters from Tinternmouth From | 1146 | Love, On (Shelley) | 1330 |
| Letters on Chivalry and Romance, From | 97 | Love seeketh not itself to please. | 170 |
| Lerana and Our Ladies of Morrow | 1097 | Lovely Lass of Preston Mill, The | 475 |
| Lewth, or The Curranian Love-Chant | 352 | Lovely, lasting prence of mind' | 6 |
| Library, In a (My Days among the Dead Are Past) | 408 | Lover of Nature, The | 80 |
| Lie, my fond heart at rest | 964 | Love's Philosophy | 661 |
| Life (Coleridge) | 328 | Lowest Thou Me? | 145 |
| Life (Procter) | 1169 | Loving she is, and tractable, though wild | 305 |
| Life May Change, but It May Fly Not | 737 | Low was our pretty cot our tallest rose | 330 |
| Life of Life' thy lips enkindle | 682 | Lucey Gray | 241 |
| Life of Nelson, From The | 411 | Lusty Hearts' to the wood, to the merry green wood | 1164 |
| Life Panics Not as Some Men Say | 968 | Lyrics, to Ianthe | 903 |
| Lifting of the Banner of the House of Buclouch, Lanes on the | 406 | Mackery End, in Hertfordshire | 944 |
| Light of the Harem, From The | 429 | Macpherson, James (1738-1736) | 86, 1305 |
| Light Shining out of Darkness | 145 | Madonna, wherefore hast thou sent to me | 729 |
| Like the ghost of a dear friend dead | 710 | Mahmoud | 868 |
| Lincs (Beddoes)—Write it in gold—A spirit of the sun) | 1129 | Maid I Love Ne'er Thought of Me, The | 971 |
| Lincs (Keats)—Unfelt, unheard, unseen) | 763 | Maid Marian, From | 998 |
| Lincs (Shelley)—The cold earth slept below) | 648 | Maid of Athens, Ere We Part | 496 |
| Lincs (Shelley)—We meet not as we parted) | 743 | Maid of Neidpath, The | 446 |
| Lincs (Shelley)—When the lamp is shattered) | 741 | Maid of the Sea, The | 483 |
| Lincs Composed a Few Miles above Tintern Abbey | 233 | Maid's Lament, The | 966 |
| Lincs Left upon a Seat in a Yew Tree | 223 | Mallet, David (1705-1765) | 15, 1307 |
| Lincs on the Death of Charles Lamb | 1296 | Manfred | 549 |
| Lincs on the Lifting of the Banner of the House of Buclouch | 406 | Man, who wert once a despot and a slave | 698 |
| Lincs on the Mermaid Tavern | 766 | Many a green isle needs must be | 651 |
| Lincs to a Ortic | 650 | Many love music but for music's sake | 982 |
| Lincs Written among the Eucanean Hills | 651 | Marcellus and Hannibal | 987 |
| Lincs Written during the Castlereagh Administration | 655 | March, march, Ettrick and Teviot-dale | 469 |
| Lincs Written in a Blank Leaf of the "Prometheus Unbound" | 1129 | March to Moscow, The | 405 |
| Lincs Written in Early Spring | 231 | March, march, Make-rags of Borrowdale | 1324 |
| | | Margaret Love Peacock | 1000 |
| | | Marmion, From | 446 |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|--|------------|--|------|
| Mary Morison | 175 | Murray, To Mr (Strahan, Tonson, Lintot of the Times) | 508 |
| Mary, To (Cowper—The twentieth year is well-nigh past) | 153 | Muse of my native land ' loftiest Muse ' | 806 |
| Mary, To (Shelley—How, my dear Mary, are you critic-bitten) | 710 | Muses, To the | 166 |
| Mary, To (Shelley—So now my summer task is ended, Mary) | 648 | Musio (Shelley) | 741 |
| Mask of Anarchy, The. | 655 | Musio, On (Landon) | 982 |
| Matthew | 239 | Music, when soft voices die | 729 |
| Mawgon of Melhuach | 1151 | Mutability (Wordsworth—From low to high doth dissolution climb) | 311 |
| May, 1840 | 1172 | Mutability (Shelley—The flower that smiles today) | 729 |
| Maseppa | 569 | Mutability (Shelley—We are as clouds that veil the midnight moon) | 634 |
| Melancholy, Ode on | 827 | My Boat Is on the Shore. | 508 |
| Memorial Verses, From | 1350 | My bonie lass, I work in brass | 183 |
| Memory | 985 | My Bowser | 880 |
| Men of England, wherefore plough | 659 | My briar that smelledst sweet | 940 |
| Men of Gotham, The (Seamen Thrice ' What Men Be Ye?) | 998 | My brother Jack was mine in May | 1858 |
| Men of Kent, To the | 294 | My couriers are fed with the lightning | 681 |
| Mental Traveller, The | 173 | My Days among the Dead are Past | 408 |
| Metellus and Marius | 989 | My dwelling is the shadow of the night | 551 |
| Michael | 260 | My First Acquaintance with Poets | 1028 |
| Midnight, and yet no eye | 403 | My hair is gray, but not with years | 515 |
| Midnight Wind, The | 915 | My hawk is tired of perch and hood | 462 |
| Mild Is the Parting Year, and Sweet | 904 | My heart aches, and a drowsy numbness pains | 831 |
| Milton, From | 174 | My heart has thank'd thee, Bowles ' for those soft strains | 329 |
| Milton ' thou shouldst be living at this hour | 287 | My heart is a-breaking, dear tittle ' | 197 |
| Minstrel, The, Or The Progress of Genius | 120 | My Heart Leaps Up | 282 |
| Minstrel Boy, The | 427 | My heart leaps up when I behold | 282 |
| Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, From The | 441 | My Heart's in the Highlands | 196 |
| Misery, Oh, misery to me | 666 | My heart's in the Highlands, my heart is not here | 196 |
| Misfortunes of Elphin, From The | 1000 | My Head Is Like to Rend, Willie | 1164 |
| M'Kimman | 482 | My Hopes Retire, My Wishes Is Before | 974 |
| Monarch of Gods and Demons, and all Spirits | 662 | My lov'd my honor'd, much respected friend ' | 188 |
| Monastery, From The | 409 | My mother bore me in the southern wild. | 167 |
| Monks and the Giants, From The | 1225 | My Lante, O | 175 |
| Mont Blanc | 616 | My Name's Awa | 203 |
| Mont Blanc is the monarch of mountains | 550 | My Ninth Decade, To | 985 |
| Montgomery, James (1771-1854)—A Field Flower | 1366 | My Peggy | 7 |
| Month after month the gathered rains descend | 1278 | My Peggy is a young thing | 7 |
| Moon, To the | 709 | My pensive Sara ' thy soft cheek reclined | 329 |
| Moore Centennial Celebration, From For the | 1308 | My Silks and Fine Array | 166 |
| Moore, Thomas (1779-1852) | 424, 1107 | My sister ' my sweet sister ' if a name | 519 |
| Moore, To Thomas (My Boat Is on the Shore) | 568 | My Sister, To | 231 |
| Moral Effects of Aristocracy | 221 | My Son, these maxims make a rule | 193 |
| Mortal ' to thy bidding bow'd | 550 | My soul is an enchanted boat | 682 |
| Most Sweet It Is with Unuplifted Eyes | 315 | My Soul Is Dark | 512 |
| Mother, I Cannot Mind My Wheel | 972 | My soul is dark—Oh ' quickly string | 512 |
| Mother of Hermes ' and still youthful Maia ' | 825 | My spirit is too weak—mortality | 765 |
| Mother of musings, Contemplation sage | 75 | My spirit like a charmed bark doth swim | 1337 |
| Motherwell, William (1797-1835) | 1162, 1109 | My spirit's on the mountains, where the birds | 432 |
| Mountain Daisy, To a | 194 | My wings are folded o'er mine ears | 665 |
| Mouse, To a | 190 | Mynstrelles Song (Chatterton—O ' syngs untow me roundelale) | 181 |
| Mr Cobbett ask'd leave to bring in very soon | 1814 | Mynstrelles Song (Chatterton—The boddynge florettes blushes att the lyghte) | 180 |
| Mr Murray, To (For Orford and for Waldegrave) | 613 | Naiad for Grecian waters ' | 1153 |
| Mr. Murray, To (Strahan, Tonson, Lintot of the Times) | 508 | Napoleon Buonaparte, Ode to | 510 |
| Mrs Battle's Opinions on Whist | 940 | National Airs, From | 428 |
| Much have I travell'd in the realms of gold | 753 | Natural Objects, Influence of (The Prelude, 1, 401-63) | 243 |
| "Multum Dilatit" | 1172 | Nature ' thou mayest fume and fret | 982 |
| Murray, To Mr. (For Orford and for Waldegrave) | 613 | Nature, To | 367 |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|---|------------|--|------|
| ay, Thank Me Not Again for Those. | 983 | O, my love is like a red, red rose | 208 |
| Nay, traveller! rest This lonely yew-tree | | O, Onor I Lov'd a Bonie Lass | 175 |
| stands | 223 | O parent of each lovely Muse. | 84 |
| Near Dover, September, 1802 | 287 | O Patie, let me gang, I maunna stay | 9 |
| Negro's Complaint, The | 148 | O reader! hast thou ever stood to see | 401 |
| Night (H Coleridge) | 1171 | O, Robin Hood was a bowman good | 471 |
| Night Thoughts, From | 83 | O Sandy, why leaves thou thy Nelly to mourn? | 9 |
| Night, To (Shelley) | 728 | O, saw ye bonie Lesley | 202 |
| Nightingale, Ode to a (Keats) | 831 | O saw ye not fair lnes? | 1136 |
| Nightingale, The (Akenaide—Ode to the Even | | O soft embalmer of the still midnight | 830 |
| ing Star) | 47 | O Solitude! if I must with thee dwell | 754 |
| Nightingale, The (Coleridge) | 356 | O Sorrow | 808 |
| Nightingale, To the (Countess of Winchelsea) | 2 | O sovereign power of love! O grief! O | |
| Nightmare Abbey, From .. | 998 | balm! | 780 |
| Night-Piece on Death, A | 5 | O ' synges untow mie roundelale | 131 |
| Nile, The (Hunt) | 868 | O thou by Nature taught | 48 |
| Nile, To the (Keats) | 767 | O Thou that in the heavens does dwell | 1212 |
| Nile, To the (Shelley) | 1278 | O Thou unknown, Almighty Cause | 175 |
| Ninth Decade, To My | 985 | O thou! whatever title suit thee | 191 |
| No cloud, no relique of the sunken day | 356 | O thou, who plumed with strong desire | 708 |
| Noctua imbrimana, From | 1153 | O thou! whose fancies from afar are brought | 288 |
| Nocturnal Reverie, A | 2 | O thou with dewy locks, who look'st down | 166 |
| No fish stir in our heaving net | 474 | O Time! who know'st a lenient hand to lay | 165 |
| No more my visionary soul shall dwell | 328 | O, Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast | 205 |
| No, My Own Love of Other Years | 965 | O what a loud and fearful shriek was there | 829 |
| No, no! go not to Lethe, neither twist | 827 | "O where hae ye been, Lord Randal, my son?" | 444 |
| No! those days are gone away | 766 | O wild West Wind, thou breath of Autumn's | |
| Nor happiness, nor majesty, nor fame | 729 | being | 680 |
| "North, Christopher" (John Wilson) (1785- | | O, Willie brew'd a peck o' maut | 197 |
| 1854) | 1154, 1352 | O world! O life! O time! ... | 729 |
| Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note | 432 | O ye who are sae guid yourself | 193 |
| Not here, O teeming 'tivity, was it meet | 1207 | O, young Lochinvar is come out of the west! | 447 |
| Not the whole warbling grove in concert heard | 312 | Obscurest night involv'd the sky | 154 |
| November (H Coleridge) | 1171 | Observations on The Fairy Queen of Spenser, | |
| November, 1793 (Bowles 1bsence) | 163 | From | 79 |
| November, 1806 (Wordsworth) | 302 | October, 1803 | 294 |
| "Now," A Descriptive of a Hot Day | 877 | Ode (Bards of Passion and of Mirth) | 826 |
| Now in her green mantle blythe Nature ar- | | Ode for Musio, An | 51 |
| rays | 203 | Ode Intimations of Immortality | 303 |
| Now Morning from her orient chamber came | 751 | Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College | 57 |
| Now the golden Morn aloft | 65 | Ode on a Grecian Urn | 827 |
| Now the storm begins to lower | 66 | Ode on Immortality | 303 |
| Now Fret Not at Their Content's Narrow | | Ode on Indolence | 828 |
| Room | 300 | Ode on Melancholy | 827 |
| Nurse's Song | 171 | Ode on the Approach of Summer, From | 76 |
| Netting | 237 | Ode on the Death of Mr. Thomson | 52 |
| Nymph of the downward smile and sidelong | | Ode on the Departing Year | 331 |
| glance | 763 | Ode on the Pleasure Arising from Vicissitude | 65 |
| O blithe Newcomer! I have heard | 294 | Ode on the Poetical Character | 49 |
| O, Bigsmall banks are wild and fair | 464 | Ode on the Popular Superstitions of the High- | |
| O Chatterton! how very sad thy fate! | 752 | lands of Scotland, An | 53 |
| O friend! I know not which way I must look | 287 | Ode on the Spring | 57 |
| O Goddess! hear these tuneless numbers, | | Ode to a Nightingale | 331 |
| wrung | 830 | Ode to Duty | 296 |
| O golden tongued Romance, with serene lute! | 766 | Ode to Evening | 50 |
| O have ye na heard o the fause Sakeldee! | 441 | Ode to Fancy | 84 |
| O hone a rie! O hone a rie! | 436 | Ode to Hesperus (Ode to the Evening Star) | 47 |
| O I could laugh to hear the midnight wind | 915 | Ode to Napoleon Buonaparte | 510 |
| O lady, leave thy wilken thread | 1135 | Ode to Psyche | 830 |
| O, Lay Thy Loof in Mine, Lass | 205 | Ode to Simplicity | 48 |
| O listen, listen, ladies gay | 445 | Ode to the Evening Star | 47 |
| O, lovers' eyes are sharp to see | 446 | Ode to the West Wind | 680 |
| O Mary, at thy window be! | 175 | Ode Written during the Negotiations with | |
| O mortal man, who livest here by toil | 24 | Buonaparte | 406 |
| O my bonny, bonny Highland laddie! . . . | 7 | Ode Written in the Beginning of the Year | |
| | | 1748 | 50 |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|---|------|---|-----------|
| O'er the level plains, where mountains greet me as I go | 1145 | On Muslo | 982 |
| O'er yon churchyard the storm may lower.... | 1148 | On Seeing a Hair of Lucretia Berghs . | 968 |
| Of A' the Airs | 195 | On Seeing the Elgin Marbles | 765 |
| Of a' the airs the wind can blow | 195 | On Sitting Down to Read "King Lear" Once Again | 766 |
| Of a Virtuous Despotism | 219 | On Southey's Death | 983 |
| Of late, in one of those most weary hours | 368 | On the brink of the night and the morning | 681 |
| Of Legislative and Executive Power | 219 | On the Departure of Sir Walter Scott from Abbotsford, for Naples | 314 |
| Of the Powers of Man Considered in His So- cial Capacity | 218 | On the Extinction of the Venetian Republic | 286 |
| Of the Night of Shops | 241 | On the Feeling of Immortality in Youth | 1037 |
| Of I had heard of Lucy Gray | 241 | On the Grasshopper and Cricket | 764 |
| Of, in the Still Night | 428 | On The Hellenes | 975 |
| Oh! Blame Not the Bard | 426 | On the Knocking at the Gate in Macbeth | 1080 |
| Oh! blame not the bard, if he fly to the bowers | 426 | On the Realities of Imagination, From Norfolk | 149 |
| Oh! Bold Robin Hood in a Forester Good | 999 | On the Sea | 765 |
| Oh, Breathe Not His Name! | 425 | On the Smooth Brow and Clustering Hair | 903 |
| Oh, breathe not his name! let it sleep in the shade | 425 | On the Statue of Ebenezer Elliott, From | 1280 |
| Oh, Come to Me When Daylight Sets | 428 | On the wide level of a mountain's head | 366 |
| Oh, Fly with Me! 'Tis Pannion's Hour | 1145 | On This Day I Complete My Thirty-Sixth Year | 620 |
| Oh, follow, follow! | 676 | Once a dream did weave a shade | 164 |
| Oh, for a lodge in some vast wilderness | 147 | Once, and once only, have I seen thy face | 1296 |
| Oh! How I Love, on a Fair Summer's Eve | 764 | Once did she hold the gorgeous East in fee . | 286 |
| Oh, Mariamne! now for thee | 512 | One Lovely Name Adorns My Song | 963 |
| Oh, Nay Not That My Heart Is Cold | 432 | One more unfortunate | 1142 |
| Oh! Snatch'd Away in Beauty's Bloom | 512 | One morn before me were three figures seen | 824 |
| Oh, talk not to me of a name great in story | 628 | One Slapping, To | 1837 |
| Oh, that those lips had language! Life has pass'd | 149 | One Who Has Been Long in City Pent, To | 754 |
| Oh! there are spirits of the air | 634 | One word is too often profaned | 789 |
| "Oh! what is that comes gliding in". | 1140 | One Year Ago My Path Was Green | 973 |
| Oh, what will a' the lads do | 228 | Oxford and for Waldegrave, For | 613 |
| Oh! what's the matter? what's the matter?.. | 91 | Our Ball | 1146 |
| Old Adam, the Carrion Crow | 1181 | Our bark is on the waters wide around | 477 |
| Old China | 951 | Our hands contain the hearts of men | 559 |
| Old Cumberland Beggar, The | 234 | Our +poll is won | 692 |
| Old Familiar Faces, The | 916 | Our vicar still preaches that Peter and Poule | 457 |
| Old Lady, The | 871 | Owen's praise demands my song | 68 |
| Old Man's Comforts, The | 401 | Ozymandias | 650 |
| Old Man's Wish, An | 1171 | Pains of Opium, The | 1070 |
| Old Mortality, From | 468 | Pains of Sleep, The | 364 |
| Olney Hymns, From | 145 | Painter, To a | 972 |
| On a battle-trumpet's blast | 672 | Panicles, lilies, kingcups, daisies | 282 |
| On a Bust of Bacchus | 880 | Pantocracy | 328 |
| On a Faded Violet | 651 | Paper Money Lyrics, From | 1824 |
| On a Picture of Leander | 764 | Parnell, Thomas (1679-1718) | 3, 1310 |
| On a poet's lips I slept | 672 | Passions, The | 51 |
| On an Infant Dying As Soon As Born | 917 | Past, The | 650 |
| On Fame (Keats)—Fame, like a wayward girl, will still be coy | 830 | Past Ruin'd Men Helen Loves | 904 |
| On Fame (Keats)—How fever'd is the man, who cannot look | 830 | "Pater Vester Pascit Illa" | 1152 |
| On Familiar Style | 1011 | Patie and Peggy | 9 |
| On First Looking into Chapman's Homer | 758 | Peace! What Do Tears Atall! | 1170 |
| On Going a Journey | 1022 | Peacock, Thomas Love (1785-1866) | 998, 1310 |
| On His Own Agamemnon and Iphigenia | 971 | Pelton and Ossa | 281 |
| On His Seventy-Fifth Birthday | 982 | Pellon and Ossa flourish side by side | 281 |
| On Keats | 740 | Pentameron, From The | 996 |
| On King Arthur's Round Table at Winchester | 76 | Percy, Thomas (1728-1811) | 110, 1311 |
| On Leigh Hunt's Poem, "The Story of Rimini" | 765 | Pericles and Aspasia, From | 967, 998 |
| On Linden, when the sun was low | 420 | Pericles to Aspasia (5) | 996, 995 |
| On Love (Shelley) | 1339 | Personal Talk | 300 |
| | | Petition for an Absolute Retreat, From The | 1 |
| | | Petition to Time, A | 1170 |
| | | Phantom or Fact | 369 |
| | | Pibrook of Donuil Dam | 467 |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|--|------------|--|-----------|
| Picture of Leander, On a | 764 | Prometheus | 522 |
| Piping down the valleys wild | 166 | Prometheus Unbound | 662 |
| Pirate, From The | 470 | Proud Maisele | 468 |
| Pleasure Where Soon I Think to Lie, The | 978 | Proud Maisele is in the wood | 468 |
| Plaint | 1168 | Proud Word You Never Spoke | 974 |
| Pleasure! Why Thus Desert the Heart | 983 | Psyche, Ode to | 830 |
| Pleasures newly found are sweet | 288 | Pursuits! Alas, I Now Have None | 974 |
| Pleasures of Hope, From The | 417 | | |
| Pleasures of Melancholy, From The | 75 | Queen Guennivar's Round | 1158 |
| Pleasures of Memory, From The | 207 | Queen Mab (Hood) | 1144 |
| Pleasures of Optum, The | 1060 | Queen Mab, From (Shelley) | 627 |
| Pleasures of the Imagination, From The | 44 | Queen, To the .. | 174 |
| Poet of Nature, thou hast wept to know | 684 | Queen's Wake, From The | 477 |
| Poetical Character, Ode on the | 49 | Quentin Durward, From .. | 471 |
| Poetry of Pope, From The | 1101 | Question, The .. | 707 |
| Poet's Epitaph, A (Elliott) .. | 1167 | | |
| Poet's Epitaph, A (Wordsworth) | 239 | Ramsay, Allan (1686-1758) .. | 7, 1315 |
| Poet's Lover, The .. | 661 | Barely, rarely, comest thou .. | 728 |
| Poet's Song to His Wife, The | 1170 | Realities of Imagination, From On the | 874 |
| Poet's Thought, A | 1170 | Rebecca's Hymn .. | 469 |
| Poison Tree, A .. | 171 | Receipt of My Mother's Picture, On the .. | 149 |
| Political Greatness .. | 729 | Recollections of Charles Lamb, From | 1082 |
| Political Justice, From An Enquiry Concerning | 213 | Red, Red Rose, A .. | 208 |
| Poor little foal of an oppressed race! | 328 | Reflections on Having Left a Place of Re- | |
| Poor Maud's Elegy .. | 176 | tirement .. | 830 |
| Poor Old Pilgrim Misery .. | 1129 | Reflections on the Revolution in France, | |
| Poor Relations .. | 954 | From .. | 1186 |
| Pope, Alexander (1688-1744) | 1175, 1313 | Reim-Kennar, Song of the .. | 470 |
| Pope, From .. | 1185 | Religion .. | 1168 |
| Popular-Feld, The .. | 148 | Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, From | 110 |
| Popular Superstitions of the Highlands of | | Remain, Ah Not in Youth Alone | 971 |
| Scotland, An Ode on the .. | 53 | Remembrances | 740 |
| Postscript to The English Mail-Coach | 1259 | Remorse, From .. | 366 |
| Pot of Basil, The .. | 818 | Renunciation | 964 |
| Pour of Muna .. | 299 | Resolution and Independence | 283 |
| Fried, Winthrop Mackworth (1803- | | Rest! This little fountain runs | 1170 |
| 1839) .. | 1145, 1314 | Retirement .. | 119 |
| Prayer .. | 1172 | Reverie of Poor Susan, The .. | 224 |
| Prayer in the Prospect of Death, A .. | 175 | Rhaicos was born amid the hills wherefrom | 977 |
| Preface to Adonais .. | 1840 | Rapidly Righteous, The (Address to the Unco | |
| Preface to Child Harold's Pilgrimage, Cantos | | Guid) .. | 193 |
| I and II | 1222 | Time of the Ancient Mariner, The | 335 |
| Preface to Christabel | 1237 | Rise! Sleep no more! 'Tis a noble morn | 1169 |
| Preface to Endymion .. | 1288 | Rise, young mechanic! Idle darkness leaves .. | 1167 |
| Preface to First, or Kilmarnock Edition of | | River Duddon, From The | 311 |
| Burns's Poems .. | 205 | Rob Roy, From .. | 468 |
| Preface to Lyrical Ballads .. | 317 | Robert Browning, To .. | 975 |
| Preface to Prometheus Unbound .. | 173 | Robin Hood (Keats) .. | 766 |
| Preface to Rimini, From .. | 1276 | Robin Hood (Scott) .. | 471 |
| Preface to Shakespeare, From .. | 1180 | Robin Hood and Guy of Guisborne | 110 |
| Preface to The Borough, From | 1251 | Rogers, Samuel (1763-1855) | 207, 1316 |
| Preface to The Castle of Otranto, From | 1350 | Rokeby, From .. | 464 |
| Preface to The Eriogreen .. | 11 | Rondrau .. | 870 |
| Preface to The Thorn .. | 1379 | Rosalinde, The Lay of (Harold) .. | 445 |
| Preface to The Vision of Judgment | 1227 | Rose Aymer .. | 968 |
| Preface to Winter .. | 1748 | Rough wind, that moanest loud .. | 748 |
| Preliminary Confessions, From | 1048 | Rouveau, Voltaire, our Gibbon, and De Stael | 522 |
| Prelude, From The | 242 | "Ruin seize thee, ruthless King" | 63 |
| Press, The .. | 1166 | Ruined Cottage, The (The Excursion, 453- | |
| Preston Mills .. | 1166 | 970) .. | 275 |
| Prisoner of Chillon, The .. | 515 | Rural Rides, From .. | 1002 |
| Proctor, Bryan Waller ("Barry Cornwall") | | Ruth (Hood) .. | 1186 |
| (1787-1874) .. | 1168, 1315 | | |
| Proom to Selection from Keats's Poetry .. | 882 | Sabbath Morning | 1167 |
| Progress of Genius, The .. | 120 | St Agnes' Eve—Ah, bitter chill it was! .. | 842 |
| Progress of Poesy, The .. | 61 | | |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|---|-----------|--|------|
| Saint Peter sat by the celestial gate . . . | 613 | Slater of Elna, To the | 970 |
| Sally Simplin's Lament | 1140 | Sister, To My | 231 |
| Same Flower, To the (The relandine) . . | 288 | Skylark, The (Hogg) | 477 |
| Same Flower, To the (The daisy) | 289 | Skylark, To a (Shelley—Hail to thee, blithe spirit') | 704 |
| Sanity of True Genius | 957 | Skylark, To a (Wordsworth—Ethereal min- strel' pilgrim of the sky') | 312 |
| Sappho to Hesperus | 968 | Skylark, To a (Wordsworth—Up with me' up with me into the clouds) | 297 |
| Savannah-la-Mar | 1100 | Sleep and Poetry | 758 |
| Saw Ye Bonnie Lesley | 202 | Sleep, Mr. Speaker, it's surely fair . . | 1149 |
| "Say, what remains when Hope is fled?" . | 210 | Sleep! sleep! beauty bright | 172 |
| Scenes that sooth'd | 145 | Sleep, To (Keats) | 830 |
| Scholar, The (My Days among the Dead Are Past) | 408 | Sleep, To (Landor) | 972 |
| Schoolmistress, From The | 40 | Sleep, To (Wordsworth) | 302 |
| Scorn not the Sonnet | 312 | Small Ouldtime, To the | 282 |
| Scorn not the Sonnet, Critic, you have frowned | 312 | Small service is true service while it lasts . | 315 |
| Sootch Song, A | 474 | Smith, James (1775-1839)—The Baby's Debut | 1358 |
| Soots, Who Has | 203 | Snowdrop, To a | 310 |
| Scots, wha hae wi' Wallace bled | 433 | No Fair, So Sweet, Withal So Sensitive . | 316 |
| Scott, Sir Walter (1771-1832) | 1317 | So Late Removed from Him She Swore . | 964 |
| Sea, On the (Keats) | 765 | So now my summer task is ended, Mary . | 648 |
| Sea, The (Proctor) | 1168 | So Then, I Feel Not Deeply' | 962 |
| Sea, To (Beddoek) | 1130 | So then, I feel not deeply' if I did . | 982 |
| Seamen Three! What Men Be Ye' | 998 | So, We'll Go No More A-Roving | 568 |
| Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness . | 860 | Sofa, From The | 145 |
| Seasons, From The | 18 | Soldier rest' thy warfare o'er | 454 |
| Second Brother, From The | 1130 | Soldier's Song | 457 |
| See how kindred murder kin' | 670 | Sole Listener, Duddon | 311 |
| See the smoking bowl before us' | 184 | Sole Listener Duddon' to the breeze that played | 311 |
| See, Winter comes to rule the varied year . | 18 | Solitary Reaper, The | 293 |
| Sensitive Plant, The | 699 | Solitude (Lucy Gray) | 241 |
| Separation | 983 | Solitude, Sonnet to (Keats) | 754 |
| Seventy-Fifth Birthday, On His | 982 | Son of the Ocean Isle' | 1160 |
| Shadow' or Spirit' | 561 | Son of the old moon-mountains African' . | 767 |
| Shakespeare and Milton | 981 | Song (H. Coleridge—She is not fair to out- ward view) | 1171 |
| Shakespeare, To | 1172 | Song (Elliott—Child, is thy father dead?) . | 1105 |
| Shaking Hands | 878 | Song (Gray—Thyrsis when we parted, swore) . | 66 |
| She Dwelt among the Untrodden Ways . | 238 | Song (Hood—O lady, leave thy silken thread) . | 1135 |
| She I Love (Alas in Vain') | 965 | Song (Hood—There is dew for the flow'ret) . | 1137 |
| She Is Far from the Land | 1309 | Song (Motherwell—If to thy heart I were as near) | 1165 |
| She is far from the land where her young hero sleeps | 1309 | Song (Scott—Soldier rest' thy warfare o'er) . | 454 |
| She Is Going | 918 | Song (Shelley—Rarely, rarely, comest thou) . | 728 |
| She is not fair to outward view | 1171 | Song from Shakespeare's Cymbeline, A . . . | 48 |
| She sat and wept beside His feet, the weight . | 1172 | Song of Fairies Robbing Orchard | 869 |
| She stood breast high amid the corn . . | 1136 | Song of Saul before His Last Battle . . . | 512 |
| She Walks in Beauty | 511 | Song of the Reim-Kennar, The | 470 |
| She walks in beauty, like the night . . | 511 | Song of the Shirt, The | 1141 |
| She Was a Phantom of Delight | 295 | Song of the Tempest, The (The Song of the Reim-Kennar) | 470 |
| Shelley, Percy Bysshe (1792-1822) . . . | 627, 1326 | Song of the Western Men, The | 1150 |
| Shelley's Centenary | 1328 | Song to the Men of England | 659 |
| Shenstone, William (1714-1763) | 40, 1343 | Songs of Innocence, Introduction to . . . | 166 |
| Shepherd, The | 167 | Sonnet (My spirit's on the mountains where the birds) | 432 |
| Shepherd, or huntsman, or worn mailer . | 209 | Sonnet Concerning the Slave Trade . . . | 400 |
| Should auld acquaintance be forgot (told Lang Syne) | 195 | Sonnet of the Sea, A ("Pater Venter Pasce Illa") | 1152 |
| Shout, for a mighty victory is won' . . . | 294 | Sonnet on Ohlilon | 514 |
| Silence | 1137 | Sonnet Political Greatness | 729 |
| Silent nymph with curious eye | 16 | Sonnet to a Friend | 331 |
| Silent Tower of Botreaux, The | 1152 | Sonnet to Lake Leman | 532 |
| Silver Tassie, The | 195 | | |
| Simon Lee | 230 | | |
| Simpleton, Ode to | 48 | | |
| Sing hey my braw John Highlandman' . . | 182 | | |
| Sir Patrick Spence | 116 | | |
| Sir Wisdom's a fool when he's fou | 182 | | |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|--|-----------|---|------|
| Sonnet to Solitude | 754 | Sweet upland, to whose walks, with fond re- | |
| Souls of Poets dead and gone | 768 | pair | 867 |
| Sound, sound the clarion, fill the life! | 468 | Sweet Was the Song That Youth Sang Once | 972 |
| Southey, Robert (1774-1843) | 400, 1344 | Sweet William's Ghost | 8 |
| Southey's Death, On | 983 | Swifter far than summer's flight | 740 |
| South-Sea House, The | 927 | Swiftly walk o'er the western wave | 728 |
| Sparrow's Nest, The | 281 | Sword Chant of Thorstein Raudh, The | 1162 |
| Speak not: whisper not | 669 | | |
| Spenser' a jealous honorer of thine | 767 | | |
| Spenser, To | 767 | Tables Turned, The | 282 |
| Spenserian | 1167 | Take these flowers which, purple waving. | 486 |
| Spindle Song, The (Twist &e, Twine Ye) | 403 | Talented Man, The | 1149 |
| Spirit of Political Institutions | 213 | Tahaman, From The | 471 |
| Spirit of Solitude, The (Alastor) | 635 | Tam Glen | 197 |
| Spirit who sweepeth the wild harp of Time! | 381 | Tam O'Shanter | 198 |
| Spirits, That Walk and Wait Tonight | 1145 | Tanagra' think not I forget | 967 |
| Spirits whose homes are flesh & ye beasts and | | Task, From The | 145 |
| birds | 698 | Tax not the royal saint with vain expense. | 312 |
| Spring, Ode on the (Gray) | 57 | Tears, Idle Tears | 1348 |
| Spring, To (Blake) | 166 | Tell Him I Love Him Yet | 1148 |
| Stand close around, ye Stygian set | 908 | Tell Me, Thou Soul of Her I Love | 32 |
| Standing aloof in giant ignorance | 825 | Tell me, thou star, whose wings, of light | 709 |
| Stanzas (Hood—Farewell life! My senses | | Tell me, what is a poet's thought? | 1170 |
| swim) | 1144 | Tennyson, To Alfred | 1153 |
| Stanzas (Keats—In a drear-nighted Decem- | | The Assyrian came down like the wolf on the | |
| ber) | 763 | fold | 513 |
| Stanzas (Præd—O'er yon churchyard the | | The autumn is old | 1137 |
| storm may lower) | 1148 | The awful shadow of some unseen Power | 644 |
| Stanzas for Music (Byron—There be none of | | The boddynge florettes blosshes atte the lyghte | 130 |
| Beauty's daughters) | 514 | The breaking waves dashed high | 1161 |
| Stanzas for Music (Byron—There's not a joy | | The bride she is winsome and bonny | 474 |
| the world can give) | 513 | The captive usurper | 559 |
| Stanzas for Music (Byron—They say that | | The Castle light of Indolence. | 24 |
| hope is happiness) | 523 | The castled crag of Drachenfels | 531 |
| Stanzas on Hearing the Speaker Asleep | 1149 | The chrysolites and rubies Bacchus brings | 982 |
| Stanzas to Augusta | 518 | The city lies sleeping | 559 |
| Stanzas Written in Dejection, near Naples | 654 | The cock is crowing | 282 |
| Stanzas Written on the Road Between Flor- | | The cold earth slept below | 648 |
| ence and Pisa | 626 | The crackling embers on the hearth are dead | 1171 |
| Stars Are with the Voyager, The | 1137 | The curfew tolls the knell of parting day | 59 |
| Statue of Ebenezer Elliott, From On the | 1260 | The Daughters of the Seraphim led round their | |
| Stay near me—do not take thy flight! | 281 | sunny flocks | 168 |
| Stella, To | 1341 | The day returns, my natal day | 974 |
| Stepping Westward | 292 | The day was fair, the cannon roar'd | 1166 |
| Stern Daughter of the Voice of God! | 296 | The dell's awa, the dell's awa | 201 |
| Stern eagle of the far north-west | 470 | The door of Death is made of gold | 174 |
| Still let me pierce into the midnight depth | 19 | The Emperor Nap he would set off | 405 |
| Still must I hear?—hail hoarse Fitzgerald | | The everlasting universe of things | 646 |
| bawl | 485 | The feathered songster chaunticleer | 125 |
| Stop, Christian passer-by!—Stop, child of God | 370 | The flower that smiles today | 729 |
| Stop, mortal! Here thy brother lies | 1167 | The fountains mingle with the river | 661 |
| Stormy Petrel, The | 1169 | The frost performs its secret ministry | 350 |
| Story of Rimini, From The | 806 | The gallant youth, who may have gained | 312 |
| Strahan, Tonson, Lintot of the Times | 508 | The gowan glitters on the sward | 474 |
| Strange Fits of Passion Have I Known | 238 | The harp that once through Tara's halls | 426 |
| Strew Not Earth with Empty Stars | 1130 | The isles of Greece, the isles of Greece! | 596 |
| Style, From | 1087 | The joy, the triumph, the delight, the mad- | |
| "Suck, baby, suck, mother's love grows by | | ness! | 695 |
| giving" | 917 | The keen stars were twinkling | 742 |
| Summer, From | 19 | The king sits in Dunferling town | 116 |
| Survivor sole, and hardly such, of all | 151 | The lamp must be replenish'd, but even then | 549 |
| Suspiria de Profundis, From | 1097 | The lark had left the evening cloud | 475 |
| Swallow Leaves Her Nest, The | 1130 | The last of our steeds on the board has been | |
| Sweet Afton | 196 | spread | 473 |
| Sweet Highland Girl, a very shower | 292 | The Lawland lads think they are fine | 7 |
| Sweet Spirit! sister of that orphan one | 720 | The leaves are falling, so am I | 973 |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|--|------|--|----------|
| The maid I love ne'er thought of me..... | 971 | There was a roaring in the wind all night . . | 288 |
| The mellow year is hasting to its close..... | 1171 | There was a time when meadow, grove, and stream | 303 |
| The Minstrel Boy to the war is gone..... | 427 | There's not a joy the world can give like that it takes away | 518 |
| The Minstrel came once more to view..... | 460 | There's not a nook within this solemn Pass . | 314 |
| The Mother of the Muses, we are taught..... | 985 | These, as they change, Almighty Father! . . | 23 |
| The mountain sheep are sweeter..... | 1000 | Theseus and Hippolyta | 984 |
| The odor from the flower is gone | 651 | They Are Sweet Flowers That Only Blow by Night | 985 |
| The pale stars are gone' | 690 | They die—the dead return not Misery . . . | 650 |
| The pale stars of the morn | 670 | They grew in beauty side by side | 1160 |
| The past Hours weak and gray | 691 | "They made her a grave, too cold and damp . | 424 |
| The path through which that lovely twain.... | 678 | They rear'd their lodges in the wilderness.... | 1151 |
| The Persè owt of Northombarlande..... | 112 | They say that Hope is happiness | 523 |
| The place where soon I think to lie..... | 973 | They told me in their shadowy phrase . . . | 1153 |
| The poetry of earth is never dead..... | 764 | Thirty-Steth Year, On This Day I Complete My | 626 |
| The poplars are fell'd, farewell to the shade | 148 | This is the day which down the void abyss . | 698 |
| The sea ' the sea ' the open sea' | 1168 | This Lime-Tree Bower My Prison | 334 |
| The serpent is shut out of Paradise..... | 740 | This pleasant tale is like a little corpse . . | 764 |
| The shadow of white death has passed | 696 | This sycamore, oft musical with bees | 804 |
| The ship sail'd on, the ship sail'd fast. . . | 559 | Thomas Heywood | 921 |
| The sleepless Hours who watch me as I lie... 707 | | Thomas Moore, To (My Boat Is on the Shore) | 568 |
| The smiling morn, the breathing spring..... | 15 | Thomson, James (1700-1748) | 18, 1347 |
| The snow upon my lifeless mountains | 695 | Thomson, Ode on the Death of Mr | 52 |
| The soul of man is larger than the sky | 1172 | Thorn, The | 225 |
| The sound is of whirlwind underground..... | 665 | Thorow the halle the belle han sounde . . | 130 |
| The star which rules thy destiny | 551 | Those who have laid the harp aside | 968 |
| The stars are with the voyager | 1187 | Thou art folded, thou are lying | 697 |
| The stately Homes of England | 1181 | Thou, Earth, calm empire of a happy soul . | 699 |
| The summer and autumn had been so wet. . . | 401 | Thou Hast Not Rained, Ianthe, Such Desire | 961 |
| The sun, awakening, through the smoky air . | 456 | Thou Ling'ring Star | 198 |
| The sun is set, the swallows are asleep..... | 739 | Thou ling'ring star with leav'ning ray . . | 194 |
| The sun is warm, the sky is clear..... | 654 | Thou Moon, which gazest on the nightly Earth | 698 |
| The sun upon the Weirclaw Hill..... | 468 | Thou Needst Not Pitch upon My Hat . . . | 983 |
| The swallow leaves her nest. | 1180 | Thou noblest monument of Albion's Isle' . . | 78 |
| The time I've lost in wooing | 428 | Thou still unravish'd bride of quietness . | 827 |
| The tongue of England, that which myriads.. | 981 | Thou wert the morning star among the living | 1341 |
| The twentieth year is well-nigh past . . . | 153 | Though I Be Now a Gray, Gray Friar . . | 990 |
| The unemitting voice of nightly streams... . | 816 | Though the day of my destiny's over | 518 |
| The village life, and every care that reigns . | 154 | Though Ruin now Love's shadow be | 673 |
| The violet in her greenwood bower | 436 | Thought of a Briton on the Subjugation of Switzerland | 305 |
| The voice of the Spirits of Air and of Earth.. | 691 | Thrasymedes and Eunoe | 975 |
| The warm sun is falling, the bleak wind is wailing | 709 | Three days the flowers of the garden fair . | 701 |
| The world is a bundle of hay | 613 | Three Ellotts there have been, three glorious men | 1200 |
| The world is too much with us, late and soon | 802 | Three Graves, The | 917 |
| The young May moon is beaming, love . . . | 427 | Three Boats, The | 983 |
| Thel, The Book of | 108 | Three Years She Grew in Sun and Shower... | 238 |
| Then weave the web of the mystic measure . | 692 | Threnos (A Lament) | 729 |
| There be none of Beauty's daughters..... | 514 | Thrice three hundred thousand years..... | 663 |
| There came a ghost to Margaret's door..... | 8 | Through the Wood, Laddie | 9 |
| There came a man, making his hasty moan.. | 868 | Thyrsis, when we parted, swore | 66 |
| There is a flower, a little flower | 1366 | Thys mornynge starre of Radcleves rysynge rale | 184 |
| There is a flower I wish to wear | 903 | Tiberius and Vipsania | 985 |
| There Is a Little Unpretending Rill | 310 | Tiger, The | 171 |
| There is a mountain and a wood between us . | 983 | Tiger, tiger, burning bright..... | 171 |
| There is a silence where hath been no sound | 1187 | Time (Shelley) | 728 |
| "There is a Thorn—it looks so old". | 225 | Time (Scott—Why Stitt'st Thou by That Ruin'd Hall!) | 467 |
| There is a Yew-tree, pride of Lorton Vale... 290 | | Time I've Lost in Wooing, The | 428 |
| There is an awful quiet in the air..... | 1172 | Time Long Past | 710 |
| There is delight in singing, tho' none hear . | 975 | Time-Piece, From The | 147 |
| There is dew for the fow'et.... . | 1187 | | |
| There is strange music in the stirring wind . | 165 | | |
| There lies a cold corpse upon the sands . . | 1152 | | |
| "There!" Hald a Stripling, Pointing with Mect Pride | 314 | | |
| There those enchanted eddies play | 677 | | |
| There was a little lawny islet.. . . . | 743 | | |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|---|------|---|------|
| Time Real and Imaginary | 366 | To Jane | 742 |
| Time's Song | 1145 | To Joseph Ablett | 969 |
| Tintadgel bells ring o'er the tide | 1152 | To Leigh Hunt, Esq | 704 |
| Tired Nature's sweet restorer, balmy Sleep' | 38 | To Mary (Cowper)—The twentieth year is well-nigh past | 153 |
| 'Tis done—but yesterday a King' | 510 | To Mary (Shelley)—How, my dear Mary, are you critic-bitten | 710 |
| 'Tis eight o'clock—a clear March night | 1243 | To Mary (Shelley)—So now my summer task is ended, Mary | 648 |
| 'Tis eve! 'tis glimmering eve! how fair the scene | 1150 | To me, whom in their lays the shepherds call | 46 |
| 'Tis not the gray hawk's flight | 1162 | To Mercy, Pity, Peace, and Love | 167 |
| 'Tis Said That Some Have Died for Love | 273 | To Mr. Murray (For Orford and for Waldegrave) | 613 |
| 'Tis the middle of night by the castle clock | 343 | To Mr. Murray (Strahan, Tanson, Lintot of the Times) | 568 |
| 'Tis time this heart should be unmoved | 626 | To My Ninth Decade | 985 |
| Titan! to whose immortal eyes | 522 | To my ninth decade I have totter'd on | 985 |
| To—(Shelley—I fear thy kisses, gentle maiden) | 706 | To My Sister | 231 |
| To—(Shelley—Oh! there are spirits of the air) | 634 | To Nature | 867 |
| To—(Shelley—One word is too often profaned) | 739 | To Night | 728 |
| To—(Shelley—Music, when soft voices die) | 729 | To One Singing | 1337 |
| To—(Shelley—When passion's trance is overpast) | 729 | To One Who Has Been Long in City Pent | 754 |
| To a Bride, Feb 17, 1846 | 972 | To Robert Browning | 975 |
| To a Butterfly (Wordsworth—I've watched you now a full half-hour). | 282 | To Sea, To Sea! | 1130 |
| To a Butterfly (Wordsworth—Stay near me—do not take thy flight!) | 281 | To sea, to sea! The calm is o'er | 1130 |
| To a Child | 315 | To see a world in a grain of sand | 172 |
| To a Cyclops | 983 | To Shakespeare | 1172 |
| To a Gentleman | 365 | To Sleep (Keats) | 830 |
| To a good man of most dear memory | 1296 | To Sleep (Londor) | 972 |
| To a Highland Girl | 202 | To Sleep (Wordsworth) | 302 |
| To a Lady with Flowers from the Roman Wall | 476 | To Spenser | 707 |
| To a Louse | 194 | To Spring | 166 |
| To a Mountain Daisy | 194 | To Stella | 1241 |
| To a Mouse | 100 | To the Cuckoo (Wordsworth—Not the whole warbling grove in concert heard) | 812 |
| To a Nightingale, Ode (Keats) | 831 | To the Cuckoo (Wordsworth—O blithe New-comer! I have heard) | 294 |
| To a Painter | 972 | To the Daisy (Wordsworth—Bright Flower! whose home is everywhere) | 290 |
| To a Skylark (Shelley—Hail to thee, blithe spirit!) | 704 | To the Daisy (Wordsworth—In youth from rock to rock I went) | 288 |
| To a Skylark (Wordsworth—Ethereal minstrel! pilgrim of the sky!) | 312 | To the deep, to the deep | 678 |
| To a Skylark (Wordsworth—'I'p with me! up with me into the clouds) | 297 | To the Grasshopper and the Cricket | 868 |
| To a Snowdrop | 310 | To the Lords of Convention 'twas Claver'sse who spoke | 471 |
| To a Young Ass | 328 | To the Min of Kent | 294 |
| To a Young Lady | 298 | To the Moon | 709 |
| To a Young Lady Who Sent Me a Laurel Crown | 753 | To the Muses | 108 |
| To Age | 981 | To the Nightingale (Countess of Winchelsea) | 2 |
| To Alisa Rook | 825 | To the Nile (Keats) | 707 |
| To Alfred Tennyson | 1153 | To the Nile (Shelley) | 1278 |
| To Amanda | 32 | To the Poet John Dyer | 1260 |
| To Autumn | 860 | To the Queen | 174 |
| To Byron | 752 | To the Reverend W. L. Bowles | 329 |
| To Chatterton | 752 | To the Same Flower (The celandine) | 281 |
| To Davis | 177 | To the Same Flower (The daisy) | 289 |
| To Dyer | 1260 | To the Sister of Elia | 970 |
| To E. Arundell | 982 | To the Small Celandine | 282 |
| To Edward Williams | 740 | To Thomas Moore (My Boat Is on the Shore) | 568 |
| To Emilia Viviani | 729 | To Wordsworth (Hood) | 1137 |
| To fair Fidele's grassy tomb | 48 | To Wordsworth (Londor) | 968 |
| To Faunio | 861 | To Wordsworth (Shelley) | 634 |
| To G. A. W. | 763 | To Youth | 981 |
| To H. O. | 288 | Tomorrow | 740 |
| To Hampstead | 867 | Tonight retired, the queen of heaven | 47 |
| To His Young Rose an Old Man Said | 983 | Torricelli, From | 1130 |
| To Homer | 825 | | |
| To Ianthe, Lycius | 963 | | |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|--|-----------|---|------|
| Touch us gently, Time' | 1170 | Wasted, Weary, Wherefore Stay | 466 |
| Toussaint, the most unhappy man of men' | 286 | Waverley, From | 465 |
| Tragedies of Shakespeare, Considered with | | Way Broad-Leaf, The | 1167 |
| Reference to Their Fitness for Stage Rep- | | We are as clouds that veil the midnight moon | 634 |
| resentation, From The | 923 | We are born; we laugh; we weep | 1169 |
| Tree, The | 1 | We are na fou, we're nae that fou | 197 |
| Triumphs of Owen, The | 68 | We Are Seven | 225 |
| Trosachs, The | 314 | We, beyond heaven, are driven along | 692 |
| Troubadour, From The | 1145 | We come from the mind | 692 |
| 'Twas a fierce night when old Mawgan died | 1151 | We Do Lie beneath the Grass | 1132 |
| 'Twas after dread Pultowa's day | 569 | We join the throng | 691 |
| 'Twas at the silent solemn hour | 15 | We meet not as we parted | 743 |
| 'Twas in the prime of summer time | 1188 | We Mind Not How the Sun in the Mid-Sky | 968 |
| 'Twas summer, and the sun had mounted high | 274 | We see them not—we cannot hear | 1153 |
| Twentieth Sunday after Trinity | 1133 | We talked with open heart, and tongue | 240 |
| Twenty Years Hence My Eyes May Grow | 974 | We the fairies blithe and antic | 869 |
| Twilight's soft dews steal o'er the village | | We walked along, while bright and red | 240 |
| green | 207 | We watch'd her breathing thro' the night | 1140 |
| Twist thou and twine, in light and gloom | 1151 | Weave the dance on the floor of the breeze | 691 |
| Twist Ye, Twine Ye | 463 | Webster, John | 921 |
| Twist ye, twine ye' even so | 465 | Wedded Souls (The Poet's Lover) | 661 |
| Two April Mornings, The | 240 | Wee, modest, crimson-tipped flow'r | 194 |
| Two Races of Men, The | 987 | Wee, sleekit, cowrin, tim'rous beastie | 190 |
| Two Spirits, The An Allegory | 708 | Welcome, old friend! These many years | 981 |
| Two Voices are there; one is of the sea | 305 | Well I Remember How You Smiled | 965 |
| Tynemouth Priory, At | 164 | Well! if the bard was weather-wise, who | |
| Tyre of the farther West' be thou too warn'd | 1134 | made | 360 |
| Unfathomable Sea' whose waves are years | 728 | Well may'st thou halt—and gaze with bright- | |
| Unfelt, unheard, unseen | 765 | ening eye! | 301 |
| United States | 1134 | Well, they are gone, and here must I remain | 334 |
| Unremitting Voice of Nightly Streams, The | 816 | West Wind, Ode to the | 690 |
| Up' up' my friend, and quit your books | 282 | Wet Sheet and a Flowing Sea, A | 476 |
| Up with me' up with me into the clouds' | 297 | Whan gloamin gray out owre the welkin keels | 1214 |
| Upon a Sabbath-day it fell | 843 | What Brave Chief | 471 |
| Upon a simmer Sunday morn | 185 | What brave chief shall head the forces | 471 |
| Upon a Sweet-Briar | 966 | What is more gentle than a wind in summer? | 758 |
| Upon a time, before the fairy broods | 832 | What is religion? "Speak the truth in love" | 1168 |
| Uprose the King of Men with speed | 67 | What lovelier home could gentle Fanny choose? | 310 |
| Vanguard of Liberty, ye men of Kent | 294 | What though, for showing truth to flatter'd | |
| Various the Roads of Life, In One | 974 | state | 753 |
| Vathek, From The History of the Oakph | 134 | "What, you are stepping westward?"—"Yea" | 292 |
| Verse, a breeze mid blossoms straying | 367 | When a Man Hath No Freedom to Fight for | |
| Very True, the Linnets Sing | 971 | at Home | 618 |
| Violastitude, Ode on the Pleasure Arising from | 65 | When chapman billics leave the street | 198 |
| Villages, From The | 154 | When first, descending from the moorlands | 315 |
| Violet, The | 436 | When Friends Are Met | 473 |
| Vision of Judgment, From A (Southey) | 409 | When friends are met o'er merry cheer | 473 |
| Vision of Judgment, The (Byron) | 618 | When He Who Adores Thee | 425 |
| Vision of Sudden Death, The | 1117 | When he who adores thee has left but the | |
| Viviani, To Emilia | 729 | name | 425 |
| Voluntary Actions of Men Originate in Their | | When I Have Borne in Memory | 288 |
| Opinions, The | 216 | When I have borne in memory what has tamed | 288 |
| Waken, lords and ladies gay | 446 | When I Have Fears That I May Cease to Be | 765 |
| Walpole, Horace (1717-1797) | 100, 1349 | When in the crimson clouds of even | 119 |
| Wanderer, From The (The Excursion) | 274 | When Israel, of the Lord beloved | 469 |
| Wanderings of Oats, The | 370 | When, looking on the present face of things | 294 |
| Waning Moon, The | 709 | When lovely sounds about my ears | 871 |
| Warriors and chiefs' should the shaft or the | | When lyart leaves bestrow the yird | 180 |
| sword | 512 | When Maggy Gangs Away | 477 |
| War Song of Dinas Vawr, The | 1000 | When maidens such as Ilsest die | 917 |
| Warton, Joseph (1722-1800) | 80, 1350 | When Music, heav'nly maid, was young | 51 |
| Warton, Thomas (1728-1790) | 75, 1351 | When passion's trance is overpast | 729 |
| Was It Home Sweet Device of Faery | 913 | When princely Hamilton's abode | 439 |
| | | When shaws beene sheene, and shradde full | |
| | | fayre | 110 |
| | | When the buds began to burst | 983 |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|--|------------|--|-----------|
| When the green woods laugh with the voice of joy | 167 | With a Guitar: To Jane | 742 |
| When the Kye Comes Home. | 476 | With an Album | 974 |
| When the lamp is shattered. | 741 | With fingers weary and worn | 1141 |
| When the moon is on the wave. | 552 | With little here to do or see | 289 |
| When the Spirit withdrew, the Monarch around the assembly | 409 | With sacrifice before the rising morn | 306 |
| When the voices of children are heard on the green | 171 | Within a narrow span of time | 1328 |
| When We Two Parted | 485 | Wolfe, Charles (1791-1828) | 432, 1353 |
| When Winter howls along the hill. | 1167 | Woman! When I Behold Thee Flippant, Vain | 752 |
| Whence come ye, so wild and so fleet. | 692 | Woo'd and Married and A' | 474 |
| Where are they gone, the old familiar faces? | 816 | Woodstock, From | 473 |
| Where art thou, beloved Tomorrow? | 740 | Wordsworth, To (Hood) | 1137 |
| Where art thou gone, light-ankled Youth? | 981 | Wordsworth, To (Landor) | 968 |
| Where art thou, my beloved son | 295 | Wordsworth, To (Shelley) | 634 |
| Where is the grave of Sir Arthur O'Kellyn? | 307 | Wordsworth, William (1770-1850) | 223, 1353 |
| Where is the land with milk and honey flow- ing | 1133 | Wordsworth's Grave, From | 1350 |
| Where is Thy favor'd haunt, eternal Voice. | 1133 | Wordsworth's The Excursion, From Jeffrey's Review of | 892 |
| Where Shall the Lover Rest | 446 | Wordsworth's The White Doe of Rylstone, From Jeffrey's Review of | 902 |
| Where the pools are bright and deep | 482 | Work without Hope | 368 |
| Where the slumbering earthquake. | 550 | World Is a Bundle of Hay, The | 613 |
| Where Venta's Norman castle still uprears. | 78 | World Is Too Much with Us, Late and Soon, The | 302 |
| Whether on Ida's shady brow | 166 | World's Great Age Begins Anew, The | 739 |
| While at the stook the shearers cow'r. | 179 | Worlds on Worlds Are Rolling Ever | 738 |
| While briars an' woodbines budding green | 177 | World's Wanderers, The | 709 |
| While some affect the sun, and some the shade | 37 | Write it in gold—A spirit of the sun | 1129 |
| While Summer Nuns o'er the Gay Prospect Play'd | 78 | Written after the Death of Charles Lamb | 1290 |
| While thro' the broken pane the tempest sighs | 209 | Written at Midnight | 209 |
| What Blast from behind the Hill, A | 272 | Written at Stonchenge | 78 |
| While O'er the Lake O' | 198 | Written in a Blank Leaf of Dugdale's Monasti- con | 77 |
| White Doe of Rylstone, From Jeffrey's Review of The | 902 | Written in London, September, 1803 | 257 |
| Whither Is Gone the Wisdom and the Power | 1171 | Written in March | 282 |
| Who counsel's peace at this momentous hour | 406 | Written in the Highlands of Scotland | 209 |
| Who has not heard of the Vale of Cashmere | 429 | Written in Very Early Youth | 223 |
| Who is the happy warrior? Who is he | 298 | Written on the Blank Space at the End of Chaucer's Tale of "The Fleoure and the Life" | 704 |
| Who Knew John Keats | 613 | Written on the Day That Mr. Leigh Hunt Left Prison | 753 |
| Who loves to peer up at the morning sun | 765 | Yardley Oak | 151 |
| "Who, who from Dian's feast would be away" | 813 | Yarrow Revisited | 312 |
| Who will away to Athens with me? who | 975 | Yarrow Unvisited | 293 |
| Whose was that gentle voice, that, whisper- ing sweet | 164 | Yarrow Visited | 308 |
| Why dost thou beat thy breast, and rend thine hair | 400 | Ye banks and bines, and streams around | 202 |
| Why Kist't Thou by That Ruin'd Hall? | 467 | Ye 'Clouds' that far above me float and pause | 351 |
| "Why weep ye by the tide, ladle? | 467 | Ye distant spires, ye antique towers | 57 |
| Why, why Repine | 972 | Ye Dorlan woods, and waves, lament aloud | 1341 |
| Why, why repine, my pensive friend. | 972 | Ye elemental Genii, who have homes | 698 |
| Why, William, on that old gray stone. | 232 | Ye Flowery Banks | 201 |
| William and Helen | 433 | Ye flowery banks o' bonie Doon | 201 |
| William and Margaret | 15 | Ye green rob'd Dryads, oft at dusky eve | 80 |
| Williams, To Edward | 740 | Ye happy dead, whom beams of brightest verse | 698 |
| Willie Brew'd a Peck of Maist. | 197 | Ye holy towers that shade the wave worn steep | 164 |
| Wilson, John (1785-1854) | 1153, 1352 | Ye Kings of suns and stars, Demons and Gods | 698 |
| Wilt thou forget the happy hours | 650 | Ye Mariners of England | 419 |
| Winchelsea, Countess of (1861-1720) | 1, 1352 | Ye Woods, That Oft at Sultry Noon | 999 |
| Windson Forest, From | 1175 | Years After | 965 |
| Winter, From | 18 | Years, Many Parti-Colored Years | 965 |
| Winter Walk at Noon, From The | 143 | Years—years ago,—ere yet my dreams. | 1147 |
| Wisdom and Spirit of the universe (The Pre- lude, 1, 401) | 243 | Yes, I Write Verses Now and Then | 973 |
| Witch o' Fife, The | 481 | Yes, It Was the Mountain Echo | 800 |
| Witch of Atlas, The | 710 | Yew-Trees | 290 |

| | PAGE | | PAGE |
|---|----------|--|------|
| "You are old, Father William," the young man | | Young Lady, To a (Wordsworth)..... | 298 |
| cried (Southey) | 401 | Young Lady Who Sent Me a Laurel Crown, | |
| "'You are old, Father William,' the young man | | To a (Keats) | 753 |
| said (Carroll)..... | 1845 | Young May Moon, The | 427 |
| "You Must Give Back" Her Mother Said.... | 971 | Your call was as a wing'd car..... | 669 |
| You Smiled, You Spoke, and I Believed.... | 984 | Your Pleasures Spring Like Daisies in the | |
| You strange, astonish'd-looking, angle-faced... | 870 | Grass | 965 |
| You Tell Me I Must Come Again..... | 971 | Youth and Age | 367 |
| You'll come to our hall;—since we parted.... | 1146 | Youth, To | 981 |
| Young, Edward (1681-1765)..... | 33, 1875 | | |
| Young Ass, To a | 828 | Zepolya, From | 366 |

UNIVERSAL
LIBRARY

127 087

UNIVERSAL
LIBRARY

Come open the West Port, and let me gang free,
And it's room for the bonnets of Bonny
Dundee!"

Dundee he is mounted, he rides up the street,

- 10 The bells are rung backward,¹ the drums
they are beat,
But the Provost,² douce³ man, said, "Just e'en let him be,
The Gude Town is weel quit of that Deil of Dundee."

Come fill up my cup, etc.

As he rode down the sanctified bends of the Bow,⁴

- 15 Ilk carline⁵ was flyting⁶ and shaking her pow,⁷
But the young plants of grace they look'd couthie and slee,⁸
Thinking, "Luck to thy bonnet, thou
Bonny Dundee!"

Come fill up my cup, etc.

With sour-featured Whigs the Grass-market was cramm'd

- 20 As if half the West had set tryst to be hang'd;
There was spite in each look, there was fear in each e'e,
As they watch'd for the bonnets of Bonny
Dundee.

Come fill up my cup, etc.

These cowls of Kilmarnock⁹ had spits¹⁰ and had spears,

- 25 And lang-hafted gullies¹¹ to kill Cavaliers;
But they shrunk to close-heads,¹² and the causeway was free,
At the toss of the bonnet of Bonny
Dundee.

Come fill up my cup, etc.

He spur'd at the foot of the proud Castle rock,¹³

- 30 And with the gay Gordon he gallantly spoke;

¹The chimes are sounded in reverse order as an alarm

²Mayor

³sedate; prudent

⁴windings of Bow Street (It was inhabited chiefly by Covenanters.)

⁵each old woman

⁶scolding

⁷head

⁸loving and sly

⁹hooded garments made at Kilmarnock
(Here used for the Presbyterians, who wore them)

¹⁰swords

¹¹long-handled knives

¹²upper ends of narrow passages leading from the street

¹³The site of Edinburgh Castle, then held by the Duke of Gordon.

"Let Mons Meg¹ and her marrows² speak
twa words or three,
For the love of the Bonnet of Bonny
Dundee."

Come fill up my cup, etc.

The Gordon demands of him which way he goes—

- 35 "Where'er shall direct me the shade of Montrose!
Your Grace in short space shall hear tidings of me,
Or that low lies the bonnet of Bonny
Dundee.

Come fill up my cup, etc.

"There are hills beyond Pentland, and lands beyond Forth,

- 40 If there's lords in the Lowlands, there's chiefs in the North;
There are wild Duniewassals,³ three thousand times three,
Will cry hough! for the bonnet of Bonny
Dundee.

Come fill up my cup, etc.

"There's brass on the target⁴ of barken'd⁵ bull-hide;

- 45 There's steel in the scabbard that dangles beside;
The brass shall be burnish'd, the steel shall flash free,
At a toss of the bonnet of Bonny Dundee.

Come fill up my cup, etc.

"Away to the hills, to the caves, to the rocks—

- 50 Ere I own an usurper, I'll couch with the fox;
And tremble, false Whigs, in the midst of your glee,
You have not seen the last of my bonnet and me!"

Come fill up my cup, etc.

He waved his proud hand, and the trumpets were blown,

- 55 The kettle-drums clash'd, and the horsemen rode on,
Till on Ravelston's cliffs and on Clermis-
ton's lee,
Died away the wild war-notes of Bonny
Dundee.

¹The nickname of a great cannon, supposed to have been made in Mons, Belgium

²mates; companions
³Highland gentlemen of secondary rank.
⁴shield
⁵tanned with bark

- Come fill up my cup, come fill up my ¹⁵ Here's to honor and faith, can,
 Come saddle the horses, and call up the men,
 60 Come open your gates, and let me gae
 free,
 For it's up with the bonnets of Bonny ²⁰ And the hand on the sword;
 Dundee! But the time shall come round
 When, 'mid Lords, Dukes, and Earls,
 The loud trumpet shall sound,
 Here's a health to King Charles'

WHEN FRIENDS ARE MET

- When friends are met o'er merry cheer,
 And lovely eyes are laughing near,
 And in the goblet's bosom clear
 The cares of day are drown'd;
 5 When puns are made, and bumpers quaff'd,
 And wild Wit shoots his roving shaft,
 And Mirth his jovial laugh has laugh'd,
 Then is our banquet crown'd,
 Ah gay,
 10 Then is our banquet crown'd

- When glees¹ are sung, and catches troll'd,²
 And bashfulness grows bright and bold,
 And beauty is no longer cold,
 And age no longer dull;
 15 When chimes are brief, and cocks do crow,
 To tell us it is time to go,
 Yet how to part we do not know,
 Then is our feast at full,
 Ah gay,
 20 Then is our feast at full

From WOODSTOCK
 1826 1826

GLEE FOR KING CHARLES

- Bring the bowl which you boast,
 Fill it up to the brim,
 'Tis to him we love most.
 And to all who love him.
 5 Brave gallant, stand up,
 And avault ye, base cales!³
 Were there death in the cup,
 Here's a health to King Charles'
 Though he wanders through dangers,
 10 Unaided, unknown,
 Dependent on strangers,
 Estranged from his own,
 Though 'tis under our breath,
 Amidst forfeits and perils,

¹ A glee is an unaccompanied song for several solo voices, and usually in contrasted movements. A catch differs in that each of several persons sing a part to one continuous melody.

² sung loudly

³ churls, peasants

THE FORAY
1830

- The last of our steers on the board has been spread,
 And the last flask of wine in our goblet is red;
 Up, up, my brave kinsmen! belt swords
 and begone,
 There are dangers to dare, and there's spoil to be won.
 The eyes, that so lately mix'd glances with ours,
 For a space must be dim, as they gaze
 from the towers,
 And strive to distinguish through tempest and gloom
 The piance of the steed and the toss of the plume
 The rain is descending; the wind rises
 loud,
 10 And the moon her red beacon has veil'd with a cloud;
 'Tis the better, my mates! for the warder's dull eye
 Shall in confidence slumber, nor dream
 we are nigh
 Our steeds are impatient! I hear my blithe gray!
 There is life in his hoof-clang, and hope
 in his neigh;
 15 Like the flash of a meteor, the glance of his mane
 Shall marshal your march through the darkness and rain
 The drawbridge has dropp'd, the bugle has blown;
 One pledge is to quaff yet—then mount
 and begone!—
 To their honor and peace, that shall rest with the slain;
 20 To their health and their glee, that see
 'Teviot again'